Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2012 with funding from
The Institute of Museum and Library Services through an Indiana State Library LSTA Grant http://archive.org/details/harpersweeklyv10bonn

Entered, according to Act of Congress, in the Year One Thousand Eight Hundred and Sixty-six, by HARPER & BROTHERS, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the Southern District of New York.

INDEX TO ILLUSTRATIONS.

A Legend of Corpus, 700.
A practical Joke, 453.
Academy of Music, New York, Burning of the, 593.
Accidents in Louisiana, Washing-day among the, 677 ; Hauling Boats on the Bayou Lafourche, 685.
Albany, Railroad-bridge across the Hudson at, 164.
American Beauty, Types of, 41.
"An Indictment," 740.
Andersonville and Fortress Monroe, 409 ; Prison, Relics of, 409.
"Andy, King," 686.
"Andy's Trip," 669, 681.
Arabs of Abyssinia Hunting the Elephant, 289.
Arkansas Troubles, 705.
Arpinwall, Central America—Panama Railroad, 61 ; Excursion at, two Cuts, 205.
Atchison, Kansas, Commercial Street, 476.
Atlantic Cable, 304, 305 ; Landing at Valentia, 801 ; Heart's Content, 801 ; Office of the Telegraphic Company, New York, 812 ; Section of the Bed of the Atlantic, 805 ; The Great Eastern Getting up Her Cable, 796, 801 ; Testing the Cable at Valentia, 796.
Augusta, Georgia, Barbecue at, 716.
Autumn Tourists, 653.
Ancram, on Lake, Lenox, France, 356.

"Baby has dropped Asleep," 676.
Bahamas, Harricane on the—Scene at Nassau, P. 1., 721.
Bass-Ball Match, "Atlantics" and "Athletics," 624.
Bathing Costume, New, 417.
Baton Rouge, Louisiana, Two Views, 564.
(West), Crevasse at, 324.
Beecher's Church, at Indianapolis and Brooklyn, 600.
Bethlehem of South America, the, 668.
Bismarck Gap, Pennsylvania, Fire at, 193.
Bowlder Bay, Louisiana, Gathering Moss on, 580.
Bethlehem, Scene of the Nativity, 801.
Billiard Tournament in New York City, 605.
Birds in Winter, 65.
"Birds of Prey," Illustrations, 749, 808, 826.
"Blindfolded," Mr., 685.
Blisville, Little Rock, Arkansas, 344.
Boz, Mrs., in her Residence and Lieutenant Herndberger, 804.
Brainerd City, Louisiana, Ferry Boat to, 604.
Brazil, Emperor of, visiting the Monadnock, 153.
Brooklyn, Mr. Beecher's Residence at, 713, 716.
Bunker Hill Monument, 404.

Cairo, Street Scene in, 257 ; Government Auction at, 257.
Calhun, Battle of, 189.
Calliope, the, 392.
Canadian Volunteers after Drill, 312.
Candlen Insurgents, 117.
Cape Hayden, Conflict of the Bulldog with the Forts at, 5.
Capitol at Washington, Dome of the, 185.
Captured, 141.
Carlotta, Visit of the Pope to the Empress, 704.
Catholic Mountain, twenty eight Views, 456, 457.
"Caught Napping," 192.
Centennial Scene, four Illustrations, 625.
Central City, Colorado, 97.
Central Park, Court of Commerce at, 444 ; Driving in, 65 ; Zoological Collection, 652.
Chapin's Secret, New York, 713.
Charity Ball at the Academy of Music, New York, 88.
Charity Parties, 676, 713.
Charleston, South Carolina—"The Irrepressible Conflict," 465.
Chattel, the Last, 1.
Chicago, Great Skating Rink at, 93 ; Chamber of Commerce at, 253.
"Choosing a Wedding Gown," 793.
Cincinnati, Ohio, Levee at, 209.
Civil Rights Bill, Lobby of the House during the Passage of the, 264, 265 ; Scene outside of the Gallories, 269.
Collesum at, 605.
Colline Manufactory of the Metropolitan Company, New York, 113.
Colored Children, a "Zion" School for, at Charleston, South Carolina, 5.
Columbia, South Carolina, Ruins of, two Cuts, 449.
Concert Saloon—"Uncle Dick," 7 ; "Jubilee" Costume, 1866, 12 ; "Why not ?" 16 ; "Union Intrigues" 32 ; "Only a Hint," 39 ; "Envoy from Spain," 48 ; "Wonderful as Tell on the Ice," 53 ; "Lady Physician," 64 ; "Origin of Evil," 75 ; "Washington Territory in Danger," 80 ; "Nothing Made in Vain," 89 ; "Moses in Cucumber," 97 ; "The Honeymoon," 104 ; "St Valentine's Post-office," 119 ; "Paddy Blake's Echo," 132 ; "Mr. McCafferty Home," 128 ; "Prepare" 144 ; "What is to become of the Mercantile ?" 144 ; "After the Ball," 151 ; "Issue" 168 ; "The Sewing Machine," 160 ; "Our New Public Functionary," 176 ; "A Warning to Landlords," 192 ; "Fenian Strategy," 208 ; "Honesty in Trouble," 224 ; "The Mexican Thanksgiving," 224 ; "Presence of Mind," 240 ; "The Labor Question," 247 ; "Out of Place," 256 ; "Fenian Fun," 272 ; "Self-sacrifice," 283 ; "No Mistake about It," 288 ; "Johnny Bull Laggered by a Fenian," 298 ; "Natural Eye," 304 ; "Tree Course," 320 ; "Lost Property," 320 ; "Quite Reassuring," 320 ; "Fenian Fun," 363 ; "Effect of the Excise Law in New York City," 368 ; "Author "Cute," 384 ; "The Fenian Expedition," 400 ; "Position of Europe," 407 ; "The Monopolist," 407 ; "Low Tide at Fortune," 416 ; "European Sovereigns," 423 ; "A Contented Mind," 432 ; "Peasant for Slaughter," 448 ; "Country Effigy," 448 ; "Delicate Flattery," 464 ; "Definitely put," 464 ; "Making your luck Sure," 480, 471 ; "Perils of Blue-fishing," 480 ; "Benedict Arnoldism," 487 ; "Consistent Democrats," 496 ; "Question and Answer," 505 ; "In a Brooklyn Stage," 512 ; "Rather more than a Bore," 512 ; "Mother's Darling," 528 ; "Cruelty to Animals," 528 ; "Down in the Sea Sea," 544 ; "Great Show of Children," 560 ; "Progress of the Art of War," 567 ; "Following along the Rules," 576 ; "The Boy's Revenge," 587 ; "Indebted to Fiona," 592 ; "A Shock," 602 ; "John Bull Revenged," 608 ; "Not going to Paris," 619 ; "A natural Question," 624 ; "Great Financial Operation," 640 ; "A Fine Cigar," 640 ; "Chains! Chains!" 663 ; "Letting him Slide," 672 ; "Astonishing Lunacy," 677 ; "Correct Construction," 688 ; "Sending the old Cost," 695 ; "A new Bill," 704 ; "Convalescent Sovereigns," 720 ; "Two Candidates," 720 ; "Making the most of it," 721 ; "Oh, Uncle Christie," 736 ; "Paying on Election Wager," 743 ; "Played Out," 752 ; "From a lofty Point of View," 752 ; "Practical Joke," 768 ; "Court of Congress," 792 ; "Only calling on Uncle Sam," 808 ; "Base Ball Illustrated," eight Cuts, 778 ; "A Thorough Reformation," 784 ; "Adieu," 800 ; "Ingenious Utilitarian," 816 ; "Domestic Bliss," 832.
Cork, Marching Prisoners into the Prison at, 209.
Cotton Town in North Carolina, 297.
Croquet, the Game of, 568.
Cumberland, Maryland, 505.
Curt Reply, the," 325.
Cypress Swamp on the Opelousas Railroad, Louisiana, 781.
Czarewitch of Russia and the Princess Dagmar, 797.

Daniel Webster, Sinking of the, 677.
Dorfeus Fitch's Home for Soldiers and Orphans at, four Cuts, 172.
Darlington, Jeff., Mansion of, in Mississippi, 661 ; Negro Quarters on Plantation of, 661.
Death Walk, the, 812.
Decency, Colorado, two Cuts, 57 ; Gambling Scene in, 97.
"Detective, an Amateur," 446.
Distinguished Men of Methodism, 633.
District of Columbia, Celebrating the Abolition of Slavery in, 193.
Dog and the Parrot, the, 629.
Dog Hound, New York, 513.
Douglas, Monument of Stephen A., 589 ; Dedication of the, 604.
Drowning—A Sketch on the Arkansas, 544.
Dry-goods' Drummer on his Travels, 637.
Dumping Limited, foot of Beach Street, New York, 620.

EAGLE of the Eighth Wisconsin, 580.
Election Returns—Scene in Front of the New York Tribune Office, 744.
Elephant, Landing of an, in New York, 193.
Elm Works, New York, Landing at the, 141.
Evacuation Day—Washington's Entrance into New York, 761 ; Parade of the First Division New York Militia, 793.
Evening Star, Sinking of the, 677.

Fanehil Hall, Boston, 685.
Fashions, Spring and Summer, for 1866, 173.
Fenian Raid into Canada, five Cuts, 296, 297.
Ferry-boat Sinking, Burning of the, 761.
Field, Cyrus W., Banquet in Honor of, 709.
Fire Department, the Metropolitan, 64, 65 ; Parade of the Metropolitans, 172.
Fire-crops, the failure, in the United States, 620.
Fitch's Home for Soldiers and Orphans, Burton, Connecticut, 172.
Five Points Mission, Infant Class at the, 804.
Franklin, Battle of Mr. Lincoln's Visit, 668.
Fremont, Confederate Cemetery at, 721.
Freshness, "A Modern Episode" in bad, in New Orleans, 544 ; School at Vicksburg, two Cuts, 292.
Freedmen's Bureau, Office at Memphis, 346.

Galaad Maholi, of South Africa, 725.
Galveston, Texas, three Views, 645.
Garibaldi's Head-quarters on Lake Garda, 541.
George Cornell picking up the Cow of the Manchester, 677.
Germany, Illustrations of the War in—Storming of Gitschin, 524 ; Battle-field of Konigratz, 524.
Gold Speculation prevailed in Corpus Prairody, 701.
"Grandmother's Story," 661.
Grant's Headquarters, Cairo, Illinois, 593.
Great Republic, Launch of the, 737.
Great Salt Lake, Valley of, 520, 521.
Greenwood Cemetery, Entrance to, 172.
Gunpowder—Nitro-Glycerine—Experiment at Washington, 481.

Hamilton, C. W., during the Fenian Excitement, 305.
Happy Union, Illustration, 49.
Hartford, Connecticut, Fall of Bindery at, 317.
Hauling Boats on the Atchafalaya Bayou, 685.
"Hayseed Bill," Illustration, 573.
Hay Scales in London Docks, 721.
Hen-pet, Burning of the, 616.
Hendon, Texas, 684.

Ice Yacht on the Hudson, 125.
Idol Worship in Spain, 193 ; in China, 202.
"In Mischief" and "Out of Mischief," 180.
Indian Delegation to Washington, 46 ; Squaws Wearing a Blanket, 569.
Indians, Haunted Messengers Attacked by, 59 ; Attacking the overland Dispatch Coach, 248.
Inside, Illustrations of, 56, 57, 64, 65, 80, 81, 101, 117, 133, 149, 150, 165, 181, 197, 213, 229, 245, 261, 277, 293, 309, 325, 341, 357, 373, 389, 405, 421.
International Business College Association, 653.
Iowa Brooklyn Regiment, Arrival of the, 201.
Iron-clad Navy of the United States, 72, 73 ; of England, 73 ; of France, 73.
Iron Crown of Lombardy, 725.
Island of Nassau, 721.
Italy, the Uprising of, 430.

Jack Frost among the Rich and Poor, 52.
Jackson, Tenn., 540.
Jersey City, Petroleum Fire at, 657.
Jerusalem, Illustrations of, 648, 649.
Jerusalem, Nazareth, Bethlehem, etc., 168, 169.
Johnson, President, Addressing Fellow-citizens at Washington, 192 ; Reception of in New York, 977, 1866, 193 ; Arrival Incognito at Philadelphia, 584.
Johnstown, Pennsylvania, Accident at, 612.

"Kettle and the Drum," 129.
Kirkham, Major, Sentenced by Recorder Hoffman, 44.
King Alfred, 669.

Ladies' Head-gear, Varieties in, 760 ; Wood-work, five Cuts, 757.
"Legend of the Lorelei," 653.
Life on the Plains, eight Cuts, 644.
Lima, Ohio, Survey, 816.
Lincoln entering Richmond, 193, 201.
Little Rock, Arkansas, 344, 349.
"Little Re-pay," 693.
"Little Rosy," 676.
"Little Pet and the Parson," 764.
Lobby of the House, 269.
Little Rock, Arkansas, 285 ; Mastered-out Colored Volunteers at, 308 ; Arsenal Grounds at, 309.
London, Foundering of the, 124.
Long Branch, Review of the Jersey Militia at, 497.
Lost Found, the, 761 ; Scene at Police Head-quarters, 676.
Louisville, Kentucky, 293.
Loyalists' (Southern) Convention at Philadelphia, 593, 606, 607, 609, 613.
Lynchburg, Virginia, 348.

Mansion, Launch of the, in Boston, 688.
Marriage Hall at the Academy of Music, 232, 233.
Mastodon, Jaw-bone of a, 737 ; Bones of the, 772.
Matches, Lucifer, 752.
Matinee, Leaving the, 712.
Medals Awarded to the Veterans of Brooklyn, 716.
Memphis, Tennessee, Fire at, 193 ; Reception at, 773 ; Burning of the, 1866, 251 ; Scenes during the Riot in, 321.
Methodism, Distinguished Men of, 633.
Methodist Episcopal Church, Mississippi, Missionary Conference of the, 128.
Mexico, Southern, 588.
Metropolitan Board of Health suppressing a Nuisance, 628.
Mexican Indians bringing Fruit to Market, 709.
Mercenaries of Garibaldi, Arrival of, 201.
Miramar, Residence of the Empress Carlotta, 765.
Mississippi, Church at Grand Lake, on the, 344.
Steamboat Sinking and Landing at Night, 661.
Mobile, Alabama, Magnolia Grove, 561.
Monadnock, Launch of Great Iron-clad, 153.
Money-makers and Money-spenders, two Cuts, 849.
Monticello, the Home of Jefferson, 545.
Montjoy Fence, Dublin, 461.
Morgan, the New York, 429.
Mother's Darling, 60.
"Mulberry-tree, the," 660.
Mutiny, the, 141.

Name and Grave, the, 117.
Nashville, Tennessee, two Cuts, 580.
Nassau, Landing the Ammunition at, 745.
Natchez, Mississippi, two Views, 441.
National Cemeteries—at Seven Pines, Virginia, 689 ; at Cold Harbor, Virginia, 697 ; Collecting Remains for Interment in, 740.
Naval Academy, United States, Summer Practice Fleet, 485.
Race between the Winooski and Algonquin, two Cuts, 125.
Needle Gun, the, 502.
Negro in Stocks in Florida, 444.
New Dutch Church, 9.
New Orleans, May-day Festival at, 393 ; Sunday Amusements at, 400, 401 ; French Market at, 641 ; Ride in, 516, 529, 536, 537, 560.
New York Central Railroad Disaster, 609.
Niagara, Incubridge over the, 265 ; Centre and Cooper carried over the—Falls, 617.
Nineteth New York Volunteers, Reception of its Brooklyn, 54, 55.

"Oh Ah," Eagle of the Eighth Wisconsin, 580.
Old Folks at Home and Young Folks Abroad, 68.
"On the Fly," Illustration, 29.
Orange Fed, 676.
Organ in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, 580.
"Our Special" A. R. W. on his Travels, 257.
Overland Route, four Cuts, 56.

Palsey, the Fatal, 613.
"Papa's Coming," 421.
Paris, First Universal Market in, 669.
Fashions for January, 61 ; for February, 157 ; for March, 220 ; for April, 285 ; for May, 349 ; for June, 413 ; for July, 473 ; for August, 541 ; for September, 621 ; for October, 685 ; for November, 757 ; for December, 829.
Parisian Toilettes, 413.
Parliament, Opening of, 156, 184, 185.
Parlor Magic, 676.
Peabody, George, Birthplace of, 444.
Institute, South Danvers, Massachusetts, 701.
Square, Islington, 221.
Pekin, China, Drawbridge Street, 216.
Pension Office, Paying United States Pensioners at, 177.
Petersburg, Virginia, Home of Colored Baptist Church at, 317.
Philadelphia Convention, the, 545, 546, 617.
Pike's Opera House, Cincinnati, Burning of, three Cuts, 593.
"Poor Christian," 621.
Portage, New York, Railroad Bridge over the Genesee at, 712.
Portland, Maine, Fire at, 465, 468, 473, 473.

Quarantine, Hospital-ships at the Lower, in New York Bay, 29.
"Queen of Diamonds, the," two Illustrations, 432.
Quebec, City and Harbor of, 693 ; Great Isle at, 693 ; Beach, the burnt District of, 693.

Railroad Bridge across the Susquehanna, 593.
Rat-and-Mice, 168.
"Reconstruction, and How it Works," 552, 633.
Red Rover, end of the, 573.
Regatta at Baltimore, two Cuts, 417 ; at Worcester—Perkiomen Creek, 417.
Relics on a Battle-field, 365.
"Remind from a Waif," 257.
Reynolds, Monument to Major General J. F., 604.
Richmond Bridge, Powell Place, Dublin, 205.
Virginia, Rebuilding the burnt District, 285 ; View of Shockoe Creek Valley, 296 ; Punishment of a Colored Servant at, 477.
Rising Star, the, 92.
Rouen Cathedral, Flowery Council at Baltimore, 724.
Ross Winans, Launch of the, at Millwall, England, 264.
Rush, Religious Service on the, 292.

Salem, Massachusetts, Fire at, 310.
Santa Cruz—its Views, 625, 628.
Santa Fe, New Mexico, Street View in, 240.
Saturnia, Volcanic Eruption at, 317, 500.
Savage, Burning of Congress Hall at, 397.
Schools, Public, 653.
Seed-sand, Wreck of the, 828.
Seott, Winfield, Death and Obsequies of, 360, 373, 376, 377, 389 ; Scenes in his Military Career, 389, 381.
Settler's Cabin—Scene in the Woods, 637.
Seventh Regiment, Reception of, 108.
Sheridan's Ride, 697.
Sherman's Reception in the House, 109 ; Departure for Mexico, 741.
Smoky Hill Station, Fortification at, two Cuts, 240.
Snuffing the Candle for Grandpa, 581.
Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, 641.
Spiral Flask, Crystal Palace, London, 84.
Spring, 676.
" time, 333.
Stephens, James, Reception of, at Jones's Wood, 248.
Stockbridge, Massachusetts, Soldiers' Monument at, 700.
Storm on the Prairies, 620.
Street Scene in Brunswick, Timber-boats on the, 784.
St. Paul's Cathedral, New York, Ruins of, 681.
St. Peter's, Rome, 488, 489.
St. Sulpice, Paris, two Cuts, 305.
Street Music—The Organ-grinder, 733.
Sumter, Fort, Ruins of the Barracks, 761.
Suspension Bridge, Niagara Falls, 712.

"Taking the Oath and Drawing Rations," 453.
Tarrytown, Memorial Church at, 685, 693.
"Tenth Convention, the," 617.
Texas, Fifteen of Germans Patriots in, 53.
Thanksgiving Sketches, 776, 777.
"The Ruby," 484.
The last Chattel, 1.
The Little Queen of the Woods," 237.
"The Old Story," 705.
"The Tired Bird-catcher and the Monk," 645.
Thomas Medal, the, 801.
"Three-card Monte," Coney Island, 672.
"Three Little Spades," Illustration, 565.
"Timely Warning to Union Men," 503.
Trent River Settlement, Newbern, North Carolina, four Cuts, 361.
"Treating," 717.
Trouble Monument, the, 789.

"Uncle Tom" and Grandchild, 689.
Underground Railroad, London, three Cuts, 21.
Union Leagues Home, Philadelphia, Burning of the, 604.
Union Square, New York, on a Windy Day in March, 185.
Unionists, Secret Meeting of Southern, 488.

Valparaiso, Bombardment of, 505, 512, 513.
Van Law, Mrs. John, Residence of, 444.
Venice and the Quadrilateral, 728, 729.
Venice, Proclamation of the Vote at, 792 ; Victor Emanuel in, 817.
Vicksburg, Marriage of Colored Soldier at, 421 ; Scene in front of Washington Hotel, 432 ; Vicksburg, Monument, etc., 441.

Wadsworth Monument at Genesee, New York, 84.
Wall Street, New York, 885.
Washington, Illustrations of, see Waveloop, 564.
Washington, D. C., Arsenal Explosion at, 5 ; Scene at Pennsylvania Avenue on the daily Appointment of Congress, 588 ; The U. S. Treasury Department at, 781 ; State Department at, 788.
Market, New York, 833.
Washington, Inauguration of Women to, 8, 9.
Washington's Birthday, Display of Fire-works at the City Hall, New York, on the 140.
Birthplace, Home, Tomb, etc., 136.
Whale, Striking a, 113.
"Where Greek meets Greek," 253.
White House, Lady Lobbyists at the, 672.
"Why he can not Sleep," 429.
Wild Cats in Nashville, 581.
Williamsburg, New York, Explosion in, 492.
"Wimbledon," Tent, 776, 793, 811.
Winter, 46.
Wise, Ex-governor, Residence of, 4.
Wise Men following the Star in the East, 821.

Yacht Club, Second Annual Review of the New York, 425.
Yachts Henrietta, Fleetwing, and Coats in their grand Atlantic Race, 809.

MAPS.

Map of Mississippi, 12.
Map of Alabama, 28.
Map of Arkansas, 36.
Map showing the Scene of the Fraption at Santorin, in the Grecian Archipelago, 217.
Map of New York Bay and Harbor, 221.
Map of Georgia, 261.
Map of Middle Europe, showing its Railroads, etc., 454, 456.

PORTRAITS.

Agassiz, Louis, 346.
Albert, Archduke, 460.
Arthur, Rev. Wm., 629.
Bancroft, George, 48.
Barth, Henry, 94.
Bateman, Miss Kate, 460.
Benedict, L. K. Nym, 404.
Billiard Champions, Portraits of, 605.
"Blind Tom," 92.
Bonnard, Count, 296, 685.
Booth, Edwin F., 17.
Bowers, Colonel Geo. S., 117.
Bremer, Fredrika, 186.
Bright, John, M. P., 125.
Burgevine, General, 33.
Canalejo, Colonel, 173.
Carne, Pierre, 193.
Carvajal, General, M., 29.
Castle, Lewis, 481.
Cerda, Colonel J., 722.
Chapin, Edwin H., D.D., 173.
Christian, Lieutenant, 5.
Clafelin, General, 469.
Clarke, Rev. Dr. Sam., 141.
Cox, General J. D., 641.
Cumming, Rev. Alexander, 237.
Cummings, Kay J., W., 45.
Davis, Hon. H. W., 45.
Decker, Charles, 13.
Dillingham, Governor Paul, 619.
Distinguished Men of Methodism, 33 Portraits, 633.
Doolittle, Hon. J. R., 421.
Dostie, A. F., 540.
Draper, John W., 428.
Durando, General, 469.
Dumas, General Alexandre, 513.
Field, Cyrus W., 797.
Foot, Hon. Solomon, 237.
Foster, Hon. L. S., 46.
Francis Joseph I., Emperor of Austria, 404.
Frederick William of Prussia, 469.
Friedrich, Barbara, 477.
Gladstone, W. E., M. P., 316.
Gulick, General, 45.
Harvard Crew, Portraits of the, 549.
Hawley, Major General J. R., 685.
Helens, Princess, 484.
Hughes, Thomas, M.P., 793.
Ivanhoff, Osipa, 256.
Jones, King, Slavery, 461.
Johnson, Andrew, 585.
Junior, Bartlett, 93.
Kamehameha V., 593.
Kennedy, Alexander, 173.
Kilpatrick, Major General Judson, 305.
Lakenham, H. Colonel, 93.
Lane, Hon. James H., 461.
Lee, Robert E., 297.
Leopold, King of Belgium, 60.
Longuil, H., 93.
Mannson, General Dulla, 469.
Marcus, John T., 580.
Mann, Samuel D., 533.
Nott, Rev. Eliphalet, 109.
Peabody, George, 221, 701.
Phelps, Michael, 193.
Pierpoint, Hon. Francis H., 173.
Rev. John, 93.
Pride, General, 286.
Price, Lieutenant-General, 128.
Princess of Wales and Ireland, 81.
Probst, Antonia, 176.
Richmond, Dean, 580.
Ritter, Adolphe, 237.
Roberts, John, 193.
Rosecrans, General, 469.
Rodger, Commodore John, 305.
Rumsey, Mary, 237.
Scott, Winfield, 372.
Sloan, King of, 176.
Smith, Erastus W., 525.
Smythe, H. A., 305.
Speed, Hon. James, 393.
Stanton, Edwin M., 29.
Starkweather, the Murderer, 129.
Stephens, Alexander H., 176.
Stephens, James, 205.
Stevens, Hon. Thaddeus, 512.
Stewart, Stephen, 445.
Stuart, John H., 468.
Swann, Governor Thomas, 365.
Thomas, Colonel W. B., 365.
Vennil, Stephen, 445.
Ward, General, 33.
Washington, George, nine Portraits, 113.
Young, Brigham, and his Twelve Apostles, 53, 621.

GENERAL INDEX.

EDITORIALS.

Congress, 1; Wall Street Prospects for 1866, 1; A True Christmas Story, 1; Our Duty to the Freedmen, 1; Mr. Bigelow upon Foreign Affairs, 2; Taught by our Neighbors, 2; Our Maps of the Southern States, 2; The Relief of Broadway, 18; "Hardee," 18; The Situation, 18; The Vote of the City of New York, 18; Declaratory Resolutions, 18; History of the Gold Premium, 18; The Labor Question at the South, 19; Jury Qualifications, 19; What "Are They" Thinks, 19; The President's Position, 34; Did Never Do Much, 34; Governor Seymour's Valedictory, 54; The Limits of Publicity, 34; No more American Books, 36; The Health of the City, 35; Spoonyism, 35; A long Step Forward, 36; The Next Step, 36; The Power to Pay and Relief, 36; Opinion, 50; The Tragedy of the Acropolis, 50; Your Duty and My Duty, 51; Things of Course, 51; Robert B. Minturn, 51; Union, 66; The Tax on Education, 66; Corrections, 66; The Immense Debt, 66; Commutation on Railroads, 67; The Eight-hour System, 67; One Question Settled, 67; The Proposed Constitutional Amendments, 82; Senator Trumbull's Bill, 82; Pensylvania, 83; Statistics of much of the Subject 83; The New Haven Railroad Case, 83; Another South. Revolution, 84; Education of the Freedmen, 85; The Constitutional Amendment, 98; A Prospering Institution, 98; Cotton Crop, 98; The Income Commission Report, 98; Personal Gossip, 99; Mr. Sumner's Resolutions, 99; Amending the Constitution, 99; The Cattle Plague, 99; The City Health Bill, 99; Commutation Opinion, 99; The Civil Rights Bill, 114; The Restoration of Tennessee, 114; Senator Trumbull's Bill, 114; Domestic Suppression of Constitutional Amendment, 82; Senator Trumbull's Bill, 82; Pensylvania, 83; Statistics of much of the Subject 83; The New Haven Railroad Case, 83; Another South. Revolution, 84; Education of the Freedmen, 85; The Constitutional Amendment, 98; A Prospering Institution, 98; Cotton Crop, 98; The Income Commission Report, 98; Personal Gossip, 99; Mr. Sumner's Resolutions, 99; Amending the Constitution, 99; The Cattle Plague, 99; The City Health Bill, 99; Commutation Opinion, 99; The Civil Rights Bill, 114; The Restoration of Tennessee, 114; Senator Trumbull's Bill, 114; Domestic Suppression of Southern Opinion, 114; The Tragedy of the Acropolis, 50; Your Duty and My Duty, 51; Things of Course, 51; Robert B. Minturn, 51; Union, 66; The Tax on Education, 66; Corrections, 66; The Immense Debt, 66; Commutation on Railroads, 67; The Eight-hour System, 67; One Question Settled, 67; The Proposed Constitutional Amendments

Philosophy in the Clouds, 851.
Pius the Ninth, Private Life of, 742.
Poor Christie, with Illustration, 621.
Portland Fire, the, 418.
Prussia: Reformed, the, 478.

QUEEN of Diamonds, the, with Illustration, 457
Quite Unexpected, 502.

RATS and Mice, 163.
Recompense, 464.
Resources and Prospects of America, 597.
Royal Pub and the Bell, the, 750.

SEED Sowing, 315.
Seth Hatheway's Fourth, 186.
Sir Ralph Herbert, 295.
Sketching Adventure, a, 667.
Sparks from the Forge, 795.
Speak Gently, 634.
Stapleford Grange, 60.
Story for Grown People, by a very Little Boy, 47.
Story of Ernest Christian Schaeffer, 135.
Strange Story, a, 316.
Stuck Fast, 171.
Sunday a Century Ago, 442.
Surgeon's Story, the, 149.

TALE of Aunt Margaret's Trouble, the, 854, 570, 589, 602, 618, 630.
"Tangi" in New Zealand, 491.
Thief in the Confessional, the, 670.
Three Little Spades, 309, 327, 353, 374, 386, 426, 443, 490, 471, 487, 502, 522, 538, 558, 565, 582, 606, 614, 630, 647, 666, 695, 698.
Three of them, 458.
To be taken for Granted, 6.
Trial Affection, 650.
Turned Down, a Great, 450.
Twenty-five Dark Hours, 279.

UNEASY Shaving, 646.
Uncle Jacob's Wife, 42.
Ups and Downs, 310.

Via Albany, 810.

WARNING for the Next Thing, 71.
Whale, Taking a, 807.
Whisper Room, the, 103.
Widows, 43.
Willies, 487, 683, 710.
Woman of Influence, the, 258.
Word of an Emperor, 478.

NEWS.

Domestic: Congress, 3, 19, 35, 51, 67, 83, 99, 115, 131, 147, 174, 195, 209, 225, 242, 273, 291, 318, 323, 339, 355, 371, 403, 419, 435, 451, 467, 483, 499, 787, 803, 819.

Withdrawal of Provisional Governments, 5; L. D. Campbell appointed Minister to Mexico, 5; Number of Emigrants from Europe to this Country, 5; Humphreys becomes regular Governor of Mississippi, 19; Mayor Hollman installed, 19; Funeral of Corwin, 19; Fire at Groton, Connecticut, 19; Wreck of the Newton, 19; Bishop Becraeme Shot in the Leg, 19; Fight with the Apaches, 19; Present to General Lee from Baltimore Ladies, 19; Summer Arrivel, 19; Wreck of the Constantine, 19; Cholera, 35; Governor Andrew on Reconstruction, 35; Inauguration of Governor Walker of Florida, 35; Adams Express Robbery, 35; Grounding of the Henry Ad. Gourdineau, 51; Troops furnished by the several States for the War, 51, 141; Generals Mustered out, 51; Number of National Banks, 51; Brooks attacked by Pollard, 51; Beaulieu Path, 51; Georgia's Loss from the War, 51; Death of Rufus Choate, &c., 51; Welcome Worth's Message, 67; Ford's Theatre, 67; Chess Tournament, 83; Twenty-first Illinois, 83; Marriage of Mr. Seigler, A. Dowglas, 83; Seizure of the Metzar, 83; Explosion of the Minnie and Mecaney, 99; The President's Proclamation, 115; Death of Joseph Cerke, 115; Casualties among Union Officers in War, 115; The Freedmen's Bill, 131; Suppression of the Richmond Examiner, 131; Diplomatic Correspondence, 131; Present to General Grant, 141; Freedmen in Southern Regiments, 147; Progress of Reconstruction, 114; Rights yielded the Negro in Georgia, 195; Testimony before the Reconstruction Committee, 209; Death of Charles Beck, LL.D., 223; Death of Major General Seth Williams, 223; The President proclaims Peace, 238; Hospital Statistics, 239; Treaty with the Seminoles, 347; A new License Law, 275; Diplomatic Correspondence, 275; Awards to the Captors of Lincoln's Assassins, 275; Report of the Reconstruction Committee, 291; Reconstruction considered in the Cabinet, 318; Details of Davis's Capture, 318; Our Financial Condition, 318; General Sheridan before the Reconstruction Committee, 318; Suicide of Preston King, 323; Views of the Cabinet on Reconstruction, 355; Charles in Quarantine, 371; Fenian Raid, 371; Acquittal of Colonel Jacques, 371; Statistics of the War, 467; The Cholera, 499; Riot in New Orleans, 499; The Cholera, 515; The Public Debt, 515; A plain Statement, 542; Philadelphia Convention, 547; Maximilian's Birthday, 547; Throckmorton's Inaugural, 547; Loyalist Convention in Philadelphia, 579; Spanish Elections, 595; Syracuse Convention, 595; New York Democratic Convention, 611; Resignation of H. H. Jones, 659; October Elections, 675; Mississippi Legislature, 691; Death of Admiral Farragut, 691; Texas rejects the Amendment, 691; Marriage of Sumner, 691; Indictment of Fenian Prisoners, 707; Sentence of Fenians in Canada, 707; Progress of the House Committee, 707; Novel Impeachment, 707; Fenian Binghuyen appointed Senator, 739; Southern Legislation, 755; The Baltimore Trouble, 755; Society of the Army of the Tennessee meets, 755; Surgical Statistics of the War, 775; Georgia Legislature, 771; The President's Message, 787; Reports of Departments, 787; Arrest of Secretary Belknap, 787; Brawley Robbery, 803; Governor Pierpont's Message, 803; Governor Patton on the Amendment, 803; The Matamoros Affair, 819; South Carolina, 819; Alabama, 819; Georgia, 819; Railroad Statistics, 819; Burning of the New Ironsides, 819.

Foreign: Governor Eyre, of Jamaica, called upon for an Explanation, 6; The Greek Chamber abolishes the Council of State, 5; The Election Rebellion, 5; Pope do Dictator of Peru, 5; Johnson's Message in England, 19; American Illuminations in Paris, 19; Governor Eyre suspended, 19; Flight between the Esmeralda and Contreras, 19; Leopold succeeded by his Son, 19; Fortieth Anniversary of Don Pedro, 19; Trial of Fenians, 19; The Cattle Disease, 35; Admiral Parejas commits Suicide, 67; Capture of Baghdad, Mexico, 67; Fenianism in Ireland, 83; Confiscation of Roman Catholic Church Property in Russia, 99; Cattle Plague, 99; Speech of the French Emperor, 115; The Queen's Speech, 147; Reply of the French Senate to the Emperor, 147; A Novel Action between the Spanish and South American Fleets, 222; Atlantic Telegraph, 247; Attempt to Assassinate the Russian Emperor, 291; Reform Bill passes the House of Commons, 318; Lamaraque's Defeat, 318; Progress of the Cholera, 318; Financial Panic in England, 339; Naval Action off Callao, 339; The War on the Platte, 371; The German Quarrels, 371; The Imperial Visit, 403, 419, 435; Defeat of Gladstone's Administration, 435; War in Germany, 451, 467; The new English Ministry, 467; Insurrection in Madrid, 467; European War, 483, 499, 515; Lord Derby's Statement, 499; Suspension of Habeas Corpus in Ireland, 515; Naval Battle on Lissa, 515; Speech of the Prussian King at Berlin, 543; Napoleon receives from his Demand on Prussia, 547; Resignation of de Marmora, 563; Cretan Insurrection, 563; Resignation of Drouyn de Lhuys, 579; Defeat of the Allies by the Paraguayans, 611; The French Circular, 627; A Turkish Victory, 627; The Roman Question, 675; The Cretan Insurrection, 675; Cession of Venetia, 691; Death of M. Thouvenel, 691; Fluctuations in the Bahamas, 691; South America, 691; Treaty between Austria and Italy, 691; Attempt to Assassinate Francis Joseph, 723; The Pope's Allocution, 723; Meeting of the Hungarian Diet, 771; Prussian Excitement, 787; The Meteoric Shower, 787; Evacuation of Rome, 787; Cabinet Changes, 787; Reorganization of the French Army, 819; Opening of the Italian Parliament, 819; The Empress Carlotta, 819.

LITERARY NOTICES, HUMORS, AND HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Literary: "Carlyle's Frederick," 5; "Medical History of the War," 85; "Inside," 21; "Wives and Daughters," 119; "Sermons in the Mountains," 133; "A Noble Life," 181; "Civil Policy of America," 181; "Inside," 197; "Sermons in the Mountains," 213; "Noble Life," 213; "Civil Policy of America," 229; "Nature of the Soul," 229; Appleton's Review, 259; "Harper's Pictorial History of the Great Rebellion," 260; "Catalogue of the Mercantile Library," 275; "Inside," 261; "Miss Marjoribanks," 261; Harper's Magazine, 323; "Index to the Daily Times for 1865," 323; "Chance: a Tale of Slave Life in Rome," 323; "Across the Continent," 325; "Pictorial History of the Civil War," 339; "Attendale," 371; "The New York Social Science Review," 371; "Thirty Years of Army Life on the Border," 403; "Lectures on the Study of History," 403; "A Narrative of Andersonville," 419; "Drift: a Sea-shore Idyl, and other Poems," 435; "The Union War Chart," 451; "Felix Holt," 467; "Inside," 499; "Spanish Papers," 643; "With General Sheridan in Lee's Last Campaign," 723; "David S. Coddington's Speeches," 755; "The Sanctuary," 771; "Personal Recollections of Distinguished Generals," 771; "Obsequies of Abraham Lincoln in New York City," 771; "That Good Old Time," 771; "Photographic Views of Sherman's Campaigns," 771; "Ladenbey's Fairy Book," 819; "The Two Marriages," 819; "Sir Brook Fossbrooke," 819.

Home and Foreign Gossip: 11, 23, 45, 62, 75, 91, 103, 119, 142, 155, 174, 190, 206, 222, 238, 254, 270, 278, 302, 311, 327, 343, 359, 375, 295, 407, 427, 439, 455, 475, 487, 503, 519, 542, 559, 575, 591, 599, 615, 631, 654, 667, 679, 695, 711, 731, 745, 759, 771, 795, 811, 823.

Humors of the Day: 7, 27, 55, 59, 75, 107, 123, 155, 171, 187, 199, 203, 219, 251, 247, 267, 283, 299, 315, 331, 347, 363, 375, 395, 407, 423, 443, 459, 471, 503, 519, 535, 551, 565, 587, 603, 619, 631, 651, 669, 679, 695, 715, 731, 745, 759, 775, 791, 807, 825.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

Agassiz, Louis, 344.
Albert, Archduke, 462.
Arthur, Mr. Wilson, 629.
Bancroft, George, 40.
Barth, Dr. Henry, 181.
Benelek, L. E. Von, 405.
Bismarck, 181.
Bismarck, Count, 366, 685.
Booth, Edwin, 115.
Bowen, Colonel T. J., 177.
Brenner, Frederick, 184.
Bright, John, M.P., 716.
Burgevine and Ward, Generals, 33.
Carnegie, General J. M., 97.
Cass, Lewis, 401.
Cornell, Hon. Ezra, 141.
Crummell, Rev. Alexander, 637.
Cunningham, Rev. J. W., LL.D., 40.
Davis, Hon. H. W., 45.
Dillingham, Senator Paul, 639.
Draper, John W., LL.D. 148.
Emma, Queen of Hawaii, 541.
Fool, Hon. Solomon, 598.
Foster, Vice-President, 45.
Francis Joseph I., 404.
Frederick William, Crown Prince of Prussia, 467.
Gladstone, William E., M.P., 316.
Hallock, Gerard, 46.
Hawley, Governor, of Connecticut, 253.
Hughes, Thomas, M.P., 189.
Johnson, Andrew, 684.
Jones, Thomas, 637.
Kamehameha V., 598.
Lobenbley, Edward, 788.
Lane, Hon. James H., 483.
Lee, Robert E., 597.
Leopold, King, and his Successor, 60.
Morse, S. F. B., LL.D., 501.
Nott, Rev. Dr., 189.
Pierpont, Governor F. H., 174.
Pierpont, Rev. John, 596.
Prim, General, 126.
Richmond, Dean, 809.
Rickel, Adelaide, 668.
Romero, Matias, 30.
Scott, Lieutenant-General Winfield, 379.
Smith, Erastus W., 625.
Smythe, R. A., 637.
Stanton, Edwin M., 394.
Starkweather, the Murderer, 139.
Stephens, Alexander H., 276.
Stephens, James, 205.
Stevens, Thaddeus, M.C., 212.
Sumner, Charles, 188.
Swann, Governor, of Maryland, 365.
Thomas, Colonel W. S., 368.

POETRY.

Arlington Heights, 538.
Bees, 601.
Autumn Days, 720.
Autumn Leaves, 829.
Baby Castle, 563.
Baby has Dropped Asleep, 676.
Baby on the Perch, 528.
Baby Talk, 670.
Barbara Frietchie, 471.
Bart in the Lane, 394.
Between the Showers, 450.
Bible, the, 318.
Blacksmith's Wife, the, with Illustration, 353.
Blush, a, 596.
Boys in Blue, the, 707.
Breaking the Snow, 42.
Brendent the Seed, 281.
Centennial Song, st. 6, 5, with Illustrations.
Conjugal Bouquet, the, 823.
Crocus for the Cradle, 398.
Death Walk, with Illustration, 811.
Deeds, not Words, 632.
Dressing for Church, 210.
Fenians, 439.
Further up Town, 174.
Girls' "ism," 799.
Habit, 599.
Helen Grey, 202.
Hope and Memory, 831.
Hushing, the, 446.
Inklethorn, an, with Illustration, 740.
In Peace, 147.
In the Dark, 551.
Janette's Hair, 545.
Java Coffee, 187.
July, 490.
June Dream, the, 442.
Kitty Carr, 854.
Life and Death, 693.
Lines to a Slumbering Infant, 253.
Lines to the Derby, 581.
Love's Light, 582.
Maple Grove Tree, the, 877.
Mary Anerly, 721.
Mary's Address to the Gothamites, 205.
Mermaiden, Coming in of the, 463.
Menagerie, 491.
Mulberry-tree, the, with Illustration, 660.
My Answer, 674.
My Wife, 794.
Mysteries of Two Valentines, the, 102.
Nameless Grave, the, with Illustration, 117.
New Year, the, 10.
Nothing to Spare, 634.
Not Troubles, but Pause, 731.
Ode by a Brooklynite, 374
Old Cradle, the, 362.
Old Story, the, with Illustration, 795.
Only some Relics, 699.
Paddy Blake's Echo, 123.
Parted, 206.
Peabody, George, with Portrait, 701.
Perfect Rest, 178.
Philosophy, 731.
President, the Dear, 161.
Prussia and Austria, 375.
Railroad Lyric, 421.
Reason, the, 54.
Rest, 186.
"Ring Down the Drop, I can not Play," 858.
River, the, 582.
Schoolmaster M.D., the, 660.
Scott, 563.
Septembe, 586.
Settler's Christmas Eve, the, 817, with Illustrations.
Shall we Meet Them All There? 378.
Shining Stars, 3.
Similes, 596.
Sidgiar Man, the, 170.
Soldier's Grave, the, 710.
Spring, 326.
St. Nicholas, a Visit from, 820.
Stationman's Lesson, the, 198.
Stray Letter, a, 295.
Sweets of a Woman's Life, 522.
Symbols, 638.
Tale for the Time, a, 488.
Three Suitors, the, 608.
Three Victims of One Head, 453.
To-morrow's the First of May, 270.
To my Dog Dash, 351.
To the Baby, 887.
To the Members of the Loyalist Convention, 575.
Too Late, 398.
Trusting, with Illustration, 717.
Turkish Maiden, the, 56.
Twice Five and Twice Ten, 155.
Two Characters, 590.
Two Travelers, 579.
Unforgotten, 443.
Unwelcome Guest, the, 746.
Venetian Bridal, a, 484.
Vision of Paradise, a, 578.
Warranted Deaf, the, 96.
Wave, the, 779.
Welcome, the, 606.
While the Days are Going by, 51.
Why Shake Hands with Neighbor Jones? 228.
Wild Flower, the, 615.
Willis, 619.
Windows, the, 183.
Winter Bumble, a, 720.
Winter Wind, the, 50.
Woman, 519.
Woodman's Reply, the, 803.
Workers, the, 254.

HARPER'S WEEKLY for 1866.—VOLUME X.

This Number completes the Tenth Volume of HARPER'S WEEKLY. This has been a Volume unusually replete with interest. The Illustrations, both in number and variety, have surpassed those of any Illustrated Periodical.

Our readers need not be reminded that the year now closing has been a period of great moment in the world's history. The European Continent has passed through the most significant Revolution of the last fifty years, out of which a great Protestant Power has come which rivals even the Second French Empire. At home, to the period of bloody Civil War there has succeeded a no less critical period of Reconstruction. The events of this important year, both Domestic and Foreign, have been illustrated in the WEEKLY, and have been continually the subject of Editorial Comment.

Every Number of the WEEKLY is electrotyped, and the Ten Volumes now completed may be obtained at SEVEN DOLLARS per Volume. The Contents of these Volumes comprise, besides Illustrations of all interesting Current Events and Portraits of Prominent Personages, an amount of General Literature—representing the best productions of the last decade—which is alone worth the price of the whole Series.

☞ Subscribers who wish to bind the Tenth Volume of HARPER'S WEEKLY, ending with No. 522, may obtain gratuitously from the principal News Dealers a TITLE-PAGE AND TABLE OF CONTENTS.

☞ Dealers may obtain CLOTH COVERS for Binding the Volume at Seventy-five Cents each, net.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. X.—No. 471.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 6, 1866. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE LAST CHATTEL.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 6, 1866.

CONGRESS.

IT was not to be expected that Congress would make great progress in the matter of the reorganization of the Union before the holidays. But from its action thus far it is very clear that there is not likely to be any serious division in the Union party upon any vital point of the question.

That MR. STEVENS is of this opinion is clear from his speech, in which he frankly announced that he spoke for himself alone. Yet, however much the individual member may differ from the theories of the situation which were stated in the speech, he can not refuse his admiration to the tone of Roman heroism which rings all through it. THADDEUS STEVENS has what the French call the courage of his opinions, and every member of the House might in that, at least, wisely follow him. The vice of our statesmanship is timidity and the paralyzing fear of a minority. One of our cleverest politicians frankly admits that he is a trimmer. He is thinking of Lord HALIFAX. They tell HALIFAX explained that if he were aiming at a port he would not try to sail against the wind but he would tack. You must have a port. You must see and confide in a principle, or, like a sailor in shoreward currents who does not keep his eye upon the light, you will inevitably go upon the breakers.

MR. STEVENS certainly keeps his eye upon the light and he scorns the wind. He sees plainly that the end we must seek is sure rather than swift reconstruction; and he states clearly the steps which he thinks essential to that end, regardless of the undoubted truth that the great majority of the nation will reject the premises and his conclusions. Yet we are inclined to believe that the difference between the various views of the whole question is one of details and not of essence.

THOS MR. RAYMOND replied at some length to the speech of MR. STEVENS. He combated his views of the exact present condition of the late rebel States. MR. STEVENS said that they were out of the Union, and were to be treated as conquered territories. MR. RAYMOND replied that they had not succeed in getting out, and were therefore States in the Union. He is very positive that the States in question are not out of the Union. MR. STEVENS is equally sure that they are in. But even MR. RAYMOND does not think that they are in the Union as New York and Iowa are. Now, can there be two ways of being in the Union? And if there can, are they not, first, as New York is, and second, as Montana is—that is to say, as a State with every State power untouched, or as a Territory?

But why split hairs? The question of reconstruction is purely practical. If indeed MR. RAYMOND had argued that every State not in actual rebellion—Mississippi for example—had precisely the same present rights in the Union and in Congress that New York has, and that no conditions could be imposed upon her elections or her conventions, then the inquiry of the exact condition of the States would be the most practical of all. But since both MR. STEVENS and MR. RAYMOND so agreed that the States in question are not to be restored until satisfactory pledges are given to the United States, it is a mere argument of their abstract condition superfluous? MR. LINCOLN called that kind of speculation "a pernicious abstraction." The important point, in his judgment, was how shall they resume their practical relations in the Union.

MR. STEVENS calls the late rebel States conquered provinces, in which there is now no government or sovereignty but the law of the United States; and he insists that Congress must reorganize them with republican forms. MR. RAYMOND insists that citizens of those States are defeated insurgents, who must submit to any conditions of surrender imposed by the victorious commander. The theory of both is unhiguenic. But would MR. RAYMOND insist that therefore Congress is powerless, and that the whole matter is to be absolutely and finally settled by the President? The President at least makes no such assumption. And MR. RAYMOND forgotten that in the President's proclamation appointing Provisional Governors he expressly recommended the people whom he authorized to vote to present governments to which Congress could properly promise the national recognition?

If, as MR. RAYMOND argues, we have a right to demand certain concessions of the late rebel States, as pures of their surrender and as conditions of their restoration, and among them may require assent to a proposed Constitutional Amendment affecting the whole industrial structure of their society, it is foolish to suppose that we may also require assent to another such amendment affecting the political structure of their society? It may not be expedient to require it, but that is a totally different point. If we are prevented from requiring it, it is not because of certain supposed indefeasible, fundamental rights of States? And if that be so, can any State right be more inviolably sacred than that of giving an unqcerced consent to Constitutional Amendments?

The whole difficulty springs from the wrong starting-point of the debate. The sole practical question for Congress is, in view of the actual situation of the late rebel States, in the light of history, of human nature, and of the principles of our Government, what concessions, in MR. RAYMOND'S words, ought we to demand. The right to exact from the late rebel States the primal right of every Government in the present position of ours to secure its own existence, and includes the right of limiting the demand solely by its estimate of that necessity. MR. RAYMOND, probably, is of opinion that the necessity can be satisfied by the conditions he names as precedent to the emancipation amendment; repudiation of the debt, and the legal protection of freedmen, and revocation of the ordinances of secession. But if one of his colleagues should consider that the necessity could not be satisfied without agreement to a Constitutional Amendment forbidding political disability by reason of birth-place or complexion, or appointing representation to voters, he would be fully sustained in his position by MR. RAYMOND'S logic.

We trust, since the President and the Union party are thoroughly persuaded that some concessions may be rightfully demanded and certain conditions imposed, that Congress, after the recess, will devote itself to the most careful study of the actual situation of the States in question, that it may act wisely as well as promptly upon the report of the Committee upon Reconstruction.

WALL STREET PROSPECTS FOR 1866.

THERE are reasons for believing that the year which is just beginning will be the most active ever known in the history of the Street —or, in other words, that it will witness more frequent and extensive fluctuations in values than have occurred in any previous twelvemonth.

One principal reason for this belief is the avowed policy of Government and Congress, which looks to an immediate contraction of the currency as the means of restoring specie payments. Such an operation insures a steady succession of ups and downs. While the contraction is going on, every effort, whether legal attempted, business is checked throughout the country, men of capital refuse to part with their money, business paper sells dear, prudent merchants decline to engage in trade, the consequence is an extensive accumulation of idle money at the financial centres, which is sure, sooner or later, to generate speculation and cause an advance in stocks. By-and-by the threatened contraction is actually attempted, and then comes a pinch in the money-market; ensuing in all probability, just as most carefully is under full headway, and the "outside public" have loaded up with stocks in order to realize a rapid fortune. Hence comes a panic, and a fall in values more or less severe and pervasive; the "outsiders," and many "inside" speculators too, are "cleaned out;" and then follows a season of calm, dullness, and low prices. But this does not last long. Before many weeks elapse Government stops contracting, either from choice or necessity, and, meanwhile, all the fall in prices and increase in purchasing power of the currency, so that money again becomes easy, under the influence of which speculation operates again, and a fresh upward movement is inaugurated, which, in its turn, in due course, by another collapse. These "ups and downs" will naturally succeed each other at intervals of greater or less duration, so long as paper continues a legal tender, and there is no absolute standard of value to regulate the ordinary transactions of business.

Another element of change may be developed from excessive importations—a point to which reference was made in our last number. If we continue to consume foreign goods as we are doing at present a commercial revulsion can not long be deferred, for it is impossible for the country, burdened with a debt of $3,000,000,000, and with a revenue from forty years of exhausting war, to pay for all these goods. A commercial crisis would of course be severely felt in Wall Street. Merchants and all, more or less, holders of stocks and corporate securities, which would be sacrificed in the event of a general mercantile shipwreck. A pressure would involve a heavy decline in prices which would go on until points were reached at which capital would desert industry, and would flow, as from abroad, to secure bargains at panic prices.

Fluctuations in the market price of the leading railway stocks may be expected to result from the uncertainty which overhangs the proportion to be borne hereafter by net to gross earnings. According to the recent report of the New York Central the expenses of that line have increased during the past year so much faster than gross earnings that, though the traffic of the line has been steadily improving, it has yielded nearly 2 per cent. less to the stockholders than it did in 1863-4. On the other hand, the Michigan Central and the Fort Wayne roads are said to be run for about the same ratio of expense as formerly. We are all familiar with the increased cost of living and the increased cost of labor and all kinds of materials: the president of the leading bank of the city declared on oath in court a few days since that the purchasing power of $4000 a year seven years ago was equal to that of $10,000 a year now. It seems, therefore, reasonable to assume that it must cost the railroads much more than it did to run their trains and keep their road bed and equipment in repair. And as they have not, as a general rule, increased their charges either for passengers or freight, being in many instances strictly prohibited from doing by their charters, it would seem not unlikely that most if not all of them are actually earning less money on the present greater gross traffic than they earned a few years ago on smaller gross receipts. These considerations would seem to justify lower prices for railway stocks. But, on the other hand, the indications are unmistakable that each railway stock in its turn will be "cornered" by the great operators of the street, for erect vagrancy into a crime; then, by refusing to employ the negroes, to compel their vagrancy; then to sell them into slavery for a longer or shorter term.

This is but an illustration of the foul play to which the freedmen will be exposed in the absence of the national protection. And there is no excuse whatever for leaving them to such a fate. Indeed, when we remember the unswerving patience of their fidelity to us during the doubtful years of the war—how tranquilly they repelled their masters' falsehoods meant to inflame them against us—how steadily these people, shrinking as open and trusted foes, awaited for our coming and believed in our friendship—how they guided all our escaping soldiers, who counted upon their fidelity as surely as if themselves created in exchange upon the North Star—how they resisted bribes, threats, torture, and death rather than betray us, asking only, but trusting in us as surely as we trusted in them—when we remember this unprecedented history, and reflect that many among us are now half reluctant not to deliver them into the pitiless hands from which they rescued us, and are calculating how little we can do for them and how much for those who despise and hate them, we may well fear lest the lustre of our victory be irretrievably tarnished.

The cause of the United States, and the expiring Congress of Congress, is no cause of human nature. It is so now more than ever. By the fundamental law of the land every man is now the free equal of every other man, the late slave of the meanest Oaf of South Carolina as much as the Governor himself; and we trust that the Committee upon Reconstruction, looking at the matter from at theories, will recommend the continuance of the Freedmen's Bureau until the people of the United States are thoroughly satisfied that the personal freedom which they have conferred upon the vast majority of the people of South Carolina, for instance, is to be respected by the minority.

MR. BIGELOW UPON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

AT a late dinner of American citizens in Paris at which MR. BIGELOW, the Minister of the United States and General Sickles were present, MR. BIGELOW said: "The policy of the American Government is peace with all mankind, and at the present moment, as far as the eye of any statesman can penetrate into the future, there is no probability of a rupture of the good relations which exist between the United States and every other country."

MR. BIGELOW certainly ought to know, and his remark only confirms the universal impression that the Mexican complication is to be solved without war, a very sensible and most timely hopes it may be. But it is very desirable that the country should know a few details. While we assume from the Message of the President and from such remarks as those of our Foreign Minister that negotiations are pending, it is very clear that the highest interests of the country would gain by such public and general knowledge. The House of Representatives, upon MR. STEVENS's motion, has already requested the President, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate all the information and correspondence upon the subject, and we hope a response will not be long delayed.

Meanwhile there need be no fear that the public interest in the matter will abate, or public vigilance relax. If there are those who suppose that LOUIS NAPOLEON wishes or expects to remain in MEXICO, we think they are profoundly mistaken. He does not count war under the inevitable conditions of such a struggle as this would be. He undoubtedly wishes to get out of Mexico, and our true policy is to help him out, not to threaten to kick him out. A peremptory threat from the United States would make France, which now sneers at the Monroe Doctrine, enthusiastically united in supporting it at all hazards. Now, of course, if it were necessary, the United States or any nation has the enormously vital whole of Europe enthusiastically hostile. But as a matter of fact, it is not necessary. Patience, common sense, and the President's response to Congress, will carry us through.

TAUGHT BY OUR NEIGHBORS.

SOME curious facts are revealed by the statistics in regard to the young men called out to the conscription in France. In one of the departments it appeared that out of 100 young men, 21 years old, it can barely read and write. In other departments the numbers range from 56 to 62 out of every hundred. In 27 departments the number of illiterate young men is more than a third, or certainly one fourth. In 25 others it varies from a fourth to a tenth. In 10 it is less than a tenth. In the Meurthe and Bas-Rhin there are but four or five out of 100 young conscripts who can not read. In the Haute-Marne but three or four. In the Meuse and the Doubs but two or three. There are 86 departments in all, and Paris is in that of the Seine. Strasbourg is in the Bas-Rhin, and Besançon in the Doubs.

The Minister of Public Instruction has verified the figures, and he has offered a gold medal of the value of 200 francs to be given to the Communal schoolmaster in each department who shall be most successful in reducing the number of illiterate persons in the Commune.

This is an illustration of the way in which things are done in France. Instead of a system which makes it the plain interest of every community to take care that its members are properly instructed, the Government offers a pitiful bribe to the village schoolmaster.

But we have also a recent statement of the Condition-of-England question, and it is even worse than that of France. "Nowhere in Ireland," says a correspondent of the New York Times, who is an Englishman, "have I seen the stupid, ignorant, hungry, demoralized people that are to be found here by thousands, and it would scarcely be an exaggeration to say by millions. Now a country with such a population needs a government more intelligent, more active, more powerful, more practical than we have got in England. Twenty millions out of thirty have not the slightest of self-government. They are unrepresented in Parliament; they are confessedly out of the pale of the Constitution."

This is what OLMSTED remarked nearly twenty years ago in his most valuable and interesting "Walks and Talks of an American Farmer in England." And it is this ignorance and brutishness which are the real curse of Great Britain, in which 36,000 out of the 20,000,000 own the land, and in which the poor are growing poorer and the rich richer.

All these facts should be carefully pondered by every man in this country who thinks that it is safe to deny men education, or to tamper with the suffrage of any class and the vast ignorance any where in this country is a peril every where; and in this view the suggestions of General HOWARD in his admirable Report upon the Freedmen are very significant and important.

OUR MAPS OF THE SOUTHERN STATES.

A VIRGINIA landholder lately said to a friend of ours in Richmond, "I own three thousand acres of land, but I have no money to work it with. I want to sell half of it, and I should like nothing so much as to sell to a company of Vermont farmers." The desire to sell was natural under the circumstances, and the disposition to sell to Vermonters showed with what common sense the gentleman accepted the situation. For it is by actual immigration and social and industrial intercourse that the hostility arising from separation and ignorance will be removed.

We propose to publish a series of carefully prepared maps of the Southern States, beginning with Maryland, in the next number of the Weekly, accompanied by concise and complete industrial statistics, that the general character and capacity of every State and section and part of the country may be understood by those who are thinking of settling there. There is, for instance, no nobler State in the world probably than Maryland. Its resources are various and its variety of surface, are unsurpassed. And now that the system of labor which has blighted her is removed, there is no reason to doubt that she will reach a prosperity surpassing as far all advantages. And each State has its special attractions. Knowledge, knowledge, knowledge —that is the key with which the whole country of the Future is to be unlocked; and we shall do what we can to put it into the hands of every body in this country who can read.

THE RELIEF OF BROADWAY.

THE pressure of travel upon Broadway in the city of New York is one of those problems that must certainly be devised for its relief. The question is not purely local. Every part of the country and every citizen has an interest direct in the present city and in its removal. The transport, traffic, and amusement. The street railways have been all successful. But they are now not adequate to the increasing demand. The cars are crowded to the utmost discomfort of the passengers. They run as often as safety and convenience will permit. But still the throng increases, and new difficulties require new solutions. What shall they be? How shall Broadway be relieved?

The project which for this moment most widely discussed is an underground railroad. The enterprise is not original to the Yankee genius. It has been tried, and with striking success, in London, and a charter has been already formed in New York which applied for authority to the last Legislature, which passed a bill, but the Governor, for sufficient reasons as it seems to us, vetoed the bill.

But the Governor did not express any hostility to the proposition, nor do we learn that he entertains any. He wishes only to secure all interests, and to avoid, as far as possible, the dangers of monopoly and of loosely-guarded discretionary power. A railroad of the kind contemplated could hardly fail, we think, to be just conditions, to be very profitable; and we shall gladly record that some practical plan has reached a plan which, with a due regard to the claims of private property and to the public convenience, shall bring the ends of the great city together and relieve the horrors of Broadway.

CARLYLE'S FREDERICK.

THE fifth volume of CARLYLE'S "Frederick" is just published. Full of the same extraordinary power as the other volumes, but even the heroic conduct is misfortune and defeat. The same collection of strange musings. CARLYLE has evidently exhausted all the sources of information, and how dreary and forbidding they must be even a slight student of German military or political memoirs may easily imagine. Yet the weariness of investigation, the despondency and disgust of picking over a mountain of dust for a single grain of wheat, are not in the least manifest in the result. The history is elastic, sparkling, and forever fresh, and no other author of any hereafter feel that the task must be again attempted.

It is obvious from the events narrated in this volume that a great soldier like FREDERICK, despite his adversaries, as NAPOLEON did in the next century. The old methods, slow, cumbrous, traditional, disappear before the onset of the fierce rapidity and appalling daring of a fresh genius. The Austrian and French commanders and Governments learned the intelligence of the power of their adversary, and he sometimes counted too confidently upon their stupidity. The energy with which he threw a few men against an army, the promptness with which he conceived his plans, and the skill and tenacity with which he executed them, rank FREDERICK with the greatest soldiers of history, and his heroic full of resources in extremity and apparent enormous odds, kindles the enthusiasm of his biographer.

But the significance of the war in its bearing upon civilization, which is its vital importance, is not revealed in the history. As it appears here it is a tremendous picture of a Titan with fierce but wholly very inferior but collectively vast and overpowering. As a Protestant hero FREDERICK makes a poor figure, but in a life fighting to extend his dominions and maintain his power he is one of the most striking that can be found. CARLYLE depicts Germany as a happy battle-field upon which Austria, Prussia, Russia, and Austria sustain the shock, and Great Britain is a wary spectator, but inferior upon the outskirts. The performances of the British agent under the Duke of Cumberland, as CARLYLE describes them, were make a very well-regulated British gnash his teeth. His wit is never so sardonic as when he is laughing at the Britons. But the Battle of CHATHAM is a splendid piece to CARLYLE's glory. He shines with new lustre upon these pages. And it is impossible so we read of him not to regret that, instead of FREDERICK THE GREAT and his era in Germany, CARLYLE had not selected CHATHAM and his era for a history. That subject has never been finally or fully treated. It would have been a fine addition to British annals not less striking than the CROMWELL.

The personal interest of the reader in FREDERICK is no greater in this volume than in the rest. Apparently he had not a single quality which could excite a genial and hearty affection. As a conspicuous and controlling actor upon the public arena his movements are interesting and his latent unquestionable as the man using that talent for mankind he is nothing. A certain insincerity and dramatic shallowness spoil his letters and speeches. There are no evidences in his private intercourse. His career is a selfish struggle. You scarcely care whether he beats in a battle or is beaten. His French verses are blackly veneered with French artifice; and the glow of a divine passion of patriotism or of conviction is totally wanting. He was the son of his father; only in the son's case the drill-sergeant was a man of genius.

The HARPERS will immediately issue the sixth and concluding volume of the history; and it is with deep sadness that the reader draws toward the end, for it is the last work of importance for which we can look from CARLYLE. He is now seventy years old, and great literary works are not undertaken at that age. But we have no right to complain, for CARLYLE and his humorous genius in the books he has written than in his enduring influence upon the mind and literature of his time. Vexed as he sometimes often be by his whims and dogmatism, he knows that a manly, sincere, and great soul is behind them all, like the sun behind the rain-cloud. His name belongs to the most truly illustrious in English letters, not above because of his scholarship, and works, and genius, but because he has been a great and noble man.

SHINING STARS.

SHINE, ye stars of heaven,
On a world of pain!
See old Time, sweeping
All our hoarded gain;
Il our sweetest flowers,
Every state's sorrow,
Our fame and our glory,
Every dream divine!

Shine, ye stars of heaven,
On the rolling years!
See how Time, consoling,
Dries our saddest tears,
Tho the darkest storm-clouds
Fass in gentle rain;
While upspring in glory
Flowers and dreams again!

Shine, ye stars of heaven,
On a world of fear!
See how Time, avenging,
Bringeth judgment here;
Weaving ill-won honor
To a very crown;
Bidding hard hearts perish,
Casting proud hearts down.

Shine, ye stars of heaven,
On the hours' slow flight!
See how Time, rewarding,
Gilds good deeds with light;
Pays with kingly measure,
Brings earth's dearest prize,
Or, crowned with rays diviner,
Bids the end arise!

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

December 19.

In the Senate, several bills were introduced and referred. Among the most important were a bill for the defence of the northeastern frontier, and one for the establishment of a branch of the Freedmen's Bureau in each of the formerly slave States. A Message was received from the President giving information in regard to the condition of the States lately in rebellion. The Message in its tone and matter preserved decidedly the local idea of those States, and was accompanied by a report of Provisional-General Grant, characterized by a similar spirit. The reports of Howard and others were also submitted. Senator Sumner called the President's Message "a white, washing document, only paralleled by Pierce's Message to Kansas," and introduced his alternative bill for reconstruction.

In the House, certificates of members from Louisiana and Virginia were received by the Select Committee.—The bill to regulate railroad transportation between the seceded States, and that between the New York and Washington Air Line bill, was passed after a sharp discussion, by 92 to 82.—A joint resolution to amend the constitution so as to prohibit the exemption or payment of rebel debts by any State was adopted.

December 20.

In the Senate, the House bill to pay Mr. President $25,000 was passed. It was then voted to adjourn from the 21st to January 8.

In the House, resolutions were referred, congratulating the country on the adoption of the Constitutional Amendment.—A bill was passed giving to the Secretary of the Treasury the appointment of Deputy Assessors of Internal Revenue.—A bill establishing a general land office for Nevada was adopted.—The recess to January 3 was agreed to.—A resolution was adopted giving the President control of several Indian funds.—Eulogies were delivered on Mr. Kellogg, late a member from New York.

December 21.

In the Senate, Messrs. Fessenden, Grimes, Harris, Howard, Johnson, and Williams were appointed as the Senate's part of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction.

In the House, Mr. Ashley, of Nevada, from the Select Committee on Reconstruction, reported a bill to restore the Territorial Government of Colorado, and to provide for the Capitol Extension and Institution.—Mr. Raymond, of New York, introduced a bill to repeal so much of the Internal Revenue Act as relates to the speech made by Mr. Stevens on the 19th, and taking the duty off of matches.—The Ohio Senatorial contest was then taken up and both members of the Union; that the effort to exclude Mr. Wade was a party measure, and that the Democratic members would vote for him. The ballot was then taken, and was thrown away; and that the acts, speeches, and records of some of the rebels were used as legal evidence in deciding their connection with the Confederacy.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The Provisional Government has been withdrawn from Georgia, Alabama, and North and South Carolina.

Governor James L. Orr, of South Carolina, has sent a Message to the Legislature now in session in that State announcing the President's supersedure of the provisional government in that State. Governor Orr states that this announcement will be most gratifying to the Executive Council, returns thanks in their name, and declares his "unalterable purpose to aid in upholding the supremacy of the laws of the United States."

NEWS ITEMS.

On the 23d of December the Anniversary of the Landing of the Pilgrims was celebrated in Boston with a great military demonstration, and the imposing ceremonies consisted of the presentation of the numerous battle-flags of Massachusetts regiments to the State and their deposition in the State House.

Mr. John Evans and Mr. Jerome B. Chaffee, both Republicans, have been elected United States Senators from Colorado.

The first forty miles of the Union Pacific Railroad, from Omaha (Nebraska) westward were completed December 26.

The Hon. Lewis D. Campbell, of Ohio, has been appointed, by the President, Minister Extraordinary to the Republic of Mexico, in place of General McClure, deceased the office.

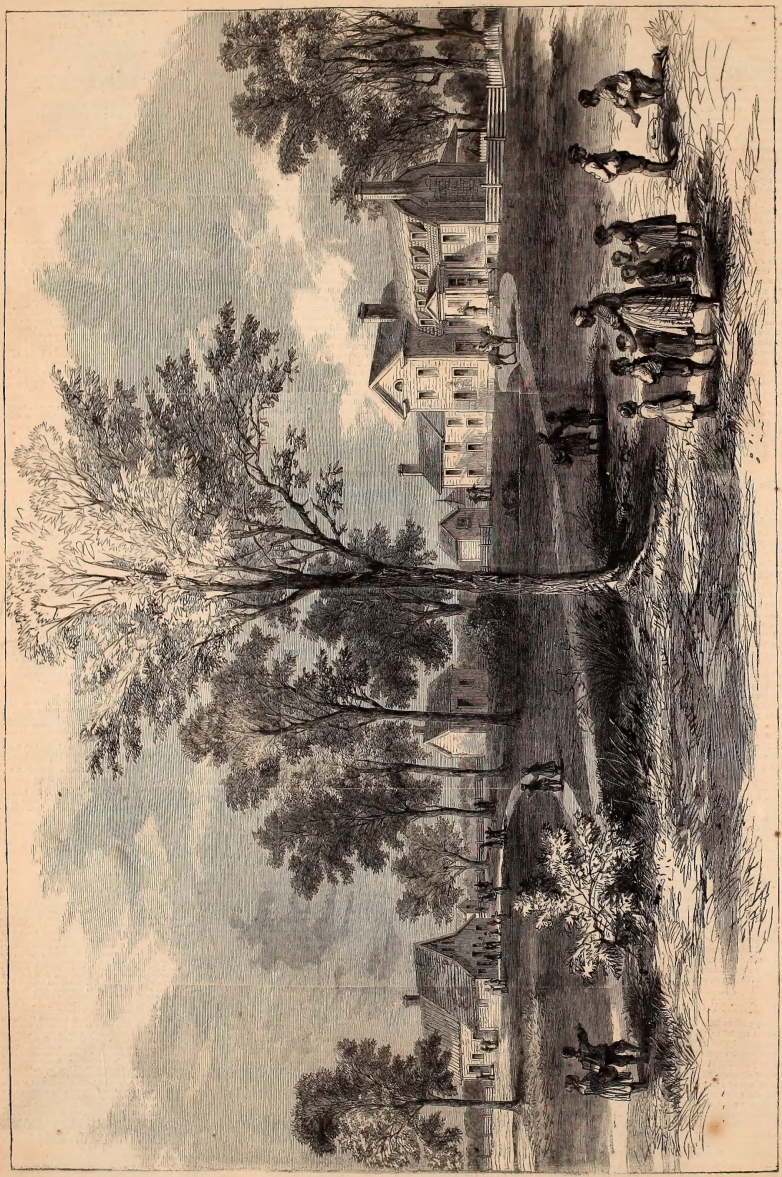
The total number of emigrants arrived at this port for the year ending November 30, 1865, is one hundred and seventy-eight thousand and thirty-six; the number less excess of fifteen thousand over that of last year.

FOREIGN NEWS.

IT is stated that the British Government has demanded of Governor Eyre, of Jamaica, a full explanation of the extraordinary proceedings connected with the late Negro Day. It is conceded, even by those English journals which sympathize with the Planters of negroism and subjugation, that Gordon, who was hung for inciting the riot, had not been guilty of any act for which they would hesitate for a moment to take the responsibility. Governor Eyre, however, is said by other authorities to have been that he was overcome of Gordon's property, has been hung.

The Parisian must have become excessively sensitive to every species of a hostile intention from Austria. Lately they were fearfully excited because Admiral Fautigot and his squadron sounding in Trieste harbor. The recent arrival of Major-General Schmidt in Paris has thrown those excitable populations into another panic. Thus conscience does make cowards of us all."

In Italy it appears that the Holy Mormons Cabinet is destined soon to give place to one formed by RATTAZZI. The Neapolitan Bourbons have been hunted up by the Papal soldiers, and have asked to be allowed to surrender without compliance with any rigorous conditions. They base their appeal upon the fact that the Government had, to some extent, negotiated with them. It was hoped that his encouragement of these brigands that the Pope's Secretary of War, GENERAL MERODE, has been killed.



The Greek Chamber has abolished the Council of State by a large majority. Count Sponneck, the young King's Danish Councilor, has been driven from the country.

Our news from Hayti indicates that General Salnave, after his defeat at Cape Haytien, went to Monte Christo to recruit his army, to which he was receiving large accessions of deserters from Geffrard's forces. Geffrard had offered a reward of $5000 for Salnave's capture.

Spain has refused to submit her difficulties with Chili to foreign arbitration.

General Canseco, who became Provisional President of Peru, on the expulsion of President Pezet, has been peaceably deposed, and Colonel Prado has been made Dictator.

The rebellion in the United States of Colombia is deemed at an end, and popular confidence in the Government is re-established.

VIEW OF EX-GOVERNOR WISE'S RESIDENCE NEAR NORFOLK, VIRGINIA.—SKETCHED BY J. R. HAMILTON.—[SEE PAGE 13.]

EXPLOSION AT THE ARSENAL IN WASHINGTON, DECEMBER 18, 1865—REMOVING THE DEAD BODIES.—[SKETCHED BY A. MCALLUM.]

THE ARSENAL EXPLOSION AT WASHINGTON.

On the afternoon of Monday, December 18, an explosion took place at the Washington Arsenal very similar to one which occurred in the same city a year ago. The explosion took place in a small building at the Arsenal, and in which workmen were employed in sorting ammunition, removing cartridges, etc. The accident was terribly disastrous in its effects, and the force of the explosion was felt at remote distances in the city. Seven persons were instantly killed, and several others fatally injured. They were all employés, and had all been in the army.

We give on this page an illustration of the removal of the bodies after the explosion. The building, completely demolished by the violence of the explosion, soon became a mass of flames. This not only happened before the removal of the killed, but also threatened to involve the adjacent buildings, in which were stored quantities of ammunition, in a like disaster. The bodies of some of those injured by the explosion were torn in a horrible manner.

THE BRITISH STEAMER "BULLDOG" IN CONFLICT WITH THE FORTS AND GUN-BOATS AT CAPE HAYTIEN, OCTOBER 23, 1865.—[SEE PAGE 14.]

NOT TO BE TAKEN FOR GRANTED.

TO-DAY, Eunice Fielding, have been looking over the journal which I kept of the first few weeks of my life in the world, after I left the seclusion of the German Moravian school, where I was educated. I feel a strange pity for myself, the tender ignorant innocent school-girl, fresh from the peaceful shelter of the Moravian settlement, and thrust suddenly into the centre of a nerveworld household.

As I turn to this first page, there rises before me, like the memory of a former life, a picture of the neatest house-grown street in the settlement, with the old-fashioned dwellings, and the quiet and serene faces looking out kindly upon the troop of children passing to the church. There is the home of the Single Sisters, with its shining and spotless casements; and close beside it, is the dwelling where they and we worshipped, with its broad central aisle always separating the women from the men. I can see the girls in their pretty white veils, trimmed with rose-buds, and the blue ribbons of the matrons, and the pure white head-gear of the widows; the burial ground, where the separation is still maintained, and where the brethren and the sisters lie in undivided graves; and the kindly simple-hearted pastor, who was always touched with the feeling of our weakness. I see it all, as I turn over the pages of my first journal, with just a faint longing to return to the repose and innocent occupations which encircled me while I dwelt among them, safely shut in from the storms of the world.

Nov. 7. At home once more after an absence of three years; but home is changed. There used to be a feeling of mother's presence everywhere about the house, even if she was not in the remotest room; but now, Susannah and Priscilla are wonderful for support, and are busy in and out, and I catch a glimpse of the soft dovecolored folds of the dresses, I look up with a start, half in the hope of seeing my mother again. They are much older than I am, for Priscilla was ten years of age when I was born, and Susannah three years older than Priscilla. They are very grave and serious, and it is well known, even in Germany, how religious they are. I suppose in the time I am as old as they are I shall be the same.

I wonder if my father ever felt like a child; he looks as if he had lived for centuries. I think I might I could not venture to look too closely into his face; but to-day I can see a very kind and peaceful expression underlying all the wrinkled and lines of care. In his soul there is a calm serene depth which no tempest can touch. That is plain. He is a good man. I know, indeed, his goodness was not talked about at school, as was Susannah's and Priscilla's. When the coach set me down at the door, and he ran out into the street bareheaded, and took me at once into his arms, carrying me like a little child into our home, all my fear fell away upon leaving my fellows, and the sisters, and our pastor, vanished away in the joy of being with him. God helping me—and surely He will help me to do this—I will be a comfort to my father.

The house is very different to what it was in my mother's time. The rooms look plainer, and the walls are damp and mildewed, and the carpets are not renewed. It seems as if my sister had taken no pride in household matters. To be sure Priscilla is betrothed to one of the brethren, who dwells in Woodbury, about ten miles from here. She told me last night that the beautiful house he had, and how it was furnished with more luxury and costliness than our people often care for, inasmuch as we do not set our worldly show. She also displayed the fine linen she had been preparing for herself, with store of dresses, both of silks and stuffs. They fill me so grand, spread out upon the poor furniture of our chamber, that I could not help but cast up in my own mind what the cost would be, if I inquired how my father's business prospered: at which Priscilla laughed, but Susannah uttered a low deep groan, which was answer enough.

This morning I unpacked my trunk, and gave a letter from each sister to each of my brothers. It was to make known to them that my sisters Schmidt, a missionary in the West Indies, desired that a Bible should be chosen for him by casting of lots, and sent out to him. One copy of the single sisters in our settlement have given to their mistress, and such is the report of Susannah and Priscilla, that they are notified of the application, that they may do likewise. Of course Priscilla, being already betrothed, has no thought of doing so; but Susannah has been deep in meditation all day, and now she is sitting opposite me, pale and solemn, her brown hair, in which I can detect a silver thread or two, braided closely down her thin cheeks; but as she writes a faint blush steals over her face, as if she were listening to Brother Schmidt, whom she has never seen, and whose voice she never heard. When she received her answer, she read it, "Susannah Fielding"—in her clear round steady hand, and it will be put into the lot with twenty others, from among which one will be drawn out, and the name written thereon will be that of Brother Schmidt's appointed wife.

Nov. 9. Only two days at home! how can I change there is in me. My brain is all confusion, and it might be a hundred years since I left school. This morning two strangers came to the house, demanding to see my father. They were rough fellows men, whose voices sounded into my father's office, where he was busy writing, while I sat beside the fire, engaged in housekeeping. I looked up at the loud noise of their voices, and saw him turn deadly pale, and how his white-haired head upon his hands. But he went out in an instant, and returning with the strangers, bade me go to my sisters. I found Susannah in the parlor, looking scared and bewildered, and Priscilla in hysterics. After much ado they grew calmer, and when Priscilla was lying quietly on the sofa, and Susannah had sat down in mother's arm-chair to meditate, I crept back to my father's office, and, ragging softly at the door, heard him say, "Come in." He was alone, and very sad.

"Father," I asked, "what is the matter?" and seeing his dear kind face, I flew to him.

"Eunice," he whispered very tenderly, "I will tell you all."

So then as I knelt at his knee, with my eyes fastened upon his, he told me of the troubles, and troubles, very word of which removed my schooldays farther and farther from me, and made them look like the close of my childhood. The end of all was that these men were sent by his creditors to take possession of every thing in our old home, where my mother had lived and died.

I caught my breath at first, as if I should go into hysterics like Priscilla, but I thought what a good woman I was to be quiet for a time after a minute or two I was able to look up again bravely into his eyes. He then said he had his books and papers left to him, and a couple of rooms.

In the parlor Priscilla was lying still, with her eyelids closed, and Susannah was quite lost in meditation. Neither of them noticed me entering or departing. I went into the kitchen to consult Jane about my father's dinner. She was rocking herself upon a chair, and rubbing her eyes red with her rough apron; and there in the elbow-chair which once belonged to my grandmother sat Jane's husband, a tall fine-looking man of the stagers, wearing a shaggy brown hat, from under which he was wiping large tears. He had a little basket open to a hook in the ceiling. He did not bring his eyes down, even when I entered, and stood thunderstruck upon the threshold. I saw a bottle and his large mouth, as if he were going to whistle.

"Good-morning, Sir," I said, as soon as I recovered myself; for my father and I are many regard these men only as the human instruments permitted to bring affliction to us; "will you please to take your mug with you?"

The stranger fixed his eyes steadily upon me, after which he smiled a little to himself.

"John Robins is my name, Miss," said England is my nation. Woodbury is my dwelling-place, and Christ is my salvation."

He spoke in a very deep tone, and his eyes went up again to the bag of marjoram, twinkling as if with great satisfaction; and I pondered over his reply, and felt that it was a comfort to me.

"I'm very glad to hear it," I said, at last, "because we are religious people, and I was afraid you might be different."

"Oh, I'm not that, Miss, if nuisance, miss," he answered; "you make yourselves comfortable, and only bid Marie, here, to draw me my beer together, and I'll not be in your feelings."

"Thank you," I said. "I will not hear what Mr. Robins says. Bring some sheets down to him, and some beer," and Abigail Jane's brothers' chamber was prepared for the dreadful man who clenched fist upon the dresser, with a noise which startled me greatly.

"Miss," he said, "I don't you put yourself about; and if any body else should ever put you out, about any thing, remember John Robins of Woodbury! I'm there for any thing, whether in my line or out of my line! I am."

He was about to add something more, but he paused suddenly, and I saw grief a little more red, as he looked up again to the ceiling. So I left the kitchen.

I have since been helping my father with his books, being very thankful that I was always quick at sums.

Nov. 13. I learned that the settlement was invaded by an army of men, led by John Robins, who insisted upon becoming our pastor.

November 14. I received the history of fifty miles, one half of it by stage-coach. I learned for the first time that my mother's brother, a wealthy tin man, lived in a large house in Woodbury. He does not belong to our people, and he was greatly displeased by my mother's marriage. I also learned that Susannah and Priscilla were not my mother's own daughters. My father had a little forlorn hope that our wealthy kinsman might be induced to help us in our great extremity; so I went forth with his blessings and prayers upon my ground. Brother Robins, who came over to my father's assistance, met me at Woodbury Station, and saw me safely on the coach for my uncle's village. He is much richer than I expected, but he is also very coarse, and flabby-looking. I am surprised that Priscilla should betroth herself to such a driver, but when I saw Abigail Jane's husband, I perceived that he was out of my sight, he was out of my mind, and I was considering what I should say to my uncle.

My uncle's house stands quite alone in the midst of meadows and groves of trees, in which are leafless now, and waved to and fro in the damp and heavy air, like funeral plumes. I trembled greatly as I climbed the broad hackney-coach out of the inn-yard; but almost before smile which seemed to shed sunshine upon my sad and drooping spirit.

"Yes," I answered, my eyes falling foolishly before his: and I beckoned to him to resume his seat, while I stood leaning against my mother's great arm-chair.

"I have a hard message for you," said Gabriel; "your uncle has dictated this paper, which must be signed by you and your father. He will release Mr. Fielding, and settle one hundred pounds a year upon him, on condition that he will retire to some German Moravian settlement, and that you will accept the former terms."

"I can not," I cried bitterly. "Oh! Sir, ought I to leave my father?"

"I am afraid not," he answered, in a low voice.

"I will," he replied, "and make it sound as gently as I can. You have a friend in me, Miss Eunice."

His voice lingered upon Eunice, as if it were no common name to him, but something rare and pleasing. I never heard it spoken so pleasantly before. After a little while he rose to take his leave.

"Brother," I said, giving him my hand, "farewell."

"I shall see you again, Miss Eunice," he answered.

He saw me again sooner than he supposed, for I kneeled by the next train to Woodbury, and, as I left the dark carriage in which I journeyed, I saw him alight from another part of the train, and at the same instant his eyes fell upon me.

"Where are you going to now, Eunice?" he demanded.

It seemed a pleasanter greeting than if he had called me Miss. I told him I knew my way to the jail, for that I had been not long since to see at the outside of it. I saw the tears stand in his eyes, but, without speaking, he drew my hand through his arm, and I silently, but with a very lightened heart, walked beside him to the great portal of my father's prison.

We entered a square court, with nothing to be seen save the gray winter sky lying, as it were flat, overhead; and there was my father, pacing to and fro, with his arms crossed upon his breast and his head bowed down, as if it would never be raised again. I cried aloud, and ran and fell on his neck, and kissed him once more until I opened my eyes in a small bare room, and felt my father holding me in his arms, and Gabriel kneeling before me, chafing my hands, and pressing his lips upon them.

Afterward Gabriel and my father conferred together; but before long Brother More arrived, whereupon Gabriel departed. Brother More said, solemnly:

"Thou hast made a will of sheep's clothing, and our Eunice is a tender lamb."

I can not believe that Gabriel is a wolf.

Dec. 11. I have taken a room in a cottage near the jail, the abode of John Robins and his wife, a decent tidy woman. So I can spend every day with my father.

Dec. 13. My father has been in prison a whole fortnight. Brother More went over to see Priscilla last night, and this morning I went to lay before us his plan for my father's release. I am going to meet him at the jail.

What I entered the room, my father and Brother More looked greatly perturbed, and my poor father leaned back in his chair, as if exhausted after a long conflict.

"Speak to her, brother," he said.

Then Brother More told us of a heavenly vision which had appeared to him, directing him to break off his betrothal to Priscilla, and to take me—me—for his wife. After which he prayed, and these words shook in his mind, "The dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure."

"Therefore, Eunice," he said, in a solemn voice, "do you and Priscilla see to it, lest you should be found fighting against the Lord."

I was struck dumb as with a great shock, but I heard him add these words:

"I was also instructed in the vision, to set your father free, upon the day that you become my wife."

"But," I said at last, my whole heart recoiling from him, "this would be a wicked wrong to Priscilla. It can not be a vision from Heaven, but a delusion and snare. Marry Priscilla, and set my father free? Surely, surely, it was a lying vision."

"No," he said, fastening his gaze upon me; "I chose Priscilla rashly of my own judgment. Therein I erred; but I have promised her half her dowry as a compensation for my error."

"Indeed," I retorted, "surely I ought to have some direction also, as well as he. Why should only he have a vision?" Then I added that I would go home and see Priscilla, and seek a sign for my own guidance.

December 14. Priscilla was ill in bed when I reached home, and refused to see me. I arose at five o'clock this morning, and stole down into the parlor. As I lighted the lamp, the parlor looked bleak and deserted, and yet the sea, angered about it a ghostly feeling, as if perhaps my mother, and the dead children whom I never saw, had been sitting on the hearth in the night, as we sat in the daytime. Maybe she knew of my distress, and had left some tokens for my comfort and counsel. My Bible lay upon the table, but it was closed; her angel fingers had not opened it upon any verse that might have guided me. There was no mode of seeking direction, save by casting of lots.

I cut three little slips of paper of one length, and exactly similar—three, though surely I only needed two. Upon the first I wrote, "To be Brother More's wife," and upon the second, "To be a Single Sister." The third lay upon the desk, blank and white, as if waiting for some name to be written upon it, and suddenly all the chilly cold of the winter morning passed into a sultry heat, until I threw open the casement and let the frosty air breathe upon my face. I said in my own heart I would leave myself a chance, though my conscience smote me for that word "chance." So I laid the three slips of paper between the leaves of my Bible, and sat down opposite to them, afraid of drawing the lot which held the secret of my future life.

There was no mark to guide me in the choice of one slip of paper from another; and I dared not stretch out my hand to draw one of them. For I was bound to abide by the solemn decision. It seemed too horrible to become Brother More's wife; and to me the Sisters' Home, where the Single Sisters dwell, having all things in common, seems dreary and monotonous and somewhat desolate. But if I should draw the blank paper! My heart fluttered; again and again I stretched out my hand, and withdrew it; until at last the oil in the lamp being spent, its light grew dimmer and dimmer, and, fearful of being still longer without guidance, I snatched the middle lot from between the leaves of my Bible. There was only a glimmer of dying light, by which I read the words, "To be Brother More's wife."

That is the last entry in my journal, written three years ago.

When Susannah came down stairs and entered the parlor, she found me sitting before my desk, almost in an attitude of prayer, with that miserable lot in my hand. There was no need to explain it to her; she looked at the other slip of paper, one blank, and the other inscribed, "To be a Single Sister," and she knew I had been casting lots. I remember her carrying over me a fluffy and kissing me with unaccustomed tenderness; and then she returned to her chamber, and I heard her speaking to Priscilla in grave and soft tones. Priscilla was very silly passive; even Priscilla was stoidly resigned. Brother More came over, and Susannah informed him of the irrevocable lot which I had drawn. But besought him to refrain from seeing me that day; and he left me alone to grow somewhat used to the dreadful decision.

Early the next morning I returned to Woodbury; my only consolation being the thought that my dear father would be released, and could live with me in wealth and comfort all the rest of his life. During the journey home I could scarcely left his side, never suffering Brother More to be alone with me; and morning and night John Robins and his wife were summoned to the gate of the jail, and waited for me to return with them to their cottage.

My father was to be set free, only on my wedding-day, and the marriage was hurried on. Many of Priscilla's store of wedding garments were suitable for me. Every hour brought my doom nearer.

One morning, in the gloom and twilight of a November day, I stood upon the threshold of the path. He spoke rapidly and earnestly, but I scarcely knew what he said, and I answered, falteringly:

"I am going to be married to Brother Joshua More on New-Year's day, and he will then release my father."

"Eunice," he cried, standing before me in the narrow path, "you can never marry him. Release me for his wife. After whom I loved. I love you a hundred times better than he does. Love! The rascal does not know what it means."

I answered him not a word. I was ashamed both of myself and him, though I did not believe Gabriel to be a wolf in sheep's clothing.

"Do you love him? Say so, and I am gone."

"No," I whispered.

"I am your uncle's nephew by marriage," he said, "and I have been at much pains to draw down the lot. There is no hope. I must marry him upon New-Year's day."

Then Gabriel persuaded me to tell him the whole story of my trouble. He laughed a little, and bade me be of good comfort; and I could not make him understand how impossible it was that I should contend against the dispensation of the lot.

Always when I was with my father I strove to conceal my misery, talking to him of the happy days we should spend together some time. Likewise I prayed with him, and by my prayers the simple hymns which we had been wont to sing in the peaceful church at school amidst a congregation of humble worshipers. Strengthened by my own heart and my father's by the recollected counsels of my dear lost pastor. Thus my father passed his time, and I think he believed I looked forward with hope to the day that would throw open his prison doors.

Once I went to the cottage, dwelling in Woodbury, and poured out my heart to him—save that I made no mention of Gabriel—and he told me it was often then and afterward that I feared marriage, but that I had a clear leading; he also told me that Brother More was a devout man, and I should soon love and reverence him as my husband.

At length the last day of the year came: a great fog among our people [fogs?] was my terror before the following year. Every thing seemed at an end. All hope fled from me, if there ever had been any hope in my heart. I left my father early in the evening, for I could no longer conceal my wretchedness; yet when I was outside the prison walls I found myself unable to say something about it, as if these days, miserable as they had been, were happy to those which were drawing near. Brother More had not been near us all day, but doubtless he was busy in his arrangements to release my father. I was still lingering under the great walls, when a carriage drove up noiselessly—for the ground was sprinkled with soft snow—and Gabriel sprang out, and almost clasped me in his arms.

"My dear Eunice," he said, "you must come with me at once. Our uncle will save you from this hateful marriage."

I do not know what I should have done had not John Robins called out from the driver's seat, "All right, Miss Eunice; remember John Robins."

Upon that I left myself in Gabriel's hands, and he lifted me into the carriage, wrapping warm coverings about me. It seemed to me no other than a happy dream, as we drove noiselessly along rosary roads, with the pale wan light of the young moon falling upon the white country, and now and then shining upon the face of Gabriel, as he leaned forward from time to time to draw the wrappers closer round me.

We might have been three hours on the way, when we turned into a by-road, which presently I recognized as the deep lane wherein I had first met Gabriel. We were going then to my uncle's house. So with a lightened heart I stepped out of the carriage, and entered his doors for the second time.

Gabriel conducted me into the parlor which I had seen before, where a fire blazed in a chair upon the hearth, removing my shawl and bonnet with a pleasant and courteous care; and he was standing opposite to me, regarding me with a smile upon his handsome face, when the door opened and my uncle entered.

"Come nearer to me, Eunice," he said; and I obeyed him wonderingly.

"Child," he continued, stroking my hair back from my face, "I hope you would not come to me of your own will, so I commissioned this young fellow to kidnap you. We are not going to have you marry Joshua More. I can not be left alone in his mysphere. Let him marry Priscilla."

There was such a hearty tone in my uncle's voice, that I could not at first comprehend, though I knew that he could not set aside my lot. So he seated me beside him, while I still looked with wonder-struck face at his face.

"I am going to draw a lot for you," he said, with an air of mystery; "in what would my little rose-bud say to her uncle, if she knew that her father was a freed man at this moment?"

I dared not look into his face or into Gabriel's. For I remembered that I myself had sought for a token; and that no earthly power could set aside that, or the heavenly vision also, which Brother More had seen.

"Uncle," I said, shuddering, "I have no voice in this matter. I drew the lot fairly, and I must abide by it. You can not help me."

"We will see," he answered; "it is New-Year's eve, Eunice, and time to end this nonsense. The lot will neither be to become Brother More's wife, nor a Single Sister, I promise you. We shall draw for a blank this time!"

While I yet wondered at these words, I heard a sound of footsteps in the hall, and the door opened, and my beloved father stood upon the threshold, stretching out his arms to me. How he came there I knew not; but I flew to him with a glad cry, and hid my face upon his breast.

"You are welcome, Mr. Fielding," said my uncle; "at Phil's—as I have now agreed that Gabriel's name was Philip—bring Mr. More this way."

I started with fright and wonder, and my father also looked troubled, and drew me nearer to his side. Brother More entered with a cowardly and downcast look, which should never appear a hundred-fold more repulsive in my eyes, as he stood near the door, with his craven face turned toward mine.

"Mr. More," said my uncle, "I believe you are to marry my niece, Eunice Fielding, to-morrow?"

"I did not know she was your niece," he answered, in an abject tone. "I would not have presumed—"

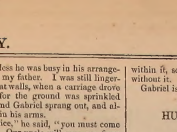
"But the heavenly vision, Mr. More?" interrupted my uncle.

He looked round for a moment, with a spiritless glance, and his eyes sank.

"It was a delusion," he muttered.

"It was a lie!" I cried aloud.

"Mr. More," continued my uncle, "if the heavenly vision be true, it will cost you the sum of five thousand pounds, and one hundred pounds in which you are indebted to me, with sundry sums due to my nephew here. Yet if it be true, you must not break it, of course."



"It was not true," he answered; "the vision was concerning Priscilla, to whom I was betrothed. I was ensnared to change the name to that of Eunice."

"Then go and marry Priscilla," said my uncle, good-humoredly. "Philip, take him away."

But Priscilla would have no more to do with Brother More, and shortly afterward she settled among the Moravians, in the same settlement where I had lived my quiet and peaceful youth. Her store of wedding garments, which had been altered to fit myself, at last fell to Susannah, who was chosen to be the wife of Brother Schmidt, according to her own judgment; and she went out to join him in the West Indies, from whence she writes many happy letters. I, my uncle. Moreover, I never saw him again. My father, and father, who had never met before, formed a close friendship, and my uncle would hear of nothing but that we should dwell together in his large mansion in Salem. I might be as a daughter unto both of them. People say we have left the Church of the Brethren; but I think it is not so. Only, as I had found one evil man within it, so also I found one good man without it.

Gabriel is not one of the Brethren.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

SOME PERSONS ARE MOST PARTICULAR ABOUT THEIR "BACK HAIR."

AMENDED QUOTATIONS.

By a Baker.—Familiar as their names be household bread.

By a Farmer.—Lesson! subaun! lovelist treasure of the plain!

By a Harriet Man, whose better-half is a long time putting her things on:

Hope springs eternal in the husband's breast,
Wives never do, and never can be dressed.

By a Champion of Woman's Rights.—The wish was mother to the bonnet.

Think of the Save-all. A dog lying on the hearth-rug with his nose to his tail is the emblem of Economy. He makes both ends meet.

UNIVERSAL SOLDIERS.—Private Pique and Corporal Punishment.

THE LATEST THING OUT.—The Head Centre.

Not long since, our friend Brown was on a visit to Lockport Mountain, Georgia, and was much struck with the fact that a few jets of water were throwing up above the top of the eminence on which the hotel stands. Wishing to find out the philosophy, he accosted a plain countryman with:

"My friend, is this water forced up by a ram?" meaning, of course, the hydraulic contrivance so named.

"Ram?" exclaimed the countryman.

"Yes, a ram, I say."

"What on airthen, Sir? it's a darned big mule! and it's tremendous hard work for him. Come here, and I will show him to you."

Brown saw the mule, and left.

AMERICAN CLAIMS.

There is a large Tick between England and America. The Alabama.

"A BARBAR'OUS COUNSHIP (by our own barbarism).—Why is Mexico all like a chief in the Fenian conspiracy?—Because it is a head centre country.

A lady wrote with a diamond on a pane of glass:

God did at first make man upright; but he—

To which a gentleman added—

Has since made himself crooked as his—

Spooke's wife loves to make bread, because it cleans her hands beautifully.

The Earl of Surrey, afterward eleventh Duke of Norfolk, who was a notorious gourmand and beat drinker, was a leading member of the Red-Cross Club, was so far from cleanly in his person that his servants used to scold themselves of his fits of drunkenness—which were pretty frequent by the-way—for the purposes of washing him. On Gabriel's name was Philip—bring Mr. More this one occasion they actually stripped him as they would a corpse, and performed the needful ablutions. He was equally disgusting in his dress, and of classic Bloom. One day he was complaining to Dudley North at his club that he had become a perfect martyr to rheumatism, and had tried every possible remedy without success, the latter wittily replied, "Pray, my lord, did you ever try a clean shirt?"

OLD SAWS RE-SET.

The pitcher goes often to the well, but the latter has always been known to return the call.

When the cat's away the cook finds it difficult to explain how the cold goose got cooked.

What is sauce for the goose is generally composed of apples.

Never put off till to-morrow any thing that you have no intention of doing until the week after next.

Too many cooks spoil one's temper, but there are a few who can draw things decently.

Love but the brave should be called upon to expose themselves to danger.

Killing two birds with one's tone is an act only to be accomplished by a singer whose organ is a double-barred one.

An Irish drummer, who now and then indulged in a noggin of right good potcen, was accosted by his colonel with, "Pat, you rascal, you confess your liquor or out ye go!" "Please your Honor," replied Pat, "I always blush when I spake to your Honor sober."

Why is a Naboh like a beggar?—Because he's an Indigent.

TEMPTING SUBJECT FOR ANIMAL PAINTERS.—A dog trying to bark with the bark off a tree.

"Well, bridget, if I escape you I shall want you to stay at home whenever I shall wish to go out." "Well, ma'am, I have no objection, provided you do the same when I wish to go out."

A MAIDEN SPEECH.—Ask pape.

A QUESTION FOR THE METEOROLOGICAL SOCIETY.—When rain falls does it ever get up again?

A doctor up town recently gave the following prescription for a lady: "A new bonnet, a seal-skin shawl, and a new pair of gaiter boots." The lady, it is needless to say, immediately recovered.

What sort of dog would be a good one for "Running for a Cup?"—A muggy dog.

Why is a bullet printer like an ardent lover?—Because he "sets up" a great deal, and employs an occasional "embrace."

What is the difference between a spendthrift and a bachelor?—One is hard up and the other soft-hearted.

BEAST BEFAETER.—A countryman sowing his ground, two smart fellows riding that way, one of them called to him with an insulting air, "Well, honest fellow, what do you sow?" "Why, Sir," replied the countryman, "I sow my own corn." "Do you so?" replied the other; "then I give you to it, for I am sowing hemp."

No more curious or more suggestive Exodus ever took place than the Exodus of Women to Washington Territory under the leadership of Mr. Asa S. Mercer. The scheme proposed by Mr. Mercer is in every way original and praiseworthy. This gentleman, the Moses of this Exodus from New England to the West, is a graduate of Franklin College, Ohio. He went to Washington Territory five years ago for recreation. He found the Territory rich in resources, which it required a vast population fully to develop. The actual population of the Territory was meagre, owing in great part to the small proportion of women.

Mr. Mercer saw that there were nine men in the Territory to one woman. His official position as President of the Washington Territory University — an office to which he was chosen soon after his arrival in the Territory — brought him into direct contact with the people. He saw that the emigrants from the Eastern States had been for the most part respectable young men who sought the more promising opportunities for business which a new and fertile country always offers.

His survey of the social condition of the Territory led Mr. Mercer to come to New England to find women for teachers. This was two years ago. He succeeded in inducing twelve ladies to emigrate for that purpose. This was an experiment, and it proved a success. He found that the ladies were soon married, and there were none to take their places.

Mr. Mercer therefore determined to undertake the transportation of women on a larger scale. He traveled over the North, from Kansas to Maine, in search of intelligent women willing to emigrate, and willing to labor at sewing or teaching. The Government offered him assistance. He chartered a steamer, expecting that the Government would pay the expense. Here he was disappointed, and this caused so great a delay that many of the young ladies (he had induced about 750 to enter upon the expedition) returned to their homes. Some friends advanced the necessary funds, and Mr. Mercer persevered in his undertaking. Although he takes but about four hundred women with him, we wish him success in his undertaking, hoping that this first Exodus may not be the last.

EMIGRATION TO WASHINGTON TERRITORY OF FOUR HUNDR

ON THE STEAMER "CONTINENTAL."—[SKETCHED BY A. B. WAUD.]

THE NEW YEAR.

HARK to the bells, the sweet-voiced bells,
Whose echoes across the solemn night!
Hear what an anthem of delight
With every passing moment swells,
As far and near, with voices clear,
They welcome in the glad New Year!

He comes, his limbs with garlands bound,
And round him, like a halo, now
The dawn of childhood, and his brow
With sacred mistletoe is crowned,
And in his eyes Hope's dawning light
Shines like a star upon the night!

He comes with soft and noiseless tread,
The young, the glad, the sweet New Year;
With gentle step he draweth near
To where the Old Year lieth dead,
And takes from out his lifeless hands
The glass which holds Time's shifting sands.

Disturb him not, the gray Old Year,
But fold his hands across his breast;
So let him lie and take his rest:
Tread lightly now, touch not his bier;
No need is there for him to wee:
Close his pale lids and let him sleep.

Alas! his hands with blood are red,
The mark of Cain is on his brow;
Peace! come away, forgive him now,
The sad Old Year, since he is dead;
Let him alone—he can not hear
The bells that sound so sweet and clear.

But thou, New Year, with greetings free
We hail thy advent—louder swells
The supreme anthem of the bells
With songs of joy we welcome then,
With hearts which glow with hope and cheer
We greet thy coming, glad New Year!

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,
Author of "BARBARA'S HISTORY," &c.

CHAPTER XCIV.

WHAT FITZ IS AKIN TO.

He found himself in a small outer salon opening through wide folding-doors into a large room. A dark figure sitting beside an open window rose slowly at his approach, and a very low soft voice, in reply to his muttered salutation, bade him be seated.

"I trust," he said, "that Miss Rivière will pardon an intrusion which must seem unpardonable till it is explained."

"You are welcome, Sir," she replied. "If only as Mr. Forsyth's relation."

She raised her eyes to his face for the first time, faltered, colored crimson, and, after a moment's hesitation added:

"I think we have met before."

Saxon bowed, profoundly.

"I believe," he said, "that I once had the honor of being useful to you for a few moments."

"You never gave me any opportunity of—of thanking you, Mr. Trefalden," she said, pressing her hands tightly together in her extremity of embarrassment.

"You owe me more thanks at the time, madam, than were merited by so trifling a service," replied Saxon, his self-possession all coming back to him at the sight of her timidity. "I assure you I should have moved heaven and earth to serve you."

"Very strange!"

"But I had so much difficulty to trace you here that I began to fear we should not meet at all."

"Do you come from Angoulême?"

"No; I have just returned you from England."

"Indeed? I—I thought you had, perhaps met Mr. Forsyth in Angoulême, and—"

"My errand would not have brought me to France," replied Saxon, gravely.

"How happy he will be to see you!"

Saxon looked down in silence.

"And—and he will be here in about an hour and a half," added Miss Rivière, with a glance at the pendule on the mantle-shelf.

"This evening?"

"Yes. He returns to Bordeaux to-day, and will lodge to-night at the auberge in the village."

As she said this Miss Rivière, surprised by the undemonstrative way in which Saxon received her information, again lifted her eyes for a moment.

"—I hope there is nothing the matter," she said, anxiously.

Saxon hesitated.

"I can not say that I am the bearer of good news," he replied.

"Oh dear, I am so sorry!"

"I am sorry too," said he; "more sorry than I can tell you."

The compassionate reluctance of his manner seemed to startle her.

"What is the mean?" she said, with evident apprehension.

"I mean that it grieves me to the soul to inflict the pain which my intelligence must give you."

"Must give me!" she faltered, looking for an instant quite white and scared. Then, smiling very sadly, she shook her head, and turned her face away. "Ah no," she said; "that is not over!"

"If I could indeed believe, Miss Rivière, that you would be indifferent to the tale I have to tell, my anxiety would be at an end," said Saxon, eagerly. "Will you forgive me if I ask you a very strange question?"

"—I think so."

"Do you love my cousin?"

Miss Rivière turned a shade paler, and said, with some dignity:

"Mr. Forsyth is my best friend in the world—my only friend—and I honor him as he deserves to be honored."

"But if he were not your best friend, Miss Rivière? If instead of doing you service he had done you wrong? If that honor which you pay to him were utterly unmerited—what then? Now, forgive me—I do not wish to alarm you; but I am here to-day to tell you terrible truths, and I now only implore you to listen to them patiently."

"I am quite willing to hear what you have to say, Mr. Trefalden," Miss Rivière replied; "but my friend is in your cousin's hands at this moment."

"My own faith in him was not easily shaken," said Saxon. "Like yourself, I believed him to be my friend."

"Of what offense do you accuse him?"

"He has robbed me."

"Robbed you!"

"Yes—of two millions of money."

Miss Rivière looked at him with a sort of incredulous bewilderment.

"Of money?" she faltered. "You say that he has robbed you of money?"

"I trusted him with two millions, and he has robbed me of every farthing," replied the young man, pitilessly direct. "Nor is this all. He has robbed your cousin, Mr. Castletowers, of twenty-five thousand pounds more."

"Mr. Forsyth does not know Lord Castletowers."

"Mr. Forsyth may not know Lord Castletowers, but William Trefalden—William Trefalden, the attorney-at-law—knows him perfectly well."

"William Trefalden—who is he?"

"William Trefalden is Mr. Forsyth—William Trefalden is my cousin—William Trefalden is the man to whom Miss Rivière was about to give her hand to-morrow."

The young girl half rose from her chair, and Saxon could see that she was trembling from head to foot.

"I do not believe it!" she exclaimed. "It is monstrous—incredible!"

"It is true."

"What proof have you?"

"Not much; and yet I think enough to convince you. Do you know my cousin's handwriting?"

"Yes."

Saxon took a card from his purse and laid it before her.

"Do you recognize it?"

"Yes—this is his hand."

"Read it."

The young lady read aloud:—"Mrs. Rivière, Regent's Park. Ashes to Ashes. Wood." What does this mean? We never lived at St. John's Wood."

"Yet that is the address which William Trefalden gave to Prudence Terrace when you removed to Sydenham."

"That is very strange!"

Saxon looked, with a crumpled letter, and laid that also before her.

"Do you recognize his handwriting here as well?"

"Undoubtedly. Am I to read it?"

Saxon hesitated.

"—It is the farewell letter to a poor woman he once loved," he said. "There is nothing in it that you may not read if you wish it."

Miss Rivière read, and returned it in silence.

"You observe the signature?"

"I do."

"You see that you have been imposed upon by a false name, and that others have been imposed upon by a false address?"

"Yes—I see it; but I do not understand—"

"Will you tell me how it was that you could not leave word with your landlady to what seaport place you were going when you left Sydenham?"

Mr. Forsyth did not decide upon Clevedon till we reached Dijon."

"Can you tell me why you have been taken from London to Clevedon, from Clevedon to Bristol, from Bristol to Bordeaux, instead of embarking direct for the States from either Southampton or Liverpool?"

"I do not know; I was not aware that we were pursuing an unusual route."

"But you see it now?"

"I see that we made an unnecessary détour; but I do not know why—"

"Permit me to tell you why. Because this journey was not the journey of an honest man, but the flight of a felon—a flight planned for months beforehand, and planned with no other end in view than to baffle inquiry and defeat pursuit. You leave Brudenell Terrace, and, thanks to the false address given, all trace of you is lost. You leave Sydenham, uncertain of your destination. You spend a few days at an obscure watering-place in the West of England, and then travel in a manner purposely plying at uncertain dates between Bristol and Bordeaux. With what object?—simply that you may take your passage to America by means of a French port instead of sailing direct from London, Southampton, or Liverpool. In order to do this you must have time to baffle inquiry and defeat pursuit. You leave Bruidenell Terrace, and, thanks to the false address given, all trace of you is lost. You leave Sydenham, uncertain of your destination. You spend a few days at an obscure watering-place in the West of England, and then travel in a manner purposely plying at uncertain dates between Bristol and Bordeaux. With what object?—simply that you may take your passage to America by means of a French port instead of sailing direct from London, Southampton, or Liverpool. In order to do this you must have time to baffle inquiry and defeat pursuit. You leave Brud

Presently they heard William Trefalden's voice chatting pleasantly with the housekeeper in the hall, and then his footsteps on the stairs. One side the door he seemed to pause for an instant, then turned the handle and came in. Finding himself in the dark, he deposited something heavy on the floor, and, guided by the narrow line of light between the folding-doors, moved toward the second salon. As he did this Mr. Guthrie softly locked the door and put the key in his pocket. Slightly as the sound was, the lawyer heard it.

"What's that?" he said, quickly, and stopped half-way.

He listened, holding his breath the while; then sprang forward, threw the doors open, and passed into the adjoining room.

As he did so Saxon turned on the full light of the table-lamp, and the two men stood suddenly revealed to each other face to face.

"At last—traitor?"

A frightful pallor—that deadly pallor which is born, not of fear but of hatred—spread itself slowly over William Trefalden's countenance, and there remained. No other sign betrayed the tumult within. Haughty as an Indian at the stake, he folded his arms, and met his cousin's eye unflinchingly.

They stood for a second or two, both silent. Then Mr. Guthrie came in from the antechamber, shut the folding-doors, and took his seat at the table. Judge Saxon resumed his former place, and, pointing to a chair standing apart from the rest, said:

"Please to sit there, William Trefalden."

The lawyer, with a sharp glance of recognition at the clergyman, flung himself carelessly into the chair.

"May I ask what this means?" he said, contemptuously. "An amateur Star-chamber?"

"It means justice and retribution," replied Saxon, sternly.

Mr. Trefalden smiled leaned back in his chair, and waited for what should follow next. He knew that all was over. He knew that his fairly gold had turned to withered leaves, and that the phantom of that Eldorado which had vanished away, leaving in its place only the endless desert and the burning sands. He knew that the edifice which he had been rearing for years, after month, with such consummate skill, was shattered to dust—that the din on which he had staked everything—country, personal safety, and his whole worldly future, had turned up a blank at the very moment when he believed the prize his own. He knew that Helen Beaufain would never, never, now be wife of his; would never grace his home and gladden his heart with her smiles; never learn to give him love in return, in all the weary years that were to come! He knew that from this time forth he was a marked man, a branded felon dependent on the mercy of the kinsman whom he had betrayed; and yet, knowing all this, his self-command never wavered, his nerve quailed, his voice never faltered for an instant. He was desperate; but his pride and his courage were at least equal to his despair.

Saxon, sitting at the head of the table with his head leaning on his hand, looked down for some moments in silence.

"I have not much to say to you, William Trefalden," he began presently; "and what little I have to say must be said briefly. I will approach one who could act as you have acted would be idle. If you had my heart to be touched, the power of honor to be awakened, neither you nor I would be sitting here tonight."

Still smiling scornfully, the lawyer listened, apparently with the greatest indifference.

"To begin, then, to plain facts," continued the young man, "you have defrauded me of two millions of money; you have that money in your possession; you are at this moment in my power; and I have but to call in the aid of the village police, and consign you to Bordeaux in the carriage which now waits below for that purpose. Such is your position, and such is mine. But I am unwilling to push matters to extremity. I am unwilling to attach public exposure to the name which you are the first of our family to disgrace. For my uncle's sake and my own, and from respect to the memory of your guardian's notions of honest men, I have decided to offer you a fair alternative."

He paused and referred to a slip of paper lying beside him on the table.

"In the first place," he continued, "I require you to restore to me the money of which you robbed me. In the second place, you must sign a full confession of your guilt, both as regards the two millions stolen from myself and the two-twenty-five thousand pounds of which you have defrauded the Earl of Castletowers. In the third place, you must sign a formal deed whereby you never again be seen on this side the Atlantic. If you agree to these conditions, I consent to screen you from the law, and will give you the sum of one thousand pounds to help you forward honestly in the new life before you."

"And supposing that I decline the conditions," said Mr. Trefalden, calmly. "What then?"

"Then I simply ring this bell, and the boy who just crossed the gates to my villa—I announce to him a couple of sergents de ville from the village."

The lawyer only elevated his eyebrows in the least perceptible degree.

"Your decision, if you please."

"My decision?" replied Mr. Trefalden, with as much apparent indifference as if the subject under consideration were the binding of a book or the framing of a picture. "Well—it appears to me that I am allowed no freedom of choice."

"Am I to understand that you accept my conditions?"

"I suppose so."

"Where, then, is the money?"

"In the adjoining room. You have but to take possession of it."

Mr. Guthrie rose, fetched the carpet-bag, and placed it on the table.

"Your keys, if you please."

William Trefalden produced three small keys on a ring, and handed them to the clergyman.

"You will find the memoranda carefully executed," he said, looking on with unruffled composure while the bag, the deed box, and the cash box were successively opened, "the contents of the last were then turned out upon the table, and Mr. Guthrie, with a view to ascertaining whether the whole sum was contained there represented, proceeded to examine each item separately. But he found, after a very few minutes, that the attempt was fruitless. The notes and specie offered no difficulties, but of notes and specie there was, comparatively, but a small proportion, while the bulk of the bag consisted of securities of the value of which he could form no opinion, and precious stones which it would have needed a lapidary's knowledge to appraise.

"I confess," he said, "that I am wholly unequal to the task of verifying this money. It needs a better eye than my own to detect a false gem."

"Then it must go unverified," said Saxon, taking up roulcaux and papers as they came, and throwing them back again, pell-mell, into the box. "I am no man of business myself, and I can not prolong this painful investigation beyond last night. You must trust my honesty, sir."

"If you will tell me what you wish said, I will draw it up for you," said Mr. Guthrie.

Saxon dictated, and the lawyer wrote, and the clergyman's pen ran swiftly over the paper. When it all was written, he read the declaration aloud:

"I, William Trefalden, of Chancery Lane, London, attorney-at-law, do acknowledge and confess to having embezzled the sum of two millions sterling from my cousin, Saxon Trefalden, of Switzerland, with intent to defraud him of the same; and I do further confess that, having by this with the belief that I had invested it for his use and advantage in the shares of a certain supposititious Company, which I myself had called into existence, but was wholly invented and imagined by myself to serve my own fraudulent ends. I also confess to having forged the names of persons in such foreign and other securities as I conceived would turn to my own future profit, and to having forged the Queen's Exchequer seal to the property thus abstracted, intending to escape therewith to the United States of America, at appropriate opportunity, with the said property.

"I likewise confess to having, two years since, received the sum of twenty-five thousand pounds from my client, Gerome Beaufain, Esq., of the Earl of Castletowers, which sum it was my duty to have straightway paid over into the hands of Oliver Beaufain, Esq., of Beaufain Hall, Surrey, for the liquidation of a mortgage debt contracted by Lord Castletowers some four years previously, which, however, Oliver Beaufain refused to accept, and which I, the said William Trefalden, still retain, and have concealed in the United States of America, with the intent to appropriate the same to my own use, continuing to pay only the interest thereof, as heretofore, in the name of my client.

"And I allege that this confession, both as regards the offense committed by me against my cousin, Saxon Trefalden, of Switzerland, and as regards the offense committed by me against my client, Gerome Beaufain, Esq., is in all respects substantially and absolutely true, as witness my signature, given in presence of the undermentioned witnesses, this twenty-second day of September, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty."

Mr. Guthrie, having read the statement through, passed it across the table. William Trefalden, still leaning back carelessly in his chair, affected to smile at the formality of the thing, while the clergyman had rounded his sentences, but, as the reading proceeded, frowned, and beat his impatiently upon the polished floor.

Saxon pushed the inkstand toward him.

"Your signature," he said.

The lawyer took up a pen—dipped it in the ink—hesitated—and then, with a sudden movement of disdain, flung it back upon the table.

"You have your money," he said, impatiently. "What more can you want?"

"I require your signature to your guilt."

"I can not—will not sign it. Take your money, in God's name, and let me go!"

Saxon rose, pale and implacable; his hand upon the bell.

"The alternative lies before you," he said. "Sign, or I give the signal."

William Trefalden cast a hasty glance about the room, as if looking for some weapon whereby to slake the hatred that suffered in his eyes; then, muttering a fierce oath between his teeth, snatched up the pen, and, as it were, dug his name into the paper.

"There, curse you!" he said, savagely. "Are you satisfied?"

Mr. Guthrie affixed his own signature as witness to the confession, and Saxon did the same.

"Yes," the young man replied, "I am satisfied. It only remains for me to fulfill my share of the compact."

And he selected Bank of England notes to the value of one thousand pounds.

The lawyer deliberately tore them into as many fragments.

"I could die a dozen deaths," he said, "sooner than owe a crust to your bounty."

"As you please. At all events, you are now free."

Hereupon Mr. Guthrie rose, took the key from his pocket, and unlocked the outer door. The lawyer followed him. On the threshold he turned:

"Saxon Trefalden," he said, in a low, deep, concentrated tone, "if ever man hated man, I hate you. I hated you before I ever beheld you, and I have hated you with a tenfold hatred from the hour when we first met face to face. Remember that. Remember that my deadly curse will be upon you and about you all the days of your life—upon your children, and upon your children's children—upon your marriage-bed, and your death-bed, and your grave. There is no sorrow, no disease, no shame, that I do not pray may embitter your life, and blast your name in this world—no extremity of despair and anguish which I hope may not fall to your portion in the next. Take this for my farewell."

There was something frightful in the absence of all passion and fury, in the cold, calm, deliberate emphasis with which William Trefalden uttered this parting malediction; and Saxon heard it with a face of solemn pity and wonder, and looked at him steadily from the first word to the last.

"May God forgive you as I do!" he then said, solemnly. "And may He in the infinite mercy forgive you and pity you, and soften your heart, and not visit these curses upon your own unhappy head!"

But William Trefalden was already gone, and heard no word of his cousin's pardon.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

WHAT a merry time every body had preparing for Christmas, notwithstanding the gloom and the economizing associates combined to prevent! First came the rain, pouring steadily all day, and the ladies stood at the windows shaking their heads at the dismal prospect, but sallied by dauntless water-proofs and rubber boots and courageously facing the storm. Then came the snow, softly but thickly, making a disagreeable "slush" on every crossing. But who cared for that when Christmas gifts were beginning every where to flutter? Boxes were sent forth all the afternoon, and boldly did they hasten. But it was of no use—every body fashioned so much of their own gifts, and spent so much dull gayety to the wind. So, finally, the elements yielded, and there came a bright sunny morning, and "all the world and his wife" were out in their best attire. What mattered it to them if the skies were overcast below? Above, the sun did not cease to be duly, wasn't there plenty of gaiety in every shop? and wasn't confusing display of pretty things? and complaisant clerks ready to go down, cheerfully? And over and over the vision of sundry pairs of bright, eager, expectant eyes set home a constant pleasure? Every body was genial; every body was accommodating; every body was ready to do any thing to help the little shivering boy who held out his hand. Nobody was grumpy, nobody was cross, nobody had to have spent all my money," with a shake of the head and some new attraction.

And so, at night, Christmas Day—with song and genius, with gifts and gladness—came and went.

Now, standing on the threshold of 1866, we find farewell to the old year, and welcome to the new. Its white mantle has been rescued, though at such a fearful price—and torn in hopeful gaps and rents, and rendering our vocabulary so to all, that not only the old apology of enjoyment may flow more freely, and pour a purer stream than ever before, but that new sources of happiness may open with the New Year.

We presume that very few ladies will be "out at home" on New Year's Day, if they can help it—and we, therefore, taken from a recent Boston paper, probably presume the etiquette considered suitable for ordinary occasions—is broken:

"Not at home" may mean not in the house, or not at home to visitors, or to the outside world understood, but not expressed. I fear there is no polite alternative; for certainly, when I inquire for a friend, if my footman should come back word, 'Mrs. Jones-le-te engaged,'" I should consider it equivalent to "Not at Home."

The phrase "Not at home" is designedly ambiguous, to say the least. In many circles of society it is positively false, because many friends "not at home" are desirous to give the "exact direct" to a caller, and saying she "is engaged" (if she is) will accomplish that object, we don't know of any better phrase to use. But if we think there is a "polite alternative." In the first place, it would be well to consider whether the custom of such a hateful enough to be substituted to receive a friend in it, until they dressed for the day, called need not be kept waiting on ordinary occasions, nor should we say, "engaged" or "not at home." And aside from dressing (which we fancy is often the origin of "not at home"), a lady is seldom so engaged that she might not be induced to go to the parlor, cordially greet her visitors, and, if needful, state frankly at once that she is busy, and that she has promised to meet a friend at that hour—that her preserves are over the fire, and require more than servants' attention—or whatever it may be. If the lady is necessarily exiles, and this is done gracefully and cordially, no one of good sense will be offended, and will know that the busy lady who thus adds a very inconvenient kind of false pride. Of course if illness or extraordinary circumstances call a message to that effect will, or should, be accepted as all-sufficient.

When "parlor-exhibits" settle the bill for the Christmas dinner we hope our readers will be sorry if the old item of 1719 could return, when in Scotland "fourteen ogs" were sold for "ane shilling Scotts" (equal to about one penny of our currency), and when at a wedding-dinner, "one goose at eight shilling Scotts; duck and drake, with pease and bacon, four shillings Scotts; apple-tarts, prins and buns, at four shillings," and so on; prices, however, were settled in 1719. Later, in 1743, "strong old claret was sold at fourteen shillings the dozen," and for "smaller and cheaper wines, sherry cost fourteen shillings a dozen, and brandy twelve. Eggs sold at a penny a dozen, hens at fourpence each, and ducks at sixpence each. Chickens fetched sixpence a leg of beef for six shillings, and "a side of mutton" for five. Alas! those days are past!

One York is bad enough, but seldom is there any record of any deed in this city so storm as the following:

"A fellow has been arrested in Boston for robbing a hen-roost of a dozen chickens."

A Virginia paper gives the following curious account of a family wedding-cast:

"Many years since an old German citizen of Pendleton County, when about to lead his fair 'frow' to the hymeneal altars, purposed a wedding-cake, in which he was married. His wife presented him with many children, among whom were eight sons, all of whom were married in the same cast in which their father married their mother. The youngest of the eight sons had seven sons, all of whom were married in the same wedding-cast; and after the youngest son of the seven, or the youngest grandson of the original owner of the cast, had let his blushing bride to the altar of Hymen, the venerable grandfather of the wedding-cast he sold it for the sum of $50. What has become of the cast since it was sold we have not been advised, but suppose that some one is keeping it for the purpose of getting married in it."

The Jewish Talmud holds this opinion in regard to woman:

"A good wife is Heaven's noblest gift. A prudent never allows herself to be disturbed from her work; even while conversing, she is busily spinning. An old, experienced woman in a household is an ornament to a family. He who lives in an unmarried state knows no joys, none of the blessings of home, and is without support. God has given to woman more ability of judging correctly than a man."

The English papers are fond of publishing all the "disturbing accidents" and "awful deaths" by railroads that they can collect. Evidently they have no liking for that article of "cattle" dress. We do not hear of frequent accidents in America from that cause, consequently it must be that English ladies are not so skilled in the management of that part of their attire as our fair ladies are. One of the freight papers states that a strange accident recently occurred at a public hall, resulting from some awkwardness on the part of a gentleman. The dress became entangled by the crinoline of his partner, and, failing, broke out of his hoop, the latter falling over him in her turn, fell upon and broke his other leg.

A country couple recently went to be married at Stockport. The woman, although in possession of the marriage service superfluous, for when the clergyman asked him "Will you have this woman to be thy wedded wife?" he immediately answered, "I be come to purpose."

One of the London magazines, in an article on "Big Hotels," thus alludes to those in our own vicinity:

"The Prince House, the Astor House, the Metropolitan, and the St. Nicholas, the Fifth Avenue, the Hoffman, and the Mount Vernon Hotel in New Jersey, have shown, for the last twelve years, the most extraordinary financial, Brobdingnagian success—as to eight hundred bedrooms one hundred and twenty thousand servants' rations—a hundred that will wash four thousand articles in a day (a shirt washed, ironed, and returned in fifteen hours)—besides the beef of a thousand oxen cooked and served up in a day—the telegraphs to every quarter—the railroad omnibuses, and other carriages, to convey visitors to and from the hotel; as well as the gas, the water, and the cuisine in front of the several ranges of ovens; but one could waste time by merely pottering about the forest of gas and water pipes; a bridal-chamber so gorgeously furnished that Aladdin and his genii would be delighted with it; and all these things the American have long been accustomed to."

Much consulting has been caused in India by an English girl of fourteen years of age having been sold to the Chief of Bhurtpore, in the Kattyar territory, for the benefit of his harem. She is said to be seventy years old, and to have been for fifty years in the service of the family. Her parents were poor and desolate, and the sum of 3000 rupees was the tempting bait which was to make them dispose of their child to the Indian Sultan. A deputy magistrate tried to interpose between the unnatural parents and the brutal purchaser, but in vain. A court, however, was drawn up, by which it was stipulated that, in the event of her being at any time banished from that blessed abode of virtue, the Rajah, she is to receive 1000 rupees as the natural life the handsome allowance of 350 rupees per annum, or 3500 rupees per annum.

At present more head-dresses are worn in Paris than any other description; by these are meant such things as are more of small cords, which are attached to a comb, and then formed across the forehead, or sometimes even all round the head; occasionally a scalloping of these small cords, provided with beads, is seen. Also, a little band of long rinaltes are prepared with a comb in the same manner, and fastened at the back of the head; the false plaits and twists are arranged behind the comb, and fastened round the head to form headcase. As all fashions are but fleeting, few ladies are to submit to have their front hair cut so as to be able to wear the short frizzed curls so much in vogue; consequently, with few exceptions, every one submits to the above-described preparedand mounted on either combs or ribbon bandeles.

The following description of a few of the new styles may interest our lady readers:

THE DIANA HEAD-DRESS.—The hair is entwined as a French twist, and arranged across the forehead; small rosettes made of hair are combed at intervals over the crown. Small curls are worn round the face, and gold arrow-shaped pins are placed at intervals round the back of the coronet and between the bands of hair. The back curls is arranged in thick plaits, looped up with a gold comb, and a wide feather at the side, arranged to fall low on the shoulder.

THE EMPIRE HEAD-DRESS consists of a coronet of short curls set round the forehead, and a small comb placed in the centre by a band of velvet, with interlaced lines of either gold or silver thread, fastened with a small arrow-pin with silver foliage at the side. Curls pinned across the back of the head, and fastened at the top with a gold and enamel comb.

There is another style, rather more simple, in which the hair is turned back from the forehead over a small frizzette, and kept in its place with a gold and red comb, which is carried twice round the head, and then tied at the sides in graceful bows. The hair is arranged at the back with a thick plait.

How do our readers like this style of dress for "a child who is up at a baby?" A white silk skirt, with a short white silk bodice; a muslin pelisse; a scarf, likewise in white silk, fastened with a bow on the shoulder, crossing the front, and tied on the side's white kid gloves embroidered by hand in chain-stitch and pearls; a white leaver hat with white velvet, and a white feather behind at the side. That child is the daughter of a fashionable Parisian, and is cited as one of the most tastefully-dressed children in Paris.

Among the patents lately taken out in France are the following:

A hygienic alphabet in gingerbread; a method of making head-dresses, caps, and pocket-handkerchiefs in paper; a mechanical fan, opening and shutting instantaneously with a movement for cutting and opening of a system of pelote, reproducing minutely the relief required; an apparatus for making dead people hear; and ten patents for stopping railway trains.

The intended betrothal of Princess Helena to Prince Christian, of Augustenburg, is announced. It is understood that the marriage will be one of "action," and that as the Prince has neither country nor subjects to claim his attention, the Royal couple will permanently reside in England.

The French medical schools attract many ladies to study medicine. A lady, Mlle Rengger, a native of Algiers, having passed her examination, and obtained the diploma of Bachelier of Letters, applied to the Dean of the Faculty of Medicine, of Montpelier, to be allowed to study medicine in that university, but was refused. She then appealed to the Minister of Public Instruction, and he proposed the following compromise: That she should be permitted to study medicine on condition that, when qualified to practice, she should confine her labors to the Arab women of Algiers, who have a great objection to male physicians. This was declined by Mlle Rengger.

MISSISSIPPI
MAP OF MISSISSIPPI
SCALE OF MILES
LONGITUDE WEST FROM GREENWICH
LONGITUDE WEST FROM WASHINGTON
TENNESSEE
ALABAMA
ARKANSAS
LOUISIANA
MARSHALL
TIPPAH
TISHAMINGO
DE SOTO
PANOLA
LAFAYETTE
PONTOTOC
ITAWAMBA
COAHOMA
YALLABUSHA
CALHOUN
CHICKASAW
MONROE
TALLAHATCHIE
BUSHA
BOLIVAR
CARROLL
OKTIBBE
CHOCTAW
WASHINGTON
HOLMES
WINSTON
ATTALA
NOXUBEE
ISSAQUENA
YAZOO
LEAKE
NESHOBA
KEMPER
SCOTT
NEWTON
JACKSON
RANKIN
SMITH
JASPER
CLARKE
SIMPSON
COPIAH
JEFFERSON
COVINGTON
JONES
WAYNE
FRANKLIN
LAWRENCE
MARION
PERRY
GREENE
HARRISON
JACKSON
LAKE PONTCHARTRAIN
GULF OF MEXICO
MEMPHIS
HOLLY SPRINGS
OXFORD
JACKSON
VICKSBURG
NATCHEZ
MERIDIAN
COLUMBUS
AMERICUS
MOBILE
PASCAGOULA
NEW ORLEANS
TUSCUMBIA
FLORENCE
GAINESVILLE
DEMOPOLIS
LINDEN
STEVENSON
MOBILE R.
TOMBIGBEE R.
RED RIVER LANDING
YAZOO R.
PEARL R.
PASCAGOULA R.

MISSISSIPPI.

In the present situation of the country the material condition of the Southern States is of primary importance. We give on page 12 a MAP OF THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, surrounded by an emblematic representation of that State. In the centre of the latter is the STATE ARMS, with the eagle and the sun rising over the waters. Above is an armed figure of Minerva, bearing the liberty cap on the spear in her right hand. On the left we behold De Soto, the Governor of Cuba, and probably the first white man who ever saw the River Mississippi, in converse with an Indian chief, while his mailed followers are grouped behind. To the right is a sketch illustrating the great agricultural interest of the State—field laborers bringing in their baskets of cotton to the huge cotton-press which rises in the back-ground.

Mississippi lies between 31° 10′ and 35° north latitude and between 88° 9′ and 91° 40′ west longitude from Greenwich; mean annual temperature varies from 60° to 70° Fahr.; area, 47,146 square miles, of which, in 1860, 6,605,750 acres were in improved farms, and 10,773,927 unimproved farms, valued together at $190,750,367; and the value of farm implements and machinery was $8,826,512. The surface has a general slope in the direction south and southwest. The portion of the State bordering on the Gulf of Mexico, and extending for 100 miles inland, is a sandy country, with but few slight elevations, originally covered with pines. The region north of the Yazoo River, and between it and the Mississippi, is a large tract of alluvial land, of great fertility, subject at times to inundation. The other portion of the State is a slightly elevated table-land, rarely broken into hills of moderate elevation, some of which terminate at the Mississippi, what are termed bluffs. The principal rivers of note are the Pascagoula and Pearl, flowing into the Mississippi Sound; and the Big Black and Yazoo, running into the Mississippi River, which flows along the entire western border of the State. The surface is well drained by many smaller streams, of which the above-mentioned rivers are the recipient of their waters. It has a coast-line of about 70 miles; a series of low sandy islands, off about ten miles, extend the entire line, the most noted of which are Ship, Horn, and Cat islands, between which and the shore lies the body of water called Mississippi Sound. The population of the State in 1860 was 791,305, of which 353,901 were whites, 773 free colored, and 436,631 were slaves. The following table shows the white, free colored, slave, and aggregate population of each county; and also the number of bales of cotton, of 400 pounds each, produced:

COUNTIES.	Whites.	Free Colored.	Slaves. Black.	Slaves. Mulattoes.	Aggregate.	Ginned Cotton Bales of 400 lbs. each.
Adams	5,646	225	13,831	411	20,185	20,758
Amite	4,471	9	7,264	276	12,288	11,420
Attala	7,164	19	6,242	470	14,101	14,957
Bolivar	1,595	1	9,654	424	16,471	33,463
Calhoun	3,651	1	1,561	223	5,436	8,146
Carroll	8,314	13	13,416	1,392	23,035	48,580
Chickasaw	5,911	1	8,116	949	15,077	20,484
Choctaw	11,535	1	5,673	524	18,733	13,558
Claiborne	3,389	44	14,765	978	19,076	28,178
Clark	5,092	3	4,567	509	10,771	9,106
Coahoma	1,921	1	4,761	323	6,996	13,575
Copiah	7,438	1	7,576	290	15,398	24,461
Covington	2,646	1	1,344	219	4,468	5,503
De Soto	9,349	11	12,570	1,408	23,328	40,111
Franklin	3,479	15	8,499	443	8,936	13,560
Greene	1,586	1	630	75	2,292	146
Hancock	2,951	1	766	97	3,139
Harrison	3,751	53	675	340	4,819	4,676
Hinds	8,840	39	30,401	1,960	31,239	54,855
Holmes	8,909	10	11,237	738	17,701	43,940
Issaquena	687	1	6,901	337	7,851	14,170
Itawamba	14,155	11	2,979	309	17,665	12,376
Jackson	2,955	89	987	100	4,132
Jasper	6,453	5	4,189	352	11,007	10,132
Jefferson	3,918	26	11,605	701	16,540	30,313
Jones	2,916	1	372	34	3,323	655
Kemper	6,936	8	8,365	378	11,683	15,464
Lafayette	8,689	1	6,506	623	16,173	19,293
Lauderdale	8,214	1	4,502	132	12,918	11,700
Lawrence	5,513	8	3,467	223	9,219	6,393
Leake	6,227	2	7,548	610	14,387	13,761
Lowndes	8,891	4	18,833	894	23,018	51,234
Madison	6,966	4	18,434	1,464	26,868	52,337
Marion	2,500	1	1,077	114	4,692	2,379
Marshall	11,376	1	18,947	1,777	32,823	48,349
Monroe	8,945	9	13,084	645	21,283	40,368
Monhoba	6,131	1	1,362	341	8,343	9,019
Newton	6,779	3	5,011	368	9,661	8,005
Noxubee	5,171	1	14,403	1,003	20,567	39,004
Oktibbeha	5,328	18	7,009	630	12,977	19,953
Panola	6,377	1	7,675	911	14,964	24,311
Perry	1,833	10	654	84	2,996	266
Pike	6,174	96	4,004	471	11,135	8,833
Pontotoc	14,513	4	6,879	697	22,113	24,252
Rankin	6,340	2	8,713	530	15,635	18,156
Scott	5,189	1	2,757	292	8,129	7,197
Simpson	3,744	18	2,109	139	6,008	4,074
Smith	5,425	8	1,886	310	7,629	3,509
Sunflower	1,102	1	3,203	201	4,507
Tallahatchi'	2,835	1	4,439	683	7,959	15,894
Tippah	14,036	3	5,421	719	20,259	23,577
Tishomingo	10,159	9	4,414	567	14,149	11,477
Tunica	863	1	3,118	161	4,143	8,256
Warren	6,889	31	16,025	3,512	26,456	50,518
Washington	1,619	1	12,021	1,440	15,079
Wayne	1,744	1	1,927	75	3,691	2,743
Wilkinson	8,779	20	15,447	845	25,091	39,165
Winston	5,582	5	3,792	436	9,811	7,936
Yalobusha	7,418	6	8,595	838	16,893	24,766
Yazoo	5,657	1	16,199	1,234	23,373	49,075
Total	353,901	773	436,631	36,619	791,905	1,202,502

* No returns.

Mississippi produces the largest amount of cotton of any other of the States of the Union; in 1860 it amounted to 1,202,507 bales of ginned cotton, of 400 pounds each. The grain crops of 1860 consisted of—wheat, 587,925 bushels produced; rye, 39,474; Indian corn, 29,057,082; oats, 221,255; barley, 1875; buckwheat, 1699; and rice, 809,982 pounds; and there were produced of peas and beans 1,954,666 bushels; Irish potatoes, 414,320; sweet potatoes, 4,563,878; tobacco, 159,141 pounds; wool, 665,559; and there were made, at the same period, 7262 gallons of wine; butter, 2,606,610 pounds; cheese, 4427; sugar, 500 hogsheads, of 1000 pounds each; 10,016 gallons of molasses, and 1427 of sorghum molasses. Home-made manufactures were valued at $1,382,144. The live-stock in 1860 consisted of 117,571 horses, 110,723 asses and mules, 209,966 milch cows, 165,608 working oxen, and other cattle 416,660; sheep, 352,632; and swine, 1,032,788—valued, in the aggregate, at $41,821,892. Value of animals slaughtered, $7,809,150.

Manufactures.—There were, in 1860, 976 establishments of industry, with a capital invested in real and personal estate in the business of $4,384,942; the value of raw material consumed was valued at $3,146,636; hands employed, 4572 males, and 203 females, producing articles valued at $6,200,687.

The internal improvements consist of several extensive lines of railroads, which, in 1860, amounted in the aggregate to 872 miles, the cost of construction of which amounted to $24,020,000.

There is no uniform common-school system in this State; each township has a school fund arising from the lease of lands granted for common-school purposes by Congress, one sixteenth section having been so donated. The school sections in some townships are worth many thousand dollars, and in others only a few hundreds. In all the larger towns public schools have been established, and there are many flourishing high-schools.

RESIDENCE OF EX-GOVERNOR WISE, OF VIRGINIA.

We publish on page 4 a view of the residence of HENRY A. WISE, Ex-Governor of Virginia—the same property which has been so long and prominently held before the public, and which is still retained by the Federal Government, in spite of every effort to effect its reinstatement to its former owner, and to obtain a pardon for him.

This splendid property is situated about eight miles from Norfolk, on the road to Princess Anne Court House, and contains some 1400 acres, 700 of which were cleared and cultivated, and the remainder in timber, at the outbreak of the war; but a very large quantity of the latter has been cut down during the war, and the wood cut up for the use of the Federal Government, at the saw-mills erected by Governor WISE himself. The property is now in a very poor and dilapidated condition. There are forty or fifty shanties scattered over its large surface, occupied by 220 negroes—men, women, and children—who find what precarious employment they can in the farms surrounding it.

The residence itself—the rambling old building to the right of the sketch—has nothing particular to distinguish it from many others of the kind scattered over the surface of this portion of Virginia. It has evidently been painted and altered at various times, producing in its internal arrangements all those inconvenient ups and downs so common to old-fashioned houses when joined on to modern additions. The oldest and most interesting part is that to the extreme right, represented with its steep mansard-roof and dormer-windows—a feature extremely common among all the old residences of Norfolk and its neighborhood. In this building are still to be seen an old sofa and arm-chair of the Governor—the only portion of his furniture left, excepting an antediluvian bedstead up stairs.

The out-building shown at the extreme left of the picture, and which was formerly the carriage-house, is now used as a free schoolhouse for colored people. It was first devoted to this purpose in 1863, by the American Missionary Association, and at present gives daily and evening instructions to 150 colored people of all ages and sexes, from four years of age up to 65. Of these there are 120 children and 30 adults. The teachers assert that the children learn very rapidly, and that even the adults, with rare exceptions, show aptitude also. The report, so lately current, that one of JOHN BROWN'S daughters is teaching here was a mere fabrication. Mr. B. G. BRYAN has charge of the school, assisted by three ladies—MISS S. E. GILLESPIE, MISS E. A. LEAVITT, and MISS LIZZIE GILMORE. MR. D. D. OGDEN is the general overseer of this property and some eight or nine others in this neighborhood, at present in the hands of the Government, but to be immediately restored to their owners, who have all received their pardons.

LADIES' MORNING COSTUME FOR EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND SIXTY-SIX.

LADIES' EVENING COSTUME FOR EIGHTEEN HUNDRED AND SIXTY-SIX.

CHARLIE DECKER—THE SMALLEST MAN LIVING. (Photographed by N. Brown & Son, St. Louis, Mo.)

THE SMALLEST MAN LIVING.

We give above a portrait of MR. CHARLES DECKER, the smallest man living. CHARLES DECKER, or CHARLIE (as he is more familiarly called), was born in Mississippi. He moved to Memphis at the age of ten years, where he has been employed by MR. ED. WORSHAM in the profitable and useful occupation of selling Harper's Weekly and other periodicals for eight years. He is now eighteen years old and only thirty-six inches in height, and is well known in Memphis for his smartness and intelligence.

BOMBARDMENT OF CAPE HAYTIEN BY THE "BULLDOG."

We give on page 5 an illustration of the conflict between the British steamer Bulldog and the forts and gun-boats at Cape Haytien. The Bulldog, carrying six guns and commanded by Captain CHARLES WARE, lay off this port, which is on the north side of the island. The Captain got into a dispute with the negro chief SALNAVE, the head of the insurrectionary force at Cape Haytien, and on the 23d of October, had a regular battle with the forts and flotilla of gun-boats in the harbor; the result being that, after silencing the forts and sinking two of the enemy's vessels, the Bulldog successfully ran aground, and was burned and abandoned by Captain WARE to prevent her becoming their property. Three of the British were killed and seven wounded.

The origin of the dispute was as follows: MR. DEPUTY, the British Consul at Cape Haytien, had taken to his house a few Haytien refugees whom SALNAVE had desired MR. DEPUTY to give up. This MR. DEPUTY refused to do, whereupon his house was entered by force, and the poor fellows under his protection were taken out and shot by SALNAVE on the seashore. The followers of SALNAVE then commenced to wreak their vengeance on the Consul's house; they smashed his furniture, took every thing they could lay their hands on, pulled down the English flag, stamped and spat upon it. MR. DEPUTY immediately went on board the Bulldog (which was lying off the Cape at the time), and laid the question before the Captain, who went at once and asked SALNAVE what he meant. The reply was a most insulting and vulgar insolence. Captain then returned on board and wrote him a letter, demanding full and ample satisfaction in twenty-four hours. Next morning the Bulldog was seen steaming into the harbor, and, on passing Fort Picoli, was fired into. The Bulldog at once answered this fire with a broadside, dismantled all the guns on that fort, steamed further in, smashed up another small fort, and sent a shell into the arsenal, blowing it up.

In the course of the conflict the Bulldog sank one of SALNAVE's vessels, the Volcano. The negroes on this ill-fated vessel would have been saved but for the noble exertions of Captain W. M. WARNER, who sent a boat to rescue them. They were tied and wounded in the water, and at the same time cruelly fired upon by the Bulldog. This gallant officer, Captain WARNER, also sent boats on shore to bring off the foreign consuls, and kept on having made no distinction in her firing upon the town.

The Bulldog, after having fought for upward of ten hours, got on shore on one of the numerous reefs about Cape Haytien. Immediately she ceased fire, set her own guns on board, and brought all their batteries to bear upon her. The captain fought to the last moment of gunpowder; and, having finished, he thought it necessary to set fire to and abandon his vessel. The officers and crew went to Jamaica in the Crown-screw-steamer. The British steamers Galatea and Lily afterward destroyed SALNAVE's batteries.

The last days of Ex-President Martin Van Buren were made comfortable by the use of Dr. HOSTETTER'S Celebrated Stomach Bitters. Letters in our possession from his physician and from MR. Van Buren himself, express much gratification with the results of its use.

Extracts from the "Life of Washington Irving," by his nephew, Pierre M. Irving, Vol. IV., page 222:

"The doctor prescribed, as an experiment—what had been suggested by Dr. (O. W.) Holmes on his late visit—Jenne Whitcomb's Remedy for Asthma, a teaspoonful in a wineglass of water, to be taken every four hours. A good night was the result."

In no case of purely pulmonary disease has it failed to give prompt relief, and in many cases a permanent cure been effected. No danger need be apprehended from its use. An infant may take it with perfect safety. It is prepared by JOSEPH BURNETT & Co., Boston.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

EMBALMING.

French process only perfect one extant, and guaranteed. The features by this process become more beautiful than in life. Unequaled for long voyages. Funeral arrangements perfected and carried out in the most satisfactory manner. Flowers preserved. Address DR. SUGAN, Embalmer and Furnisher Undertaker, office northwest corner Broadway and 130th St. (Manhattan), entrance on 129th St., New York.

PARISIAN ENAMEL.—This beautiful toilet requisite imparts to the skin a soft, clearing, purifying effect, and a delicate tint so closely that detection is impossible. $1 per package, mailed free. Address H. THOMPSON, 75 Carroll Place, Bleecker Street, New York.

Norton's New Remedy for Catarrh

Cures by direct application to the nostrils. Norton's New Pamphlet on Catarrh sent free. All who have Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness, or Sore Throat, should send for it. Information never before published. Send a stamp to GEORGE NORTON, 11 Ann Street, New York.

144 COMIC VALENTINES

Mailed free on receipt of $1. H. HITCHCOCK, 14 Chambers St., New York. Circulars free.

NEW MUSIC

Come, sing to me again. .....30c.
"I have heard Sweet Music sleeping.....30c.
This Haunting Thought. .....30c.
"I love but thee." German and English words...40c.
I can not sing the Old Songs. Clothbd.....50c.
For Piano, Richards.....40c.
Silver Trumpets, played at Rome on Christmas-Day...50c.
Silver Trumpets, grand processional March.....35c.
Silver Trumpets, Harmony in the Dome.....35c.
Mailed free. FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery.

DUMB-WAITERS.

JAMES MURTAUGH'S celebrated DUMB-WAITERS are manufactured only at No. 1333 Broadway, New York, where a model can be seen.

Holiday Presents,

100,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.

Worth $500,000!

TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE

AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU WANT.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	Each.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$150 00
100 Gold Watches	70 00
250 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00
500 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	18 00
1,000 Gold Vest Chains	$25 00 to 40 00
5000 Drinking-Cups	7 00 to 10 00
5000 Gold and Plated Gold Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00
5000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 00 to 10 00
5000 Ladies' Plated Gold Lockets	5 00 to 8 00
5 00 Magic Spring and Snap Lockets	4 00 to 10 00
10000 Gold Pencils and Pencil Holders	2 00 to 5 00
1000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases	4 00 to 6 00
5000 Gold Rings	2 00 to 10 00
2500 Tea, Dessert, & Table Forks, per doz.	12 00 to 24 00
2500 Dessert and Table Forks, per doz	14 00 to 24 00
4000 Butter Knives, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
2000 Sugar Shells, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
21000 Other Articles	4 00 to 10 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up and mixed; and, when an order is received, we forward one to choice, and send by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article named, or any of those enumerated in a list to be mailed on receipt of 25 cents; 5 for $1; eleven for $2; 59 for $5; 95 for $8; and 100 for $10.

Agents wanted every where. Great inducements to letter and general agents. Call or send for circular, which gives special terms, full list, and particulars.

Address J. H. WOLFE & CO., 550 Broadway, N. Y.

(ESTABLISHED 1850).

CHRISTMAS GIFT.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER:

EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.

ONE DOLLAR EACH.

PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 29, 1865.

AN EXACT and RELIABLE POCKET TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen. Also, a perfect Calculating Machine in the compass of a Hunting Case. Correctly constructed on the most approved principles. Every part is interchangeable. Will keep time with absolute certainty and the utmost precision. Is not affected by the motion of riding or winding up; MOVES SEVEN HOURS, and can never be too fast or too slow. It is a perfect Timekeeper. Is handsomely finished in Agate. Just introduced into this country from Europe, and is the greatest novelty of the present day. Sent by mail, in a single box, with plain or fancy white dial, in gold or silver cases, (state which), on receipt of price, to any part of the country, to receipt of price. Safe delivery guaranteed. Liberal terms to Agents. Circulars and terms sent free, with a view to extending the public, by offering a useless article with a slight value, at a price within the reach of every one. Address CHRISTMAS GIFT. All orders must be addressed to the P. O. DRAWER 6,571, CITY P. O., SOLE PROPRIETORS, 204-206 Broadway, New York.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union Troops, sent FREE OF CHARGE BY EXPRESS. No. 65 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

PART 52, REBELLION RECORD,

Completing the Eighth Volume. Edited by FRANK MOORE, Author of Rebellion Portraits of MCLELLAN and McJ. Seg. Gen. G. A. CUSTER. Price 60 cents. This day published by D. VAN NOSTRAND, 192 Fulton Street, New York.

Copies sent free by mail on receipt of price.

Shaver's Patent Pencil Sharpener.

Agents wanted all over the United States. Sharpens a lead or slate pencil, writing and drawing, without soiling the hands. Price 25 cents, or five for $1, postpaid. Large discount to the trade and agents.

A. G. SHAVER, New Haven, Conn.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Splendid Jewelry.

Watches, Diamonds, &c.

The house of BOSANQUET, GIRAUD, & CO., Paris, have the pleasure of announcing that they have opened an Agence in the City of New York for the sale of their world-known Jewelry, Watches, &c.; and for the purpose of making the goods as widely known as possible, have visited in the United States as they now are, and have been for over 25 years, in Europe, and have determined on a plan by which poor and rich alike may have the advantage of their splendid stock. The plan adopted by us would remark that they manufacture and sell SO DITAS-VOIS Jewelry or Watches.

All are Warranted Gold of the Finest Workmanship.

Our customers will also have the great advantage of a correspondence with our principal house in Paris, on all terms with which we shall keep our New York Agency supplied.

We have adopted the plan of sale, now so popular, of giving to each purchaser a present. Thus, for example, for $2 For each article, no matter how costly it may be, (eighty thousand articles are now on sale), the Agency supplied by the sale of Certificates, or Coupons, representing the various articles, which are for sale at 50 cents each, or five for $2, and each Certificate will show the article to be received on the sale of the Certificate and on payment of an additional $2. If the article named on the Certificate is not desired, the holder can sell it again, when he returns the Certificate, by stating what other article he may desire, and we will forward it to him on the receipt with pleasure. Our aim is to please, and every means to that end will be adopted. We have no fear of giving every one who reads this notice, as we are confident of giving the best value obtainable.

THE STOCK COMPRISES

Among other articles splendid Clocks, Gold and Silver Watches, Rings, Jewelry with Diamonds and Precious Garnet and other Stones costlier and in clusters, &c., Articles of Silver and Gold for Table and Sideboard, the most fashionable styles, all in precious Stones of every variety, Opera Glasses, Fine Gold Jewelry, Gold Pens, Enameled, and Pearl Sets, Gold Studs and Sleeve Buttons of the most elegant designs, Gold Chains, Bracelets, and an endless variety of Bracelets, Chains, Musical Boxes, Fancy Articles, Canes, Fans, &c., &c., and many of our patrons are not in want of articles of Jewelry, and would prefer Silverware, we will send, for any Certificate returned to us, a richly-engraved Set of Castors, of Silver Plate, or Silver Goods.

Agents are wanted in every part of the United States and Territories, to all of whom very liberal inducements will be offered, and, on application, a Circular will be sent containing full particulars. No money sent in Post-Office Orders where they can be obtained, as we prefer that all remittances should be made to our agency, which will be conducted by MESSRS. JAQUET, STERLING, & CO., 189 Broadway, New York.

MOREHEAD'S

MAGNETIC PLASTER.

THE GREAT STRENGTHENER AND PAIN DESTROYER.

The best and cheapest Household Remedy in the world. Simple and pleasant in its application, certain and effectual in its results. Suitable for the relief of Pain at any time, in any place, and any part of the human system, and under all circumstances. If you put this Plaster any where, it will be found to relieve pain in that part where it has vanished. The faster magnetize the Pain away, and PAIN CAN NOT EXIST WHERE THIS PLASTER IS APPLIED.

Rheumatism, Lameness, Soreness, Weakness, Debility, Nervousness, Neuralgia, Dyspepsia, Coughs and Colds, Pains and Aches of every kind are IMMEDIATELY RELIEVED, and, with a little patience, PERMANENTLY CURED, by MOREHEAD'S Magnetic or MAGNETIC PLASTER. It is the simplest, surest, safest, pleasantest, and cheapest remedy in existence. Its application is universal—equally to the strong man, the delicate woman, and the feeble infant. It is not a specialty and without annoyance or trouble. Its price is within reach of all—rich or poor, old or young, and all should have it who are sick and suffering in any way.

Put up in air-tight tin boxes, thus keeping it always fresh and pure. Each box will make four or six Plasters, and a child can put them on. Price 25 cents a box.

D. C. MOREHEAD, M.D., 19 Walker St., New York.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York,

Have Just Published:

DICKENS'S

NEW

CHRISTMAS STORY:

DR. MARIGOLD'S PRESCRIPTIONS.

Price 10 Cents.

AGENTS WANTED.—Wanted, Active and Intelligent Men or Women to canvass for Bussey J. Lemmon's PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE GREAT CIVIL WAR IN THE UNITED STATES. The work of over 250,000 men will contain upward of 2000 Engravings. This work has been written since the commencement of the war, and the engravings are from original designs by the Author, who has traveled many thousands of miles in the pursuit of his calling; and it will be found the most complete and reliable history of the war published. It has been indorsed by the Governors of all the States and the leading officers of our Army and Navy. Agents offer premiums in every part of the country. We give Agents exclusive territory to operate in, and a liberal commission. This work will be sold exclusively by subscription, and will furnish employment to a few more Agents. Address, for circulars GEORGE W. CHILDS, Philadelphia, Pa.

Marvin's Patent

ALUM AND DRY PLASTER, FIRE AND BURGLAR

SAFES

Never lose their fire-proof qualities, crumble in the dry, and will not absorb moisture.

Sideboard and parlor safes for silverware.

MARVIN & CO.,

265 Broadway, New York.

721 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

501 BROADWAY (St. Nicholas Block),

Photographic Materials, Stereoscopic Goods, War Views, Scenery, Cameras, &c.

Photograph Albums, great assortment, Cartes de Visite of Noted Persons, &c., &c.

French English and American Novelties.

100 Photographs of Union Generals sent postpaid for 25 cts.; 50 Photographs of Statesmen and Generals for 25 cts.; 100 Photographs of Female Beauties for 25 cts.; 100 Actresses for 25 cts. Address H. DEVOE, Holland, N. Y.

"The West Indian Hair Curler"

Warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair, on the first application, into short ringlets or waving masses. Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cents. Address THE HENDERSON HAIR-CURLING CO.,

Box 5,000, New York Post-Office.

HOW TO MAKE CIDER WITHOUT APPLES or other fruit. The Hunter's Secret (complete). Information of immense value to farmers. Any person can bring such knowing, will be found in the "Book of Wonders." Sent by mail for 25 cents. Address, Box 5,000, New York.

$3 ALBUMS—finely bound—two gilt clasps—for 50 photographs. Sent by mail for $3 60.

$5 ALBUMS—finely bound—morocco tuck brass bound—two clasps—for 50 photographs. By mail for $5 60.

Catalogues, containing prices of all kinds, by express, and for catalogues. W. C. WEMYSS, 575 Broadway, N.Y.

ENGLISH BOOKS! ENGLISH BOOKS! ENGLISH BOOKS! Cheap and second-hand now opened a splendid collection of new, scarce second-hand English books. Bibliographical Catalogue No. 1 sent gratis for cash at NUNAN & CO.'S, Basement, 73 Nassau Street.

A magnificent Holiday Present, an elegant, useful, and valuable Gift-enterprise, for sale by the subscriber, at Poughkeepsie, N.Y., and receive above by return mail.

Pimples on the Face

REMOVED AS ONCE BY THE USE OF "UPHAM'S FAMILIAR BLEMISH." Sent to any address for 75 Cents, by S. C. UPHAM, No. 55 SOUTH DURYEA ST. PHILADELPHIA. Sold by all Druggists.

PHARAOH'S SERPENTS.

Eggs of Pharaoh's Serpents, each of which, when ignited, will evolve in a few seconds a harmless Serpent, several feet long. Sent by mail, postpaid to any address for 50 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia. Sold by all Druggists.

AGENTS ALWAYS WANTED.

Circulars free. Address B. W. HITCHCOCK, 14 Chambers St., New York. Big chance for Agents.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.

Marks's Patents, with Rubber Hands and Feet. A Gold Medal was awarded them, as the best, over all others, at the late Fair of the American Institute, 1865. Send for Circular and Price List. Government authority.

Send for Circular.

A. A. MARKS,

672 Broadway,

New York.

CALKINS & COMPANY,

Manufacturers' Announcement.

EXTRAORDINARY OPPORTUNITY!

GREAT ONE-PRICE SALE OF

Solid Gold Jewelry, Rich Silver-Ware, Watches, Diamonds, Rings, Pianos, &c.,

Including no Brass or so-called Plated Jewelry.

EVERY ARTICLE WARRANTED GOLD.

$2,500,000 WORTH

TO BE DISPOSED OF AT THE ONE AVERAGE PRICE OF

TWO DOLLARS EACH!

Without regard to Value, and not to be Paid for until you know what you will receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES,

ALL TO BE SOLD FOR TWO DOLLARS EACH!

5 Superior Grand Piano-Fortes	Each, up to $1500
50 Splendid Seven-Octave Pianos	400 to 800
200 Melodeons, the best makers	200 to 300
175 First-Class Sewing Machines	50 to 150
200 Reversible Cloth Dress Patterns	20 to 50
250 Mahogany " "	8 to 20
250 Diamond Rings	50 to 500
500 Gold Hunting-Cased Watches	75 to 200
500 Ladies' Hunting-Cased Watches	75 to 200
1,000 Silver Hunting-Cased Watches	35 to 100
1,000 " Open-Face " "	30 to 75
250 " Dining Sets—splendid	75 to 300
250 " Tea Sets—elegant	50 to 200
500 " Tea Sets—complete	25 to 50
2,000 Vest and Neck Chains	5 to 10
3,000 " Chased Bracelets	5 to 10
3,000 " Gentlemen's Guard Chains	5 to 10
7,000 " Solitaire and Revolving Brooches	5 to 15
5,000 " Studs and Sets	5 to 10
5,000 " Opal and Enamel	4 to 8
5,000 " Fancy Jet, Lava, Coral, Mosaic, Opal, and Enamel Bracelets	4 to 40
5,000 " Solitaire Diamond Breast-Pins	5 to 25
5,000 " Sets of Solitaire Diamond Studs	5 to 15
5,000 " Thimbles, Pencils, &c	1 to 5
10,000 " Gold Pens and Pencils	2 to 10
10,000 " Sets of Jewelry	2 to 10
10,000 " for Miniatures	2 to 10
10,000 " Toothpicks, Cutters, &c	1 to 5
5,000 " Flesh Rings	2 to 10
5,000 " Sets of Engraved Rings	3 to 15
5,000 " Shield and Signet Rings	3 to 10
5,000 " Sets of Diamond Rings	20 to 50
10,000 " Pearl and Fancy Stone Rings	3 to 25
10,000 " Gold Lockets, Plain	2 to 5
10,000 Sets of Ladies' Gold Jewelry—Cameo, Onyx, Enamel, and Diamonds	10 to 50
10,000 Gold Pens, with Silver Holders	2 to 12
5,000 " Pencils	1 to 5
5,000 " Holders and Velvet Cases	1 to 10
2,000 Sets of Gold Pens and Pencils	5 to 25
2,000 " Castors and Wine Holders	15 to 50
2,000 " Fruit and Cake Baskets	15 to 50
1,000 " Card Cases	15 to 25
5,000 " Port-Monnaies	5 to 10
5,000 " Ice Pitchers	20 to 50
5,000 " Cakes, Pies, and Fruit Knives	3 to 15
20,000 Dozen Silver Teaspoons	8 to 15
10,000 " Tablespoons	15 to 30
10,000 " Forks and Knives	15 to 40
10,000 " Soup Ladles	8 to 15
5,000 Sets Silver Napkin Rings	8 to 25
20,000 Engravings of Reverend Clergymen	8 to 25
6,000 " in Gilt Frames	8 to 25
10,000 Fancy Photographs in Frames	5 to 10
1,000 Fine Oil Paintings	25 to 100
1,000 Fancy Pearl Knives—2 blades	3 to 10
1,000 Ivory and Pearl Rock Combs	10 to 25
1,000 Gold and Gold Plated Guards	10 to 25
15,000 Photograph Albums—all styles	6 to 50

CALKINS & CO., 853 and 860 Broadway, New York, are the largest Manufacturers for Cash exclusively in the section of Manufacturers, which has been organized with the special object to dispose of their own stock of goods exacted from the people by jobbers and wholesale and retail dealers in their profits, and selling direct to the consumers receive on the average but $2, cost the customer a retail price of $6 to $8, after passing through three or four hands. The splendid stock of the leading and most popular Manufacturers of solid gold jewelry, watches, silverware, &c., worth $2,500,000 at retail prices—will be sold for $2 each. CALKINS & CO., by the Co-operative Association, for $500,000 (manufacturers' cost), or an average of $1 for each and every article, subject to the following regulations:

RULES AND REQUIREMENTS of the various circles are well mixed, and when ordered are taken out indiscriminately, and sent by mail or express, as may be desired, to secure to all a fair chance. On receipt of the advertisement you will send your name and address, and then it is at your option to send Two Dollars and take the article or not. Purchasers will then obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, Piano, or any article of jewelry on our list, WARRANTED GOLD, for Twenty Two Dollars, and they can get less than three or five times the value of the money at any retail store in the country. Or, if they do not like the article received, the least article, whatever it may be, can be returned for a Gold Watch or Diamond Ring, or Gold Chain, heavy plate, valued at $10, or a Fifty-Picture Morocco Photograph Album, or Fine Gold Pen and Pencil in silver case.

Each envelope contains a written description of useful articles and Jewelry, worth many dollars.

Persons ordering envelopes will receive them promptly by mail, postpaid, together with the following premiums, upon remitting the price:

For $1 we will send a beautiful Photograph; 5 for $1, with a Silver Nut-Pick, worth $1 for $3, with a Silver Fruit Knife, worth $2; 17 for $5, with a Silver Butter Knife, worth $4; 65 for $10, with a Gold Double-Locket, worth $12; 100 for $15, with a Gold Thimble, worth $20; 200 for $30, with a Silver Hunting Watch, worth $40.

In all cases, upon receipt of the money, the premiums as above will be sent by return of mail or express.

Reference in Full Is Given.

THE GREAT GOLD GIFT DISTRIBUTION.—We desire to caution our readers against responding to the advertisement of the Cosmopolitan Manufacturing Jewelers Association with their "extraordinary" offers advertised in the daily press, and which the purchaser finds, upon investigation, to be most contemptible swindles, based on the purpose of disposing of the fag ends of worthless jewelry and trash at the highest possible number of the dupes. Not an article is sold by MESSRS. CALKINS & CO. but is worth all it is represented to be; and under the well-known Madison Street, or, as they now do, our world they graciously will favor us to begin with circles of our friends.—Chicago Post, April 15, 1865.

We want agents in every town and county, and in every regiment, and to those acting as such we will allow 10 per cent. on the amount of orders ordered by them, provided remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every envelope, and return 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage-stamps.

Address CALKINS & CO., Managers, Headquarters, 853 and 860 Broadway, New York; and 53 and 55 Fourth Street, St. Louis, Missouri, or 83 and 85 Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP,

COMPOSED OF

IODIDE POTASSIUM,

WITH THE COMPOUND CONCENTRATED FLUID EXTRACT OF VALUABLE MEDICINAL ROOTS AND HERBS.

PREPARED BY

WILLIAM H. GREGG, M.D.,

Graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, formerly Assistant Physician in the Blackwell's Island Hospitals, late Medical Inspector of the New York State Volunteer Depots, under Governor Edwin D. Morgan.

AND

Constitution Life Syrup

HAS PRODUCED A REVOLUTION IN MEDICINE.

What may seem almost incredible in that many diseases hitherto considered hopelessly incurable are frequently cured in a few days or weeks; and we cheerfully invite the investigations of the liberal minded and scientific to ours which have no parallel at the present day.

During the past five years we have contended with obstacles, and overcome opposition, as herculean as were ever encountered by any reformers.

RAPIDITY OF CURE.

Some say, "Your cures are too quick," while others doubt their permanency, and think that diseases can only be cured by the "slow, recuperative process of Nature."

This is our reply: In health the body, like a well-balanced scale, is in a state of Equilibrium. But when, from any cause, disease on one side of the scale, we have the effects of disease. What is requisite is to restore the normal balance of power.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Is a positive and specific remedy for all diseases originating from an IMPURE STATE OF THE BLOOD, and for all (hereditary) Diseases transmitted from PARENT TO CHILD.

PARALYSIS.

It is so universally admitted that CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP is the only effective means of restoration in the various forms of paralysis, that we need not reiterate that it is emphatically the Great Life-giving Power.

DYSPEPSIA.

INDIGESTION, WEIGHT OF STOMACH, FLATULENCE, LIVER COMPLAINT, WANT OF APPETITE, BAD BREATH, CONSTIPATION, BILIOUSNESS.

SCROFULA.

STROMA, KING'S EVIL, GLANDULAR SWELLINGS, ERYSIPELAS, ULCERATION, SALT RHEUM.

This taint (HEREDITARY AND ACQUIRED), filling life with untold misery, is by all usual medical remedies, incurable.

RHEUMATISM.

[ARTHRITIS], INFLAMMATORY, METALLIC, SCIATICA, GOUT, THE DOLOUREAUX.

If there is any disease in which the CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP is a wonderful success, it is in Rheumatism and its kindred affections. The most intense pains are almost instantly alleviated—sometimes entirely relieved. Cases, chronic or vicarious, of twenty or thirty years' standing, have been cured by us.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Purges the system entirely from all the evil effects of MERCURY—restores the Appetite, and Breath, and gives the Joints and Rheumatic Pains which the use of Calomel is sure to induce. The most virulent Spongy Gums, and sources of Pain are Speedily at rest.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the Skin.

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES,

And all other affections of this kind, which so much disfigure the outward appearance of both males and females, often making them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

For all Forms of Ulcerative Diseases,

Either of the Nose, Throat, Tongue, Spine, Forehead, or Scalp, no remedy has ever proved its equal.

Mott Patches upon the female face, depending upon a diseased state of the blood, are very unsightly to the young wife and mother. A few bottles of CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP will cause their extinction, and give a clear, pure, and healthy appearance to the skin.

Diseases of the Kidneys, Prone to Languor, Dizziness, Indigestion, Weak Stomach, or an ulcerated or cancerous condition of the organ, accompanied with burning or chilly or unpleasant symptoms, will be relieved by the use of

Constitution Life Syrup.

As a General Blood-Purifying Agent, the LIFE SYRUP stands unrivaled by any preparation in the world.

THE RICH AND POOR

Are liable to the same diseases. Nature and Science have made the CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP for the benefit of all.

PURE BLOOD

Produces healthy tissues, and if the constitution is neglected in youth, disease and early death is the result. Do not delay when the means are so near at hand, and within the reach of all.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

IS THE POOR MAN'S FRIEND, AND THE RICH MAN'S BLESSING.

Buy it, Take it, and be Cured.

WILLIAM H. GREGG, M.D.,

Sole Proprietor,

NEW YORK.

SOLD BY EVERY DEALER IN MEDICINE IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

MORGAN & ALLEN,

WHOLESALE DRUGGISTS, AGENTS,

No. 46 Cliff Street, New York.

SOLD WHOLESALE BY

JOHNSON, HOLLOWAY & COWDEN, Philadelphia, Pa.
GEORGE C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass.
FULLER, FINCH & FULLER, Chicago, Ill.
JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio.
COLLINS BROTHERS, St. Louis.

WE ILLUSTRATE for OUR READERS the use of J. BALL & CO.'S PATENT IMPROVED EYE-CUPS. Sore-EYELIDS AND RED-RIMMED LIDLESS! INFLAMED VISION, PTERYGIUM (pterygium), ASTHENOPIA (weak eyes), BLEARED OR BLURRED AND COVERED NEVUS, FLESHY EXCRESCE, OPHTHALMIA (inflammation of eyelid and its appendages), SORE EYES, ULCERATION, CATARACT, &c., PERMANENTLY RESTORED. Send full address for Descriptive Pamphlet (FREE) and TESTIMONIALS of the EYE (seventy editions). J. BALL & CO., 16 John street (Box 701), Post-Office, New York. ☞ Pamphlet on MYOPIA (nearsightedness) free to any one.

Allcock's Porous Plasters.

A celebrated Physician says he was amazed at the great number of beneficial indications produced by one of these Porous plasters. He affirms that HEADACHE is cured by one worn just between the breastbone; that one placed over the naval will cure hysterics, as well as dysentery and affections of the bowels.

CURE OF VARICOSE VEINS.

NEW POINT, VA., Jan. 24, 1865.

T. ALLCOCK & CO.—Seeing your notice in the Police Gazette, I got four of your Porous Plasters, and placed them on the parts where the pains were most severe, and in less than twelve hours could walk with ease, and could hardly believe it, I was so well pleased. I wanted to see if the lameness would come back on me or not, so did more walking that day than I had done in a week. The next day I had some pain in my hip; but I put on a plaster there, and in two hours the pain was all gone, nor have I felt it since. I absolutely say they are the best application for the relief and cure of pains in the joints and back, and for varicose or enlarged veins, I have ever known; and I would not be without them on any account.

Yours, truly, JOSEPH GATEWOOD.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

CHEAPEST AND BEST. Price of Presses, $10, $18, $28, and $39. Price of an Office, with Press, $35, $38, $40, $46, and $75. Send for a circular to the LOWE PRESS COMPANY, 59 Water Street, Boston.

A Household Necessity exists for the Use of DURNO'S CATARRH SNUFF,

Which, in the first stages of a cold, acts like magic. Headache, Hoarseness, Diphtheria, and Bronchitis, Sore Eyes, Deafness, Bad Taste and Smell—being the result of Catarrh—this Snuff removes and prevents all these, and insures a healthy head. Its effects are pleasant and safe, even for infants who suffer from Snuffles.

It has been extensively prescribed for Bronchitis. Sold by all Druggists, or sent by Mail to all parts of the United States, for 30 cents for One Box, or $1 for Four Boxes.

Address J. DURNO, P. O. Box 2253, New York.

Wholesale by D. BARNES & CO., 21 Park Row, N. Y.

THE HORACE WATERS Grand, Square, and Upright PIANOS, MELODEONS, and CABINET ORGANS. Wholesale and Retail. To let, and rent allowed if purchased. Monthly payments received for the same. Second hand pianos at bargains from $60 to $125. Factory and Warerooms, No. 481 Broadway, N.Y. Usual price for second-hand Pianos. Pianos tuned and repaired.

HORACE WATERS.

MUSIC OMNIBUS.

Popular songs, marches, quicksteps, polkas, schottisches, waltzes, jigs, reels, quadrilles, collotions, with calls and figures, &c., for Violin, Flute, Fife, or Cornet.

OMNIBUS No. 1 contains 70 tunes. Price $1 25, mailed.
" No. 2 " 100 " " $1 50 "
" No. 3 " 1000 " " $15 "

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. Every description at lowest New York prices. Catalogue sent free.

FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery, New York.

PORTABLE PRINTING OFFICES

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Colleges, Clergymen, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circulars sent free. Specimen Type, Cuts, &c., 10 cts. ADAMS PRESS COMPANY, 98 Ann St., New York.

Make your own Soap

WITH B. T. BABBITT'S

Pure Concentrated Potash,

OR READY SOAP MAKER.

Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other soap-making lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 6 pounds, and 12 pounds, with directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 15 gallons of Soft Soap in 3 minutes. Consumers will find this the cheapest potash in market.

B. T. BABBITT,

64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., N.Y.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief, and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

$1,000,000 Worth

of

Watches, Jewelry, and Silverware.

To be disposed of at ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and to be paid for until you know what you are to receive.

100 Gold Hunting-Case Watches . . . . each $125 00
100,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases . . . " 5 00 to 5 00

And a large assortment of Jewelry and Silverware of every description. The method of disposing of these goods at ONE DOLLAR each is as follows:

Certificates, naming each article and its value, are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5.

Agents wanted, to whom we offer special terms and premiums. A. H. ROWEN & CO.,
36 Beekman Street. P. O. Box 4870, New York.

Dyspepsia and Indigestion.

These great scourges of our people can not be too well understood, or the means of averting or curing them too highly appreciated. The person who discovers any means of cure or relief does not confer a benefit upon his fellows, and is deserving of honor. This desirable consummation has been attained in the case of Dyspepsia in every form, but it may be prevented, by the use of HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS, which medicine is spoken of in terms of the highest commendation by thousands who have tested its efficacy. For sale by all druggists. Not alcoholic. H. H. HELMBOLD, Druggist, 594 Broadway, New York; Agent.

Superfluous Hair Removed

From all parts of the body by five minutes, without injury to the skin or flesh, by the ZEVANTHE FLUID. Mailed to any address for $1 25, by S. C. UPHAM, 29 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. Sold by all druggists.

Agua de Magnolia.

A toilet delight! The ladies' luxuries and gentlemen's need—the "sweetest thing" and largest quantity. Manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia. Used for bathing the face, neck, and arms, to render the skin soft and fresh, to prevent eruptions, to perfume clothing, &c.

It removes the unpleasant odor of perspiration.

It removes rashes, tetter, and chafing.

It cures noxious headache and allays inflammation.

It cools, softens, and preserves delicacy to the skin.

It yields a subdued and lasting perfume.

It cures mosquito bites and stings of insects.

It contains no material injurious to the skin.

Patronized by actresses and opera-singers. It is what every lady should have. Sold every where. Try the Magnolia Water once, and you will use no other Cologne, Perfumery, or Toilet Water afterward.

DEMAS BARNES & CO.,
Props. Exclusive Agents, N. Y.

TO LADY READERS.—An entirely new method of forming French chicory, quickly, easily, thoroughly, and perfectly, especially in three months, by DR. H. CARLOS, Linguist and Professor of Literature, 229 East Fifty-second Street.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine an invention urgently needed by every body. For a sample and free by mail, 50c. that retails easily for $3, by E. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York.

PARLOR ORGANS.

THE HORNET PIERCE, A SPECIAL GOLD MEDAL, WAS awarded to us by the late great Fair of the AMERICAN INSTITUTE over all competitors. Send for illustrated circulars.

A Gold Medal was awarded to CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO. for the best Reed Instrument in the Fair. Circulars just testimonial.—WATSON'S Art Journal.

"I can speak of them . . . in the highest terms."—G. W. MORGAN.

"The finest instruments of their class I ever saw."—W. A. KING.

"The tone is incomparable—far in advance of any others."—Extract from a letter of Dr. CHARLES FRADEL.

Illustrated Catalogues sent by mail.

CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO.,
No. 97 East Twenty-third St., New York.

English Magazines, Periodicals, and Newspapers.

WILLMER & BROOKS, 45 Park Row, N. Y. (established 1840), supply on subscription every Magazine, Periodical, and Newspaper published in Great Britain or on the Continent of Europe. Price-List for 1866 now ready.

Youth and Beauty Restored

To the gray-headed by the use of

Webster's Vegetable Hair Invigorator.

DYMAS BARNES & CO., N. Y., General Agents.

SERPENTS DE PHARAON;
OR,
SERPENT'S EGGS.

The latest scientific miracle.

"Truly marvellous and apparently inexhaustible"—London Times.

Wholesale and retail by

OLDEN & SAWYER, 246 Canal St., New York.

Price, 50 cents; by mail. Liberal Discount to the Trade. AGENTS WANTED.

HOLIDAY PRESENT.

FIRST PREMIUM IMPROVED

$5 SEWING $5 MACHINE.

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originally patented May 15, 1861: Improvement patented June 5, 1863. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with CHANGING ATTACHMENT, a most wonderful and elegantly constructed Novelty, is now ready to supersede, once the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, and works horizontal, vertical, and diagonal stitches with equal facility. Makes the SUNNIEST-STITCH MORE perfect and regular than by hand, and with unparalleled rapidity, and is the greatest success in each evolution of the Wheel. Will GATHER, TUCK, HEM, HEMSTITCH, RUFFLE, QUILT, EMBROIDER, &c., &c. Warranted not to get out of order in 3 years. It has taken the premium at STATE, COUNTY, and INSTITUTE fairs in all of the principal journals and of those who have used it. For the dressmaker it is invaluable; for the home-hold it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Ladies' Book.

It will single or double feed, is light running, and very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly like hand-sewing."—New York Tribune.

Single machines sent to any part of the country per express, packed in box, with printed instructions, on receipt of the price, $5. Safety delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted every where. Circular, containing liberal inducements, sent free.

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
Offices 102 Nassau Street, New York.

Ladies and Gentlemen, use the Patent Fasteners. Sent by mail for 25 cents. W. C. WOODS, 870 Broad way, N. Y.

Holiday Presents.

MUSICAL BOXES.

Playing from one to thirty-six different tunes, ranging from $5 50 to $600 00. The most complete assortment ever offered for sale in New York. Fine ornaments for the parlor, and elegant presentations for the holidays.

M. J. PALLARD & CO.,
71 Maiden Lane (up stairs), New York. Musical Boxes repaired.

$1500 PER YEAR! We want agents every where to sell our IMPROVED $50 Sewing Machines. Three new kinds. Under and over feed. Above agency or large commissions paid. The only machines sold in the United States for less than $40 which are fully licensed by Howe, Wheeler & Wilson, Grover & Baker, and Singer & Co. Address Wheeler, Wilson & Co., Boston or nearest office in the Commonwealth. Circulars free. Address or call upon the nearest office: Boston, 277 Washington St.; New York, 707 Broadway, New York; No. 203 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.; No. 181 West Baltimore St., Baltimore, Md.; No. 75 Public Square, Cleveland, Ohio; or No. 8 Spalding's Exchange, Buffalo, New York.

The Great American Consumptive Remedy.

DR. WM. HALL'S

BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS

FOR THE CURE OF

Consumption, Decline, Asthma, Bronchitis, Wasting of Flesh, Night Sweats, Spitting of Blood, Whooping Cough, Difficulty of Breathing, Cough, Croup, Influenza, Phthisic, Pain in the Side, and all Diseases of the Lungs.

DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM is offered for a better reason, it contains no opium, calomel, or poisonous drug, and can be safely taken by the most delicate child.

DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM gives the most strikes at the root of the disease at once. The most distressing cough is frequently relieved by a single dose, and a cure is sure to follow a few days' use. The afflicted do not have to take bottle after bottle before they find relief. One bottle will effect a cure.

This is no RECKLESS PREPARATION, but one which, if used in time, will save the lives of thousands. It has effected cures in communities where the intelligent physician is unknown, and where the ignorant and afflicted plead, and have pleaded their own cases, and in which cases it has been pronounced INCURABLE, and SURRENDERED AS HOPELESS. Many a mother, sister, and friend will remember a single ray to enliven them in their gloom, have been cured by HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and the "CYCLOPS OF CONSUMPTION" arrests no vigorous and strong victim. The most valuable testimony in favor of this remedy is that of those who have used it.

Be pointed out in every community where the most unjustifiable remedy has been tested. Full directions will be found in pamphlets around each bottle.

For sale by Druggists and Dealers in Family Medicines in all parts of the United States.

A. L. SCOVILL & CO., Proprietors,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

FOR JANUARY, 1866.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or Eight Copies for $30 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $8 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements on the third Page of the following low rates: one quarter of a page, each Number, $75; one half, $150; one page, $250. No Extra charge for Position. MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or 8 Copies for $30 00. Payment invariably in advance.

The Bound Volumes of HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent to any part of the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, viz.:

Cloth Binding . . . . . $2 per Volume.
Half Morocco . . . . . 10 00 "

Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.—Four Cents per Agate Line for inside, and Five Cents per line for outside Advertisements, each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

WHY NOT?

FOND MOTHER. "Now, JOSEPH, why don't you carry our poor darling? You see how tired he is!"

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad St., New York,
(Two Doors from Wall.)

Collections made, with quick return.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks.
Bonds, and Gold, will receive our PERSONAL attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

Take no more Unpleasant and Unsafe Remedies

For unpleasant and dangerous disease. Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU and IMPROVED ROSE WASH.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

POLLAK & SON, Meerschaum Manufacturers, 638 Broadway, cor. 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders to order and repaired. All our goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $25 each.

Enfeebled and Delicate Constitutions,
Of both sexes, we HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU. It will give brisk and energetic feelings, and enable you to sleep well.

THE VEST POCKET
PISTOL,
WEIGHING ONLY 21 OUNCES;
USING METALLIC CARTRIDGE,
SIZE NO. 1.
MANUFACTURED BY
E. REMINGTON & SONS, ILION, N. Y.
, Sold by Gun-Dealers and the Trade generally.

A Really and Conclusive Test
Of the properties of HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU will be a comparison with those set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

TO CURE
Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL, and disorders arising from excesses, use
Smolander's Extract Buchu.
Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York, and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BERLEDGE & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

Clergymen, Teachers, The Press,
Unite in saying that the new Juvenile Magazine,

Our Young Folks

Is the best Magazine for the Young ever published in America. It is filled with attractive illustrations, and its articles in prose and poetry, are by the best writers for children in the country.

It is sold at the low price of two dollars a year. Each number contains sixty-four pages, beautifully printed. A liberal discount to clubs. Send 10 cents for a specimen copy and circular to the Publishers, FICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

TAKE YOUR OWN MEASURE, AND SEND YOUR ORDER TO
E. A. BROOKS, Agt.
Importer and Manufacturer of
BOOTS, SHOES AND GAITERS,
575 Broadway, New York.

Directions for Measuring the Foot.

First. Place the foot upon a piece of paper and trace the outline of same with a pencil, which will give the length and spread of the foot, as shown in figure A.
Second. Make the following measurements, as shown in figure B, viz:
1st. The ball of foot.
2d. " Low instep.
3d. " High instep.
4th. " Heel.
5th. " Ankle.
6th. " Calf.

Fig A.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1865, by Edwin A. Brooks, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT BUCHU
IS THE GREAT DIURETIC
Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla
IS THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.
Both are prepared according to the rules of Pharmacy and Chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

Holloway's Pills are the only Medicine for invigorating a debilitated Constitution. Persons of nervous habit, suffering from impaired digestive organs and bilious affections, should give these remedies an impartial trial. Coughs, colds, and asthma are speedily relieved and radically cured by a steady course of these medicaments. Sold every where.

For Great Sale of
FRENCH JEWELRY
(PURE GOLD)
See Advertisement of
BOSANQUET, GIRAUD & CO.
On Inside Page.

CATALOGUE of LANGENHEIM'S
Magic Lantern Pictures and Apparatus. Address
W. LANGENHEIM, Philadelphia.

WHISKERS and MUSTACHES forced to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to five weeks by using Dr. SEVIGNE'S RESTAURATIVE DEVILLAIRE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, acting upon the Beard and Hair in a manner entirely unknown to the most miraculous manner. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with the most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials sent free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., CHEMISTS, Post-Office Drawer 31, Troy, N. Y. Sole Agents for the United States.

BEAUTY.—Address Golden, Flaxen, and Silken Curls produced by the use of PROF. DE BREES'S FRISER LE CHEVEUX. One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets or heavy massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to the hair. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., CHEMISTS, P. O. Drawer 31, TROY, N. Y., Sole Agents for the United States.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

"American Union Company."
Manufacturers of the NEW ORGAN-TONED PIANO, Equal, if not SUPERIOR, to any. Warranted in every particular. WAREROOMS and "AGENCY," 467 BROOME ST.

"For non-retention or incontinence of urine, irritation, inflammation, or ulceration of the bladder or kidneys, diseases of the prostrate glands, stone in the bladder, calculus, gravel or brick-dust deposit, and all diseases of the bladder, kidneys, or dropsical swellings,
Use Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu.

MUSICAL BOXES.
See Advertisement on Page 15.

DEAFNESS
And Discharges from the Ear Radically Cured
By the use of the recently-discovered Vegetable Extract
OTITINE.
Price $1 50 a bottle. For sale by all Druggists. WEEKS & POTTER, Druggists, No. 170 Washington St., Wholesale Agents.

HATS AND FURS,
BURKE,
409 Broadway (nd. Lord & Taylor's) and 154 Fulton St.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU
Gives health and vigor to the frame and bloom to the pallid cheek. Debility is accompanied by many alarming symptoms, and, if no treatment is submitted to, consumption, insanity, or epileptic fits ensue.

IVORY and PEARL
Sleeve-Buttons, $1, $2, and $3 a pair. Ivory and Pearl Jewelry, $3, $4, $5, and $6 a set. Ivory and Pearl Dress-Buckles, $1 50 to $5 each. Scarf-Pins, $1 to $10 each. Collar-Buttons, 25 cents each. Wholesale and Retail.
WM. M. WELLING,
IMPORTER AND MANUFACTURER, 371 Broadway.

PATENT REVERSIBLE
PAPER COLLAR
The Cheapest Collar Ever Invented,
Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides. Made in white, fancy and printed stitch.

Is made of the best Spring Steel Wire, and is just the thing to wear with Paper Collars, being far superior to elastic cord for holding "Butterflies," "Uniques," "Bows," &c., in place on the shirt bosom.

PATENT EXPANDED
STAR COLLAR
This Collar, showing a space for the cravat, excels all others by its superior shape and weight, and the exquisite finish and whiteness of the paper.
MARCH BROS., PIERCE & CO., AGENTS,
Winthrop Square, Boston.
Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf Supporters at the lowest Boston prices, by—
Bowen Brothers, Chicago, Illinois.
H. HOWMAN & BRO. . . . Cincinnati, Ohio.
MAYER & HAHCH. . . . Cleveland, Ohio.
ATKINSON & CO. . . . Louisville, Kentucky.
CLAPPS . . . . 265 Broadway, New York.
WM. A. BARTHOLF. . . . 7 Bank St., Philadelphia, Pa.
A. DENHAM & CO. . . . Detroit, Michigan.

EMPLOYMENT.
Let every man in the United States who has lost either an arm or leg inclose 25 cents for sample to A. F. BELCHER, Box 45, Philadelphia, Pa.

MANHOOD and YOUTHFUL VIGOR
Are regained by HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
To be found in each box of each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are for all waists in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to customers. Office of the Company, No. 89 Chambers Street, New York.

Shattered Constitutions Restored
By HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

MOTHERS!
Children die by thousands—Worms the cause—whose throat might have been spared had they used VAN DEUSEN'S WHITE CONFECTION. Children are so fond of them as they are TASTELESS. Sold by Druggists. 25 Cts. a Box. Sent by mail on receipt of the price. VAN DEUSEN BROTHERS, Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.

BROWNE & SPAULDING,
JEWELERS,
METROPOLITAN HOTEL BUILDING,
570 BROADWAY.
FINE WATCHES and RICH JEWELRY of PARIS DESIGNS.
CLOCKS, BRONZES, and FANCY GOODS of LATEST IMPORTATIONS, and well adapted for HOLIDAY GIFTS.

The Graefenberg Vegetable Pills.
The best Liver Pill, and the most certain remedy for all bilious and digestive troubles. Price 25 cents a box.
MARSHALL'S UTERINE CATHOLICON now acknowledged to be the only certain remedy for Female Weakness and Uterine Complaints of women. Price $1 50 per bottle; 5 bottles for $6. Use none except with the seal of the Graefenberg Company. Sold wholesale and retail by the Graefenberg Company, No. 120 William St. (near Fulton St.), New York. Inquire of dealers every where.

THE DAYS
OF BRASS JEWELRY
Are Over.
THE COSMOPOLITAN
JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,
Capital, $2,500,000.
Great One-Price Gold Sale.
Sell no Brass or so-called Plated JEWELRY.
WARRANT ALL JEWELRY GOLD, OR NO SALE.
DON'T FAIL TO READ CALKINS & CO.'S ADVERTISEMENT ON PAGE 14.

LADIES
PAPER COLLARS & CUFFS.
WHOLESALE & RETAIL.
WARD, 387 B'WAY, N.Y.
One Ladies' Collar sent free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles.

The Glory of Man is Strength.
Therefore the nervous and debilitated should immediately use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

50 CENT SAMPLE SENT FREE, with terms for any one to clear $25 daily, in 5 months.
W. H. CHIDESTER & CO.,
No. 7 Park Row, 13 Nassau Street, New York.

LARGE PROFITS can be made by active men in the Stencil Name Plate Business. Complete outfits of tools and stock furnished by S. M. SPENCER & SON, 191 Union Street, Boston. Send for Price-List.

DR. GLOVER'S
NEW CHAMPION LEVER TRUSS
Is the greatest triumph of American skill or genius ever attained in this or any other country for the retention and radical cure of Hernia or Rupture.
It retains and cures Hernia or Rupture. It is worn with perfect ease and safety. It keeps its place under all circumstances. It never gets out of order. Its pressure is regulated and gentle. It makes no pressure on the spine. It is applicable to Single or Double Rupture.
For the past thirty years Dr. GLOVER has been known to the public. His last and greatest achievement is the
NEW CHAMPION LEVER TRUSS!!!
It is locked with a key, and sealed. It is equally applicable to old and young.
Every variety of Trusses, Bandages, Elastic Stockings, Supporters, Crutches, and Instruments for the cure of deformities of the body made to order. Send for a pamphlet.
Dr. GLOVER'S "NEW TRUSS AND BANDAGE DEPOT," 11 Ann Street (a few doors from Broadway), New York.

WARD'S
PERFECT FITTING SHIRTS.
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars, sent free every where.
The CASH can be PAID to EXPRESS COMPANY on DELIVERY of GOODS.
ALSO A LARGE ASSORTMENT OF SILK SCARFS, NECK TIES, UNDERSHIRTS and DRAWERS.
NEW STYLES RECEIVED FROM LONDON AND PARIS EVERY WEEK.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
S. W. H. WARD, No. 387 Broadway, New York.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu
Is pleasant in taste and odor, free from all injurious properties, and immediate in its action.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND PERFUMERS.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. X.—No. 472.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 13, 1866. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1866, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

EDWIN FORREST MOORE.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.—[SEE PAGE 18.]

EDWIN F. BOOTH.

EDWIN FORREST BOOTH, the most celebrated of living American actors, was born in Hartford County, near Baltimore, Maryland, in November, 1836. He was named after FORREST, now his only rival on the American stage. His father, JUNIUS BRUTUS BOOTH, a native of England, though a man of very eccentric character, achieved a very high distinction as a tragic actor. This elder BOOTH had three sons, all of whom followed more or less zealously their father's profession. Of the three EDWIN alone can be worthily deemed the elder BOOTH'S successor in histrionic art.

EDWIN BOOTH made his first appearance upon the stage when he was only sixteen years old, as Tressel in "Richard III," at the Baltimore Museum. This was sixteen years ago. His father was still living. Indeed, the first appearance of the young actor in Philadelphia, a year later, as WILford, in "The Iron Chest," was for the benefit of his father. On the 4th of March, 1857, he made his début in NEW YORK at the Metropolitan Theatre in the character of Richard III.

More nearly allied to his father than his brothers were in person, he also inherited more of his personal characteristics and temperament. His face has, in a large measure, the same antique type which belonged to his father. It may be fairly said that in external advantages no living actor can compete with EDWIN BOOTH. It is more than possible that his striking resemblance to his father has done the young actor great injury. It led his audience to treat him with a too kind indulgence, taking him up as a pet from the first. Under these circumstances it appears to us wonderful that MR. BOOTH has made his profession so careful a study as he has done, and that he has not more and greater errors.

MR. BOOTH'S impersonations of character are eminently judicious. His facts and eye are his great organs of expression, as were his father's. But he has also a rich and powerful voice. As Sir Edward Mortimer he is very successful, especially in the last scene. His Richard is original; his Richelieu is probably the most carefully studied and elaborately finished of all his impersonations. It is in Hamlet, however, that his genius is most apparent. Macbeth is not so well fitted to his peculiar temperament. There is not enough of fire and force in the character to suit him. Lady Macbeth monopolizing that element herself. Still we scarcely ever witnessed a more powerful combination of the stage than that presented in the play of "Macbeth," with BOOTH as Macbeth and MISS CHARLOTTE CUSHMAN as Lady Macbeth on the occasion of a benefit to the Sanitary Commission at the Academy of Music in the winter of 1863.

About three years since MR. BOOTH lost his wife, who was much beloved and admired, and whose death was a severe affliction to her husband.

MR. BOOTH appears before the public at this time in one which elicits our most cordial sympathy. Within the past year he has suffered with us all in a common grief, but he has also had, in connection with the very occasion of that grief, a private sorrow which ought to be sacred to us all.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 13, 1866.

☞ Subscribers who wish to bind the Ninth Volume of HARPER'S WEEKLY, ending with No. 418, may obtain gratuitously from the principal News Agents a TITLE-PAGE AND TABLE OF CONTENTS.

☞ Dealers may obtain MUSLIN COVERS for Binding the Volume at Seventy-five cents each net.

"INSIDE."

IN the next Number of the Weekly we shall begin the publication of a very remarkable original novel called "INSIDE." It is a picture of the interior life of the South during the Rebellion, drawn by one who was born in that part of the country, and who has always lived there, with the exception of temporary visits elsewhere, and who was "inside" of the Rebellion from beginning to end. The author has been always a conservative Union man, and his story, begun with the Rebellion and written as it progressed, was of a character which imperiled his life had it been discovered, so that his wife carried it to church on Sunday and revealed about her person; while, when sorely pressed, the author buried the MS. in the ground to escape detection.

Yet the work is written in no partisan spirit, but with striking impartiality. Its descriptions of the various shades of character and conviction involved in the Rebellion are acute and masterly. The methods by which ignorance, superstition, prejudice, and every passion, were made subservient to Secession by the rebel leaders are vividly exposed, and the whole machinery of the Rebellion is laid bare. The terrorism which necessarily underlies a society built upon Slavery is almost involuntarily revealed on every page, not by any argument or appeal, but by the graphic narration of the ordinary course of life.

The dramatic power of the work, both of perception and execution, are very striking. The fidelity of its details is thrilling, and the interest consequently absorbing. We are not likely to have a more comprehensive and incisive interior view of the great struggle, and of those aspects which are most characteristic, than that given by "INSIDE." And it is a work of such sincerity, earnestness, knowledge, and unquestionable truthfulness, that every member of Congress and every man in the country may study in it the real condition of the South, and reason more intelligibly upon the pressing problems of the time.

We invite our readers to verify or condemn our judgment by the perusal of the work.

THE SITUATION.

THAT General WADE HAMPTON was received with all the honors by the Legislature of Alabama, and responded to their acclamations by eulogizing the noble and heroic effort of the people of that State to destroy the United States Government for the express purpose of perpetuating and extending human slavery, is not a surprising event. It is in strict accord with the other demonstrations in the lately insurgent States, which have not been directly coerced by the National Government. It is akin to the election of General HUMPHREYS over the Union candidate, ex-Governor of Mississippi, and the defeat of the representative Unionist, MR. HOLDEN, as Governor of North Carolina; and illustrates what no well-informed person denies, that proved fidelity to the rebellion is the present ground of popularity and public confidence at the South.

Such things we say are not amazing. They are natural. They were to be expected. It is foolish to ask men to change their opinions because they have been overpowered, or to love the hand which smites and subdues them. How foolish it is to ask it may be seen not only from the study of human nature in general, but of Southern human nature in particular. The whole history of the relations between the North and Northern cities, and of the "society" which "sympathizes with the South;" the action and debates of the Conventions in the Southern States; the elections; the reluctant assent to the most imperative national requirements; the reports which come through every source—military, naval, political, social, private, and official—from the late rebel section, all confirm the truth of the statement that the condition of the South is just what was to be expected, logical, and decisive.

Some of the States have accepted the emancipation amendment, have repudiated their rebel debt, have revoked their acts of secession, and have made a certain form of equality in the courts, simply because they could not help themselves. Or are we mistaken? Have South Carolina and Mississippi passed the amendment heartily and freely? Is the fraternal intercourse of the great churches beginning again? Is trade rapidly reviving? Is immigration pouring unrestrictedly into the South? Is there an evident determination to make the best of it?

We hope there may be, but will any candid man say that there is any proof of it? General GRANT reports that leading men told him that the decision of battle was accepted as final; that the Union adds that the free men of color men who "thought it practicable to withdraw the military from the South at present." The reasons are obvious.

Now we do not care to be told again that this condition of the public mind at the South is natural and to be expected. We grant it freely; but it by no means ends the whole truth. What is said much more remains to be said before you have accurately defined the situation. If the mass of the voting population in the Northern States be naturally and inevitably hostile to the Government, is it not essential to be very cautious and sagacious about intrusting them with a share in the control of the Government? If it be admitted that now the Union is to prosper while some of the States are unrepresented, it is not at all difficult to say how the Government is to act in hostile hands. There are difficulties and dangers in every policy proposed. If it be true that confidence begets confidence, it is no less true that party spirit is a secret of the country, and spread by bestronger than patriotism, and that experience has kept a dear school for the United States. The work we have to do can not be done in a moment. It ever will be subject to make haste slowly, we ought to do so now.

We do not anticipate any general armed resistance in the disaffected part of the country. We do not believe that any attempt will be made to restore exactly the system of slavery which has been abolished. And unquestionably as a free press and free discussion gradually penetrate the South, and immigration turns thither, and the passions of trade are revived, the herding waves will be slowly stilled and there will be peace.

But our practical question is how to hasten the operation of all these influences? The radically disturbing element at the South is the overthrow of its industrial system, which was the basis of its political system and the spring of all its political heroism. Its industrial population is a very large proportion of the whole. Colonization, exportation, and all other dainty devices of drainage are out of the question. The colored population will remain upon its native soil. It is impossible that it should very long remain peaceably as a purely parish class. Even the Raleigh Progress, which makes opposition to equal suffrage the test of Unionism in North Carolina, confesses that it is sure to come. And is it not clear that until it does come there will not be that condition in the Southern States which will give the pacifying influences fair play? For as long as a large class of the population is subject to unfair laws there will be no temptation to immigration or trade, and free speech will be constantly threatened. So long, consequently, there will be no harmony or peace.

No man who really understands the character of our Government, and accepts from conviction the principles upon which it is founded, as they are impressively stated by President JOHNSON in his Message, can believe that there will be any permanent pacification of the country until this fundamental point of political equality is settled. The question, then, is vital and paramount. Reasoning from evidence and human nature, have we any right to suppose that the present voting population will, without further suggestion from the National Government than other voters, the people of the Southern States—take, within this generation, the necessary steps to settle the question of political rights in such a manner as to promise speedy peace and prosperity? Or, to put it in the other way, will the true welfare of the country be more endangered by the immediate admission of the Congressmen-elect, seeing and knowing what we do—or by requiring, as a precedent condition, in addition to the amendment to which their assent has already been required by the Constitution, for the purpose of preventing its rightful intent, a further amendment apportioning representation to the number of voters?

There is no occasion for heat and fury in the discussion of the question. All loyal men have but one great object in view, and that is the permanent restoration of harmonious Constitutional union. And it is very foolish for those who differ upon the question of method to denounce each other as reprobates or malcontents.

THE VOTE OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK.

We have had occasion sometimes to speak of the rats of the City Hall, which gnaw away the legacies of widows and orphans, which prey upon the property of all citizens who think they have a right to live, and how long since destroyed the honorable name of the city of New York. The taxes of this city are of fabulous enormity; the municipal management is another name for the worst corruption; its foul condition at this moment invites the cholera, which is hastening greedily hither; and were the experiment of Spain and Portugal to be decided by its votes, voting in this city it would be called a failure by every candid mind.

Indeed it is hard to say whether it would not have come to a Vigilance Committee, if it had not been for the sagacious and timely help of the State. The Metropolitan Police and the new Metropolitan Fire Department—of the Commissioners of which we have a word to say elsewhere in this paper present an illustration, have been of incalculable service to this city of the Government which they were here most resisted upon their introduction, and that worthy patriot, FERNANDO WOOD, who mourned in the opening war that he could not send arms to the rebels without also sending citizens, undertook to resist the law removing his police, but was fortunately not sustained in his rebellion, and yielded.

The politics of the State are a contest between the city and country. The question during the war always was, how large a city majority could the National Government mass the country overcome? The vote of the rest of the State, in 1862, elected General WADSWORTH Governor by some thirty thousand, that of the city by HORATIO SEYMOUR by about forty thousand. The city of New York, in February, 1861, would doubtless have adopted the Montgomery Constitution by a large majority. In October, 1863, it gave more than thirty thousand majority for the Chicago shamo and surrender policy. Beyond question it would have supported as warmly a proposition to allow the rebel States to resume their relations to the Union without a single condition, and out of its 129,000 voters some 10,000 only could be induced to vote for a candidate for Mayor pledged against the Ring, or conspiracy for municipal swindling.

In view of the proverbial corruption and misgovernment of the city of its tremendous preponderance at the ballot-box to the party which has so long held the municipal control, and which as a party virtually palliated the rebellion and embarrassed the Government in its effort to suppress it, and considering the undoubted fact that the security of order and property here, that is, is due to the power of the State and not to the unrestricted authority of the city, it becomes extremely interesting to analyze the composition of the vote of the city. That has the American party ever conspicuously failed in an American city?

The means of this analysis are furnished in the State census of the year 1865, by which it appears that the naturalized voters of New York city outnumber the NATIVE voters by 26,000. A number which, by a singular coincidence, is almost exactly that of the Democratic majority of this city in our last State election. The whole number of NATIVE voters in the city is 51,500, and that of the naturalized voters 77,475. Whilst of the 338,426 voters of the State, 239,833 are naturalized.

These facts are very striking and significant. Unquestionably the 128,000 votes of the city represent in the mass the least intelligent voters in the country; and it is agreeable to know that the results of the elections in New York city are due to the ignorance of those who have had little chance to know the spirit of our institutions or the true policy of our Government, and not to the intelligent choice of native and educated citizens. The figures explain also the freedom with which money is voted away and the civic partiality for allowances to the Institutions of the Roman Church over all others. The Census is a happy proof that the utterly misgoverned municipality of New York is not a representative American city.

DECLARATORY RESOLUTIONS.

THERE are certain good gentlemen in Congress who are fond of whipping out declaratory resolutions as a highwayman pops out a pistol, with "your opinion or your life." The performance is usually worse than unedifying; and especially during a discussion which should be so peculiarly calm, earnest, and deliberate as that upon which Congress is about entering declaratory resolutions are impertinent and mischievous. They are an attempt to coerce or forestall conclusions which can only be legitimately expressed after thoughtful consideration. They are devices of impatience and are very deceptive, except when they have the solemnity and force of great Legislative acts, and then they are meant to be maintained by all means and at all hazards.

But what they are the very point at issue they are merely absurd. A man may hold many abstract opinions which he does not propose at any particular time and under existing circumstances to embody in laws. If he be compelled to express those opinions, he is, on the one hand, exposed to a charge of inconsistency, or worse, if he does not subsequently vote upon a special proposition in accordance with his abstract views; and, on the other hand, by his regard for apparent consistency, he may be coerced into a vote which he does not fully approve.

Congress is a body of practical legislators met for deliberation upon the best methods of achieving certain results. It is not an arena for the assertion of doctrines of political philosophy. Every wise legislator, indeed, will hold certain fixed and absolute general principles, and the best application of them in legislation is the very point of his deliberation. He may honestly believe, for instance, that every body of sound mind and of a certain age should vote, and he may with equal honesty vote against a specific proposition for securing that result. To compel him, without explanation and qualification, to say yes or no to a declaratory resolution upon the subject, is to embarrass him needlessly, and imperil the very cause which the mover of the resolution may have at heart.

Upon the main question of RECONSTRUCTION the country needs no snap judgment, but the most mature and sagacious action.

HISTORY OF THE GOLD PREMIUM.

FOUR years have elapsed since the Banks of the United States suspended specie payments, by an intercourse upon the fluctuations which have taken place in gold during that period.

The suspension took place on the last night of the year 1861, eight months after the commencement of the war. For five months the fluctuations in gold were merely nominal, the highest point touched being 105. Wall Street speculators, seduced by the heavy interest account on sales of gold on long credits, options, were willing to supply merchants with any quantity of specie, deliverable within sixty days, at a fraction below the cash price. People generally were in a state of war fever, and, guided by the experience of 1857, were slow to believe in a great depreciation of the currency. Not till the end of the Congress authorizing an issue of irredeemable paper-money became a law on 25th February, 1862, it was not till the June following that the premium on specie marked 109, on the 30th of which month, July, the utter defeat of M'CLELLAN'S expedition against Richmond could no longer be concealed, and in the general discouragement caused by the news gold rose to 120. From this point it reacted in August to 112. In the first week of September came the sad intelligence of the second battle of Bull Run and the rout of POPE, which caused the premium again to advance to 120; subsequently, on news of LEE'S invasion of Maryland, it rose to 124; but fell back on his defeat by the Virginia, after the battle of Antietam, to 116. Then came news that BRAGG was chasing BUELL through Kentucky to the Ohio River, and gold rose early in October to 130, the highest point yet reached. It reached to 122 on the retreat of the rebels. But the upward tendency had now been established, and speculation began to accelerate the movement. In December of 1862 BURNSIDE fought his unlucky battle at Fredericksburg, and gold jumped suddenly to 160.

Hundreds of persons were now interested in the rise of gold. At Washington leading members of both political parties, department officials, newspaper correspondents, bankers, members of Congress, lobby agents, were all speculating for the rise, and with such daring and capital that nothing short of military successes of a decisive character could have defeated them. The public temper, from having been, in January, 1862, almost unanimous against an advance in gold, was now, in December, 1862, about as unanimous on the other side. The premium had been kept down below 105 by the force of public opinion in the first two months of 1862, in spite of prodigal issues of paper-money; in the first two months of 1863 that same public opinion, without the aid of material disasters, forced up the premium to 173. SHERMAN'S unsuccessful assault upon Vicksburg was the only important event of the period, and that was less material than several successes which occurred almost simultaneously. The climax of the speculation was reached in February. In four months gold had risen from 122 per cent. to 173 per cent.—51 points. It may have been too low in October, but such an advance was too rapid to hold. The immediate occasion of the collapse was the passage of the first gold bill through Congress—a ridiculous measure, forbidding loans of over par on gold. Had the market been in a different condition the act would have put up, instead of putting down the price. Inflated as it was, it only required an excuse to give way; this measure sufficed. Even before the end of February, 1863, gold sold at 152.

From that point the decline was steady—with occasional reactions—till August, in which month it sold down to 122. This was the net defeat of LEE at Gettysburg, the capture of Vicksburg, and the capture of Fort Wagner at Charleston. When the news of the capture of gallant achievement was received in Wall Street it was confidently assumed that Charleston was "as good as taken," and that at last the rebellion had been received its death-blow. During this period of six months, from 15th February to 15th August, the old Bulls in gold had generally been ruined, and the Bears had reaped a splendid harvest.

In August well-informed persons, who knew that the war was not over, that the rebels were still full of fight, and that the Government stood in great need of money, became large buyers of gold and exchange, and the premium again began to advance, until by Nov. Year, it had risen to 150. The operations were fair that, in the absence of decisive military events, the premium would remain at about that figure, when it unfortunately occurred to Secretary CHASE and to Mr. SECRETARY STEVENS that it might be depressed by legislation. On the first suggestion of interference with the rates in relation to premium advanced to 160, and then, in April, 1864, to 172, whereby one became uneasy. If to buy gold were pronounced a crime the holding of gold would next be declared criminal: the French Government, during the Revolution, had punishes with confiscation and imprisonment persons who hoarded specie if our Government pursued its present policy a similar measure was not improbable. In the dread inspired by these apprehensions large numbers of persons purchased gold and shipped it abroad, creating a scarcity of the precious metals, and running the price to advance. Undismayed by these indications Congress pursued its policy, and the famous gold bill was passed, the effect of which was to cause specie to advance to 281 in July, 1864.

The military prospect at the time was not unfavorable. SHERMAN was pushing "on to Richmond;" SHERMAN, with the finest army in the world, was preparing for his march through the cotton States; all the indications were in favor of a change of the Government and the ruin of the rebels. Yet so wide-spread was the alarm created by the interference of Government with the trade in bullion that gold rose 20 per cent. a day for several days in succession, and would have gone on rising indefinitely but for the repeal of the "Gold Act." This evidence of a reform so sound principle checked the advance. But it was not so easy to repair the damage done. The lowest price made for gold in August, 1864, was 251—forty points above the highest price current before Congress began to legislate on the subject. In the first week of September SHERMAN took Atlanta, and the news, gold fell to 216. From this point it rose again. In November considerable uneasiness was felt respecting SHERMAN, GRANT's operations did not yield results which the masses could appreciate; the volume of paper-money was excessive, and there seemed to be no limit to the issues, present and future; and gold once more touched 260.

This was the last great upward surge. From the fall of Savannah at Christmas 1864, which depressed the price to 211, all went well with the Union cause. Congress, taught by experience, killed a new gold bill in a summary manner, and quite peaceably refused to authorize new issues of paper. Under the influence of this policy gold was only about 200 when Richmond fell. The event caused a decline of 52 points; and when, a few days afterward, the whole Confederacy collapsed like a balloon, the Generals surrendered, and the Ringleader was caught, a further decline of 20 points, bringing the price down to 130, followed.

From that point it has remained as high as 149. For several months the premium has fluctuated between 143 and 148, seldom rising above the latter or falling below the former figure. Heavy sales of surplus gold by the Sub-Treasurer at New York have put down the premium, and occasional inquiry for gold for duties has put it up. But its range has been a narrow one.

It is not MR. M'CULLOCH's plan, as we understand it, to attempt any violent interference with the gold market. He will sell all the surplus gold he can spare at the market-price—no more. He will continue to exact gold for duties—no more. He will, of course, oppose legislation on the subject of dealings in gold. And while he will resist all further expansion of the currency, he will from time to time, as the market suits, depopulate paper issues with a view to the withdrawal of the currency received in exchange. The effect of these measures will be gradually to depress the price of gold as compared with currency. How powerful a combination to hold over how many years the process may extend—how old we shall be when the last legal tender passes out of circulation—these are problems which depend, for their solution, on causes beyond the control even of Secretaries of the Treasury, and respecting which it would be futile even to hazard a conjecture.

THE LABOR QUESTION AT THE SOUTH.

LAST August General SLOCUM, then commanding in Mississippi, countermanded Provisional Governor SHARKEY's order for the enlistment of the State militia, and gave excellent and conclusive reasons for his conduct. The General's action was not sustained, and the consequences which he predicted are taking place. The following statement, which comes to us in a letter from Rodney, Mississippi, dated on the 2d of December, is confirmed by a distinguished General who was long in service in the Southern States, and who remarks:

"The militia of this county have retired every gun and pistol found in the hands of the so called freedmen of color, and have left the negroes to the mercy of the vagrant laws of Mississippi do not recognize the negro as having any right to carry arms. They commenced selling arms in town, and now the plantations are ransacked for dead hours of night by Captain WILCOX and company. The Union troops have left Natchez, and the negroes there shal nearer than Fayette; and of course the ex-rebel militia are having full sway, although they give Fayette a wide berth in their operations, not wishing to come in contact with the Provost-Marshal. Several of the guns seized have been sold to darkeys, and others given to them have applied to the Provost-Marshal in Fayette: he has refused to issue them, and is now discharging nearly one troops with him. The colored people intend holding a meeting to petition the Governor-Bureau to reestablish their courts in the State of Mississippi, as the civil laws of this State do not, and will not protect, but indeed have infringed on, their rights."

IN TEXAS, General GREGORY recently arrested an ex-slaveholder for chasing a freedman with dogs. Throughout the disaffected section the blacks are treated with the utmost insolence, and they are persecuted without mercy, especially if they have worn the uniform of the United States. The Texas Legislature, which would like to exasperate the blacks into insurrection, that there might be a good excuse for their extermination. Meanwhile, it is indisputable that the people of Texas have become as orderly as patient and loyal as it was during the war. They are willing to work, and wish to remain upon their native soil. But the experience of the Free States has taught them that it is not upon which, after emancipation, retards and perplexes a proper adjustment of the new relations is always the masters. The Legislature of Texas is composed of honorable conduct, that refused to accept the radical change, and their determination either to retain their old domination under another name, or to withdraw and make freedom seem worse for the laborers than slavery, is the cardinal difficulty of the situation.

That this is to be so in our Southern States is plain, and it is equally plain that nothing but has freed the slaves, is to consider in what way it can best secure that freedom. The Evening Post urges the immediate settlement in fee of freedmen of portions of the public lands, believing that, when the planting class discovers that labor is disappearing, wages will rise and the treatment of laborers improve. There are no sanguine that, if a beginning could be made, in Virginia, for instance, of transporting freedmen to Florida, under the auspices of those whom they have learned to trust, even if it be a thousand or two should go, the result would be similar; and the landowners, finding that the laborers were not absolutely dependent upon them, would gradually come to reason.

Such suggestions deserve thoughtful attention; and the importance of the question, and the necessity of the most judicious action, which can be based only upon accurate knowledge, show how indispensable is the continuance of the Freedmen's Bureau in active and ably controlled by General HOWARD. It is also of extreme importance that it should be managed by those who are really and not merely officially interested in the subject.

JURY QUALIFICATIONS.

SENATOR DOOLITTLE, of Wisconsin, has introduced an excellent bill abolishing in the United States courts the disqualification of jurors based upon their knowledge and impression of the circumstances attending the commission of crime. In cases of great and particular publicity, when it is especially necessary that the most intelligent jury shall be empaneled, the most intelligent men are obviously more or less familiar with the public accounts of the transaction, but not by no means necessarily prejudiced. The press has taught us all to distrust the press, and no intelligent man now forms an absolute and final opinion merely upon the current reports of news.

The old law, as MR. DOOLITTLE remarks, called men to a jury because they knew all about the transaction. But latterly such men have been entirely excluded. Yet in a case of paramount importance, like that of JEFFERSON DAVIS, where the facts are necessarily familiar to every man, and an opinion has been formed by every man so far as he has considered the facts and what he supposes to be the law, there is no shutting of the mind to any fair statement or strong argument, and the case would be as justly tried by a juryman who had read and talked upon the subject for the last four years as by a denizen of the planet Jupiter newly come down. The question in the case would be not whether DAVIS had waged war against the United States, but how he would not deny, but whether he were justified in doing it.

Or to take a somewhat different case—that of QUANTRELL. However strongly a man may feel upon the subject of the Lawrence atrocities, he would yet be capable of perceiving a palliation or justification, if such could be produced. And while the exclusion operates against the honest man it is powerless against the dishonest. A person who had vowed revenge against QUANTRELL would often swear that he had no opinion of his guilt, in order to get upon the jury and hang him.

The proposition of MR. DOOLITTLE applies, of course, to the case of DAVIS. It is very clear that a jury cannot be empaneled for his trial if it is to be composed of those who have really formed or expressed no opinion upon the subject. We are indeed inclined to believe that the trial will take place, but for other reasons. The President says that persons charged with treason should be tried, that the truth "may be clearly established and affirmed that treason is a crime." But how if the jury should not agree or should acquit JEFFERSON DAVIS, for instance?—would the truth not be, in the unlucky case, "clearly established and confirmed" that secession is a right?

There seems to us to be more sense in MR. DOOLITTLE's bill than, under the circumstances, there would be in the trial it contemplates.

WHAT "JOE FRY" THINKS.

"JOE FRY" takes us pleasantly to task for our "Saturday Sermon" of some few weeks since. He asks:

"Now, sir, what have we you going to accomplish 'the general election of society?' If the working man, whose whole energies are devoted to hard bodily labor for ten hours per day, is to be compelled to waste his time in the process you propose to do it. Does a severe and constant labor of the body unfit the mind and be mental exercise? Does it tend to refine the heart, to teach us charity toward our fellow men, to give views of our relation as citizens? Now, Sir, I have worked twelve, eighteen, and sometimes twenty-four hours for a day's work. I confess that I have had time to be selfish, and would gladly spend hours to me. Not because I am lazy and don't like to work. I am willing to work, and am willing to spend my time within me—the soul which animates and inspires the body—and that alone, flesh and blood that I call my body—that it is my duty to elevate and refine and not keep pure and unsullied. Now I was not born with a silver spoon in my mouth, I was sent to work, and work hard, just as long as I am able. But if I can have two more hours per day to devote to my mental improvement, would I be any thing short of being an idiot did I sit idly by and do nothing toward the attainment of so desirable an end? Nor do I believe that the capitalists and aristocrats if they generously concede to us the eight hours of labor per day, will impose one tax by the expenditure, and at the end of three months report how much he has made by it, working the same number of men at the same work."

MR. "JOE FRY" ought to remember that the question is not whether it is desirable that overworked men should have more time for mental and physical recreation, but how to get it. It is a question of method, and one of the oldest problems in political economy in the world. It seems certainly be an idiot if he did not take the same wages for eight hours' work that he does for ten if he found any body who wished to give it. But what would be the effect of giving ten cents for a loaf of bread instead of six? And yet this is what he expects the capitalist to do. If JOE were a dry-goods dealer would he expect a customer to pay him the same price for four as for five yards of the same piece of cotton goods? Now JOE does not sell cloth, but he does sell labor, and he proposes eight hours of it will bring the price of ten? Of course if the eight is more effective, that is, if it be worth more, it will bring more. But what would be the result, in JOE's opinion, if the Legislature should fix the price of a six-cent loaf at three cents? If the passage of a law making eight, or six, or four hours a day's work could secure the same wages to the laborer, the same profit to capital, and the same price to the necessaries of life, it would be impossible to resist it. And if JOE can prove that the work of eight hours will be as productive as that of ten, he will be a pioneer in the reform which he desires.

He will not misunderstand us. Our object is the same. The point we discuss is one of method only.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

RECONSTRUCTION.

THE President has relieved Mississippi of her Provisional Governor. MR. SHARKEY, MR. HUMPHREYS became the legal Governor of that State, and capable of so independent executive action as to overrule Governor SEWARD of New York. Evidently the President's reason for continuing the Provisional Governors in office until after the meeting of Congress was to make it impossible for members of the Senate from those States to take part in the organization of Congress. We can see in his now relieving these States of their Provisional Governments an attempt to control Congress or to anticipate Congressional legislation. For plainly it was the President's design from the first appointment of Provisional Governors that these latter should be discharged by the regularly elected Governors as soon as the functions of the Provisional Government was to provide for the regular election in each State. The latter was indeed slow in to interfere with the immediate inauguration in office of the elected Governors; and the reason for doing so was to relieve Congress of a serious embarrassment.

CITY NEWS.

ON NEW-YEAR'S DAY Mr. A. OAKEY HALL was installed in office. The Common Council was reorganized by the election of JOHN JACOB ASTOR, President, and WILLIAM H. WOOD, Clerk. Green of the Councilmanic Board. Mayor HALL'S Message was received by the Common Council. From this Message it appears that our city debt amounts to $41,302,021, of which $25,581,000 is held by the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund. The local tax levy for 1866 is over eighteen millions of dollars. The Mayor lays down two principles in his Message:

First—The city should be limited to choosing its own officers, carry on its own government, and manage its own affairs. To the latter principle should be preserved its privilege maintained, and never, under any circumstances, should the State Legislature assume to meddle upon it a commission to govern and control it.

Secondly—That the city should be clothed with power commensurate with its responsibilities. A community composed of a million of responsible citizens should be the end and aim of their personal and political ambition. It should not be a matter of pride to the freeholder of responsibility which cannot call or nearly all of our municipal officers, or to the voter that the result to which he has contributed and acted upon that better for the common interests of the city.

The last official act of Recorder HOFFMAN before his assumption of the Mayoralty was the sentencing of EDWARD RICHMOND for forgery to imprisonment for four years and a half. In the course of the address to the prisoner the judge said:

"Were I now as a judge, I should mitigate your punishment for any sense of compassion for you, or sympathy with the feeling and feeling, or because of my own personal sympathies with those who have been your friends and feel that every sentence I had passed upon a first offender had been a wrong, and that I was indeed a reprover of persons."

NEWS ITEMS.

A large and destructive fire broke out in the railroad depot at Greenville, Jersey City, on the night of the 4th, in the morning of 5th December, which completely destroyed the depot, together with a large number of cars. The fire was incidence bound stemboat Commonwealth, running to and from the city of Providence, Rhode Island. The loss is estimated at a million and a half of dollars, which is partially covered by insurance.

The Hamburg ship Nenton was wrecked on the night of December 24 on Barnegat beach, and 17 persons perished. One man succeeded in reaching the shore, but soon afterwards died from the exposure and fatigue.

Bishop Rosecrans was recently shot in the leg by highwaymen on his way home from a church service out of Cincinnati.

The funeral of Governor Dennison took place at Lebanon, Ohio, on Christmas-day, and was attended by a large concourse all parts of the State.

The latest advices from Arizona represent that there is constant fighting between the Apaches and the white settlers.—Twenty-eight soldiers were out November 1 had not been heard from. The illustration which we give on page 29 will show the nature of the country in which the Indians dwell.

The negro-baters did their best to get up an insurrection on Christmas-day, but though very free with whisky barrels had very few fights worth the name. Not a life was lost.

The ladies of Baltimore have been distinguishing themselves by presenting a set of elegant furniture to General GRANT.

The University of Georgia, at Athens, has been reopened.

The pirate, Raphael Semmes, has been arrested and confined in the Mobile jail by the U. S. authorities.

At the close of the year 1866 gold was quoted at 127. Premium 27 per cent., 1½ per cent. less.

The steamer Constitution, Captain Grennman, from Savannah for New York, struck on Frying-pan shoals on the night of the 25th December, and went to pieces. She had on four persons, viz.: the captain, the pilot, a colored boy, and one child. The Captain and thirteen men were saved. The steamer is a total wreck.

FOREIGN NEWS.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S Message was received with great favor in England. It appears now to be conceded by our English brethren that we are the most liberal, strong and headstrong nation on the face of the earth.

The Paris correspondent says that the Americans in Paris General Schofield made a speech at the close of the Exposition, in which he said: "The old friendship between France and the United States may it be strengthened and perpetuated." Napoleon and the guilder would ever of comfort they can from that, but they will doubtless be disappointed in certain measures which the first are absolutely essential to the preservation of friendship between the two nations.

Governor Eyre had been suspended from his functions in Jamaica, and that Henry Stanley accompanied Speke in his place.

It does not appear that France has united very cordially with England in the remonstrance against Spain in regard to Chilian affairs.

The Chilean naval steamer Esmeralda, which some time ago seized the guano ex-Sea Valkyrie through Peruvian blockade blockade, and was for a while lost sight of, suddenly appeared in the harbor of Valparaiso about 2 P.M. on the second of that port December 26, attacked the Spanish war steamer Covadonga, and, after a fight of about half an hour, captured it, with all on board, consisting of over one hundred officers and seamen, four heavy guns and valuable war munitions and supplies. In the engagement two were killed and fourteen wounded on board the Covadonga, and none on the Esmeralda.

The Count of Flanders, brother of the Belgium, has been succeeded by his son, the Duke of Brabant, styled Leopold II.

The Pope has issued a Bull declaring against the penal servitude for life.

The news from South America, up to December 8, has been received, but contains nothing of great importance. Peace had been restored in Peru, and celebrated on the 5th birth of the Emperor Don Pedro. There is no change in the military situation.

MOUNTED MESSENGERS ATTACKED BY INDIANS ON THE PLAINS.—[SKETCHED BY S. B. EDGERTON.]

UNDERGROUND RAILROADS.

As underground railroad has become of such obvious success in New York city that the presentation of arguments in its favor is utterly needless. From the Battery to Harlem River is a distance of more than eight miles. What traffic is concentrated in the lower portion of the city near the Battery, the people reside mostly in the upper portion, and the tendency toward Harlem River, and even across that river into Westchester County, is so great that the exclusive dependence now placed upon horse-cars and omnibuses involves a fearful waste of time. A journey which must be made twice daily ought to occupy, and would by steam conveyance occupy only forty minutes, now consumes an hour and a half. The railroads now in use do not begin to satisfy the demand. During the last ten years the number of passengers carried by the city railroads has increased from 19,724,000 to 60,324,750. New railroads are built, but still the cars are overcrowded; and while there is a limit to the number of roads that can be built on our principal avenues, there is none to our rapidly-growing population. As a necessity we shall be compelled to build underground railroads.—These, besides the economy which they realize as regards space and time, will also be free from dust, and afford fewer opportunities for casualties.

THE METROPOLITAN UNDERGROUND RAILWAY, LONDON—STATION AT KING'S CROSS.

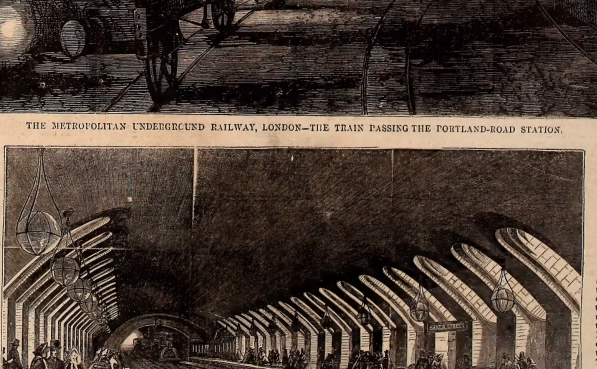
A bill for the construction of the Metropolitan or Underground Railroad passed the State Legislature April 27, 1865. It was sent to Governor FENTON on the evening of the same day, and on the 28th the Legislature adjourned. The Governor did not veto the bill, but returned it to the Secretary of State without his signature. He admitted the necessity of an underground railroad, but found two objections to the bill. In the first place, there was no guarantee that the road would be speedily completed; and, secondly, one of its provisions allowed the Company to use at pleasure, temporarily or permanently, any of the public grounds in the city thus placing even our parks at the mercy of the Company. The justice of these objections has been acknowledged by the corporators of the Company, who bind themselves to abandon the objectionable clauses of the bill. As the Legislature has again assembled, this subject becomes one of instant and pressing importance.



It is estimated that the cost of the proposed railway from Bowling Green to Central Park will be over eight millions. The route proposed would follow the line of Broadway to Fourteenth St., thence pass under Union Square and Broadway to Twenty-third Street, thence under Madison Square to Fifth Avenue, and under Fifth Avenue to Fifty-ninth Street. Pipes for ventilating the tunnel might shove ground serve as lamp-posts. It is proposed to erect stations at intervals of half a mile. The tunnel would be wide enough to give room for two lines of road, and would provide for carrying 57,500 passengers per day, or one-half that number each way.

THE METROPOLITAN UNDERGROUND RAILWAY, LONDON—THE TRAIN PASSING THE PORTLAND-ROAD STATION.

The underground railroad has been tried in London with great promise of success. There, as in New York, it was found that the means of conveyance in the metropolis were slower and more liable to obstruction than in the country. It was a work of greater dimensions to get from the Mansion House to Temple Bar than to get to London from a far distant rural station, just as it takes longer to reach the City Hall from Harlem than to reach the same point from a distance of over thirty miles. A scheme was therefore proposed to encircle London with a tunnel which was to be in communication with all the railway termini, thus enabling passengers from any part of the kingdom to reach any quarter of London without traversing the streets. A host of objections were raised, and the scheme was pronounced visionary and impracticable. But the scheme was destined to succeed. The city of London subscribed a million of dollars toward the enterprise. The Western Railway added another million. There were the same engineering difficulties to be overcome there as here, but the thing was accomplished; and the shares of the Company, which at one time were 50 below par, rose to 150. The line was opened for traffic January 10, 1863. The number of passengers carried the first year reached nine and a half millions, and in the year 1864 eleven and three-quarter millions. This year it is estimated that the number will reach fifteen millions. No accident has occurred from the first organization of the road. The carriages are forty feet long, & ided into six compartments, and accommodate forty passengers each. Four are lighted by gas through a special arrangement for that purpose.

THE METROPOLITAN UNDERGROUND RAILWAY, LONDON—STATION AT BAKER STREET.

Two of the locations which we print on page 21 represent two stations on this line—one at King's Cross, and the other at Baker Street. Another engraving illustrates the trial trip at the first opening of the line.

JOE DORY.

MISS MALKIN was mistress in her own shop. Mollie was an apprentice in Miss Malkin's shop; moreover, Miss Malkin was a wiry woman of thirty-five, while Mollie was a peach-bloom, brown-eyed, nineteen-year-old child, and of course hadn't so much as the ghost of a chance in the contest against Miss Malkin. Indeed she had not once opened her lips but with her work in her lap looking from the miserable little pallid and crystal box, cause of all this woe, with its scent-bottles and cornelian combs, and David Trueman's compliments, and he had letter her have it home, to himself, looking from them to Miss Malkin, who, discovering that the New-Year's box was not for her burst out in a fury.

"And I just hope," cried the lady, "that I hope I know my duty too well. No, no, I am not angry; and I despise your low, mean, underhanded ways with Dick Trueman's money, but I ain't mad in speaking. I don't know how to quarrel. I am a peacemaker. No more can I live in the house with a quarrelsome person, and so the sooner you can pack up that trunk of yours and get out, why the better for all parties concerned!"

So I say again, that though David Trueman was undoubtedly a fine fellow, and quite in earnest about his compliments, and had before have kept them and his boxes at home; for Mollie had already a mother, mother, brother, sister, uncle, aunt, nor cousin, and but one interested in the world, Mrs. Peter Palme, of Twentieth Street—and being set down there, with her trunk, late in the afternoon, and ringing the bell, lo! Mrs. Peter Palme had moved away!

"Oh! what shall I do!" cried Mollie; "and are you quite sure Mrs. Palme has gone?"

"I am quite sure I live here and no one else," returned the woman, sourly, and slammed the door in Mollies face.

"Oh, what shall I do!" cried out Mollie again; and looking helplessly up the street, saw a gentleman coming from the corner, when the eyes fell and her disconsolate trunk on the sidewalk sharply.

"Mr. Trueman!" ejaculated Mollie.

"Miss Mollie!" was her echo" exclaimed the gentleman, who had a squeak in his voice, and stopping —"you here, and a trunk! If I may be allowed the expression with a lady, what's up now?"

"Miss Malkin's back," answered Mollie, with a sparkle of fun in her eye, but looking demurely at her trunk.

Providentially, was it not? for this was David Trueman, who admired the lovely Mollie, and on the corner was David Trueman's shop, and over the shop was David Trueman's house, and in the house was David Trueman's sister, who would welcome the lovely Mollie; and yet the lovely Mollie would never have followed him, as she did, doubting and discomforted, could she only have imagined what she she could have been, providing he had not been there to follow.

Now it happened that Miss Malkin, who had slipped on bonnet and shawl, and rapped at once on Mollie, following her close, came up in time to behold, with equal wrath and amazement, David Trueman shouldering Mollie's trunk, in his new capacity of light-porter.

Jennie Trueman, David's sister, was then years younger than himself; that is, about Mollie's age, and unlike him, for David was a little, bustling man, with a ruddy face, and a squeak in his voice, while Jennie was brown and very pretty, in a very black-eyed and high-colored way, and made Mollie so welcome, that when she had laid aside her bonnet, on which was a black ribbon for Joe Dory, and tall young master of the Steadfast, and looked about David's comfortable rooms,

"Come now!" if Jennie was only her brother, who knows what might happen, since poor Joe is dead," and Mollie herself, dreamingly, sat down in a dow-pane, and quite unconscious of the start and astonished stare of somebody who happened to look up at her from the opposite side of the way. As if he had heard her thoughts, David joined her at the window

"A very pretty view, Miss Mollie. There's good houses over the way, and off there where you see the branches, quite like the country, you see. A five-and-ten house is, with all the modern conveniences."

"Yes, I should think so," said Mollie, vaguely, noticing with a slight flutter that David was edging closer to her.

"Furnished throughout from top to bottom complete," pursued David, going on with his inventory. "It never has wanted but one thing, and now that you're in it, it seems to me it don't want nothing."

Mollie was silent. Last New-Year' it was Joe that stood beside her.

"I don't want no answer now," continued David. "Of course, you ain't thought of this thing, and you will want some time to consider; but you look so natural and at home here, it seems a pity you should go away again; it really does. You and Jennie would get on like hook and eye; and for Joe, poor fellow! if he could speak, what better could he wish than to see you provided for by a man that is able, and fond of you into the bargain!"

"Dear me!" cried a merry voice in the door, "how dark you are in here! I declare I am really afraid to come into such a pokerish place! Mollie, are you dead, Jennie Trueman? Why, Trueman! dear me! good gracious! well, I never!"

And by this time Mrs. Minnow was fairly in the room. Mrs. Minnow was a portly woman, a very pretty little woman, with bright blue eyes that glanced searchingly from David to Mollie, and from Mollie back again, in a way that discovered them both exceedingly.

"I am in a desperate hurry," continued Mrs. Minnow, assuming a pretty flurry at the gate, "for Jennie called out that Grim-Malkin was cutting up again and you was here, and I thought I must run in if only for Joe's sake, you know."

David winced. Why for Joe's sake? Mrs. Minnow was Joe's cousin, but since he was comfortably drowned, what did it matter? Joe, what was the use of perpetually thking him up? Why not let Joe alone, especially since Mollie clouded at once.

"Last New-Year's Eve, at this time, we was talking with me," she said to herself, sitting down in a chair and showing a disposition to cry.

"Never mind, dear. Let by-gones be by-gones," said Mrs. Minnow, cheerily, and looking with immense satisfaction at Mollie's trunk, which David's evident distaste and uneasiness would have sent Mollie further than across the street, where Mrs. Minnow lived, and at Miss Malkin's who hasbaud stood in the door, and "Oh, George!" exclaimed that little woman, springing up the steps and whispering something in the astonished George vanished to the upper regions, where sounds of skurrying were to be heard as they approached; and opening the door, and lighting the gas, and widowering with the air of a baby that has been set down suddenly, and on the opposite side of the room the looks of astonishment at Mollie.

"Cozy here, isn't it?" said Mrs. Minnow, taking up the baby, and looking about her with an air of relief, "and I'll be bound, Mrs. Malkin has his like besides the four walls when we came; but if I want a dresser, why up a dresser goes. If I take a fancy to a thing, why I have it, without hammering, and pounding, and cutting, and clipping, and planing, and nailing till the shelves are done. That man just makes it the business of his life to find out what I want, and get it for me," declared the young wife with a delighted face, and sitting down with her baby beside her.

Mollie made no answer, but pretended to be busy with the ribbons and laces on the little work-stand. She was not at all talking about Joe, something in Mrs. Minnow had strengthened the thought of Joe, and made it a presence; and something in all about her brought the memory of his presence to her. She still she had never once, since the news of the wreck of the Steadfast, so rebelled against his death, and battled so hard to believe that he was yet alive. The work dropped out of her hands, for it was dark without, and there was no light in the room except that of the fire by which Mrs. Minnow hushed her baby and sang:

"I hadna been a wife a week but only four,
When, sitting on my stool, I thought I saw at my door.
I saw my Jamie's guast, I coulaa think it be,
But he said—"

—Stop! burst out Mollie, with a sudden passion of sobs. Stop, I can't bear it. He had been in her place I should have gone mad. How can you sing that before me, Maria, and Joe only a year dead!"

"Why, there's nothing about Joe in it," said Mrs. Minnow, stopping her rocking-chair in surprise.

"But it's like him."

"And for the matter," continued Mrs. Minnow, with a curious twitching of the mouth, "it is all very well to mourn for Joe; but, after all, Joe's dead and done with, and you are alive and you are alive and unprovided for, and if Mr. Trueman is willing, as I am sure and bald, why you will have twice what I have, Mollie, and it matters not to me how matches like George's and mine; and for his opinion and not caring about you will get used to that, and in my opinion it is just about the very best thing you can do for yourself."

"It ain't in mine, then," cried out Mollie, starting up and pushing back her chair; "and I am ashamed of you, Maria Minnow, and you was also always was to you, and you forgetting him as fast as you can! Every body forgotten him but myself—but every body!" sobbing; "but I won't, never! never! Finish your things yourself. I don't want to do well for myself, and I won't stay here another minute."

Up jumps Mrs. Minnow as the door shut vigorously, and, swinging that little woman round, second, cried Hurrah! thereby waking it out of a sound sleep, whereupon it squalled vigorously, and served her right, I say! and then running to the window to pop after the retreating Mollie, "Was there ever such a dear little goose!" said this inexplicable Mrs. Minnow.

Mollie went back to David Trueman's house even more soberly than she left it, and if there had been any spell in the air before to soften or offend the lonely, homeless girl, in the abundance of his home, it was off now, as David was quite shrewd enough to see.

"Confound that meddling woman!" said David, wrathfully in his heart, but wisely left Mollie to herself, and went below with Jennie to brew the punch, with which to see the Old Year out and the New Year in. Meanwhile Mollie turned down the gas, because of her headache, and, sitting there in the dark, resolved to give David his answer. Even as she resolved the door opened.

"Mr. Trueman," commenced Mollie in a trembling voice, "I have been in my mind about—about what we were speaking of."

"Well." David's voice sounded strangely—doleful, and Jennie stood whisper.

"And I think I ought to tell you at once," pursued Mollie, hesitatingly, "for fear you might deceive yourself: that when we stood there by the window, I was not sure of myself and I think you knew it! for I was saying to myself how bleak and bitter it looked outside, how cold and empty and sale this looked, and that I must choose between them! But I have been thinking since then of Joe"—and here her voice sank and she began to touch of trembling—"and, Mr. Trueman, no doubt he is dead, but he is not dead to me—not dead to me! and if I sat here in your wife, and there should come a stranger up on the stair, and a quick knock at the door, my heart would come up with a jump, and I should say to myself, all in a trembling, perhaps that is Joe! for if we were chatting by the fire, and the storm beat hard against the windows, I might smile at you, but I should be thinking and saying, as I have done on many a stormy night before, for Joe."

"Oh, God bless you!" and the deep voice that broke in was not David's, but Jennie's Trueman's. Mollie sprang up and screamed shrilly:

"Jennie! Mr. Trueman! Jennie! quick! I'm going out of my mind! all this time trying to light the gas, which, flaring up at last, showed Jennie supporting, with his sister close behind him, and, oddly enough, Mrs. Peter Palme following her, and Mollie, pale and dumb, with eyes staring wildly at a tall, blue-eyed, well-looking young fellow, who, with a flush of joy was of the brownest and in the best condition ever seen.

"Joe Dory!" cried out David, loudly, and "Joe Dory!" echoed Jennie, and "Joe Dory!" sweetly enough!" piped Mrs. Minnow, making a rush from behind her husband toward Mollie; "and to think that Mollie should be the very first to discover it in the beginning! and, in the first place, Joe isn't dead. It was the wrong man, or the wrong ship, or something; and when after a hard voyage Joe thought what a start he got when passing here, he saw Mollie in the window as if she were quite at home. Off he flies to Liverpool to hear the news; and says Grim, says she, 'I have a feeling heart, Mr. Dory, and can't bear to distress you; but if the truth must be told, Mollie quit this very day, and because I said to her she was going on shameful, and you only dead a year, and nothing certain; and I heard from her own lips that she had given up to David Trueman's, and after that I suppose you know as well as I do what will come next;' and this was Joe, being a sailor, of course, and taking it all below bring her out; and I had very nearly brought myself out too! such work as I had to get Joe out of your way; and then I brought you out; and you come out, didn't you?" said Mrs. Minnow, laughing heartily and whirling the bewildered Mollie round and round, "and Joe there all the while on the other side of the door and heard every word you said! and then he insisted on coming over tonight like a ghost, instead of coming to overthrow like a decent Christian caller, and so here he is."

One, two, three—four—the clock striking twelve.

"The punch," cried Jennie.

"The New-Year," said Joe softly, drawing Mollie's little aside, "and a New-Year for us indeed, my love!"

"But since he was to come back, why the deuce couldn't he have come before I made a fool of myself?" growled David Trueman, to the bottom of his glass.

UNCLE JACOB'S WIFE.

WE were sitting round the breakfast-table, my father, mother, brother and I, young fellows, the self, one winter's morning, when the letters came in, nearly an hour late.

"Fortune's to be, bt, that the roads are frozen so slippery that he had to leave his horse at a farmhouse and walk over with the bag," said James, pedagogically, as he laid the letters by my father's plate.

"There's always something wrong," said my father, with a shrug, "when I am expecting important letters."

"Read that from Jacob," said my mother, pointing to one.

"How do you know it's from Jacob?" asked my father, always a little jealous if he thought his letters were to be wry scrutinized, even to the reading of a post-mark.

"Jacob writes across the table," said my mother, meekly. Here she touched another sensitive point of my father's; he was the slightest bit envious of her better education.

"It will wait," he said, and chipped at his egg. But the touch of spleen was but momentary, and he presently broke Uncle Jacob's red seal.

He is coming here," he said, without looking up.

"He will be welcome," said my mother, and my father read on. He always read straight through a letter before enlightening his family, which never changed. He turned pale, absolutely white, he whose complexion was like that of one of his own ruddy apples; his hand shook, too, and he threw down the letter.

"What is it? Is he dead?" asked my mother in her fright, forgetting that she was looking at his writing.

"Worse than dead!" said my father.

"What has he done?" we three girls exclaimed in a breath. "Is it bad?" for my father's face was a picture.

"Pshaw!" said my father, and his color came back as he spoke; "he's going to be married."

"Married!"

"Married!"

"Married!" We all pronounced the dreadful word, and then there was silence, and we thought much and said little. The matter, in fact, was beyond speech.

"There go your fortunes, girls!" said Tom, breaking silence, with a look that reminded me of his old mischievous school-boy days.

"Hold your tongue, Sir!" thundered my father.

"I must say I think it inconsiderate of Jacob, highly inconsiderate," said my mother, but something in her voice pleased for Uncle Jacob as she spoke; she was such an unreasoning sort of woman, my mother, in her half-of-heaven-half-of-earth side.

"Inconsiderate? Disgraceful!" said my father.

"Yes, my dear Charles, very disgraceful," said my mother; but I caught the same tone of appeal in her voice.

"Shameful! Ridiculous! Unheard of?" My father was given to the piling of epithets. "Pitiable in a man of his age."

"He is old to marry," said my mother.

"Old! Only think of it. I am sixty-seven, and he is not two years younger."

"I suppose he was very lonely."

"Why could he not have come here, then?"

"His letter suggests that," said my mother.

"I suppose he can not leave his office in town for long."

"Why not have asked one of the girls to go and live with him? if he was lonely. Lonely!—nonsense! The man has no more feeling of loneliness in any thing else than a dried mummy. Lonely!"

"It seems a pity," said the gentle voice of the gentlest of all gentlewomen.

"You don't appreciate the case at all, Mary! The old goose! So, nothing but marrying will serve his turn—and all out of spite too! Well, he is bringing it on his own head, or shoulders, and so he'll find. There's an end to his quiet life now. The trouble of a wife—" Here my father checked himself, seeing something perhaps in my mother's face.

"No, Mary; I didn't mean that! You know I did not. We have lived together very happily without a rub for five-and-thirty years. Why, Polly, what are you thinking of?" She did not speak, but I always thought that my mother's face was better than words. I am sure my father thought so too. His smile was known to us all to be the sunlight under which the rest of us grew, and it was very sweet.

"I wonder what she is like!" queried Tom, unluckily giving utterance to the thought that was rankling in each of our minds.

"Stuff, Sir! What does it matter!" said my father, effervescing again. "A designing woman, no doubt—designing for his money, Sir!"

Now Uncle Jacob had never spoken a word of leaving us anymore, but we built our hopes on the understood thing that he would, and naturally so, I think. He had not a single relation in the world outside our house. He had always been kind to us in his way, giving Tom's school-bills, and sending my mother presents of the quaintest ornaments that could well be seen. He was really fond of her,in his unconventionative way, and had told my father confidentially several times that she was an "excellent woman." On one occasion, too, my father had been lamenting in his presence that we girls could have no fortunes.

"Tom must have the farm, of course, and then if he wants money he can sell it," said Uncle Jacob had said: "Don't fret yourself about their fortunes."

There was no promise in the words certainly—that is, no promise expressed—but did not an implied one lurk there so slightly hidden as to be almost? We thought so, and rejoiced somewhat merrily over it, and made sure of our fortunes from that day forward.

And now a week passed my father had another letter from Uncle Jacob, naming the wedding-day, but not asking any of us to be present.

"Although he invites himself here, in the coolest manner possible, the fortnight after," said my father.

"I would fill the house, Sir, ask the Jenkinsons and young Clive here, and tell him there wasn't room," was Tom's sapient rejoinder.

"And make his wife an enemy for life," said Jane.

My father shortly enjoined Tom to keep his ideas to himself; so he had evidently decided to receive the visit.

The wedding-day passed, and the fortnight's honeymoon elapsed, and the bride and bridegroom were to be with us next day (roads permitting). It really was pleasant, their coming so soon, for our curiosity had been roused to the highest pitch, and had as yet had nothing to allay it—not a single particular as to the young lady's age, looks, manners, accomplishments, or fortune had been given. My mother had thought to write to Uncle Jacob, asking a few questions as to these matters, "to show him that we were interested," but as she had not done it, my father having looked things unutterable at the bare idea.

"I will write," her motherly heart, began to pity the bride, as the hour came for the carriage to be heard crunching the frost up the drive.

"I will go to be no nursery, pray, thing. Mind you meet her kindly, girls. It is not her fault about the fortune, poor thing; I dare say she knows nothing about it."

In one of my mother's pauses came the sound of wheels, and we went in a body to the hall—all of us except my father, who kept out of the way, wishing to meet the happy pair privately. Nearer and nearer came the carriage-wheels, and we opened the hall-door, and stood just inside in the biting cold air, as the green carriage, tiny horses, and velvet post-boy came to the steps. She was tall—five inches—inches taller than Uncle Jacob, and slight, and dressed in dark rich colors, but with so thick a veil down that we could not even make a guess at her face, not even when she kissed us, for she only raised the corner, and let it down again. She was timid, no doubt, as my mother had said.

"Come in, dear aunt, by the fire."

"You must both be half frozen."

"You are an hour later than we hoped you would be."

"Dear Uncle Jacob, let Tom take your coat." Civil things we said of that sort, and finally marshaled our three visitors to the fireside in the morning-room.

"Stir the fire well in Mrs. Jacob's bedroom before she goes up stairs," said my mother to the maid as she left the room, "and take up the spiced negus when I ring. It is a great preservative from cold, negus as we make it," said my mother, turning to our aunt in an explanatory manner.

"Thank you," said the veiled lady. Uncle Jacob in the mean time had taken the poker in hand, and was "mending the fire," as he called it, to such purpose that his yellow-bronze face became suffused with ardent crimson, and we kept moving our chairs backward half a foot at a time.

"Yes," he said, replying to my mother; "it was" (poke) "a most" (poke) "cold" (poke). "The roads were" (scrape of the lower bar) "like glass" (crash of the upper one), "and we crept along slowly."

Will she never lift her veil?" pondered I, and caught myself wandering off into musings about the "Veiled Lady" and "Bluebeard," and her cell, never drawn aside for human eyes to gaze behind. What if my uncle had been tempted by visions of enormous wealth to marry—say what? Before I had decided as to the sort of ugliness my aunt raised her veil, will I came back to everyday life.

She raised her veil, and we all looked at her. Nettie made some excuse and fled from the room, but I could hear her laughter at the end of the hall.

I think my mother was relieved by the severity, quiet face revealed. It was a Scotch face evidently, for the salient points of Scotch physiognomy was almost caricatured, but was very strongly pronounced. The high cheek-bones might have belonged to a Tartar.

"Are you warm enough to go up stairs?" my mother asked her, with a tremor of surprise in her gentle tones.

"You must speak out to her," said Uncle Jacob, with a curious quiver in the corner of his mouth.

"Out?" my mother asked.

"Yes," he replied again the quiver. "Janet!" and he moved closer to his wife, "Mary wants to know if you are ready to go up stairs!" He spoke in loudest tones.

"What?" she said, turning an ear as deaf as Dame Eleanor Sperring's. "Up stairs?"

"Yes, my dear, and take your things off?"

"Yes. I am ready, quite ready, thank you," and she turned to my mother and rose from her seat.

"Bring Miss Janet," my mother said aside to Janet, let me carry your cloak," she said, in a desperate voice, but Janet was evidently deaf indeed if not entirely till my mother had taken possession of that article.

"Uncle," said Tom, "I'll show you your dressing-room."

"What on earth can he have done it for?" whispered Tom as he passed me.

Jane and I left together, and Nettie came back when she heard them pass up stairs.

"Oh, Nettie, why did you laugh in the hall?" I asked.

"She wouldn't hear it," said Nettie, "and you know Uncle Jacob's always a little deaf."

"You will be getting us into a scrape, indeed, if you don't take care."

"Not I. Oh, what a bride!"

"She is an odd-looking creature," said Jane.

"Fifty at least."

"We shall be as hoarse as rooks with shouting to her, if she stays for a week," said Jane.

"What a sight the courtship must have been! Poor Uncle Jacob must have made love under difficulties indeed; the whole neighborhood must have been as wise as himself. How ever could he have managed it?" and Nettie burst into a fit of unconfinable laughter, in which we both joined. In the height of our merriment Aunt Janet entered the room, as we all she was so deaf, or she might have heard what would have vexed her.

My father explained the cause of my uncle's marriage to us in the evening after our guests had retired.

"She was Samuel Marten's only child," he began.

"His partner's?" said my mother.

"Yes. You will not be old enough than I saw daylight at once. Old Marten died in India over a year ago, and she came home."

"That was very brave," said Nettie. "I thought she had an Indian sort of look."

"Her fortune, of course, is very large, and not knowing quite what hands she might fall, he thought it would be well to marry her; and she, as a woman of sense, saw the wisdom of the step. Jacob has acted a very honorable part, no suit that remains is for us to be civil to her: she deserves it."

"Did he say any thing about her deafness, papa?"

"No, child. Why should he?"

"Did you?"

"Nonsense! What does it signify? He'll only lead the quieter life for it. A wife's tongue—Now Mary," said he, looking at my mother—"now, Mary, you know what I mean."

"I was not using any thing, dear," said my mother. She led my father in a chain of silk that was as strong as iron.

After a day or two Aunt Janet took up the habit of coming to the morning-room directly after breakfast, and spending the whole forenoon there. At first we were rather a silent party after she appeared. No matter how deaf your companion is, it is generally some time before you can cast off the mistaken idea that half of what you say is heard, and Aunt Janet had such a stern, grim look about her—unlike the patient, waiting look that deaf people usually acquire—that we were absurdly silent in her presence for a while.

Nettie broke the ice first, and made some remarks as to Aunt Janet's personal appearance; but when I started, and looked at the poor lady's face, it was evident that all sounds fell idly alike on those dead ears of hers. "Do you know I like her," said Nettie, abruptly, one morning, when my mother was engaged as to be more attentive. "Of course she's the greatest old fright that ever was born; but she is kindly and good-hearted, I am sure."

My mother looked pained. "Nettie, don't speak of your aunt so. Never mind her looks: she can not help them."

I suppose she can not, amanna, and yet a sort of instinct makes one remember that one's looks are.

"It isn't her face I mind," said Jane, who had taken a strong dislike to our aunt; "but her voice is dreadful. Her voice is the essence of calico, and sets my very teeth on edge." Our aunt was sitting knitting quietly by the fire all this time.

"She can't hear her voice," said my mother. "You should try and look at people's pleasant side, Jane."

"I don't think she has a pleasant side."

My mother made no answer, but turned and shouted a little of the morning news from the paper to amuse our aunt. Presently Tom entered.

"Nettie, look here; there is a great hole in my pocket. Will you sew it up for me?"

"Yes, and welcome. Please stand still—do stand still, Tom, dear—I am pricking my finger."

"How long is she going to stay?" asked Tom.

"As long as she pleases," my mother replied.

"How on earth do you manage to amuse such a living statue? I would not be one of you girls shut up in a room with her for another hour morning, for something. She would mesmerize me."

"You pain me, Tom, when you speak so. There is nothing attractive about the poor soul; but I am sure she is a very worthy person, and deserving of your respect," said my mother.

"What! for marrying the old gentleman?"

"Tom," said Nettie, "do you think that is Aunt Janet's hair, or a wig (in a confidential tone)?"

"A wig, to a certainty," Tom replied carelessly. "I can not bear it, Tom," said my mother; "you must really go out of the room. Come, Nettie, and show your aunt some of the water-colors. I dare say she likes looking at drawings."

"She looks like a judge," said across Jane.

Nettie went to the piano after a while and sang a ballad or two of Balfe's and Lindley's, sliding out of them into some Scotch airs, which she sang uncommonly well. I was surprised to see that uninterested face as Nettie sang, and thinking, with some pity, how great a privation hers was, when Uncle stirred the fire till the sparks flew about him, and a chance swept across the immobile face for an instant, as if she heard—at least, I mean that for a second I thought so, for as I looked the face was dull-deaf as ever.

"Poor thing!" said my mother. "How I wish she could hear those sweet Scotch airs!"

"I should not think it would make much difference to her," said Jane. "I don't suppose she is inclined to be musical."

Two or three days afterward my father came into the morning-room just before lunch, and, seeing Aunt Janet, my mother, Nettie and I seated to tell you—" he said to my mother.

"Tell me what, dear?"

Something that Jacob told me they are going on Thursday. He is getting lodged at being away from the office so long."

Janet spoke about going to me this morning."

"Well, I hope you have kept her amused. She must be conciliated at any price, for I shall not again join a party, though I hate the sight of her. I really can not enjoy my dinner in the least, shouting out as I must between every mouthful. But I am not to be helped."

"I like her," said my mother, "she is quiet and sensible," as my father moved back out of the door-way.

Thursday morning came, and our guests were to leave us. Uncle Jacob was unfeignedly glad in his manner to us all, telling Nettie and me that we must come and pay our aunt a visit in town after they moved into their new house.

"You shall see all that is to be seen, as your aunt means to keep a carriage," he said, kindly; "and we always wish a few friends to dine. I don't think we either of us felt inclined to venture on one new aunt's hospitality.

We all went up stairs with Aunt Janet to help her to dress herself in her wraps and furs. When she was dressed she sent the maid out of the room, observing to my mother that she was not that never gave wages money to servants.

"Nor to any body she can help," said Jane.

"There you are wrong," our aunt, looking round sharply on the unlucky Jane in an instant. "I act from principle in not giving to servants, not from greed."

"How ever did she hear me?" gasped Jane, in a lower tone, to me.

"As I hear other people," said my aunt, quietly. "Goodby, dear Mary" (and she turned to kiss my mother). "You have been very kind to me. I never expected you to think of my beauty, you never gave me credit for being 'kind-hearted and sensible'—I think that was it—and that is all I want from you. Be kind to Jacob. He is a better of you for having lived with you for three weeks in the palace of Truth."

"Why, Janet, then you're not deaf after all?"

But what she answered, or what my mother said after that, I don't know, for we beat a hasty retreat from the room. We could not bring ourselves to go down and say good-by when we heard my father and Tom shouting last words at the carriage-door. I do not think we broke silence for some minutes, till Nettie said: "We have done it now! How she must hate us!"

"For what?" said Tom, suddenly appearing. And then we told him all.

"You don't mean it!" And then he gave vent to his feelings in the language of slang.

What my father said on the subject we never knew, nor, indeed, guessed—for his face was a sealed book when he so pleased it—but no doubt his heart condemned him sufficiently.

"It was the meanest trick!" said Jane. "Impossible to defend ourselves against such low cunning."

"No, my dear, you might easily have been safe. I don't think it was quite fair of your aunt, though, and I shall write and tell her so."

A few days brought Aunt Janet's letter. "You must forgive me," she said. "I allow I was wrong—very wrong, if you will, but you do not understand all, you will allow that my temptation was strong to act as I did when you are. Some day I will tell you the story of my father's second wife, who happily died before him, and you will see that my fear of fortune-hunters was a natural one, after what I have suffered. Come up to town and see me, Mary, and let us talk it all over till you forgive me."

"You have saved us, mother, I do believe," said Tom. "She likes you well enough to smile on us all for your sake."

A letter came from Uncle Jacob next. "Bring the girls with you when you come, Mary," he said. "Don't let them be worried with their aunt for her whimsies—she has taken a fancy to your Nettie."

Nettie's naughtiness serves her as well as most people's goodness, and more. "Mother," she said, in a voice that seemed to think of that!" said he, handing it across.

The clerk paid him at once.

Fodder seems to be scarce in some parts of the country. A Maine paper states that a cow in that vicinity recently swallowed a piece of the stock sign. She managed to swallow a piece of the stock sign, but not being able to digest it, it worked through her stomach and penetrated her hide, and was found by the side of the animal. Be careful how they shed their skirts about so promiscuously.

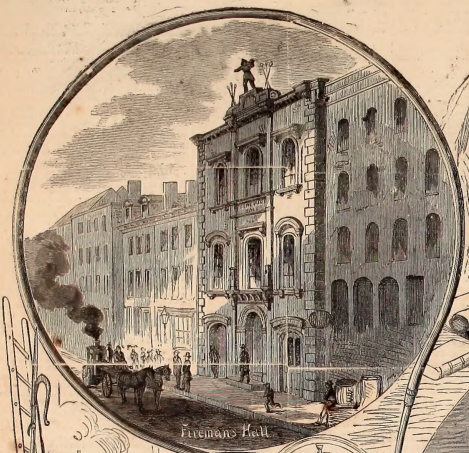
In a recent lecture on "Ireland and the Irish" it was said, as an evidence of the fact that the Irishman takes the world more easily than his neighbor, the thinks it is a great deal easier to sell a tub than to make a tub. And if you talk to him about the dilapidated condition of the house, and the pig in the corner, he says, "Sure I can't help it, and it's all right." As for the look in the eye, when the sun shines it doesn't need to be mended, and when it rains he don't carry it to the shop to be fixed. Isn't the brave story convincing that a pig could receive?

In that wretched pen at Andersonville the Irish editor turned his thoughts to journalism, and started a paper at Pinesburg, when the big cannon-balls were howling about the man's heads, it was an Irishman who exclaimed, "And now we have a paper, and have to refer them to a boarder!"

The Irish have always been noted for their original and characteristic way of saying things. Recently, at a party at Irish woman begging alms of him, when she saw him put his hand in his pocket, cried out, "May the blessed of God (that's how you all pray!)—God bless you!" He only pulled out his snuff-box, immediately added—"and never overtake you!"

A nobleman said to an Irish gentleman, "We have had a delightful rain: it will bring every thing out of the earth." "Good Lord, my Lord Lordship; I've three wives under it," was the reply."

An American lady went to London a while ago, and applied to a fashionable dressmaker. The dressmaker showed all the marks left on her face by the small-pox. She said in advance some fifty pounds, and received in return a bottle of "wonderful cream" which would remove them, which produced no effect. Not satisfied with the result she applied to the Police Court for redress; but all the lawyers' fees for troubles were not enough, since Madame Rachel refused to return the money, and had not succeeded in multiplying the lady's charms.



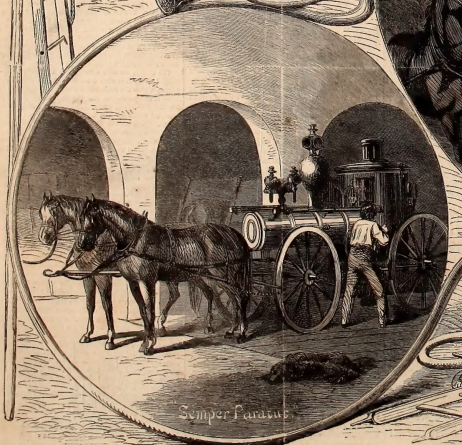
Every week appears to bring with it a new form of jacket, and as convenient as jackets found to be that many young ladies have preferred to wear during the winter. This plan is found to be very economical, as a model, with one good pattern, can make shirts; consequently, the extra outlay for a dressmaker can be dispensed with. It is so easy to buy two or three ready-made jackets which fit perfectly. The newest jackets are called Garibaldi jackets, and the patent velvet ones are used for indoors, while real skin and otter are fashionable out of doors. Very comfortable jackets for indoor wear are made of flannels, blue, and violet cashmere, bordered with either blue fur or chinchilla. White jackets are always ornamented with gold or silver braid.

The newest Parisian opera-cloaks are made either of white cloth or white silk, and are called "Watteau"—fabrics which are ribbed and woven with the most dazzling of colors. Striped blue and white plush, striped purple and white silk, and striped pink and white Lyons silks, all make up into the most magnificent of opera-cloaks. They are cut in the form of talmas, and many have large square sleeves and hoods lined with plain silk of the color which predominates in the opera-cloak; hundreds of yards of ribbon are being added to the hood, and also to the shoulder seams.

Brigham Young has had a new "revelation." He says it is "the will of the Lord" that sisters should make their own bonnets and hats for themselves and their families from straw and other materials which may be provided. Whether the next "revelation" will probably dictate the style in which they are to be made and worn. It is said that the prophet has had a bugbear of a row on his hands in lots to suit purchasers," which perhaps accounts for the straw-hat revelation.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, recently prosecuted a wretch for maliciously wounding a horse in a most cruel manner. The offender was ordered to be kept in penal servitude for five years. It would be simply humane to have a society in New York of a similar nature, that the abusers of your dumb beasts might be brought to justice.

The marriage of the Princess Anne Murat is assuming quite the form of a public event. Among the many attendees of every kind here for some time been engaged in copying recording the wonderful presents received as gifts of the bride. The marvelous contents of the corbeille de mariage, offered by the wealthy and esteemed friend, have excited the admiration of the whole world. The gratuity vigilance and activity on the part of the police have been necessary to protect them. The magnificent gifts include an Alençon lace dress, costing 30,000 francs, and a prayer-book worth 25,000 francs. It is, we believe, already known that the Emperor Napoleon has bestowed a gift of two millions of francs, besides a necklace worth half a million, and a parure of 150,000 francs. Some of the Princess's wealthy and aristocratic relatives, so far from being gratified at his obtaining a position on the fringe of a throne, complain that he is making a mésalliance.



THE CON

METRO
FIRE DE

C.C. Pinckney.
IONERS
Abbe.
Commissioner's Room.
Chas. L. Chapin, Sup. Telegraph.
the Fire
ITAN
RTMENT
At the Fire

OUR NEW FIRE DEPARTMENT.

OUR Fire Department is now as efficient as our Police Department. Within a year a most important revolution has been wrought, from which great benefits will accrue to the city. Our Legislature, last winter, passed a bill for the reorganization of our city Fire Department, doing away with the volunteer system and placing the Department on the same footing, as regards pay and discipline, with the Police Department. Three Commissioners were appointed by the Governor to carry out this law.

For a time there was considerable excitement, owing to the reluctance of the volunteer firemen to lay aside their time-honored order of things. But the law had its course, and for the benefit of all parties concerned it was agreed to take into the new organization such of the old firemen as were so disposed and were capable of performing satisfactorily the duties of their position.

The three Commissioners appointed Mr. ELISHA KINGSLAND Chief Engineer. The new Department was rapidly organized, and now there are thirty-two glass and tenders, and ten hook and ladder trucks built or under way. The engines are drawn by two horses instead of by hand as formerly. Another reform, which has been instituted more recently, is the almost complete substitution of telegraph signals for the ringing of alarm bells. The latter three together a crowd, which was always in the way of the firemen and led to much disorder in other ways.

The system of discipline under the new regime is admirable. At the engine-houses there is always a watchman outside, who is relieved every four hours, and whose duty it is to give the alarm in case of a fire in the neighborhood. Every man has his especial post of duty assigned him, and there is no delay in getting to work on the instant the alarm is given. The pay of the firemen is $700 per annum. His uniform is dark blue, with a silver button, and a cap shaped very much like the navy cap. In the lives of the engine-house, being usually unmarried.

The new Fire Department is less expensive than the old, and does not furnish an outlet for the unhealthy impulses of rowdies. Without fighting or blunder, it goes to work so promptly and efficiently that fires will soon be unable to advance beyond their limited range. The entire force of the new Department made a most favorable exhibition of its excellent features in a parade of December 28, when it passed in review before the Mayor and the Fire Commissioners.

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS,

Author of "BARBARA'S HISTORY," &c.

CHAPTER XCVI.

GONE!

STEADILY, sternly, William Trefalden went down the broad stone stairs and into the hall. Here the lamp, emerging from its dusky recess, would have passed a tree by the road-side, took his hat mechanically, and went out. At the gates he paused. The key was on the inside; but he fumbled with it confusedly, and could not turn the lock. The housekeeper, looking after him with a new and vague terror, called to Jacques to open the gates for Monsieur: whereupon Jacques, clattering across the yard in his sabots, came running with a lantern in hand, and turned the key in an instant.

Monsieur passed out into the lane, like a man in a dream, and, turning from the river steps, stood still and leaned against the wall. The wind blew fiercely, bringing heavy drops of rain with it every now and again; but of this he seemed unconscious. Then he went slowly down the lane and out upon the high road. To the right lay Beaucaire, only ten miles away: to the left bordering the road for some little distance on either side, but lying for the most part among the vines, was the vineyard, and the village.

He stopped, walked a few yards in this direction, a few yards in that, and then stopped again, feeling faint and stunned, and all unlike himself.

It was a case of cessation, mental and physical. He had gone through a terrible ordeal, and it had now begun to tell upon him, body and brain. Dimly conscious of this, he tried to collect his thoughts, and to consider what it was that he had wanted to do, and which way he should go next. Then he suddenly remembered that he had been travelling since noon, and had not dined that day. He would go to the auberge in the village, and there get some food and some lodging. He was all, some brandy. It would put life into him steady him; lift this weight from his brain, and restore him to himself.

Acting upon this instinct, he made his way to the "Lion d'Or." Two old peasants chatting over their half-bottle of red wine in a corner of the public room looked up as he came in; and the master of the house recognizing the English Monsieur who had once brought his lamp to shoe, her that night, left his game of dominos and rose respectfully. Did Monsieur desire to see his room? The room was quite ready, and he thought Monsieur would be content with it. Monsieur could have refreshment? Without doubt. Monsieur could have whatever refreshment he pleased—a cutlet, an omelet, a dish of ham, a fowl even, if Monsieur did not object to wait while it was cooked. Good; a cutlet—a cutlet, and some cognac. He had excellent cognac; Vieux Cognac, if Monsieur indeed preferred it to any other. Monsieur would be served immediately. The cutlet would not take five minutes to prepare. In the mean while would Monsieur be pleased to occupy this small table by the window.

William Trefalden dropped into the chair placed for him by the landlord, and there sat in a kind of stupor—his hat on, his elbows resting on the table, his chin supported on his hands. His hair and clothes were damp; his feet were deadly cold; his teeth chattered; but of all this he was wholly unconscious. He only knew that he felt crushed and paralyzed; that he wanted to think of something and had no power to do so; that the brandy would put him straight—the brandy! the brandy!

He called for it impatiently, and while the landlord went to fetch it fell to wondering again what the thing was that he failed so strangely to remember. Something that had happened to him. He seemed ever on the point of seizing it, and, failing to seize it, groped about in a kind of mental darkness that was altogether painful.

Then the brandy came—about a quarter of a pint in a tiny decanter, accompanied by a liqueur glass equally diminutive. He pushed the glass angrily aside, poured the whole of the spirit into a tumbler, and drank it at a draught. It went down his throat like fire; but he was no sooner swallowed it than the pressure on his brain was relieved. After a few moments he felt warmer, steadier. Then his thoughts cleared suddenly. He remembered all that had happened; and with memory came back the whole flood of rage, grief, and humiliation.

He knew now what the thought was—that vague thought which had so oppressed and eluded him a few minutes ago. It was vengeance.

Ay, vengeance. Bitter, deadly, terrible vengeance—vengeance swift and bloody! He told himself that he had it in his hand to take. He had it might. He would give his own life for it willingly, and count it cheaply purchased. The word recurred to him like a watchword. It set his pulse, tingled in his ears, mastered and took possession of him, like a fiend.

He knew that he had a plan his vengeance quickly. It must be planned, prepared, executed at once. The blow must fall as suddenly and fatally as that of the avenging angel. How was this to be done? With what weapon?

The landlord came bustling in with a pile of covered plates in his hands and a napkin under his arm. Monsieur's dinner. Monsieur would find that the cook had done her best at so sh'rt a notice. There was a delicate cutlet, with pommes frites, fried potatoes, and a dish of beans. The omelet would be ready for Monsieur as soon as Monsieur was ready for the cutlet.

But William Trefalden was in no state to do justice to the fare before him. He tasted the soup, and pushed it aside. He tried to taste the meat, but set the morsel down without putting it to his lips. The brandy had supplied him with a factitious strength, but had taken away his loathe the sight and smell of solid food. One thing he took, however, from the dinner-table—a knife.

He watched his moment and slipped it up his sleeve when no one was observing him. It was a short black-handled knife, with an edge on both sides—a knife that was to all intents and purposes a dagger.

This done, he rang impatiently for the landlord, bade him remove the dishes, and called for more brandy.

The landlord was distressed beyond measure. Was not the soup to Monsieur's taste? Were not the cutlets tender? Would not Monsieur permit him to bring him another dish? Would Monsieur finding himself ill? Would Monsieur choose a cup of tea? More cognac? Good. Monsieur should have it in a moment.

The cognac was brought, and he drank again eagerly; this time from a wine-glass. The cravings for it were insatiable. It roused the evil spirit, more fiery than strong; but it stimulated him; spurred him to his purpose; nerved his arm and quickened his brain. He felt that he was not intoxicated. He felt that he could drink a bottle of it without producing that effect. So he drank, and, as the landlord went out, he drank the fire coursed through his veins till at last he felt that he could sit there, brooding and silent, in safety.

He rose and went out hurriedly. The two old peasants shook their heads over their wine and looked after him. "Ah, ah!" they said, "was surely something strange about the man. Was he ill? Or mad? Or had he drank too much cognac? Bah! was he not an Englishman? and what is Englishmen, look you, mon ourein, drink cognac like water!"

The rain was now driving furiously before the wind, an sweeping down the road in great gusts before which the poplars moaned and shivered like living things. The night was pitch-dark, and of cooler air, and what with the fever in his blood, the lawyer rushed at first on meeting the air and rain, and could scarcely keep his feet. But this was only for a moment. He recovered himself instantly, and, fighting his way to the south of the storm, crept under the lee of the houses till he came to the side road leading to the Château de Peyrolles. He found it with difficulty, for the night was pitch-dark and the rain blinding. On the high-road where all was open it was yet possible to see a few feet ahead; but here, in the close lane, shut in by trees and high walls on both sides, he could only feel his way along like a blind man.

At length he came upon the gates. They were again locked upon the inside. He tried them—tried to slip his hand through the bars, and reach the key in the lock; but the bars were too close, and he could not get his fingers far enough. Then he stopped, clinging to the gate with both hands, and staring in. The darkness was so intense that he could not distinguish the outline of the house; but he could see a light burning in some of the rooms. One in an upper chamber especially fixed his attention. Was that window here?

Oh! the passion, the despair, the desperate longing that seized upon him at this thought! If he could but see her once again!—see her; speak to her; touch her hand; tell her how, though false to all the world besides, he had been true at least to her from first to last! He felt that he had never half told her how he loved her. He had never even kissed her—never once; for his respect had been as profound as his love, and he had not dared to claim the smallest privileges of a lover from one so young, so helpless, so bereaved. He felt now that he would give his soul to exchange for a single kiss from her lips. Poor! Good God! how he loved her! How his heart hungered for her!

He took the gates with all his might—strove to clamber over them—flung himself against them; but in vain. Then he pressed his face against the bars, and, in despair at the prison-gate, and, sobbing, called upon her name. But his voice was borne away by the wind, and the heavy rain drove in his face and mingled with his tears.

While he was yet clinging there in the darkness with his eyes fixed upon the upper window the light suddenly vanished. He had made so certain that it was her light and her window that the disappearance of that little spark fell upon him like a blow. He felt as if the last link were now broken between them—the last hope gone.

Almost at the same moment he saw a figure (carried apparently by an invisible hand) moving across the upper end of the court-yard. Again his heart leaped with a mad fury. Then the lantern paused—moved on—paused again, and at last came quickly toward him. Then the lantern held its light above his head with one hand, shaded his eyes with the other, and asked roughly—"Qui est là?"

It was JACQUES—the same Jacques who had let him out an hour or two before, and who, recognizing his voice, again unlocked the gates and opened them.

"Tiens!" said he. "They are all in bed là bas."

William Trefalden's heart leaped with fierce exultation.

"No matter," he replied. "My visit is to the gentleman. Tell me where he sleeps. That is ough."

"What gentleman, M'sieur?"

"He who came to-day with the English curé. Quick! Time presses, and my business is urgent."

"But the strange gentleman is no longer here. He went away about half an hour after Monsieur."

"Went away!"

"Yes, M'sieur—in a cabriolet with four horses, taking Monsieur le Curé and the young lady with him."

"Dog, it is a lie!—a lie, and you are paid to tell it! Give me the truth—the truth this instant, or I will kill you!"

And, half beside himself, the lawyer twisted his hands in the lad's collar as if he meant what he said.

"Ah, Monsieur!—for the love of God, Monsieur!—it is indeed the truth—if you kill me for it it is the truth!"

"Where is Madame Bouvier?"

"Gone to bed, M'sieur!"

"Then wake her! I must see her. If she were dying, I must see her. Do you hear?"

"Yes, M'sieur."

Trembling from head to foot, Jacques picked up the lantern which he had dropped in his extremity of terror, and led the way into the house. They went silently up the housekeeper's chamber, where William Trefalden thundered at the door as if he would bring it down. Madame Bouvier was not a heavy sleeper, well-night. She out of her wits, and wrapped in the counterpane of her bed.

It was quite true—undeniably true. The young Englishman was gone, and had taken mam'selle with him. They left about twenty minutes or half an hour after Monsieur's sudden departure. Madame Boussie believed they were gone to Bordeaux. Monsieur was free to search the house if he liked; he would soon be convinced; and that she, Madame Bouisse, was not deceiving him. They were gone.

Gone!

Without waiting to hear or utter another word he snatched the lantern from the boy's hand and rushed up stairs to visit, one by one, every room, floor, through empty rooms yet full of the evidences of recent occupation, down again, out into the garden, through the court-yard, shivering the lantern to fragments on the wet stones as he reached the gates! Then he paused, turned, and, with his hands in his darkness, heaped curses on the place, and raged against it impotently, like a madman.

Till now he had been comparatively calm. Busy with his scheme of vengeance, he had put restraint upon his words, and even to a certain degree upon his thoughts. But now—now he no longer attempted to curb the fire within—now the fiava-like of rage and hate welled up and overflowed, and bore him along, unresisting.

Gone!

Impelled by an instinct that seemed to take the place of sight, he ran down the lane and out upon the high-road. The "Lion d'Or" was now closed for the night; he battered fiercely at the door till it was opened. The landlord, sleepily obsequious, ventured to remark that Monsieur was back. But William Trefalden interrupted him at the first word.

"I must have a cabriolet and post-horses," he said. "At once—do you hear?"

The landlord shook his head.

"Mon Dieu, Monsieur!" he said, "the 'Lion d'Or' is not a post-house."

"But you have horses?"

"None, Monsieur."

"Then how can I get them? Quick—quick, for your life!"

"Nowhere in Droucy, Monsieur."

"But is there no farmer, no shop-keeper, no creature in the place who can be found to drive me to Bordeaux? I will pay any thing. Fool! do you understand?—Any thing!"

But the landlord only shrugged his shoulders and protested that not a soul in Drouny would be induced to undertake the job at such an hour, and in such weather.

The lawyer clenched his teeth, and stamped with rage.

"Then I must walk," he said. "Give me some brandy before I go."

The landlord held up his hands in feeble expostulation. Walk! Great heaven! Walk three leagues and a half in this terrible storm! Let Monsieur only listen to the rain—listen to the wind—look at the dirt in the road—consider! Besides, Monsieur was wet through already.

But Mr. Trefalden broke in with a fierce oath, and bade the man hold his peace and bring the brandy instantly.

Then he poured out half a tumblerful, drank it reckless, raging as a madman, at the table, and rushed out again into the storm.

He was now utterly beside himself—his brain reeling, his blood on fire, his whole frame throbbing with fever and fury. The landlord of the "Lion d'Or," thankful to be rid of him, shut and barred the door, and went straightway to bed, resolved not to admit him again under any circumstances. In the mean while he seemed to have lost all sense of his determination to go to Bordeaux, and went raving and gesticulating up and down the village, where all, except himself, were closely housed.

Thus pacing to and fro like a caged beast, he suddenly became aware of the approach of a travelling carriage. It came, thundering through the one straggling street of Drouay, with flaring lamps, steaming horses, splash and clatter of wheels, and the loud cracking of the postilion's whip. He ran to meet it—he shouted—he implored to be taken up—he would pay any price only to start upon the step, if they would let him! But the postilion took him for a beggar, and shook his whip at him; and the travelers inside, out of humanity to his wretched appearance, damp, and deafened by the rattle of their own wheels and the pelting of the rain upon the carriage-roof, paid no heed to his cries. He ran beside it, panting and shouting—tried to clutch at the traces, but, receiving a savage lash across the hands, fell back and made a desperate effort to spring up behind. But all in vain. He missed his hold; the carriage swept on, and left him there despairing.

Still, still he ran, fated, irresponsible, headlong—now stumbling among the sharp flints in the road—now getting up with bruised feet and bleeding—now pausing to take breath—now fancying he could still hear the retreating wheels; and so, frenzied, giddy, breathless, he ran on, his face and clothes disfigured with mud and rain, rushing blindly on again!

Each moment the storm increased and the wind rose higher, till at last it culminated in a terrific hurricane. Then the thunder came up in heavy peals, and the lightning burst over the plain in rapid flashes, and the wind tore up the vines by the roots, and whirled them wildly away, with all their straggling promises, into the sea. Yet still, urged forward by that fierce thirst which blood alone could slake, with murder in his heart and vengeance on his lips, William Trefalden ran—fell—struggled to his feet—staggered on again—fell again—and so for miles and miles!

Next morning early, when the storm-clouds were shifting off to the north-eastward but were with now and then a gleam of uncertain sunshine between, a party of peasant folk coming up from the way of Mondragon found the body of a man lying face downward in a pool by the road-side. His clothes, face, and hands were torn and bloodstained. He had been robbed of every thing, and in his waistcoat pocket a porte-monnaie full of bank-notes and napoleons. No letters, no cards, no token by which it might be known who he was or how he came by such a death. It might be a duel, or it might be murder. Who could discover upon the body. His very linen was unmarked.

The peasant folk—the folk laid this nameless corpse across one of their mules, and brought it charitably into the dead-house at Bordeaux. Here, lying there unclaimed for forty-eight hours, it was buried in the new cemetery beyond the walls, with a small black cross at the head of the grave, on which the only inscription was a row of numerals. His watch, his money, and his clothes were awarded by the préfet to the poor of the parish in which the body was found.

EPILOGUE.

THE world knows the Italian story by heart. How Garibaldi entered Naples, how Francis II. fled, how Victor Emanuel was King of Italy; how he cheated his enemies to the last, how he was to have gone, and went back to his soil-cake at Capera, are facts which need no recapitulation. Had one man lived but a few months —nay, a few weeks—longer, the whole might perchance have ended differently. Where we now read Florence we might have read Rome; roof for Regno d'Italia we might have printed stamp and minted coin, a word of broader significance and more antique glory. But the ideal Republic died with Giulio Colonna, and was buried in his tomb.

In the mean while Olimpia's life became a blank. Her father had been the very light of her inner world. Bred in his political faith, trained in his employ, accustomed to look up to him, to work with him, to share his most secret counsels, his schemes, his hopes, his fears, errors, and even his personal dangers, she seemed to lose the half of her own soul when he was snatched from her. Then came the sudden change of programme—a change to her so bewildering, so unworthy, so fatal! Mistrusting Sardinia and scorning the very name of a Constitutional Italy, Olimpia conceived that her father's memory was insulted in this compromise; and so, in the bitterness of her resentment and grief, withdrew herself altogether from the work in which her life had been spent. Avoiding all with whom she had labored and acted in time past, and keeping up no more than the merest thread of intercourse with even those whom she was used to call her friends, she then made her home at Chiswick, in the old house to which Saxon had succeeded her on the evening of their arrival in London. Here she lived solitary and apart, cherishing her sorrow, nursing the great scheme unachieved, and learning that hard lesson of patience which all enthusiasts have to learn in this world sooner or later.

Not thus Lord Castletown. Prosperous, too unprejudiced, and it may be added too sensible, to attach paramount importance to the mere shibboleth of a party, he welcomed the settlement of Italian affairs with a heartiness that he would perhaps scarcely have ventured to express very loudly in the presence of Colonna's daughter. Where she refused to recognise any vital difference between a Constitutional pronunciamento and a pure Despotism, he was far-sighted enough to look forward to that fit e and prosperous future which only dawning e n ow promised for the kingdom of Italy, nor was he slow to perceive that there might be be ne for himself in the turn that matters took in Italy. The Italian question this he solved, Italy would no longer need so much support from her well-wishers. With a liberal movement in the heart of the nation, a parliament to vote supplies, and an army to defend the national territory, the whole system of patriotic blackmail might be a special pleading of every description, must necessarily collapse. Olimpia would therefore no longer feel herself bound to sacrifice all to "the one who could do more for Italy" than himself. So the Earl loved and hoped on, and wisely bided his time.

Wisely, too, he applied himself in the mean while to the improvement of his own worldly position. Occupying his friend Saxon's vacant chambers in St. James's Street, he devoted himself to his parliamentary duties with a zeal that drew upon him the attention of one or two of the noble and influential personages. Having made a couple of really brilliant speeches during the spring session of 1861, and happening to be upon the spot when a man of ability and tact was needed at a moment's notice, he had the good fortune to be intrusted with a somewhat delicate and difficult mission to one of those petty German potentates who make up for very small territories by gigantic pretensions, and for a contemptuous amount of pride against a scanty revenue.

The Earl, as a matter of course, acquitted himself perfectly, and began thenceforth to be talked of among his elders as a "rising man. Then the Duke of Doncaster smiled graciously upon him, and several of the Cabinet Ministers did the same, and he was taught by them to their political inness: and the end of it all was, that just before the setting in of the long vacation, Germany was gold by Piccadilly. Lord of Castletowers, found himself inducted one fine morning into a very neat little vacancy in the Perquisite Office, with the very high and the salary heavy, and the chance of promotion considerable. Then, and not till then, he ventured to renew his suit to Olimpia Colonna.

The moment was favorable. A year of mourning had passed over her head, and the intensity of her grief which had been at first her only solace now began to weigh painfully upon her. She had had time to think of many things—time to see that some errors and native some hopes —time also to remember how long and well the Earl had loved her; how worthy he was of it, and the love that she could give him in return; how he had shed his blood for her Italy; and with what devotion he had performed the last sad duties of a son toward her father's ashes. Besides all this, her occupation was gone. She would no longer reproach herself for the fact, the simple reason that Italy was satisfied to rest a while upon her present gains, and preferred being left to settle her own affairs in a quiet constitutional way. The disaster at Aspromonte convinced Miss Colonna of this truth, and of the stability of the new régime. And over and above all these considerations Olimpia loved the Earl. She had loved him all along—even when she refused him; and now, after a whole year of trial, to be his wife before the ending of the year.

Secure in the consciousness of her splendid birth, Olimpia never dreamed for a moment that Lady Castletowers could be other than content and happy in this new alliance of their houses. The very proud Alethea Hamilton Fitzpoint would in this solitary instance have been prepared to sacrifice blood for gold—nay, would have actually recommended a Miss Hamilton with her two hundred and fifty thousand pounds more gladly than a portionless Colonna—was a possibility that could by no chance enter into the sphere of her calculations. So when Lady Castletowers came over to see her the next day in her humble Bloomsbury home, and kissed her on both cheeks, and said all the pretty and gracious things that the mother of her betrothed husband was bound to say under the circumstances, Lady Olimpia accepted it all in perfect faith, nor guessed a bitter disappointment lay hidden beneath that varnish of smiles and embraces. The Earl, having himself borne the brunt of her Ladyship's displeasure, was, it need scarcely be said, careful to keep his secret very cosy indeed.

In the mean while Saxon Trefalden had gone back to Switzerland; and there, despite the urgent remonstrances of those dear friends who missed his little dinners and his inexhaustible check-books, persistently remained. In vain did the Exechequin lift up its voice in despair; in vain did Blackwall lament and Richmond refuse to be comforted, and Italian prima donnas sigh for banquets and bracelets gone by. The boyish, laughing, Israelin millionaire was fairly gone, and declined to come back again. The sirens might sing; but Odysseus only stopped his ears and sailed by unheeding.

The Earl alone knew that he was married; but even the Earl knew no more. He felt it to be somewhat hard that his friend should neither have invited him to his wedding, nor how taken him in any way into his confidence upon so important a matter. He could not but be conscious, too, that there was something strange and secret about the whole proceeding. Why was he married? Was the bride pretty or plain? Rich or poor? Dark or fair? Gentle or simple? What could be her age? Where was she living? Nothing!

In reply to the first announcement of his friend's marriage, the Earl had ventured delicately to hint at the propriety of a visit to London. But Saxon limited his rejoinder to the fact that his wife was "an angel," Lord Castletowers naturally felt that the allotment was hardly so explicit as it might have been.

On all other points Saxon was frank and communicative as ever. He had every project before his friend as unreservedly in his letters as if they two had been sitting face to face over the fire in the smoking-room of Castletowers or leaning side by side in the moonlight over the taffrail of the Alboth. They were delightful letters, filled to overflowing with the kind of general detail: now telling of the new chateau, which was already in progress; now of the lodge just built at Castletowers for the use of the maide between Tamins and Thusis; now describing a national fête at Chur, or an entertainment at the Chateau Trefalden, and now again all about the cotton-mills which Saxon was erecting in the valley, or the enormous pasture tracts lately purchased, and the herds of cattle being imported to stock them; now giving a sketch of the design just received from the architect at Geneva for that chapel which the Right Worshipful Pastor Martin's heart had been set for the last thirty years—keeping the Earl constantly au courant, in fact, of every phase of Trefalden's busy and benevolent life among the simple people of his native canton.

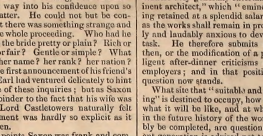
At length it was the Earl's turn to announce the happiness so shortly to be his; and then Saxon wrote to entreat that the newly-married pair might extend their wedding-tour as far as the Valley of Domleschg, and be his guests a while. "My wife," he said, "desires to know you, and my uncle loves you already for your sake. On your wedding-day you will receive a parcel of papers, which you must accept as a souvenir of your friend."

The "parcel of papers" proved to be the titledeeds of the two farms sold to Mr. Sloper, and the lease of the Dr. Bonner's land and grounds at Castletowers. The farms were worth from ten to twelve thousand pounds apiece, to say nothing of the "fancy" price which Saxon had paid for the wool-stapler's property. It was not a bad present, as presents go, and it made a rich addition to the Earl of Castletowers' estate. He little thought as he wrung Saxon's hand when they next met at Reichenau, that to the man who had presented him with this splendid property he owed not those farms alone, but Castletowers itself—Castletowers itself, with the ancestral oaks of which his forefathers had lived and died for centuries before him. That was the one secret which Saxon kept from his friend to the very last when, walking together under the apple-trees at the foot of the church-hill, he related the story of his early marriage, of his wife's death, and of the fate from which he had interposed to save Helen Riviere.

"And now," he said, "was how I came first to know her—how I came to love her—how I won her. I brought her home at once to the little chateau at Reichenau, and I locked her from the first moment, and she adored him. I was almost jealous—that is, I should have been jealous, if I hadn't loved her so much. When she had been living here for about a month or five weeks we came up one morning, all three together, to this little chapel on the hill, and my uncle married us. There was no one present but Kettli and the organ-blower. After my uncle had blessed us and the ceremony was over, we embraced and bade him adieu, and walked along the Thusis road till the carriole overtook us; and so I took my wife home. I went with her and no soul in Reichenau knew it till we were gone. We were so happy!"

"It is a delightful story," said the Earl, "and a pretty story; and the best part of it is that you and I are cousins, Saxon, after all!"

"Yes," replied Saxon, grasping his friend's hand in both his own, "it is not much to be only cousins when we have been brothers so long!"



A word remains to be added respecting the other moiety of the great Trefalden property. The money was, according to the will of the testator, was to be bestowed in the endowment of a great charity, chiefly for the benefit of the poor of Bloomsbury, Bournemile men, ship-brokers, stockbrokers, poor clergymen, and members of the legal and medical professions, and widows and orphans of each of those classes respectively. "For the accommodation of these widows and orphans, the will went on to direct that a pile of freehold ground should be purchased, and that "a suitable and substantial building" should be erected thereon under the superintendence of "some eminent architect;" and this building was to be called "THE LONDON BENEVOLENT TREFALDEN INSTITUTION."

It is delightful to know that all this will certainly be done—some day. The money fell due on the twenty-second of March, 1860, and the sum then transferred to the cr dit of the trustees amounted to just four million seven hundred and seventy-six thousand two hundred and odd pounds. Since that time the exertions of the Right Honorable the Lord Mayor and Corporation have been beyond all praise. To say that they have either thought much, or done much, up to the present date, would perhaps be premature; but they have eaten an incalculable number of dinners on the subject, which to the civic mind means precisely the same thing. At these dinners they generally entertain a certain "eminent architect," which "eminent architect," being retained at a splendid salary for just so long as the works shall remain in progress, is naturally and laudably anxious to devote his life to the task. He therefore rubbishes a plan now and then, or the modification of a plan, to the intelligent and discriminating criticisms of his honorable employers; and in that position the building question now stands.

What life and "suitable and substantial building" is destined to occupy, how much it will cost, what it will be like, and at what remote period in the future history of the world it may probably be completed, are questions which the present generation is advised not to consider too curiously. No intelligent and unprejudiced person can doubt, of course, that when the ground is bought, and the building is built, and the bills are all paid, the Trefalden Institution will exist, and the resident curator, clergyman, physician, secretary, housekeeper, and servants of the establishment are all appointed, and the splendor of the foundation, there will yet remain something for "DECAYED TRADESMEN, merchants, men, shipbrokers, stock-brokers, clergymen, and members of the legal and medical professions, as well as for the widows and orphans of each of those classes respectively." In any case, however, the claims of these insignificant persons will not have to be considered in our time; how, then, can we do better than eat, drink, and be merry, after the enlightened fashion of our honorable friends, the Trefalden Trustees, and leave the future to take care of itself?

THE END.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

NO WONDER MILK AND VICTUALS ARE SO DEAR.

THE CRIBB QUESTION.—"How's your cold?"

A Slicer of Charity in Paris has been educating children by taking in lodgers under his loaf-crumb.

Some journal of undoubted authority states that several new performers are about to be added to the orchestra. The new performers are expected to be considerable bores, but the movement undoubtedly originated in the recent "strike" of the musicians. Among those new performers are mentioned:

The man who fiddles with his watch-chain.

The man who harps on one string.

The man who blows his own trumpet.

The man who is up to the bones of a dilemma.

The man who knows the miracles of algebra and the triangles of Euclid.

The man who flogs the chorage.

The man who drums on the table.

The man who "has a bone to pick."

Several artistes (in spectacles) with their musical glasses.

Scores of gentlemen who have refused, because they all wanted to play the first fiddle; and a chorus could easily have been formed of those who play second fiddle.

N.B.—The lady violinist will appear in intestrings.

It is rumored that a gentleman in fair and regular standing in one of our fashionable city churches entered one of our leading clothing establishments one day last week, and the following conversation ensued:

"Have you Dolphin's song? I want to get a copy."

"No—o," said the salesman, not being able to recollect at the moment whether he had ever heard of the tune: "No; I was afraid not."

"Well, I'll call at another, drawing on his kid; "perhaps it isn't out yet. Our rector spoke of it last Sunday as a production of great genius and beauty, and I want my daughter to learn it."

The simplicity of that gravity he could command, regretted that they had no copies in yet; and the customer left just in time to see the tail-feathers of the bookkeeper, as the desk behind the green curtain.

The rain has one disreputable fault; it is an eavesdropper.

The man who "took a walk" the other day brought it back again; but the next day he took a ride and has not been heard from.

AFRICAN GEOLOGICAL RESEARCH.—While Bob was in the ark, for forty days and nights it was quite dark, and Mrs. Noah said she was tired of being only in the dark, and Bob, having presented an unusual object in the head-gear line, and as the dove of the ark was continually out, he was sent by the rest of the crew. Mrs. Noah's unfailing reply was, "What will you bring?" and as each in turn went out, when the ark struck ground, she put her head out of the door and said, "Is this Ar-arat?" And the ingenious son, and is to this day, that it is very much like it.

A young widow, on being asked why she was going to get married so soon after the death of her first husband, replied, "I do it to prevent fraising myself to death on account of dear Tom."

What is the worst seat a man can sit on?—Self-conceit.

Babies resemble wheat in many respects. Firstly, neither are good for much till they arrive at maturity; secondly, both are fed on bottles, horses, and we; thirdly, both are in the family; thirdly, both have to be sentled; fourthly, both are generally well thrashed before they are done with.

EPITAPH ON A PORTRAIT-PAINTER.—Taken from life.

Why is an eruptive disease an advantage to a man in jail?—Because when he gets it he breaks out.

A widow, who had just lost her husband, was weeping bitterly for the departed. A friend tried to console her. "No, no," said the fair mourner, "all we have my sty only that I shan't think my living single long."

Who was the first jockey?—Adam, for he was the Father of the Race.

A bachelor and a young lady bought some tickets in partnership in a lottery at the recent Fancy Fair at Mile Stanken, agreeing to divide the proceeds equitably. They drew a double bedstead, a baby-jumper, and a lunch-basket, and the question is, how to divide them, or whether they shall not tie them "Hanky"?

There is a good deal of the brute in man. For example, he is generally ready to drown a puppy-dog, a mischievous predilection, and easily cure cat; occasionally eat-gorge, and is nearly ready to do such things as he likes.

CONSOLATORY.—"Which of these coals leads to the village of W——?" inquired a traveller, as he came to a place where the road he was on forked in different directions. "Why, I'm afraid I can't tell you," said the countryman, scratching his head, "for I've never been there myself." "Any one on 'em, Sir," answered the boy. "Which is the best, my lad?" replied the traveller. "Ah! I don't very one on 'em the best." "Which is the nearest?" "Ah! much different." "Which do you think I had better take?" "You may take any on 'em: and-a-the you get half-way you'll wish you'd never had back t'other one."

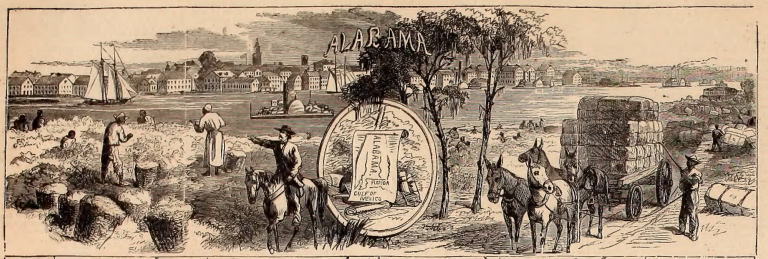
HIERO-GENS.—Designing mammas.

Some gentlemen were in a tavern, and at the height of their jollity in came a friend of theirs, whose name was Solomon. "Ah," said one, "you may now be sensibly merry, seeing neither sergeant nor bailiff, for, though accused not only Solomon, yet wise, and fortified by five thou-sand pounds a-year, there is Solomon, who is able to thwm them all." "Sir," replied he, "I may lawfully venture on so many as you speak of, provided you have not one of your last names."

Sir Walter Scott once had an Irishman working for him, who was a great drunkard, and who often neglected the work Sir Walter had given him to do. Complaints of this engaged in his literary labor, were was brought him that his man had returned home in a very bad state. Sir Walter dashed his pen down on his desk, and in great anger ordered the man to be sent to him immediately. He was. He entered, like bumbleness personified, and Sir Walter poured out the vials of wrath.

"You outlandish fog!" said he; "here I have been waiting up all day for you, and finding you are free from thine to time; yet to sooner are you in good grace than you take advantage of your liberty. How is this, Sir; how we meet sirs?"

"Well, said the gentleman from Ireland, "if we must part, I am very sorry, and hope no ill will happen yez; but, may I ask, where are you going to?" He got another trial.



A curious law case has been tried in France, to discover who was the rightful owner of a will. Swearing to a resignation were going on about the matter, to a lengthy extent, when the judge, considering that the will in this is all about a little water. What can a matter so very much, that you should both put yourselves to all this trouble and expense about it?" Monsieur," replied one of the advocates, "style," The plaintiff was by of them, wine-merchants. The value and significance were seen at once, and created a roar of laughter.

WHY NOT, INDEED?—We have already a female doctor, why not have a female druggist? And if so, why not call her Ipecacu-Hannah?

A gentleman having occasion to call on a solicitor, found him in his office, when a man in a red coat called on the great host of the apartment, and said "It was not as an owner, but as a tenant to be," replied the lawyer, "for he here I make my bread."

GENERAL JOSE M. J. CARVAJAL.

GENERAL JOSE M. J. CARVAJAL, the Special Commissioner of the Republic of Mexico to the United States, was born at San Antonio, Texas, in the year 1809. He was educated in Western Virginia, under the tutorship of Father Lorenzo Campbell, President of Bethany College. Since his return from the United States to Mexico, at the age of twenty-two years, he has been actively engaged in the service of his country, holding many important military and civil positions, all of which have been in the service of republican institutions. In 1851, after having for a number of years filled many prominent and responsible offices, which had gained for him the esteem and confidence of his countrymen, he proclaimed himself as wholly in favor of republican institutions, as opposed to the system of military despotism then prevailing in Mexico—which movement in favor of republican institutions was successful in the end. In the period, and is now the ruling sentiment of the population in every Mexican State. He has always associated himself, in his political movements, with the great idea of his life — the establishment of liberal institutions, civil and religious liberty, and a republican form of government for Mexico. In 1864 he was sent by the Republican (JUAREZ) Government of Mexico, in recognition of his ability and long service to the cause of liberty, as Special Commissioner to the United States, to seek aid for his oppressed and suffering countrymen. While here he attended to the duties of his mission, and personal friends, and he has succeeded in creating in the American people a great sympathy for his cause. An agent for his Government has been appointed, with an American banking house for the sale of the bonds of the Republic of Mexico, which meet with universal favor. The public and private character is such as to win the esteem and confidence of every one with whom he comes in contact; and it is hoped that he will return bearing to his Government the fruits of his long and faithful efforts, in material aid, such as may speedily enable the Republic of Mexico to rid herself of her enemies. Having received his early education in an American college he has become thoroughly imbued with American character; and as he speaks fluently the English language, is particularly qualified to discharge, with credit to himself and his Government, the arduous duties of his responsible position. General CARVAJAL is the Military Governor of the States of Tamaulipas and San Luis Potosi, and commander of the military forces within the limits of those States. It is gratifying to know that his efforts in behalf of his people are meeting with great success, and that a lively interest is being taken by the American people in behalf of his oppressed and struggling countrymen.

MAP OF ALABAMA
SCALE OF MILES
0 10 20 30 40 50 60

ALABAMA.

ALABAMA lies between latitude 21° 10′ and 35° north, and 84° 53′ and 88° 31′ west longitude from Greenwich. Mean annual temperature ranges from 60° to 70° Fahr. Area 50,722 square miles, of which, in 1860, 6,383,724 acres were in improved farms, and 12,716,821 acres unimproved farms, together valued at $175,821,622; value of farming implements, machinery, etc., $7,433,178.

The population in 1860 amounted to 964,201, of which 525,481 were white, 2,690 free colored, and 435,689 slaves. The following table shows the white, free colored, slave (black and mulatto), and aggregate population of each county, and also the number of bales of cotton produced:

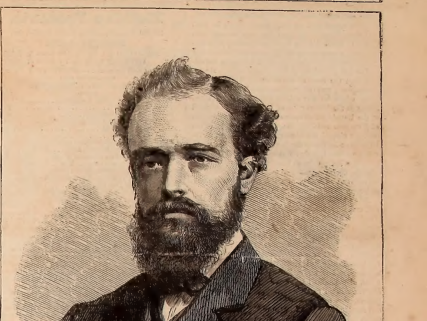
COUNTIES.	Whites.	Free Colored.	Slaves. Black.	Slaves. Mulatto.	Aggregate.	Cotton Bales of 400 lbs. each.
Autauga	7,118	14	8,391	916	16,439	1,329
Baldwin	5,030	140	3,426	979	9,575	2,175
Barbour	14,629	13	18,943	10	33,812	4,705
Bibb	8,040	5	3,761	178	11,984	1,307
Blount	10,231	6	933	159	10,859	1,071
Butler	11,709	44	6,491	49	18,293	3,039
Calhoun	17,151	18	5,49	473	1,509	11,273
Chambers	11,015	10	10,791	857	23,3 4	3,870
Cherokee	15,121	37	2,207	395	18,260	1,0 9
Chestor	6,797	19	6,854	69	13,739	1,732
Clarke	7,959	14	6,665	771	15,409	1,829
Coffee	3,109	6	1,74	173	5,033	578
Cusenah	6,4 9	10	4,182	696	11,311	6,956
Cosea	14,459	11	4,8 2	38	19,329	13,709
Covington	3,641	17	546	73	4,277	1,761
Dale	4,313	14	1,017	1	5,345	1,830
Dallas	7,83	86	23,5 6	1,755	33,031	63,410
De Kalb	5,953	4	67	103	10,705	1,468
Fayette	11,143	2	1,4 3	781	13,7 5	3,4 7
Franklin	10,179	13	7,983	807	18,982	17,870
Greene	7,376	19	23,683	1,010	32,853	37,805
Henry	10,414	31	9,934	479	18,7 8	13,911
Jackson	14,811	17	5,631	7 8	19,283	1,7 1
Jefferson	9,075	19	5,2 8	151	14,746	4,7 41
Lauderdale	13,63	46	5,7 0	731	17,4 0	10, 31
Lowndes	7,171	14	9,12	670	17,975	11,050
Limestone	7,2 1	6	7,3 1	704	15, 6	15,1 0
Lowndes	8,3 3	14	17,8 1	1,3 1	27,7 8	30,664
Macon	8,6 5	1	1,6 6	43	26,8 7	41,1 9
Madison	11,688	122	12,6 0	1,7 7	25,4 1	21,1 5
Marengo	6,7 1	1	23,6 3	77	31,1 1	62, 25
Marion	8,3 4	5	1,6 1	58	11,1 1	4,3 6
Marshall	7,6 0	5	1,51	370	11,4 2	4,0 1
Mobile	28,3 3	1,1 5	9,1 0	2,2 4	41,1 8	440
Monroe	6,0 6	46	7,5 0	1,1 7	15,6 0	13,2 4
Montgomery	17,1 4	76	23,4 1	1,5 7	39,9 2	29,8 0
Morgan	7,5 2	31	3,2 0	40	11,3 8	3,3 6
Perry	9,47	23	16,3 9	1,2 6	27,1 4	15,6 7
Pickens	10,117	8	11,6 6	5 6	22,1 7	28,5 3
Pike	13,6 6	6	9,1 4	9 1	24,4 3	24,7 7
Randolph	10,12	23	1,5 7	3	24,4 3	6,4 7
Russell	10,5 6	18	14,2 6	1,2 8	26,5 2	28,7 8
St. Clair	9,3 6	9	3,3 3	77	12,6 5	4,2 9
Shelby	8,7 6	30	5,1 3	42	13,9 1	4,6 6
Sumter	8,9 9	28	17,1 8	91	26,2 5	36,8 4
Talladega	11,6 2	21	8,3 1	344	23,3 8	18,3 1
Tallapoosa	11,4 1	6	6,1 4	84	18,3 5	11,3 7
Tuscaloosa	12,7 1	84	9,1 7	948	23,2 0	20,6 5
Walker	3,6 0	4	3,3 1	68	7,0 3	2,7 6
Washington	2,1 7	80	2,3 1	103	4,6 1	3,4 1
Wilcox	6,7 5	30	16,3	9 6	24,0 4	45,7 0
Watson	3,4 4		53	39	3,5 6	3 2
Total	525,481	2,690	435,080	33,609	964,201	578,1 7

Surface.—Bordering the Gulf shore, and for some distance in the interior, is a low sandy region, covered for in the with pines. The central portion has an undulating surface, with a deep fertile soil, especially the lands bordering the rivers and streams. The northwest portion of the State is traversed by the Alleghany range, which, in crossing the State, merges into a series of low hills, forming the watershed between the Tennessee River on the north and the Alabama and Tombigbee rivers on the south. About two-thirds of the surface is drained by the Mobile River, which is formed by the junction of the Alabama and Tombigbee rivers. Both of these streams are navigable for steamboats far inland. The Chat ahoochee flows along its eastern border for a distance of 150 miles, and is navigable from the Gulf of Mexico to Columbus, Georgia. The Choctawhatchee, Escambia, and Perdido rivers are the only other streams of note flowing south. Tennessee River enters the State at its northeast corner, passes across the State, and returns into Tennessee at the northwest corner. This river is navigable (except a small portion at the Muscle Shoals) far to the northeast in Tennessee. Mobile Bay, 35 miles in extent, is one of the largest of the inlets of the Gulf of Mexico. This State has a coast line of about 60 miles along the Gulf of Mexico.

Alabama is eminently an agricultural State, and produces largely cotton, Indian corn, wheat, oats, etc. The grain crops, according to the census of 1860, were, wheat, 1,218,444 bushels produced; rye, 72,457; Indian corn, 33,224,282; barley, 15,183; buckwheat, 1847; oats, 682,128; rice, 493,445 pounds. Other productions are: peas and beans, 1,482,995 bushels; Irish potatoes, 491,551; sweet-potatoes, 5,439,917; tobacco, 252,014 pounds; wool, 775,117; cotton, 989,095 bales of 400 pounds each; and there were mad, 18,257 gallons of wine, butter, 6,628,473 pounds; cheese, 15,823; sugar, 173 hogsheads of 1000 pounds each; molasses, 80,113 gallons, sorghum molasses, 55,653; honey, 1,189,973 pounds; hay, 62,211 tons. Value of homemade manufactures, $1,817,529. The live-stock at the same period consisted of horses, 127,663; asses and mules, 111,687; milch cows, 230,337; working oxen, 88,236; other cat le, 454,543; sheep, 370,176, swine, 1,746,221. Value of live-stock, $13,411,711. Value of animals slaughtered, $10,237,131.

Manufactures, etc.—There were, in 1860, 1430 establishments of industry, with a cap. of $9,098,181 invested in real and personal estate in the business. Value of raw material used, $5,489,965; 6792 males and 1097 females employed; and the value of annual product was $10,598,536. The assessed value of real estate in 1860 was $255,034,080, and of personal property $277,164,673. The total length of railroads in operation in 1860 was 743 miles, the cost of construction of which amounted to $17,501,188.

Common Schools.—A system of public instruction was established in 1854. The number of children, in 1858, between six and twenty-one years of age, was 178,695. The returns show in the summer of 1858 the existence of 2297 schools. This does not include Mobile County, which has a separate and independent school system. The amount paid for free public schools in 1859–'60 was $271,380.

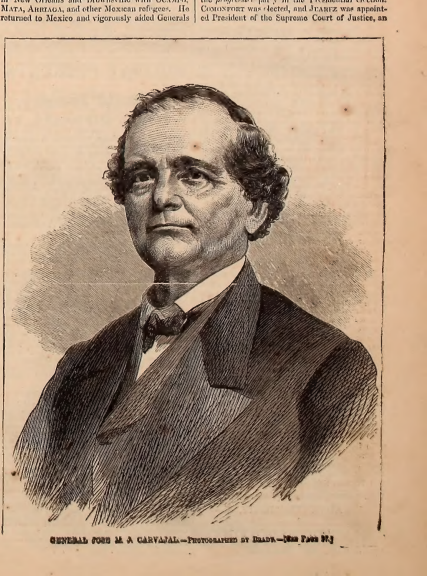


PRESIDENT JUAREZ.

BENITO JUAREZ, the President of Mexico, was born in the year 1803, in Ixtan, an Indian village in the State of OAXACA. He received his education in the city of OAXACA, studied law and began his practice with great success. He was a professor in the college of the State, and soon became the President of the Literary Institute, improving the instruction of the students, and establishing new classes of natural sciences.

He began his political career in the Legislature of his native State, and afterward was sent to the House of Representatives and to the Senate of the Republic of Mexico, where he always voted with the pure, or progressive party, being among the antagonists of the privileged classes and religious intolerance.

He was elected Governor of OAXACA in 1845 and instituted great improvements, establishing schools in every village, opening new roads, and acquiring a great reputation for his administrative capacity. He was among the last who sustained the liberal institutions and who resisted the dictatorship of SANTA ANNA. When this man established his tyrannical government JUAREZ was exiled and resided in New Orleans and Brownsville with ORDAZO, MATA, ARRIAGA, and other Mexican refugees. He returned to Mexico and vigorously aided GENERALS COMONFORT and ALTAREZ in the revolution against SANTA ANNA.



When the Liberals vanquished SANTA ANNA, and ALVAREZ was elected President, JUAREZ was appointed Secretary of State for the Department of Justice, Ecclesiastic Affairs, and Public Instructions. He then issued the famous law called the Juarez Law, which abolished the military and ecclesiastic privileges, and established for the first time in Mexico the perfect equality of citizens before the law. He was afterward elected Governor of the State of OAXACA, and was the candidate of the progressive party in the Presidential election. COMONFORT was elected, and JUAREZ was appointed President of the Supreme Court of Justice, an office equivalent to that of Vice-President. Comment called him to his cabinet, where he took the Home Department until the coup d'état of Convenar, overthrowing the Constitution, and proclaiming a new dictatorship. JUAREZ left the city of Mexico and resumed the executive power according to the provisions of the Constitution. He established the seat of Government at Queretaro, Guanajuato, and Guadalajara, and, finally, at Vera Cruz, where he was acknowledged by the United States as the lawful ruler of Mexico. The Capital of the Republic and some cities were in possession of MIRAMON and ZULOAGA, but the majority of the country obeyed the Government of JUAREZ. At Vera Cruz he issued the laws called the "Law of Reform," establishing religious liberty and the most complete independence between the State and the Church, declaring the real estate of the clergy to be national property, establishing civil marriage, and suppressing the Convents of Friars.

MATIAS ROMERO, MEXICAN MINISTER TO WASHINGTON.—PHOT. BY FREDERICKS & CO.—[SEE PAGE 30.]

BENITO JUAREZ, PRESIDENT OF MEXICO.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

GENERAL PORFIRIO DIAZ, A CARVAJAL.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.—[SEE PAGE 30.]

After three years of struggle he re-entered the national Capital and was recognized as the lawful President by England, France, Prussia, etc. He organized his Cabinet with ZARCO, ALTAMIRE, PRIETO, and GONZALEZ ORTEGA, and convoked a new Congress, who issued the law for the new Presidential election. JUAREZ was re-elected and re-established the Constitution. His Cabinet has had many modifications, and GEZMAN, ZAMARRIA, ROMERO, ROMERO RUBIO, and LERDO have been Secretaries of State. JUAREZ refused to yield to the claims of European powers, was nearly recognized by France, Spain, and England, but it was agreed by the preliminaries of La Soledad to settle the claims in a diplomatic conference which was to be held in London. The French pleniopotentiaries violated the agreement, England and Spain disapproved such an outrage to the law of nations, and withdrew from the tripartite expedition. War began, and JUAREZ has ever sustained the flag of his country. The seat of his Government has been removed from Mexico to San Luis Potosi, Monterey, and Chihuahua. JUAREZ was recently at El Paso del Norte, on the bank of the Rio Grande. The Congress of the United States of Columbia has declared that JUAREZ has deserved well of America by his constancy and energy in defending the independence of Mexico, and has considered that his portrait may be honorably placed in the National Library of Bogota.

His Government is recognized by all countries of America except Brazil. JUAREZ is an honest man. He professes republican principles, and has been rightness in the fulfillment of his duties. He is generally esteemed and respected even by his enemies, who acknowledge the honesty of his character and the excellences of his government. The ministers are Mr. LERDO DE TEJADA for Foreign and Interior Affairs, and Mr. ULLOAS for the Treasury and Judicial Department. The proceeding of the war the President was invested by Congress with extraordinary powers, and he is therefore fully authorized to levy many, and even all the internal territory, to change the form of Republican Government, to interfere in judicial matters, and to accept foreign intervention in the domestic affairs of Mexico.

MATIAS ROMERO.

MR. MATIAS ROMERO is a native of the State of OAXACA, and has not yet reached his thirtieth year. He studied law, and is a lawyer admitted in the courts of the City of Mexico.

He was a Secretary of President JUAREZ when the latter was appointed Minister of the Interior Affairs, and afterward was employed in the Department of the Secretary of State, following the Constitutional Government to Vera Cruz.

He came to the United States as Second Secretary of the Mexican Legation under Minister MATA. When Mr. MATA returned to MEXICO ROMERO remained as "Charge d'Affaires" and ever since reclaimed the legation, and went to San Luis Potosi, demanding service in the army against the French, and fulfilled many commissions of the Government. When General DUBLADO found a new Cabinet in San Luis Potosi Mr. ROMERO was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States, and was received in that capacity by President LINCOLN. Mr. ROMERO has been able to maintain friendly relations with the American Government, and has represented his country in a worthy and honorable manner, and without fear, in the cause of Mexican Independence.

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY buying any of the numerous worthless articles called Soaps, but use which have flooded the market for the last few years, when at lower prices you can get pure which are acknowledged to be the finest in the world.

Avoid the shameless Upstarts, whose lack of brains compels them to attempt IMITATION, even to the advertisements. If you want the full value of your money, call on A. MORTON, 25 Maiden Lane, New York, or inclose stamp for circular.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE has received universal inforsement. No other preparation possesses such remarkable properties for establishing and strengthening the hair, and rendering it dark and glossy. It cures baldness and eradicates dandruff. It has stood the test of time and competition.

TO LADY READERS.—An entirely new method of learning French cheaply, quickly, easily, thoroughly, and to speak it fluently in three months, by DR. H. CARLOS, Linguist and Professor of Literature, 229 East Fifty-second Street.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

144 COMIC VALENTINES

Mailed free on receipt of $1. R. W. HITCHCOCK, 14 Chambers st., New York. Circulars free.

Holiday Presents

100,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c. &c.

Worth $500,000!

TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,

AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$175 00
100 Gold Watches	70 00
200 Solid Gold Watches	50 00
600 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	18 00
1000 Breaking Castors	$25 00 to 40 00
3500 Drinking-Cups	7 00 to 10 00
3500 Oval and Octagon Gold Breastpins	5 00 to 10 00
3000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 00 to 10 00
3000 Gold Lockets and Sleeve-Buttons	5 00 to 8 00
8 00 Magic Spring and Snap Lockets	4 00 to 10 00
5000 Gold Pens, Silver-mounted Holders to suit.	3 00 to 5 00
100 0 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases	4 00 to 6 00
8000 Sets Jewelry	2 00 to 10 00
5000 Tea, Dessert, & Table Spoons, per doz.	12 00 to 24 00
5000 Dessert and Table Forks, per doz	10 00 to 24 00
4000 Butter Knives, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
4000 Napkin Rings, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
21000 Other Articles	4 00 to 10 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up and mixed, and, when ordered, are sent out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. Any of those envelopes will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents; 5 for $1; eleven for $2; 32 for $5; 60 for $10; and 100 for $15.

Agents wanted every where. Great inducements to Jobbers and parties to act as agents. Any one can be a retailer, which gives special terms, full list, and particulars. Address J. H. WINFIELD & CO., 598 Broadway, N. Y. (ESTABLISHED 1850.)

S—T—1860—X.

Drake's Plantation Bitters.

They purify, strengthen, and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are a mild tonic, entirely free of water and diet.
They overcome the effects of dissipation and late hours.
They strengthen the system and prevent fevers.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and clear off sick stomach.
They cure dyspepsia and constipation.
They cure diarrhœa, dysentery, and bowels-morbus.
They cure liver complaint and nervous headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are calculated to prolong existence. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Gulian Weed, Orange, Gentian, Cinchona, and Calisaya, and are of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day, particularly recommended to persons of sedentary habits, needs stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels, and Saloons. Principal depot, corner of Spring st. and Sylvester U. S. stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

F. T. DRAKE,
21 Park Row, New York.

In those cases of scanty, retarded growth (the most common after 18), the Balsam of the famous Seneca Snake has been found to excite the Beard, Moustache, and Whiskers to a luxuriant growth. (See Testimonials.) The History and a small Sample of this valuable and unfailing Balm sent free. Address
JOHN RAWLINS, 810 Broadway, New York.

OCCUPATION

At your own Homes. Thousands can realize a hundred dollars a week. No utensils required except those found in every household. Profits immense. Particulars sent free on application. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of stamp. Address at once
HOPKINS & BROWN, 641 Broadway, New York.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Splendid Jewelry, Watches, Diamonds, &c.

The house of BOSANQUET, GIRAUD, & CO., Paris, have the pleasure of announcing that they have opened a branch in the City of New York for the sale of their articles Jewelry, Watches, &c., and for the purpose of giving the greatest facilities to the numerous parties located in the United States as they now are, and have determined not to Import, in Europe, they have arranged on a plan by which poor and rich alike may have the advantage of buying splendid articles at a moderate rate, such as their manufacture and sell NO IMITATION JEWELRY OF ANY KIND.

All are Warranted Gold of the Finest Workmanship.

Our customers will also have the great advantage of a constant examination of our goods and prices, on the terms with which we shall keep our New York Agency open for sales.

We have adopted the plan of sale, now so popular, of giving a uniform price, which is always low, for example, be $2 for each article, no matter how costly it may be. The articles are then numbered at the Agency and paid by the sale of Certificates, or Coupons, representing the various articles. Thus, for example, for one dollar each, or five for $5, and each Certificate will show the article to be delivered after the party has paid the full payment of an additional $2. If the article named on the Certificate is not worth $10 more than the sum he may have to cause the Certificate, by stating what other article of the same value he or she may prefer, and it will be sent with pleasure. Our aim is to please, and every means to that end will be exerted. Circulars will be sent to those who reads this notice, as we are confident of giving the most satisfaction.

THE STOCK COMPRISES

Among other articles splendid Clocks, Gold and Silver Watches, Rings set with Diamonds, Rubies, Pearls, Garnet and other Stones ooldnars and in clusters; a Complete assortment of Jewelry, comprising Pins and Ear-rings of the most fashionable styles, Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains of every variety, together with a large assortment of Gold, Enamelled, and Pearl Lockets, of Shade and Sleeve Buttons of the most beautiful patterns. Genin' Bosom and Scarf Pins, and an endless variety of Fancy Articles, comprising Portmonnaies, Pocketbooks, Combs, Canes, &c. In case any of our patrons are not in want of articles of Jewelry, and would prefer Silverware, we will send, for any Certificate returned to us, a richly-engraved Tea Set, Dessert Set, Dinner Set, beautifully chased and plated.

Agents are wanted in every part of the United States and Provinces, and in all such very liberal inducements will be offered. Any one desiring to act as agent will also be forwarded. We prefer money sent to Post-Office Orders may be sent to Messrs. DREXEL & CO., New York, to our order. Address all orders to our agency, which will be conducted by Messrs. JAQUET, STERLING, & CO., 139 Broadway, New York City.

EMBALMING.

French process only perfect one extant, and guaranteed. The features by this process become more natural than otherwise. The body never decays. Funeral arrangements pointed and carried out in the most satisfactory manner. Livery grounds. THOMAS JUDGAN, Embalmer and Furnishing Undertaker, office northeast cor. Broadway and 10th St., Gilsey Building, entrance on 10th St., New York.

THE ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.

S. R. WELLS, EDITOR.

"THE HUMAN FACE DIVINE."—A New System of Physiognomy. Eyes, Nose, Lips, Mouth, Head, Hair, Eyebrows, Hands, Feet, Skin, Complexion, with all "Signs of Character, and How to Read Them" given.

The Study of Man, in all his Relations; Physiology, Intellectuality, Morality, and Society.

Phrenology; or, The Natural History of Man, including the Manners, Customs, Religion, and Modes of Life in different Nations, given in the Journal.

Physiology, The Laws of Life, Dietetics, Exercise, Sleep, Study, Bodily Growth, etc., will be presented.

Phrenology—The Brain and its Functions, Temperaments, and the Organs explained and illustrated.

Physiognomy, with "Signs of Character, and How to read Them," a most interesting study.

Biography; or, The Lives and Portraits of Practical Delineations of Character of many distinguished men.

Miscellaneous Matter, Reviews, Notices, Prisons, Asylums, Hospitals, Reformatories, etc. Education, Training, and Treatment, will be fully given in THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND LIFE ILLUSTRATED for 1866.

TERMS.—A new Volume, the 43d, commences with the January Number. Published monthly, in advance, at $2 a year in advance. Sample Numbers by first Post, 20 cents. Club, 10 Copies, $15. 50 cents per copy. Please address MESSRS. FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

A NEW LIBRARY OF MESMERISM AND PSYCHOLOGY. Complete in two Elmo volumes, of about 700 pages each, 12mo., with Portraits and Illustration to Instance.

"All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body nature is, and God its soul."

Comprising The Discovery of Mesmerism, Clairvoyance, and Mental Electricity.—Fascination; or, the Power of Mesmerism illustrated. The Mysteries and Mechcomism; or, World of Sense and the World of Soul.—Electrical Psychology, the Doctrine of Impression, including the Connection between Mind and Matter; also, Psychometry, Diakrasy, Sensuous or Spiritual Consideration Philosophically, with Illustrations of Spiritual Manifestations, etc.

What is second sight, previsions, or somnambulism? What is a "medium?" How are they made? What is electricity? And what of the "circles?" The book is elaborate, containing a thorough exposition of the subject, embracing all that is deemed of value in the unwritten lore of the mysterious laws and intensely interesting phenomena of which it treats. Sent to any address, postage paid, on receipt of price. Liberal terms to the trade.

Sent postage paid, on receipt of price.

THE NEW EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT, containing the Original Greek Text of what is commonly called the New Testament, with an Interlinear Word-for-word English Translation, a Literal Version based upon the Interlinear Translation, on the Readings of Eminent Critics, and on the Various Renderings of Ancient Manuscript (A.D. 1500 in the Vatican Library), together with Illustrations and Explanations, Notes, and a Comprehensive Collection of Reference, to the whole of which is added a valuable Alphabetical Index. By BENJAMIN WILSON. Octavo, pp. 934. New York: FOWLER & WELLS, Publishers, 389 Broadway. Price, in cloth, $4.

OUR new "Special List" contains upward of forty Private Medical Works, intended for those who need them, and will be sent to any address, free, on receipt of prepay postage. FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

THE WONDER OF THE AGE.

The greatest wonder of the age is that celebrated remedy for diseases of the blood, DR. HOOFLAND'S celebrated German Bitters, or Invalid's Friend Medicine—Hoofland's German Bitters. The power exercised over diseases of the blood by these Bitters is truly marvellous. They cure the worst cases of Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Jaundice, Loss of Appetite, Debility, and all the greatest facility. For sale every where by druggists. Price $1 per bottle. C. M. JACKSON, Philadelphia, 504 Broadway, New York Agent.

MAGIC INK.

This ink has the appearance of pure water. The writing can be made visible by those only possessing the secret to do so. A bottle with secret sent by mail on receipt of $1 00. R. SHELDON, Rochester, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED

For the GREAT LABOR SAVER! Worth $20 to any family. Sells at sight. Sample sent by mail for 50 cents. Address J. A. LOUNSBURY, Bloomington, Illinois.

DR. GLOVER'S LIVER TABS retain and cures more ruptures than any other. Sold by druggists and country merchants, or stockings, belts, bandages, crutches, shoulder-braces, &c. 2 Astor House, New York. Established 20 years. Send stamp for Pamphlet.

$200 per month! The very best chance ever offered! No humbug or risk. Full particulars sent free. Address M. S. BROWN & CO., Biddeford, Me.

Pimples on the Face

REMOVED AT ONCE BY THE USE OF "UPHAM'S PIMPLE BANISHER." MAILED TO ANY ADDRESS FOR 50 CENTS AND TWO STAMPS. DR. UPHAM, 25 SOUTH EIGHTH ST., PHILADELPHIA. Sold by all druggists.

PHARAOH'S SERPENTS.

Egg of Pharaoh's Serpent.—Placed on a hot iron ignited, will evolve in a few seconds a harmless Serpent, several feet in length. Sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia. The Trade supplied.

THE HORACE WATERS Grand, Square, and Upright PIANOS, MELODEONS, and CABINET ORGANS. Wholesale and Retail. To let, and rent allowed if purchased. Monthly payments received for sale of Pianos. Second-hand pianos at bargains from $60 to $175. Factory and warerooms, No. 481 Broadway, N. Y. Cash paid for second-hand Pianos. Piano tuned and repaired.

HORACE WATERS.

Ladies and Gentlemen, use the Patent Fasteners. Sent by mail for 25 cents. W. C. WEMYSS, 815 Broadway, N. Y.

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Illustrated Circulars sent free. Sheets of Cuts, &c., 10 cts. ADAMS PRESS COMPANY, 98 Ann St., New York.

MOREHEAD'S

MAGNETIC PLASTER.

THE GREAT STRENGTHENER AND PAIN DESTROYER.

The best and cheapest Household Remedy in the world. Simple and pleasant to apply. Acts like magnets and effectual in its results. Suitable for the relief of Pain at any time in any place, and for all the diseases common, and under all circumstances. If you put the Plaster any where, if Pain is there it will be relieved, and if Pain is not there it has not been subdued. The Plaster magnetizes the Pain away, and PAIN CAN NOT EXIST WHERE THIS REMEDY IS APPLIED.

Rheumatism, Lameness, Soreness, Weakness, Debility, Nervousness, Neuralgia, Dyspepsia, Coughs and Colds, Sprains and Aches of every kind, are INSTANTLY RELIEVED, and, with a little patience, PERMANENTLY CURED by the continued influence of the MAGNETIC PLASTER. It is the simplest, surest, and most economical and cleanly remedy in existence. Its application is universal—equally to the strong and the delicate—to man, and the feeble infant. Its use is agreeable and without annoyance or trouble. It will not stain the finest lace or richest or poor—all may have it, and all should have it who value health or suffering in any degree.

Put up in air-tight tin boxes, thus keeping it always fresh and pure. Each box will make from four to six Plasters, and a child can spread them. Price 25 cents a box.

D. G. MOREHEAD, M.D., 79 Walker St., New York.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

WEGMAN'S Hardware of the Golden Compound will force the beard to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days, or money refunded. Sent by mail for 50 cts. Address
FRANKLIN & JAQUETH, Colborne, Ill.

Get the Best! Get the Best!

200,000 ARTICLES

TO BE SOLD AT

Only One Dollar Each!

COMPRISING

Watches, Chains, Silverware, Jewelry, Gold Pens, Diamonds, Lockets, &c.

These Goods are of the Best Quality, and the entire Stock is Worth over $1,000,000!

We shall Sell all these Articles at $1 each.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting-Cased Watches	$150
100 " Watches	60
500 " Ladies' Watches	35
500 Silver	15
500 Assorted Diamonds, Pins, Rings, and Studs	10 to 50
500 Sets, from	$20 to 100
1000 Guard, Vest, and Chatelain Chains	10 to 50
1000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 to 15
1000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 to 15
3000 Solid and Rolled Gold Lockets	5 to 10
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 to 7
3000 Gold and Jet Cameo and Opal Brooches	3 to 5
9000 Gold Pens, Extension Silver Cases	5 to 10
5000 Gold Pens, with Silver Mounted Holders	3 to 5
1000 Coral, Emerald, and Opal Ear-Drops	4 to 7
1000 Mosaic and Cameo Sleeve-Buttons	3 to 5
4000 Gents' French-Pins and Watch-Keys	2 to 3
3000 Miscellaneous Articles	2 to 5
4000 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 to 3
3000 Sets of Jewelry	5 to 10
4000 Sleeve Buttons	2 to 7
8000 Pins, of Best Style	2 to 5
8000 California Diamond Pins	3 to 20
5000 Solid Gold Diamond Pins	5 to 20
3000 Sets Solitaire Buttons and Studs	3 to 10
3000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils, &c	2 to 5
10,000 Lockets, Double Glass	3 to 8
8,000 Lockets for Miniatures	3 to 8
3000 Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, &c	2 to 5
1000 Sets of Jewelry	5 to 10
8000 Ladies' Belt Buckles	5 to 15
3000 Sets of Silverware	5 to 20
4000 Silver Soup Ladles	3 to 20
4000 Silver Gravy Ladles	3 to 20
2000 Silver Jelly Spoons	3 to 20
2000 Silver Butter Knives	3 to 12
2000 Silver Napkin Rings	3 to 12
3000 Silver Fruit Knives	3 to 10
3000 Silver Cake Baskets	5 to 20
3000 Silver Castors	10 to 25
5000 Sets of Table Spoons	15 to 25
8000 Sets of Tea Spoons	5 to 15
3000 Silver Goblets	4 to 12
3000 Silver Cups	4 to 12
4000 Sets of Silver Forks	4 to 10
4000 Ladies' Hair Balls	3 to 10
5000 Ladies' Gilt Combs	5 to 20
5000 Ladies' Assorted Pearl Combs	3 to 10
5000 Ladies' Leathered Pins	10 to 20
5000 Ladies' Portmonnaies	3 to 10

MANNER OF DISTRIBUTION.—Certificates naming each article will be placed in envelopes, well sealed, and these will be well mixed. One of these envelopes, containing the Certificate of some article, will be delivered to each buyer at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of $1. With each Certificate is given what article it draws, and its value, which may be from Five to One Hundred Dollars, and you then pay $1 for it, and if you like and receive the article named, or may exchange it for any other article of equal value in our store, or of a greater value, by paying the difference being paid in cash. We shall sell no article for more than $1, but as many of the goods cost to them by Express, at only $1 each—they always do.

The Agency

Any overplus on the part of our clerks will be attended to at once.

CP NO BLANKS.—Every purchaser gets value. Enclose a self-addressed envelope to us. Every one is invited to call and examine these goods.

Single Certificates, 25 cts.; 5 for $1; 40 for $5; 100 for $12 50. To any one who orders $10 at a time we will send, in addition to the above, a Watch worth $100. For an order of 50 at once we give a Gold Watch worth $150 or Silver Castor worth $100. Address

J. TOWNSEND & CO., Manufacturing Jewelers,
15 John St., New York.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York,

Have Just Published:

SOCIAL LIFE OF THE CHINESE: With some Account of their Religious, Governmental, Educational, and Business Customs and Opinions, with Special and Frequent exclusive Reference to Fuhchau. By Rev. JUSTUS DOOLITTLE, Missionary of the American Board. With over 150 Illustrations. In Two Volumes. 12mo, Cloth, Illuminated Sides, $5 00.

NOTES FROM PLYMOUTH PULPIT: A Collection of Memorable Passages from the Discourses of HENRY WARD BEECHER. With a Steel Portrait of Mr. Beecher and the Lecture-Room. By AUGUSTUS MOORE. A New Edition, revised and greatly enlarged. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

PERSON LIFE IN THE SOUTH: at Richmond, Macon, Savannah, Charleston, Columbia, Augusta, Raleigh, Goldsborough and Andersonville, during the Years 1864 and 1865. By a Lady. Second Edition. 12mo, New York Dragoons. Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, Bevel-ed Edges, $2 00.

CP HARPER & BROTHERS will send the above books by Mail, postpaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

CONSTITUTION

LIFE SYRUP,

COMPOSED OF

IODIDE POTASSIUM,

WITH THE COMPOUND CONCENTRATED FLUID EXTRACT OF VALUABLE MEDICINAL ROOTS AND HERBS.

PREPARED BY

WILLIAM H. GREGG, M.D.,

Graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, formerly Assistant Physician in the Blackwell's Island Hospitals, Medical Director of the New York State Volunteer Depots, under Governor Edwin D. Morgan.

Constitution Life Syrup

HAS PRODUCED A REVOLUTION IN MEDICINE.

What may seem almost incredible is that many diseases hitherto considered hopelessly incurable are frequently cured in a few days or weeks; and we cheerfully invite the investigations of the liberal-minded and scientific to cures which have no parallel at the present day.

During the past five years we have contended with obstacles, and overcome opposition, as herculean as were ever encountered by any reformers.

RAPIDITY OF CURE.

Sometimes "the cure comes too quick," is the others doubt their permanence, and think that diseases can only be cured by the slow, mysterious process of Nature."

This is our reply: In health the body, like a well-balanced scale, is in a state of equilibrium. But when from any cause, down goes one side of the scale, we have the effects of disease. What is requisite is to restore the normal balance of the scale.

CONSTITUTIN N LIFE SYRUP

Is a positive and sure remedy for all diseases originating from an IMPURE STATE OF THE BLOOD, and for all (hereditary) DISEASES TRANSMITTED FROM PARENT TO CHILD.

PARALYSIS.

It is an universally admitted that CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP is the only effective means of restoration in the wreckless forms of it, that we need not reiterate that it is emphatically the Great Life-giving Power.

DYSPEPSIA,

INDIGESTION, WEIGHT AT STOMACH, FLATULENCE, LIVER COMPLAINT, WANT OF APPETITE, BAD BREATH, CONSTIPATION, BILIOUSNESS.

SCROFULA.

STRUMA, KING'S EVIL, GLANDULAR SWELLINGS, ERYSIPELAS, SALT RHEUM.

This taint (HEREDITARY AND ACQUIRED), filling life with mutterd misery, is, by all usual medical remedies, incurable.

RHEUMATISM.

(ARTHRITIS), LUMBAGO, NEURALGIA, SCIATICA, GOUT, TIC DOLOUREAUX.

If there is any disease in which the CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP is a sovereign, it is in Rheumatism and its kindred affections. We have had patients who almost instantly alleviated—enormous swellings are reduced. Cases, chronic or virulent, of twenty or thirty years' standing, have been cured by us.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Purges the system entirely from all the evil effects of MERCURY, removing the Bad Breath, and curing the Weak Joints and Rheumatic Pains which the use of Calomel is sure to produce. It has no Spongy Gums, and secures the Teeth as firmly as ever.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, like

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES,

And all other difficulties of this kind, which so much disfigure the outward appearance of both males and females, often making them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

For all Forms of Ulcerative Diseases,

Either of the Bone, Throat, Tongue, Spine, Forehead, or Scalp, no remedy has ever proved its equal.

Most Potions upon the female face, depending upon a diseased condition of the liver, are very appropriate to the young wife and mother. A few bottles of CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP will correct the secretion, and remove the deposit, which is directly under the skin.

Diseases of the Liver, giving rise to Languor, Dizziness, Indigestion, Weak Stomach, or an ulcerated or cancerous condition of that organ, accompanied with burning or other unpleasant symptoms, will be relieved by the use of

Constitution Life Syrup.

As a General Blood-Purifying Agent, the LIFE SYRUP stands unrivaled; no preparation in the world.

THE RICH AND POOR

Are liable to the same diseases. Nature and Science have made the CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP for the benefit of all.

PURE BLOOD

Produces healthy sons and daughters, and if the constitution is neglected in youth, disease and early death is the result. No diet deeply at this season are so near at hand, and within the reach of all.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

IS THE POOR MAN'S FRIEND, AND THE RICH MAN'S BLESSING.

Buy it, Take it, and be Cured.

WILLIAM H. GREGG, M.D.,

Sole Proprietor,

NEW YORK.

SOLD BY EVERY DEALER IN MEDICINE IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

MORGAN & ALLEN,

WHOLESALE DRUGGISTS, AGENTS,

No. 46 Cliff Street, New York.

SOLD WHOLESALE BY

JOHNSON HOLLOWAY & COWDEN, Philadelphia, Pa.
GEORGE C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass.
FULLER, FINCH & FULLER, Chicago, Ill.
JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio.
COLLINS BROTHERS, St. Louis.

THE DAYS
OF BRASS JEWELRY
Are Over.

THE COSMOPOLITAN

JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,

Capital, $2,500,000.

Great One-Price Gold Sale

Sell no Brass or so-called Plated JEWELRY

WARRANT ALL JEWELRY GOLD,

OR NO SALE.

Let it be distinctly understood that this is emphatically a GOLD SALE, by an association of manufacturers, on a one-price average system, and that not a single article of brass or plated jewelry is included in the whole immense stock.

250,000

Pianos, Gold and Silver Watches, Diamond Rings, Sets of rich Silverware, Plus Gold Jewelry, Photograph Albums, &c.,

Worth $2,500,000,

All to be sold for two dollars each, an average price of two hundred dollars, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.

INSURING TEN DOLLARS WORTH FOR $2.

☞ THE PROOF—We guarantee to send any customer, in exchange for the least article they may get for $2, a splendid richly chased or engraved silver Butter-Dish or Castor, fine plate, valued at $10, or a beautiful 16-picture morocco Photograph Album, valued at $6; and you have a possibility of getting a

Fine Gold Watch or Piano.

Send 25 cents for the Golden Envelope, containing valuable receipts and songs; and one of the sealed Certificates, which are well mixed and taken out regardless of choice, will be sent, which will inform you what you can get for $5, from a Butter-Dish or Castor, to a Piano, or Watch or Grand Piano, worth $1000. Also will be sent our circular, containing list of articles and full particulars; also terms to agents, to whom great inducements are offered.

Two for 50 cents, with a beautiful Photograph; 5 for $1, with a Silver Nut-Pick, worth $1; 11 for $2, with a Silver Napkin Ring, worth $2; 17 for $3, with a Silver Fruit Knife, worth $3; 26 for $4, with a Gold Pen, Extension Case, worth $6; 65 for $10, with a Gold Double Locket, worth $12; 100 for $15, with a fine Silver Watch, worth $18; 200 for $30, with a Silver Hunting Case, worth $40.

In all cases, upon receipt of the money, the premiums as above will be sent with the envelopes.

Address CALKINS & CO., Managers,
559 and 569 Broadway, New York.

Or, if nearer you, 30 South Fourth St. St. Louis, Mo.; or 69 and 61 Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

English Magazines, Periodicals, and Newspapers.

WILLIAM S. ROGERS, 47 NASSAU ST., N. Y. (established 1840), supply on commission, Foreign Magazines, Periodicals, and Newspaper published in Great Britain or on the Continent of Europe. Price-List for 1868 now ready.

Youth and Beauty Restored

To the gray-headed by the use of

Webster's Vegetable Hair Invigorator.

DEMAS BARNES & CO., N. Y., General Agents.

PARLOR ORGANS.

THE HIGHEST PREMIUM, A SPECIAL GOLD MEDAL, was awarded to us by the late great Fair of the AMERICAN INSTITUTE over all competitors for the best instruments.

A Gold Medal was awarded to CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO. for the best Reed Instrument in exhibition.—a most just testimonial.—WATSON'S Art Journal.

"They speak of them in the highest terms."—W. A. KING.

"The tone is incomparable—far in advance of any other instrument of a similar kind."—CHARLES FRADEL.

Illustrated Catalogues sent by mail.

CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO.,
No. 91 and 93 Fourth Street, N. Y.

AGENTS ALWAYS WANTED.

Circulars free. Address H. W. HITCHCOCK, 16 Chambers St., New York. Big chance for Agents.

Brandreth's Pills.

COSTIVENESS, DIARRHŒA.

They are taken up by the absorbents, and carried into the circulation, through which medium they are conveyed to every part of the body.

If the pain affects the joints, a single dose produces remarkable benefit. And the same rule applies to costiveness, diarrhœa, and dysentery; though with the last-named they may be required night and morning for some days before decided relief is obtained. In affections of the lungs, throat, head, and in Pleurisy, the relief is certain; the recovery equally prompt and with ease the phlegm, and the bronchial tubes free. Spasmodic asthma is often cured by a single dose.

HOLIDAY PRESENT.
FIRST PREMIUM
IMPROVED
$5 SEWING $5
MACHINE.

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originality and Merit. Patented Dec. 31, 1867; Improvement patented June 9, 1868. The celebrated FAMILY SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINE, with many valuable attachments, a most wonderful and elegantly-constructed machine, is now offered for sale on the following terms: Reliability, and works Accidental, sews with double or single thread of all sizes. Makes the most perfect inside; perfect and regular than by hand, and with ordinary rapidity, making every stitch alike from each creation of the Wheel. Will outsew, hem, hem, gather, fell, bind, braid, run, stitches, &c., &c., Warranted not to get out of order in 3 years. It has taken the premium at the State Fairs, and over all the approval of all the principal journals and of those who have seen it. "One of the improvement is a valuable for the house hold it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Ladies' Book. "With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly like handwork."—New York Tribune.

Single machines sent to any part of the country per express, packed in box, with printed instructions, on receipt of the price, $5. Safe delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted every where. Circulars containing liberal inducements, sent free.

FAMILY HIGH SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
Office 102 Nassau Street, New York.

The Great American Consumptive Remedy.

DR. W. HALL'S

BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS

FOR THE CURE OF

Consumption, Decline, Asthma, Bronchitis, Wasting of the Flesh and Strength, Spitting of Blood, Whooping Cough, Difficulty of Breathing, Cough, Croup, Influenza, Pathisic, Pain in the Side, Back and Diseases of the Lungs

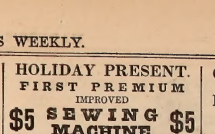
$10,000 DOLLARS REWARD is offered for whatever recipe. It contains no opium, calomel, or mineral poisons, and can be taken by the most delicate with perfect safety.

DR. W. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS strikes at the root of disease, and cures. The most obstinate cough is frequently relieved by a single dose, and broken up in a few hours. Military companies, by its use, have been made effective before they find whether this remedy will afford relief or not.

This is NO PAREGORIC PREPARATION, but one which, if tried in season, will save the life of the consumptive. It has effected cures in numerous cases where the most skillful physicians in this country and in Europe have exhausted their skill employed, and have exercised their skill in vain. Cases which they have pronounced incurable, and which, DESPAIRING AS HOPELESS BEYOND A DOUBT, leaving the patients to waste away by easy degrees to the grave, when a few bottles have been cured by DR. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, have restored the patient to perfect health, and made him healthy and strong as the most robust among us. And these cures are not few and far between, but numerous, and can be pointed out in every community where this most universal remedy has been used. Explicit directions in the German language in pamphlets around each bottle.

Sold by Druggists and Dealers in Family Medicines in all parts of the United States.

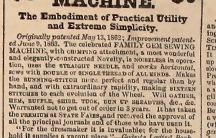
A. L. SCOVILL & CO., Proprietors,
Cincinnati, Ohio.



To the Printers of the U. States.

The Undersigned, being the original inventor of the mode of "making Large Type" by repeating the impression, would respectfully announce that he has obtained Letters Patent for the same, dated 1865, for an improvement, introducing matrix, with metallic covering to the letters, for a description of paper, and the mode of applying the same; the material and colors being made from the same formula as the Printing Inks now in use for newspapers.

INFRINGERS are respectfully informed that I shall take immediate legal proceedings, and sue for the recovery of damages in every case. For further particulars, address Prop'r Merchants' Printing Works, Cincinnati.



New Sheet Music—Choice and Desirable.

SOLDIER'S RETURN. BEAUTY GOOD-BY. Ballad. Keller, 30 cts. I KNOW HE WILL RETURN. Song. Richardson, 30 cts. HOME, SWEET HOME. Song. FOR HER FOOTSTEPS. Song and Chorus. Keller, 30 cts. I HAVE TO ENJOY BUT IT'S NOT WORTH WHILE. Keller, 30 cts. COT WHERE THE OLD FOLKS DIED. Song and Chorus. Kenneth, 30 cts. TELL ME WHILE I'M DREAMING. Song. Winnemeidt, 30 cts. Sent postpaid, on receipt of prices, by OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Influenza, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

Superfluous Hair Removed

From all parts of the body in five minutes, without injury to the skin, by PERSIAN DEPILATORY. Sent by mail. Mailed to any address for $1 25, by S. C. UPHAM, 26 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. Sold by all druggists.

DON'T BE FOOLISH

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine our invisible apparatus needed by every body. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50c. that retails easily for $6, by L. W. WOOD, 170 Chatham Square, New York.

Marvin's Patent

ALUM AND DRY PLATER, FIRE AND BURGLAR

SAFES

Never lose their fire-proof qualities, corrode the iron, or mould their contents.

Slidebolt and Bolt-work safes for silverware.

MARVIN & CO.,
265 Broadway, New York.
721 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

CHRISTMAS GIFT.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.

ONE DOLLAR EACH.

PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 29, 1865.

AN EXACT and RELIABLE PocketTIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen. A beautiful and useful present for the coming Holidays. Correctly constructed on the most approved SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES, and warranted to DENOTE SOLAR TIME with absolute certainty and to keep correct time. It never can be wrong. It requires no KEY or winding up; NEVER NEEDS OILING, and can never fret or run slow. It is a most remarkable article. Approved by the Jury. Just introduced into this country from Europe, where it is senged by ROYAL LETTERS PATENT. Price for a short time, with plain or fancy white dial, in gold or silver gilt case, only $1. Sent, postage paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. See Scientific American, Boston Advertiser, and other leading advertisement with a view to introducing it to the public, by offering a useful article (with a slight alteration of name) WITH EXCELLENT AND CORRECT TIMEKEEPER. All orders must be addressed to J. W. DELAMERE & CO., SOLE PROPRIETORS, 194-196 Broadway, New York.

AGENTS WANTED.—Wanted, active and intelligent Men or Women to canvass for Dr. Lossing's PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE GREAT CIVIL WAR, IN THE UNITED STATES," of 1 p. at a cost of over $50,000, and will contain upward of 1,000 Engravings. The work has been written since the conclusion of the war, and the engravings by from original designs by the Author, who has travelled many thousand miles in the prosecution of his work, and will be found the most complete and reliable history of the war published. It is now ready for delivery to the trade, and will be sold by the leading officers of our Army and Navy, with whom the author is personally known. We give our Agents EXCLUSIVE territory to operate in, and pay a liberal commission. Agents will find employment to a steady thrifty canvasser. Call or address GEORGE W. CHILDS, Philadelphia, Pa.

PUBLISHED THIS DAY;

FOR SALE BY ALL NEWSDEALERS:

COMMON SENSE.

By the Author of "Kate Kennedy," &c.

PRICE FIFTY CENTS.

Mailed, postage paid, on receipt of price.

F. A. BRADY, Publisher, No. 23 Ann St., N. Y.

NEW MUSIC.

Come, stay to me awhile.

"I have heard Sweet Music stealing."..... 30s.
The Lonely Footpath. Duet..... 30s.
"I love but thee." German and English words. 40s.
"I'll be true to thee." Song. Duet..... 30s.
For Piano. Richards. 40c.
Silver Trumpets, played at Home to Victory. 30c.
Silver Trumpets, grand promenade March..... 35c.
Silver Trumpets, Quadrilles..... 50c.
Mailed free. FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery.

DUMB-WAITERS.

JAMES MURTAGH'S celebrated DUMB-WAITERS are manufactured only at No. 1865 Broadway, New York, where a model can be seen.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

501 BROADWAY (St. Nicholas Block),

NEW YORK,

Photographic Materials, Stereoscopic Goods, War Views, Graphoscopes.

Photograph Albums, great assortment, Cartes de Visite of World Famous, &c., &c.

French English, and American Novelties.

$1500 PER YEAR! We want agents every where, to whom we will our Extension $30 Sewing Machines. Three new kinds. Under and upper feeds. Warranted five years. Address for circulars, terms and samples, sent free. The only machines sold in the United States for less than $60 which are fully licensed. Wheeler & Wilson, Grover & Baker, Singer & Co., and all other first-class machines are infringements. Circulars free. Address or call on the SECOR SEWING MACHINE CO., No. 823 Broadway, N. Y. City; No. 198 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.; No. 4 Lombard Street, Baltimore, Md.; No. 141 West Fourth St., Cincinnati, Ohio; or No. 2 Spalding's Exchange, Chicago, Ill.

HOW TO MAKE CIDER WITHOUT APPLES or other fruit. The Hunter's Secret (complete). Invention of importance to Ladies, and numerous other things worth knowing, will be found in the "Boon or Woman's Friend." For copies mail 25 cents to Box 5506, New York.

ENGLISH BOOKS! ENGLISH BOOKS! ENGLISH BOOKS! Just received and now opening a superb collection of rare, scarce second-hand English books. Holiday and standard books will be sold cheap for cash at NUNAN & CO.'S, 634 Broadway, New York.

HARPER'S

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

FOR JANUARY, 1868.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year..... $4 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or Six Copies for $20 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $8 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements on their last page, at the following low rates: one quarter of a page, each Number, $75; one half, $150; whole page, $250. The circulation of this MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year..... $4 00
One Copy for Three Months..... 1 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or Six Copies for $20 00. Payment invariably in advance.

The Bound Volumes of HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent to any part of the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, viz.:

Cloth, Gilt Edges..... $7 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco..... 10 00 "

Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.

The Terms to Advertisers in HARPER'S WEEKLY are Ten Cents per line for inside, and Two Dollars per line for outside Advertisements. No Deviation.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

THE FENIAN IMBROGLIO.

SCENE:—An Apartment in Union Square.

THE FENIAN WOOLSEY (with a slight Irish accent).

Farewill, a long farewill to all me greatness!
This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
The tinder leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honors thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And—when he thinks, good asy man, full shurely
His greatness is a ripening—nips his root,
And then he falls as I do.

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad St., New York,
(Two Doors from Wall.)

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks, Bonds, and Gold will receive our personal attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

Take no more Unpleasant and Unsafe Remedies

For unpleasant and dangerous diseases. Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU and IMPROVED ROSE WASH.

MOTHERS!

Children die by thousands—Worms the cause—whose lives might have been spared, had they used VAN DEUSEN'S WAFER CONFECTIONS. Children are as fond of them as they are of Candy. Sold by Merchants. 25 Cts. a Box. Sent by mail on receipt of the price. VAN DEUSEN BROTHERS, Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 6 Broadway, Suite 46, N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. 1 pipe $6 to $15 each.

Enfeebled and Delicate Constitutions,
Of both sexes, use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU. It will give brisk and energetic feelings, and enable you to sleep well.

THE VEST POCKET
PISTOL,
WEIGHING OVER 31 OUNCES,
USING METALLIC CARTRIDGE,
Size No. 22.
MANUFACTURED BY
F. BEMINGTON & SONS, ILION, N. Y.
 Sold by Gun-Dealers and the Trade generally.

TO CURE
Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL, and disorders arising from excesses, use
Helmbold's Extract Buchu.
Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York, and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BULLOUGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass. General Agents.

MERCHANTS, BANKERS,
And others should send to all parts of the United States by HARDEN'S EXPRESS, 68 Broadway.

Ladies and Gentlemen,
Send for our MEASURING CARD, and Take your own measure, and we will send a PERFECT FIT.
575 Broadway, N. Y., E. A. BROOKS, Agent. Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, and Slippers, of every description, for ladies, gents, boys, misses, and children.
N. B.—LARGEST ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY.

A Ready and Conclusive Test
Of the properties of HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU will be a comparison with those set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

Clergymen, Teachers, The Press,
Unite in saying that the new Juvenile Magazine,

Our Young Folks

Is the best Magazine for the Young ever published in America. It is filled with attractive illustrations, and its articles in prose and poetry, are by the best writers for children in the country.
It is sold at the low price of two dollars a year. Each number contains sixty-four pages, beautifully printed. A liberal discount to clubs. Send 10 cents for a specimen copy and circular to the Publishers, TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

MANHOOD and YOUTHFUL VIGOR
Are regained by HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

HATS AND FURS.
BURKE,
467 Broadway (old Lord & Taylor's) and 151 Fulton St.

For Great Sale of
FRENCH JEWELRY
(PURE GOLD)
See Advertisement of
BOSANQUET, GIRAUD & CO.
On Inside Page.

AGENTS WANTED in all parts of the United States to sell the "LIFE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN," people's edition, in both English and German languages. Address J. C. R. RUSSELL & CO., Boston, Mass.

LARGE PROFITS can be made by active men in the Stencil-Name Plate Business. Complete outfits of tools and stock furnished by M. J. MERRILL & SON, 101 Union Street, Boston. Send for Price-List.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT BUCHU
IS THE GREAT DIURETIC.
Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla
IS THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.
Both are prepared according to the rules of Pharmacy and Chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

"PHALON'S NIGHT BLOOMING CEREUS."
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND PERFUMERS.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

"American Union Company,"
Manufacturers of the NEW ORGAN-TONED PIANO, FORTE, IF NOT SUPERIOR, TO ANY. WAREROOMS in every particular. Warerooms and "Agency," 467 Broome St.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying small objects 500 Times. MAILED FREE on receipt of 50 CENTS, OR THREE FOR $1 00.
Address E. G. BOWEN, Box 228, Boston, Mass.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Scalds, burns, bruises, flesh-wounds, and abrasions of the most serious character are rapidly soothed and cured by this powerful ungnent. If the blood be impure it will by a cursory, while using the ointment, to take the pills also. Sold everywhere.

For non-retention or incontinence of urine, irritation, inflammation, or ulceration of the bladder or kidneys, diseases of the prostrate glands, stone in the bladder, calculus, gravel or brick-dust deposit, and all diseases of the bladder, Kidneys, or dropsical swellings,
Use Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu.

DEAFNESS
And Discharges from the Ear Radically Cured
By the use of the recently-discovered Vegetable Extract
OTITINE.
Price $1 50 a bottle. For sale by all Druggists. WEEKS & POTTER, Druggists, No. 170 Washington St., Wholesale Agents.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU
Gives health and vigor to the frame and bloom to the pallid cheek. Debility is accompanied by many alarming symptoms, and, if no treatment is submitted to, consumption, insanity, or epileptic fits ensue.

MAKE Your Own SOAP with
B.T. BABBITT'S, POTASH IN TIN CANS
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
PURE CONCENTRATED POTASH,
Or READY SOAP-MAKER. Warranted double the strength of any other Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 4 pounds, and 12 pounds, in full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 10 gallons of Soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market. B. T. BABBITT, (4, 6S, 66 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., N. Y.

SALERATUS.
B.T. BABBITT'S, SALERATUS
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
If you want healthy bread, use B. T. BABBITT'S Best Medicinal SALERATUS, "Made from Common Salt." Bread and pastry which contain carbonate of soda, or anything but common salt, water, and flour. B. T. BABBITT'S, Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington Street, New York.

LIGHT BISCUIT
Made in fifteen minutes with
B.T. BABBITT'S, STAR YEAST POWDERS
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
Shattered Constitutions Restored
By HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

WANTED—every man in the United States, who has a little spare time, to call on his friends, or engage in a profitable business. Send 25 cents, for sample to, A. F. BELCHER, Box 45, Philadelphia, Pa.

Stammering
Cured by Bates' Patent Appliances. Pamphlets, testimonials, &c., address H. C. L. Bates, 277 W. 23d St., N. Y.

PATENT REVERSIBLE
PAPER COLLAR
The Cheapest Collar Ever Invented,
Showing the same as at present only one-half as much on both sides. Made in white, fancy and printed cloth.

SNOW'S PATENT
SCARF HOLDER
PATENTED FEB. 14th, 1865.
Is made of the best Spring Steel Wire, and is just the thing to wear with Paper Collars, being far cheaper to coast a cent for holding "Butterflies," "Uniques," "Bows," &c., in place on the shirt button.

PATENT EXPANDED
STAR COLLAR
This Collar, showing a space for the gravat, excels all others in its comfort, neat and weight, and the exquisite finish and whiteness of the paper.
MARCH BROS., PIERCE & CO., AGENTS.
Winthrop Square, Boston.
Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf Supporters at the lowest Boston prices, by—
BOWEN BROTHERS.....Chicago, Illinois.
J. LOWMAN & SON.....Cincinnati, Ohio.
MAYER & HARRIS.....Cleveland, Ohio.
CASSIDAY & CO.....Louisville, Kentucky.
C. CAPEN.....265 Broadway, New York.
WM. A. SPARHAWK.....21 South 3d St., Philadelphia, Pa.
A. BROMAN & CO.....Detroit, Michigan.

BROWNE & SPAULDING,
JEWELERS,
METROPOLITAN HOTEL BUILDING,
570 BROADWAY.
FINE WATCHES and RICH JEWELRY of PARIS DESIGNS.
CLOCKS, BRONZES, and FANCY GOODS of LATEST IMPORTATIONS, and, well adapted for HOLIDAY GIFTS.

READ, THINK, ACT.
R. V. M. C.
CURES CANKER.

PINE APPLE CIDER
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
The Glory of Man is Strength.
Therefore the nervous and debilitated should immediately use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

Old Eyes Made New,
Without Spectacles, Doctor, or Medicine. Pamphlet mailed free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

CROUP.
How it may be easily Prevented without Medicine; also its Cause and Cure. Sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

COMFORT AND CURE FOR THE RUPTURED.—Send free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE, 400 pages, 100 Illustrations, $1 50. Sent by mail every where, postage prepaid. Contents table sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu
Is pleasant in taste and odor, free from all injurious properties, and immediate in its action.

WARD'S
PAPER COLLARS
AND CUFFS FOR LADIES
& GENTLEMEN,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
387 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Ladies' Victoria Turn-over Paper Collar.

Ladies' Empress Turn-over Paper Collar.

Ladies' English Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies' American Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies French Paper Cuffs.

Ladies' English Paper Cuffs.

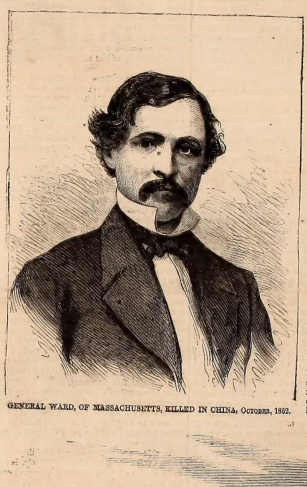
Gentlemen's Piccadilly Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Standing Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Turnover Paper Collar.

Gents. Reversible Paper Cuffs.

Gents. English Paper Cuffs.



Ladies' Collars, from 75 cents to $1 00.
Gentlemen's Collars from $2 00 to $6 per 100.
CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—The genuine Ward's Paper collars and cuffs that are made from new linen cloth.
NOTICE TO THE TRADE.—Wholesale Price-List sent by mail. Also, one collar for sample.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. X.—No. 473.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 20, 1866. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1866, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

GENERAL WARD, OF MASSACHUSETTS, KILLED IN CHINA, OCTOBER, 1862.

GENERALS BURGEVINE AND WARD.

OUR latest advices from China mention THE DROWNING WHILE IN IRONS OF GENERAL BURGEVINE, the Chief of the Taepings, whose portrait is here given. BURGEVINE was a NEW YORKER, and went to China several years since. It will be remembered that in 1861 a BOSTONIAN named WARD, whose portrait we also give, organized a force of AMERICAN and CHINESE soldiers, under EUROPEAN and CHINESE officers, to repel the invasion of the tribe of barbarians known as the TAEPINGS. This force was for the defense of SHANGHAI, and was commanded by WARD. BURGEVINE was WARD'S second in command, and succeeded the latter when WARD was killed in OCTOBER, 1862.

It was not long before the CHINESE GOVERNOR of the province, by delaying to pay BURGEVINE'S soldiers, excited a revolt among them, the GENERAL taking sides with his men. BURGEVINE took violent measures to obtain the money to pay his men, and was ordered to resign his command, which he refused to do. The result of the quarrel was that BURGEVINE with a portion of his men went over to the side of the TAEPING rebels. He subsequently had quite a number of actions against his old command, now led by MAJOR GORDON, and was rather roughly handled sometimes. He found it quite as difficult to get along with CHENG WUNG, the TAEPING leader, as with the GOVERNOR of SHANGHAI, and by means of spies he informed GORDON that he would surrender himself, and as many EUROPEANS as he could induce to follow him, if pledges would be given of security to his life. GORDON gave the pledges. Accordingly BURGEVINE surrendered; the pledges at first were kept, but finally were broken, and BURGEVINE was recently drowned in irons, thus closing his very eventful career.

The TAEPING rebellion commenced in 1850. The leader of the rebellion, SIU TSEUN, was an ill-instructed convert to CHRISTIANITY. In 1833 he had received from an AMERICAN missionary a package of tracts in the CHINESE language, which he put in his pocket, and thought no more of them until five years later, when, after a violent illness, during which he had seen visions and uttered prophetic rhapsodies, his notice was attracted to the pictures. He read the tracts with avidity, and, connecting them with his visions, he set out to make converts to his new religion. It was not long before he had 2000 adherents in the single district of Kewei. His attempts to overthrow the temples and rites of an Idolatrous worship created so great excitement that he was compelled to retire to private life. The insurrection of 1850, starting among the mountains and wretched people of the province of Canton, soon became, under his leadership, a formidable rebellion. He styled the Taeping (or Peace) dynasty. In four months he had a powerful and disciplined army. He assumed the title of TIEN WANG (King of Heaven), and declared himself the brother of CHRIST. He and his army carried every thing before them. In 1853 even the great city of Nankin surrendered to him, and he put to death the Inhabitants to the number of 20,000. Nankin then became the Taeping capital. Having accomplished this much, the terrible fanatic retired into almost seclusion. In the mean time the Imperialists were besieging his capital, and nearly drove TIEN WANG and his followers to starvation. In this emergency the Taeping chief composed a doxology, which was chanted by his army daily, the more vehemently as the rations grew more scanty. Finding no relief in this religious exercise, TIEN WANG tried what virtue there might be in a sortie against the besiegers. This was successful, and the Allies (or, rather, CHUNG WANG, his military lieutenant) attacked Shanghai; but the English naval force defended the city with their navy, and made great havoc among the rebels. The rebels were leisurely in their movements, and during the war between the allied Powers (France and England) and the Chinese Emperor, which terminated in 1860, they contented themselves with plundering the region about their capital.

GENERAL BURGEVINE, OF NEW YORK, RECENTLY KILLED IN CHINA.

FUNERAL OF GERMAN PATRIOTS AT COMFORT, TEXAS, AUGUST 20, 1865.—[SEE PAGE 33.]

Since 1860 they have been more active. December 9, 1863, they captured Ningpo, and defeated the native inhabitants without mercy. They then moved against Shanghai, in defiance of the notice given by France and England that they should defend the city. The rebels now began to lose ground. A number of French and English officers were employed by the Chinese Government, and some of these were so distinguished as the American General WARD, who was mortally wounded September 20, 1862, in an engagement with the Taepings near Ningpo.

The Taepings retained their capital, though they lost the important city of Soochow, December 5, 1863. There was a general massacre of Taepings upon the fall of the city, very much like that which recently followed the Jamaica riots. The war was continued in 1864. The Taepings lost whole provinces and large numbers of prisoners, but they were reinforced, and revolted without pity. After devastating the villages and committing frightful atrocities in their march, showing no mercy even to foreigners. Finally, however, Nankin, the rebel capital, was taken by the Imperialists July 19, 1864. CHUNG WANG, the highest military chief of the Taepings, was also captured, and was "cut into a thousand pieces" in Nankin. From this time, though the Taepings keep up the war, they have lost continually, and the rebellion is nearly smothered.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 20, 1866.

THE PRESIDENT'S POSITION.

THOSE who are disposed to consider the President's action in relieving his Provisional Governors, and authorizing those lately elected in the Southern States to exercise their functions, as hasty and even discourteous to Congress, should remember that it is merely another essential step in the course which he has pursued as Commander-in-Chief. The President properly wishes all the conditions of his experiment to be satisfied, and he does not assume to dictate in any least degree to Congress.

What was the problem he offered to the unorganized States? It was to present to Congress a form of government which Congress could properly recognize as Republican; and it was essential to its complete success that when it could be seen in operation. Therefore he has authorized the governments to go into action. But has neither promised nor implied that Congress shall recognize them as fully satisfactory, nor admit representatives without further conditions and consideration; nor has he restored the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus to the unorganized States.

All that the President has done is to restore the former methods of civil administration under the immediate observation of the United States. There are obvious advantages in such a course, for it tends to bring civil society back into its old channels; it habituates the people once more to the processes of peace; and shows them by renewed experience the superiority of civil to military rule. Had he withdrawn military rule altogether his course would have been perilous in the extreme. But he says merely, "Let us see with how little of that rule we can easily get on."

It must not be forgotten that the question of reorganization is necessarily practical and experimental. It will be so in any case. Whatever laws may be passed, or amendments adopted, or pledges required and given, the work will still be an experiment, and must still be closely and carefully watched. That General GRANT says that he is persuaded the great body of the Southern people have acquiesced in the result of the war; and he hopes that civil government may be soon re-established. But his good sense does not desert him. He does not say that because they have acquiesced and because speedy civil governments are desirable, therefore the troops should be withdrawn and the whole matter left in the hands of the acquiescent mass. On the contrary, he is of opinion that for a long time there must be a military supervision of these States.

So with the President. He authorizes the Governors to exercise their offices, but he does not restore the habeas corpus, and he does not declare the unorganized States to have resumed their functions in the Union. To do that would be to declare a question which he carefully referred to Congress. It seems to us that the perpetual distrust of the President which appears in some quarters is wholly unjustifiable. His purpose is certainly beyond suspicion. His fidelity to the freedmen is proved. He has his own theories of the status of the States, of the limitations of his power, and of the nature of the policy of reorganization. But it will be time enough to doubt and denounce him when he declares that he is willing, without another word and at once as the case now stands, to accept the entire resumption by the late rebel States of all their functions in the Union, to withdraw the military soldier from the field, abolish the Freedmen's Bureau, and to intrust the late slaves without further ceremony or security to the absolute control of the late masters.

BAD NEWS FOR THE BULLS.

THE Secretary of the Treasury has not yet commenced to attempt to contract the currency, though a better time at which to try the experiment can hardly be conceived than the present, money being easy, the Treasury in good demand, and business generally prosperous: but there are indications in Wall Street that the downward turn in prices which was to ensue from the inauguration of the policy of contraction may perhaps not wait for that event. There are ominous signs in the financial sky; losing interests, they may say, have passed these days it may be well to beware of stocks.

In the first place, the receipts of the railroads are diminishing. The Chicago and Rock Island fell off $8,16, on the receipts for the week; Michigan Southern $42,000; the Chicago and North Western $17,000. It is reported that the trunk lines will not show a corresponding decline. But as all shipments are now by canal they have been reduced from 25 to 40 per cent. within a few weeks, and that active competition for business is again reviving is not known or generally credited. On the other hand, company after company, when brought face to face with the facts, is compelled to confess to a larger increase of gross receipts in the year's traffic increase of 1865. Thus the New York Central Directors admit that, with a very handsome increase of gross receipts in 1865, there is an actual decrease of over a quarter of a million in net receipts; the Erie Directors acknowledge, in their report to the Legislature, that their expenses increased 30 per cent. to 40 per cent. two years ago to 80 per cent. now, though their gross receipts have in the mean time risen from twelve to fifteen millions; the Michigan Southern Directors, in their report to the end of midsummer 1865, in order to make sure the dividend of Jan. 1866, passed that too, notwithstanding gross receipts of $3,000,000, and the Cleveland and Pittsburg Directors, who, two years ago, were firmly persuaded that they could and ought to pay 10 per cent. every year to their stockholders, declare that 8 per cent. is the most they can pay, and to pay that, an issue of $1,000,000 new stock is necessary; the Chicago and North Western Directors, who assured the public in their report only a year ago that their preferred stock was as certainly dividend-bearing as any stock in the country, pass the half-dividend on the preferred stock.

These are ominous facts—and not the less so because they can be accounted for on very simple principles. Within the past three years every thing in the country has risen in price except railway fares and freights. Every thing which can be put on the back or into the stomach: every necessary and every luxury; every article of use and every article of ornament; every utensil and every product of industry; labor that is skilled, and unskilled labor, has risen from 50 to 100 per cent. in cost. Alone among all purchasable commodities railway travel and railway freights have not advanced since the Government and the banks suspended specie payments. You may still travel from New York to Chicago, from Boston to Saint Louis, from Washington to Buffalo, or any where else, for the same sum in greenbacks which the same journey would have cost you in gold in 1861. You may send a barrel of flour from Chicago to New York, or a case of goods from New York to Louisville, Kentucky, or a bale of cotton from Cairo, Illinois, to Boston, for the same sum in paper as you would have paid in gold for the like service in 1861. Yet the expenses of the railroads have nearly doubled. Labor which used to cost them 75 cents a day now costs $1 50; other labor which cost $2 a day now costs $3 50; iron which cost $45 a ton now costs $75; wood which cost $2 75 per cord now costs $4 50, etc., etc. It is no wonder that, notwithstanding a steady development of gross traffic, net receipts should fall off; and should the December decline in gross receipts continue in succeeding months, it will not be surprising if some of our railway companies become once more bankrupt.

This condition of affairs is the more interesting as Wall Street for a month or more has been engaged in speculating for the rise in the leading railway securities. Thus Erie and Pittsburg, which sold in April and May last @ 45 per cent., sold within a week at 97 per cent.; Fort Wayne, which sold at 87, touched 97 last week; Rock Island, which was down to 85, is up to 108; Michigan Southern, which was 46, is 74; New York Central, which was 81, is 97. Reading, which was 90, is 107; North Western preferred, which was 45, is 81, etc., etc. A notion prevailed some time ago that the first months of 1866 were destined to witness an active speculation in stocks, based on the ease of money; and the remarkable defeat of the Bears in Prairie du Chien encouraged other combinations to undertake similar operations. Meanwhile, Mr. FESSENDEN, with the veteran Director of the Erie is understood to be the leading spirit in a combination which has undertaken to put up the shares of the leading Erie in the street, while other leading operators have bought all, or nearly all the Cleveland and Pittsburg, the Rock Island, the New York Central, etc.

Should the expected speculative fever break out; should the public, notwithstanding the decline in net, and, in some instances, in gross receipts, rush into the arms of the insinuating prospect of currency contraction, undertake to buy stocks for the rise, these various combinations would find a ready sale for their stocks at a very exhibitant advance upon current prices. On the other hand, should the public continue, as heretofore, for at least sixty days, to stand aloof from stock speculation, and the Bears, the holders of railway stocks, alarmed by the increase of expenses and the reduction of dividends, determine to realize their money, the various cliques which have secured such large quantities of floating stock would be placed in an embarrassing position. Forced realizations would probably involve a decline of 15 or 20 per cent.

There is one chance for the Bulls of Wall Street which is more promising than it may at first appear to be. They publicly declare they have been given to the unpromising condition of the railway interest that a large number of professional speculators have already begun to sell stocks for the fall. In the event of a decline of 5 @ 10 per cent. this Bear party would receive large accessions of strength. On the scale on which stock speculations are carried on in Wall Street, it is not unreasonable to suppose that the sales of the Bears would soon far exceed the capacity of the market, and they would, by the necessities of the case, convert themselves. In two days, on 5th and 6th inst., the whole capital stock of the Cleveland and Pittsburg was sold in Wall Street. It is clear that when speculators operate on this scale, a shrewd manager only needs to buy a few thousand shares of an active stock, to borrow money on it for a day, and a corner results inevitably. It stands to reason that this will occur in one stock after another, and that, in spite of contraction, easy money, and other adverse circumstances, stocks will be seen to advance from time to time, at a rate and in a way that will puzzle those who try to account for them upon principles based on intrinsic values, and punish, if not ruin, the judicious operators who have sold short that which they have not got and may not be able to get. In a word, there are times when the public will do well to let Wall Street bury its dead. The leading stocks of the day are selling for more than they are worth, and are more likely to fall than to rise. But speculators who sell them short are more likely to be cornered and to be ruined than to make money. Those who try and influence, or sell, on speculation, have the chances equally against them. Bona fide holders will not risk much by selling their property and trusting to the events of the current year for an opportunity of replacing it at lower figures. But if Harlem could be put up to 280, and Prairie du Chien to 250, there will be no difficulty in getting Fitchburg to 200, or Rock Island to 1000, if the silly Bears of Wall Street undertake to sell it short.

GOVERNOR ANDREW'S VALEDICTORY.

GOVERNOR ANDREW, of Massachusetts, upon retiring from five years' service, which will be always memorable in the history of his State and of the country, has expressed his views upon the national situation in a valedictory message to the Legislature. It is a most admirable and sagacious paper. Moderate in tone and temperate in spirit, it discusses the question of reorganization with remarkable clearness, catholicity, and sagacity; and is plainly the work of a sound political thinker and wise statesman.

The GOVERNOR'S view of the actual condition of the unorganized States is that of the great intelligent body of American citizens. They are not Territories, in the technical sense, nor have they committed suicide. Their attempt to destroy their relations with the Union has been unsuccessful, and they are now without government other than the military rule of the United States. It is the duty of the United States to establish that government. It is the preliminary steps to that end the organic law of the State before rebellion may be wisely observed. The constitutional amendment be intrusted to the same body that disorganized, but requirements may be rightfully imposed upon it.

What these requirements should be is a consideration of the most momentous import. In the opinion of GOVERNOR ANDREW Congress should offer an amendment to the Constitution granting the right to vote for President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress to colored men in all the States, being citizens and able to read, who would by the laws of the State be competent to vote if they were white, and, without disfranchising existing voters, it should apply the qualification to white men also. The amendment should also leave the election of Presidential Electors subject directly in the hands of the people. This, with the Emancipation Amendment, would discharge the whole duty of the nation to its dependent wards.

The Governor opposes the proposed amendment apportioning representation to voters upon two grounds: First, it is important to the true republican principle to base representation upon any class and not upon the whole body of the people; and, second, it would leave the freedmen entirely in the hands of their late masters, which can not be safely or honorably done.

There is a force in this last objection which can not be overlooked. The intention of the amendment is to do by an appeal to the love of political power what could not otherwise, it was thought, be accomplished by a direct act of Congress, which it was supposed could not carry the country, and in which the unorganized States would be represented. The resumption of the amendment is, that to retain or increase their political power the whites of the South would enfranchise the blacks. The question is, would they? And if they would not, as Governor ANDREW asks, would the whites, for the sake of doubling the representation to six members, be willing to concede three to the blacks in the proportion of their containing the whole six? Would they not rather have the three which they now elect than have them double that number? This is a fair question. But we are inclined to believe it to be only a temporary question. With the lapse of time and the necessary political development of society in a free government the spirit of caste is weakened, and gradually disappears; while with the unused basis of political power at hand in half the population, parties would inevitably arise, and the party of equal enfranchisement would finally prevail.

In this country the political disability which springs from the spirit of caste seems to be sure to sooner or later removed, now that caste has no further legal recognition. But the industrial will precede the political surrender of caste which is the more free government is lighted, and it is a question of paramount importance whether, while we defend every personal and industrial right of the freedmen, we ought not to make it appear to be the interest of the white class to grant them an equal political right? If the more passage of the amendment seems to be necessary to the security of the just treatment of the freedmen by the whites, and upon their enforced assent to it the keys of the unorganized States were to be delivered into the hands of the whites with the privilege of treating the freedmen as they chose, we should oppose it as warmly as any of its opponents. But such a surrender is not all unnecessary friction. As a matter of expediency it is desirable that the whites should assent to just political equality, and we would take every fair and honorable step that would promote that result.

THE LIMITS OF PUBLICITY.

WHAT are the proper limits of publicity in cases of infamous crime, is a question which has been lately much discussed in this city. Yet the answer does not seem to be very difficult. Starting from the axiom that every thing which happens is and should be public property, except so far as public report as news, it is only to see that all publication should be governed by moral common-sense.

To say, as has been lately gravely asserted, that, because a revolting crime has been committed in a city, all the citizens are therefore "compelled" to listen to the loathsome details, is as ridiculous as to assert that, because the police may have descended upon a nest of illhouses in Mercer Street, the public are "compelled" to go and look at the abominations that are discovered in those houses. The other public will eagerly read all descriptions, and the more greedily in the degree of their prurient detail, is very probable. But it is not so much the reader as the purveyor of such details who is truly guilty.

Nor is the assertion that crime perishes more surely in the daylight than in the dark a sufficient excuse for publishing all the exciting incidents of crime. Is it necessary for the warning of youth that, even if you faithfully show that MacHeath by his lawless courses came to the scaffold, you should describe with the most elaborate particularity every one of those lawless courses? Why is it that the newspapers which defend their recent detailed publication of a lascivious trial do not open their columns to an equal publicity of the details of other trials which they report? The answer to this question is the refutation of their own plea. It is simply that there is a pruriency and prurient detail which promises a larger sale of the paper. It is as necessary to purge society of forgery, of larceny, of arson, as it is of adultery. Why do the papers not pour a full stream of withering daylight upon their accounts of those offenses?

This case we will suppose a paper to say, has attracted great professional and social attention, and the press has been compelled to give it publicity. In other words, the notorious misconduct of the circumstances has excited morbid curiosity, and the press has chosen to turn a penny by gratifying it. The duty of the press was to censure and withstand this kind of attention, not to foster it. It was not necessary to omit all mention of the case. But every thing necessary to the public moral improvement of the trial could have been mentioned without the circumstantial reports which were presented.

The immoral influence of the stump great scoundrels, we will suppose another paper to say, is in the fact that only the pleasant episodes and not the dreary and dreadful end are related. But is, then, an obscene book the history of an outcast, told with unshrinking detail, the full daylight turned on in faithful illustrations, if only the shameful and desolate death be likewise portrayed, is the ultimate influence upon young minds? It is not the thing done, only, it is the way in which the thing is done which determines the moral influences.

NO MORE AMERICAN BOOKS.

UNLESS the Commission which has the revision of the Revenue Law in charge should recommend the modification of the tax on printed books, and Congress should act upon the recommendation, we shall soon cease to print any books at all. A more careful study of the facts leads us to the conclusion that our recent estimate of the relative cost of books printed here and the same books printed in England was too liberal to the foreign printer; we now judge that a book can be printed and published in England for one-third the cost of the same book here. Of course, under such circumstances, the tariff gives no obstacle whatever to importations, and should the tariff remain as it stands things continue, it is clear that, in the course of a few months, the publication of American books will be reduced to those works which can not be produced abroad.

It is understood that the Revenue Commission is bent only to a reduction of the internal duties on books—fifteen in number—that have been calculated. It should be hoped that they will lose no time in laying their views before Congress. In order to aid them in their deliberations, we present a single item, which is a fair sample of scores:

The Sunday Magazine is a periodical published in London, the price being sixpence a copy, exclusive of postage. Of this Magazine 10,000 copies are imported for sale in this country, the importers affirming that the market value in England is three farthings a copy. Upon this, by the present LAW, they pay a duty of 25 per cent.—that is, three-fourths of a farthing. Making the whole cost here to them, duty included, just 3¾ farthings, a little less than two cents a copy, or $200 for the whole 10,000. The importers, moreover, demand here twenty-five cents for this Magazine, the market value of which in England, and upon which only they pay duty, they declare to be only three farthings. We shall follow up this case by other instances, of which we have at hand more than a score.

Now let us see what the cost of the bare manufacture of these 10,000 copies would be in this country at present prices. After a careful calculation we find that the paper, composition, stereotyping, press-work, and folding of the Magazine would cost here, for 10,000 copies, 14 cents a copy, instead of three farthings, its alleged market value in England. This includes only the bare cost of manufacture, adding no allowance for literary and artistic labor and the cost of the engravings.

Upon these 10,000 copies the importers pay a duty of only three-fourths of a farthing, while the 25 separate taxes imposed by law upon the American manufacturer amount to at least four cents. In other words, we "protect" the British manufacturer of books by imposing upon him by way of duty only one-fifth as much as is paid by the American manufacturer in direct taxes upon raw material and labor alone.

If this continues, one of two things is inevitable: The manufacture of books here will cease, and the great amount of labor involved in it, directly and indirectly, must find other channels; or the labor must be paid for at English "starvation rates." Practically, both results will ensue. Three-fourths of our printers will be out of employment, and the others will receive pay at British rates: and all for the benefit of our British friends.

THE HEALTH OF THE CITY.

THERE facts compel the attention of every citizen of the city of New York, and interest the whole country. The cholera has not found the city is in the condition most favorable to its ravages; and there is no hope of relief from the city itself. These three facts very unpropitiously suggest a fourth—that if the State does not save us the city will not escape the worst force of the pestilence.

Governor FENTON, in his admirable Message to the Legislature, reminds us that the sanitary care of the city is now confided to two separate Boards, one of which is composed of the Mayor and Common Council; the other of the Mayor and the Commissioners of Health. The powers of the former are almost unlimited; and, when convened, its decisions are binding only by the official term of its members. Mayor HOFFMAN, in his Message, says that it has not met for a long time, and he sees no reason why it should be convened. The Board of Commissioners of Health is composed of the Mayor, the City Inspector, the President of each Board of the Common Council, Health Officer of the Port, Resident Physician, and Health Commissioner, and this Board, the Mayor thinks, will be able to accomplish all that may be required of it. His Honor is also of opinion that the whole care of the city should not be intrusted to a State Commission.

Governor FENTON, on the contrary, thinks that the success of the Metropolitan Police Law and of the paid Fire Department "furnish a strong argument in favor of some similar provision for protection of the health and life of the same populous territory." In conformity with this suggestion, Senator ANDREWS has introduced a Metropolitan Health Bill. It has been prepared with the utmost care, and includes the methods which the experience of the largest cities in the world has proved to be most effective and advantageous. It is the work of no party of politicians or speculators, but of the best citizens and of men of the highest practical science. Its aim is the security of the health of the city without regard to politics.

The circumstances require instant and radical action. There is really no hope whatever from any municipal authority, and without denying the abstract truth of Mayor HOFFMAN'S remark, that the city should take care of its own health, it is enough to say that no well-informed man believes that the city will ensure it either can or will take the necessary care.

The bill was defeated last year; but the imminence of the cholera will, we believe, secure its present passage, with some amendments. Should it fail again, the city of New York will be literally left to its own destruction.

SYCOPHANCY.

THERE are certain papers which have the very bad habit of assuming that those who do not altogether approve the measures of any organization are ill-conditioned malcontents and visionaries who are hostile to a speedy and secure reunion. It is evident to the United People, who is quite as much interested in the just and permanent settlement of the question as any of the papers to which we refer can be, is perfectly willing to accept the results of all due prudence, that still further consideration and delay are essential before the Government relinquishes its hold upon the lately insurgent States, or is denounced as an enemy of the Republic if policy, and as insisting upon foolish crotchets, theories, and "isms."

Now, it is a very pertinent inquiry why the purely speculative views which the President or any other eminent citizen takes of the situation may not equally be derided as crotchets, theories, and "isms." It is not a matter of legislative point—such, for instance, as the precise status in the Union of the unorganized States—it is, we presume, the function of the individual to speculate. It may also be permitted the same mind to doubt whether the speculations of the President, or of any paper which echoes him upon this point as it would upon any other, are, for that reason, binding upon the American people. There is no folly more absurd than blind and effete to "whip in" the intelligent mind of the country.

For ourselves, we have full faith in the purposes of the President, whose election we warmly supported. With some of his theories we have differed. His action, upon the whole, has seemed to the whole country sensible and sagacious. In common with the country we sincerely approve the spirit and principle of the conditions of reorganization which he has imposed upon the lately rebel States. But we know of no greater mischief which could be done to American institutions, and of no conser insult to himself, than the obsequious adulation of the President which is lavished upon him by certain papers. It is the duty of the press to reveal to him the tendency and state of public opinion, not to attempt to bully opinion into more acquiescence with his supposed views; and we are very sure that no man can have a profounder contempt for the latter effort than ANDREW JOHNSON.

MEDICAL HISTORY OF THE WAR.

THE skill and diligence of the Surgical and Medical Department of the army during the late war illustrated in the circulars lately issued by the Surgeon-General. The amount and value of statistics carefully collected are very great, and the mass of facts is reported as much exceeding the results of all previous similar observation.

The medical staff of the war was composed of a surgeon-general, an assistant surgeon-general, and medical inspector-general; 16 medical inspectors; 170 surgeons and assistant-surgeons of the regular army; 362 volunteer staff surgeons and assistant-surgeons; 5,532 regimental surgeons and assistant-surgeons of volunteers; 2500 acting assistant-surgeons and physicians under contract, and 6 medical storekeepers. There were 202 general hospitals with 136,894 beds for patients. More than a million of patients were treated in these hospitals, of which 57,000 were for wounds, and the general sanitary condition of such hospitals was never so high as in these.

The most fatal disease was camp fever; the most common was diarrhea or dysentery; and after these, inflammation of the respiratory organs. The number constantly sick was about ten per cent. of the strength of the army. The mortality from disease alone was forty-eight and seven-tenths per one thousand of mean strength in the first year of the war, and sixty-five and two-tenths in the last year. The registries of the wounded are not completed.

Meanwhile the accumulation of information in regard to the causes and nature of the army sickness is enormous, and the collection of the results of microscopical observation is of the utmost interest and importance. The peculiar enthusiasm of the profession has developed in most ample material for a medical history of the war; and it is not possible to contemplate without profound gratitude the conduct of this indefatigable and accomplished branch of the service.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CHESS.

The following hard-fought game was contested between Captain MORPHY and Mr. C. H. STANLEY, on Monday afternoon, and the match between the two in a series of matches now in progress at the New York Chess Club. In this game the first winner of three games will be declared the conqueror:

KING'S KNIGHT'S GAMBIT.

Black (Capt. M'E.)	White (Mr. S.)
1. P to K 4	1. P to K 4
2. K Kt to B 3	2. Q Kt to B 3
3. B to Q Kt 5	3. P to Q B 3
4. P to K R 4	4. P to K Kt 4

The move is pretty generally considered the soundest, viz., K Kt to B 3rd, being recommended.

5. B to Kt 5	5. K Kt to B 3
6. Castles	6. P to Q 3
7. K Kt to Kt 5	7. B to K 3
8. Kt takes B	8. P takes Kt
9. B takes P	9. Q to K 2
10. Q to Q Kt 3	10. K to Q 2
11. P to Q 5	11. P to K R 4
12. Q to B 4	12. P to K Kt 5
13. B to K Kt 5	13. Kt to K 2
14. B takes Kt	14. P takes B
15. P to K B 4	15. Kt to Kt 3
16. Q to Q 4	16. Q to Q 2
17. P to K R 3	17. Q to Q 2 (ch)

This check we are inclined to think, must have escaped the attention of Mr. STANLEY, as it enables his adversary to assume at once the offensive.

18. P to Q	18. P takes P
19. P takes Kt	19. P takes Kt dis (ch)
20. K to B 2	20. P takes Q Kt 3
21. R to Q Kt	21. R takes Kt P

Should the 4th Q move eventually have enabled him to win the exchange of Rook for Bishop—but Black's centre pawns would have become very strong.

22. Q takes P	22. R to K 2
23. R takes P	23. R to R 5 (ch)
24. K to K 3	24. R to R 6
25. B takes B	25. K takes B

The object of the move here is to compel a drawn game by perpetual check with Queen.

26. Q takes P (ch)	26. K to Q
27. R to Q B	27. R to R 8
28. R to Q 3	28. K to B 2
29. R to Q	29. Q to K B 5
30. K to K 2	30. R to K 8
31. Q to K R 6 (ch)	31. K to Q
32. Q to K Kt 6	32. Q to K 5
33. Q to K B 6	33. Q to Q 5
34. Q to K B 5	34. Q to Q 6 (ch)
35. K to K 3	35. Q to Q 4 (ch)
36. K to K 2	36. Q to Q 6 (ch)
37. K to Kt	37. Q to Q 4 (ch)
38. K to B 2	38. Q to K 5 (ch)
39. Q to K 4	39. Q to K 8 (ch)
40. K to K 3	40. Q to K 5 (ch)
41. Q to K B 4	41. R to K 6

The scheme of a strange but ingenious resulting in an irretrievably lost game.

42. Q takes P (ch)	42. K to R 5
43. K to K 4	43. Q to B 7 (ch)
44. K to Kt 5

Governor D. S. Walker, the regularly elected Governor of Florida, was inaugurated December 19.

On the evening of Saturday, the 13th instant, a most daring and successful robbery was committed on the express train from New York to Baltimore. An iron safe in the Adams Express Company was opened by force, probably before the train left New York, and a large amount of money, estimated at half a million of dollars, was stolen from the contents.

Mr. Hugh F. Purdy, for many years identified with the Democratic press of the metropolis, died on the 14th at 12 o'clock on the night of January 8.

On Sunday, December 31, while a party of nineteen boys were skating on the St. Lawrence River, near Ogdensburg, they broke through the ice and fell into the water and began to float down the river. A gentleman attracted by the cries of the boys procured a boat and by making three trips succeeded in rescuing the whole party.

Previous to the 1st of January the Colorado Legislature ratified the Constitutional Amendment.

Advices from Arizona state that the Indian refugees were assembling in large numbers in order to emigrate to Sonora. The gasboe mountain tribes, it is said, have evacuated that four Indian tribes were preparing an expedition against them.

A gentleman recently returned to New Orleans from Atkinson county, Georgia, State to have a census of that disorganized condition. Neither life nor property there appears to be secure.

The negroes in the South never had a graver or more dangerous foe than the Freedmen's Bureau. Its powers have just been enlarged. At Fortress Monroe the negroes of a contraband camp have been supplied with Enfield rifles by them.

A St. Louis Dispatch brings bad news from the Plains. The cold is almost as terrible as the Indians. In one regiment a hundred men have had their feet frozen, and it makes it necessary to leave them in the hospital. The Indians in Fort Reno are said to be starving.

Major-General Wilson, the captor of Jeff Davis, was married at Washington on Wednesday evening.

General William Hickey, Chief Clerk of the Senate, died at his residence, near Washington, January 4, aged sixty-nine years. He was one of the oldest as well as one of the most efficient officers of the Senate, and had been forty-two years in the service of the Senate.

There have been appointed by the Adjutant-General, at Washington, about 500 applications for a share in the remains offered for the completion of the Washington Monuments. The rewards are ready for distribution amount to about $200,000. Arrangements are now making by the claimants to get possession of the rewards offered in the several States, amounting to about $1,000,000 in the aggregate, as soon as it is announced by the Government who are entitled to a share of the money.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE President's Message met in France with the same favor it received in England. Its moderation was extolled, and many journals endeavored to explain away the allusion alike as to Mexico as being only temporary, and not intended to defy the ——— power of the American people.

The trial of Fenian prisoners ——— was still going on. At Cork, on the 20th of December, Jeremiah Donovan and Thomas Duggan were found guilty of treason. The former was sentenced to be penal servitude for life, and the latter penal servitude.

The cattle plague in England was declining. Returns for the week ending December 16 are more favorable, the increase in the number of cattle attacked being only 1,000 as against 1,500 in the week ending December 9. There is a decrease of 1,000 in the number killed, while in the week previous there was an increase of 600.

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

INSIDE.

A CHRONICLE OF SECESSION.

IN TWENTY-FOUR CHAPTERS.

THE AUTHOR SERVING HIS MANUSCRIPTS.

PREFACE.

NOT a Preface merely for preface' sake, but as few words as possible by way of explanation.

This book was written in one of the centres of Secession. Begun at the outset, it grew with the growth thereof, and closed with its ending. Owing to peculiar circumstances, the writer, never out of the pale of Secession during its continuance, had full time and opportunity for as careful a study of the period as he could wish. If he has cast the result in the form of a fiction his work is none the less as essentially true as the dryest history ever penned; and will be acknowledged to be by all who, by reason of occupying a like position during the war, are competent to speak. And it is as true, in most respects, for one region in the South as for any other, the sentiment as a class in all its varieties, and the Union men as a class in all its varieties, being in every village throughout the South, very much the same as in Somerville.

The form of a novel was adopted chiefly to make it impossible for any one to identify the place in which the scene is laid and the characters acting therein. And that for this reason: The period embraced in the story is one which will be, in all its aspects, a phenomenon interesting to men for generations to come. Other volumes will treat of other features of this most remarkable period; this book aims only to photograph the social aspect thereof from a point entirely within; and it is a period altogether too sublime, both in its evil and its good, for any thing so short-lived and insect-like as mere personalities, which, as they buzz and sting but during their brief moment, should perish as they and be forgotten within the same. Yes, if there be one drop of gall, a least splinter of wormwood in these pages, the writer is ignorant of it.

Born at, and having spent almost his entire life in, the South, the writer's first affections are, by that nature which attaches every thing that breathes to its own home, with and for the South. At the very same time he entertains a love yet larger and stronger for the nation of which the South is but a part, and is powerless to refuse conviction, both of head and heart, to the truth that the whole is greater than part of the whole. Above all does he yield reverence and affection, still beyond this, to Truth, Right, Conscience, God. A love herein within, the least conflict in its three degrees of positive, comparative, superlative. Toward no one, during Secession, has his hatred been even stirred. For many a one, during that time, has the writer's pity been excited—his deepest pity for the guiltiest as being the most infatuated: glad that justice, human justice perhaps, Divine justice certainly, is to be meted out; glad, shh, that, save in these humble pages, to him is committed neither its determining nor the execution.

He claims no merit whatever above others, for better, mayhap, in every other respect than himself, for, being from his earliest memory, in every thought, emotion, word, deed, through all associations, oppositions, circumstances, whatever they were, a Union man—claims no merit for this, since it required no exertion on his part, he being such by a sort of nature, as a cedar-tree is not a cypress, and as no oak-tree is an oak. Conscious of many a shortcoming in other respects, he has nothing to reproach himself with in this, unless it be for excess of love to his country, which, perhaps, the times may excuse.

The very manuscript from which these lines are printed could tell a tale of its own, apart from that which it narrates, in confirmation of this. While writing it the author was perfectly aware that his life would have paid the forfeit had a written page been discovered. On more than one Sunday the wife of the writer has borne the manuscript to church concealed about her person, in terror of leaving it, like powder exposed to chance sparks, at home. However, as our story shows, that was but a small specimen of the totally new set of duties, unprovided for in the marriage ceremony, which wives had to perform for Union husbands during Secession. On two occasions the writer was obliged to bury his manuscript in the ground, thereby damaging it seriously. To that the printer whose misfortune it is to set up these pages will tearfully depone.

They say that even amidst rock and glacier, avalanche and tempest of Alpine regions, there spring flowers not unworthy the gathering. Who knows but it may be so with this volume, which has slowly and painfully matured its leaves under circumstances—But suppose we permit the book to speak for itself.

CHAPTER I.

"A LITTLE more powder and a little more shot 'll teach 'em Yankees how to tout!"

"No, Amouse, no; that ain't the way; this the way:

"Little more shot an' little powder
'll make them Yankees holler louder!"

"No, Bub, 'tain't; you an' Amouse bofe wrong:

"Hurrah! hurrah! for the Yankee fing
That bears the stingin' star!"

"Lor', Miss Ria, you better not sing dat—not de Yankee fing—bounce blue fing—"

"You shut up, Amouse; hush, Ria."

"Hush your own mouth, Bub. Hurrah for Lincoln an' Jeff Davis!"

"Oh, Ria, I'll tell Pa what you said! Hollered for old Lincoln; didn't she, Amouse? If you don't hang you'll get shot, Pupper now, just coming in the gate. Oh, Pupper, here's Ria been hollering all the morning for Abe Lincoln! Ain't she a old Yankee?"

"Am a Yankee! Am a 'Bolitionist! Hate old Davis! Hurrah for Lincoln an' the Soof!"

"Hush your racket, children; hush that, Maria!" and their father fastened the gate slowly and carefully behind him.

"They know just about as much about it all as most grown people," said, but strictly to himself, the father of Ria and Bub and the master of Amouse, about whose profession, as he walks forward the house, there is no necessity of informing you. That he is a doctor you can see by the natural saddle-bags which he carries before and over his left arm. A good, careful, conscientious doctor too, especially to nurse a patient through a long illness. That you can read in his mild, florid face, in the loiter of his very gait.

But, if you are a woman, and possess intuition, you can tell by his face also that this Dr. Warner is not the man to make an eminent surgeon. As you observe, following him with your eyes toward the house, he has very light hair and eyes—not the man to scoop a tumor out of the bosom of one's screaming child—not one you would care to call in if your leg had suddenly to be taken out of its socket at the thigh. When Nature has given a decided character to a man or woman she is very apt to hang out some decided flag of it on the outer wall: eyes of some definite color; hair red, black, or very brown.

"But, Pupper," says Bub, calling after his father, "oh, Pupper, please make 'Ria stop hollering out here for Lincoln; she's all the time doing it. Joe Staples threw a rock at us yesterday; hit our Amouse plum on the head."

"You hear, Maria. Mind what Bub says. Don't you let me hear of your hollering any more," says the father, turning half around. "Don't you know ladies never holler?"

"Oh, Pa, but why don't we do?" exclaims his daughter. "Don't you know how Sally Smithers waved her towel an' hollered that day the soldiers marched?—all the ladies on the front porches—don't you 'member?"

"Handkerchief, child; but you are a little, little girl, not eight years old; you mustn't holler—"

"Yes I must, Pupper; have to holler. Amouse here, he hollers; Joe Staples hollers; Bub is always hollering; every body in Somerville is always hollering all the time."

"Well, Maria, if you must have something to holler—"

"Bligod to," put in the little girl.

"Then holler for—Andrew Jackson;" and her prudent parent passed on into the house.

Very mindful of the noxious poisons in his saddle-bags, Dr. Warner placed them on a small shelf made for the express purpose, in the hall beside the hat-stand, high out of reach of the children. Next he proceeded, with what might be styled a cautious step for a man in his own house, to the door leading into the breakfast-room.

"Ah, Sarah, breakfast over, I see," he said, first glancing in through the partly-opened door, and then venturing more boldly in, when he sees that no one is therein except the negro woman standing over the remains of the meal, washing up the cups and saucers.

Prey fairly in the trap, the trigger springs:

"Over, Dr. Warner? Of course it was. one good hour ago, and you knew it when you asked."

It was his wife who said it, following her voice into the breakfast-room as she spoke. She had been saying it over to herself ever since she heard the front gate click, and short and sharp enough were the tones in which she spoke.

"Gracious goodness! can't your patients fix it so we one have some little order about our meals? But it is all your fault, Dr. Warner. Why can't you just give them their physic, whatever it is, be done with it, and come home? Here's Bub and Amouse not get their breakfast, Sarah?—here's Sarah—and you haven't washed them plates up yet—here's Sarah kept from her dinner, Sarah, and kept from her coffee-pot, Sarah?—here's Sarah and you haven't washed them plates up yet—here's Sarah kept from her dinner, Sarah, and kept from her coffee-pot, Sarah?—here's Sarah—from his physiological studies, because she was so unlike to himself. And she married him?—perhaps from some vague intuitions to the same effect.

"I DO BELIEVE THAT YOU, DR. WARNER, ARE A—UNION MAN!"

If the stream of my story did not hurry me on so urgently I would like to turn out of its current for a moment and say just one word about that admirable provision of Nature, by which she preserves, in our species as in the planets, her own sacred balance. When it is not Parent, nor Pique, nor Mammon, nor any thing other than sweet Nature herself who weds you to your wife, you will find that she mates you two on the plan of a perfect compensation; that is, she makes up for the excess of any defect in one of you by an excess of the opposite virtue in the other. It was something other than Nature that made the match if you, a tall man, are wedded to any other than an undersized woman. Woe to you, Madam, if you, a blonde, are united to a fair-haired man! So of that inner nature of which the outer appearance is but the symbol. Alas for you, Sir, if you, a man of desponding temperament, are wedded to a wife of the same dismal hue of feeling! Though I believe, even in that case, Nature strives to make the best of a union in which she had no hand. I will not say how it will be if you are a man; but if you are a woman I am certain of this: however despondent you may yourself be, the instant you detect the slightest gloom in your husband's brow, or the least growl in his voice, you go instinctively to the other side of the tilting bark, and become as cheerful as possible. And the instant you give way to gloom notice how awkwardly, yet well meaningly, he, poor fellow! attempts at least to trim the tilting vessel by putting on at least an aspect of cheerfulness. Woe, then, had it been to Mrs. Warner if she had been united to some black-eyed, black-haired, black-bearded husband! Notice the union of two sable clouds in mid-air, if you would understand the result. So that when Mrs. Warner paused from her sewing and said,

"As much as to say, if brother Barker oughtn't to say it because he is a preacher, I oughtn't to say it because I'm a woman." The Doctor only helped himself in a sidelong and deprecatory manner to the butter.

"I do believe," said Mrs. Warner—"Sarah, step out and tell those children to hush that noise—I do believe," she continued in low, sepulchral tones, "that you, Dr. Warner, are a—Union man!"

Language can not set forth the awfulness of epithet implied in the charge, the canal grew opening wider and wider. "Yes, and I know now why the bells didn't ring last night! I was wondering. I know now!" said Mrs. Warner swiftly, and with a new light breaking all over her face. "Yes, and why you couldn't leave Mrs. Bowles. Worse, a-hie! Ha! Yes, I see it all." Canal gates open their widest.

Dr. Warner glanced up from his plate at his wife with a flash of admiration. "What an amazingly sharp woman!" he said to himself.

"Bells?" he said, however, at last. "Bells? I should think, Helen, you would have had enough of bells might before last. Every bell in town! There was the big Methodist bell; I lay and counted no less than ten fresh hands in turn at that bell-rope before day. The first hand began and he would break the bell to pieces, pulled until it was broken down; then you could notice the rope taken by another till he gave up exhausted; then by another, through the whole ten. I am not nervous, but I couldn't get a wink of sleep."

"Dr. Warner!" said Mrs. W. solemnly, needle, eyes, breath suspended.

"And you know I said at the time—or was it you yourself made the remark—"

"Dr. Warner!—Sarah, don't come here, stay in the kitchen till I call you."

"Well, it was one of us said it," continued the husband, very quietly sipping his coffee, looking over the top of his cup with unusual hardihood at his eager wife.

"You know I never said it!" broke in the wife. You know I never could have been such a traitor as to have said it. And if the paper that came last night says our soldiers have been whipped there in Tennessee, it's a lie! Didn't the papers night before last tell how our men had come out of Fort Donelson and driven the Hessians back through their camps, and killed six thousand, and taken all the rest prisoners, and—and—"

"Very well, my dear, you needn't be excited at me. Have it your own way. Suppose we talk of something else."

"What is the matter with Mrs. Bowles, Dr. Warner?" asked his wife, with sudden suspicion.

"Well," replied her helpmate, slowly, "the faculty have different names for it. There are febrile symptoms, too much excitement in the brain. Nerves, hysteria."

"Stuff; but what has made her worse? I know it can not be she has heard any bad news about that everlasting Rutledge Bowles of hers, for you would have told me so when you first came. What has she heard? Something bad, I know."

"Well, yes. But you know, my dear, Mrs. Bowles permits her mind to run too much, really too much, on the events of the day—"

"Dr. Warner," says his wife, in alarming tones though lower than before, "will you tell me the news that came last night?"

"If you wish it. Remember it may be false; you will be sure it is. In any case I didn't do any thing to bring it about."

"What is it?"

"Fort Donelson has fallen, my dear. General Johnson has retreated into Alabama. Nashville has capitulated. A good many more items to the same effect. At least so the paper says. I dare say part of the news may be exaggerated, premature at least."

"It's a lie—it's a base, base, base lie! I'll bet a thousand dollars the man that prints that paper is a Yankee. He ought to be hung!"

Perhaps it was owing to her cheeks having become some shades sallower that Mrs. Warner's lips seemed so much redder, her eyes and hair so much blacker than before. "Oh, if I was only a man!" she added.

Meanwhile her husband only arched his brows deprecatingly, and proceeded to eat his breakfast with a coolness, appetite, even cheerfulness, which contrasted greatly with the vehement, almost hysterical, wife at the other end of the table.

But, oh the exquisite satisfaction of Dr. Warner in imparting the news, unspeakable satisfaction at the very core of his heart, though all the rest of his anatomy might disavow it!

How up in Heaven all the forts rang your bells and blazed in all manner of illumination, and invoked the entire hive to help utter your gratification, Heaven and History well know. Your joy? It was as nothing compared with the electric ecstasy therein which flashed unrepressed through all loyal hearts at the South. Heaven only knew it then; History shall know it forever.

"And if it is true, though I don't believe a word of it, there's some base treachery in it, or the officers were all drunk, or they were all a pack of cowards! To give up to Yankees! I do wish the Yankees had managed to kill them. I hope Davis will have them tried and hung," says Mrs. Warner.

"Why, my dear, it would take a perfect factory to keep you in rope," dares her husband, playfully but injudiciously.

"And you are not sorry a single bit!" responds his wife, turning the lightning of her rage pizzaz in every direction that offers. "I do believe you are glad. I tell you, Dr. Warner, if I actually thought so, was satisfied of it, I would not care that, if we have been married so long. I'd—ha! no wonder you wouldn't get up that night the bells rung so. I had to bunch and bunch you ever so often before you woke even. And when you did wake, you said it must be fire, not even expecting a victory. Oughn't to be too certain, you said, at the very time every bell in town was ringing as hard as could be. Dr. Warner, you are the worry of my life! And there you sit this moment just as cool—"

"But you know, Helen, I heard the news several hours ago. Besides, I've just drunk two cups of your excellent coffee. Then, my mind has been taken up with Mrs. Bowles's case. And, really, my dear," said the Doctor, eager to divert the conversation, "I'm getting uneasy about Mrs. Bowles. Such a sensitive, refined little body she is! perfect lady, too, in every respect; but she has given herself up to so much excitement for so long. Rutledge Bowles, too, the news might before last almost deranged her with joy. Then comes that news last night. The reaction was almost too much for her. I tell you what, my dear," continued the Doctor, with indolent hypocrisy, "I'm glad I have a wife who is stronger than her nerves. Glad, my dear, that you have such strong sense of your own to keep you steady these stormy times."

"No, Dr. Warner, you can't blind me. With all her aristocratic airs I know there are some things, at least, in which I can only pity. One can't help liking Alice. You never hear Rutledge Bowles from her lips—never opens her mouth about him, hardly. But, if you mean to say she loves the South more than I do—"

"But what is the use of worrying yourself? The armies are in the field, doing, I dare say, all they can. And you are doing all you can. You are out every day collecting for the soldiers, and you sing for them at all the concerts, not for them in all the tableaux, sew for them, knit, quilt. What more can you do? If one-half of the ladies of Somerville only did one-half of what you do—"

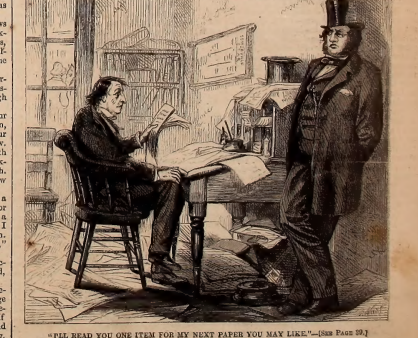
"Ah, Dr. Warner, I see what you are after!" said his wife, somewhat mollified; "but you are only from Tennessee, Eastern Tennessee at that, and you know where I'm from. What I want is for you to be n a interested, excited, more like a warm-hearted Southern man. But there you go day after day with your old saddle-bags over your arm, just as you used to do, feeling people's pulses, dosing children, pulling teeth—you can't talk enough. But this news—oh, it can't, can't—"

"In your acquaintance among the ladies those that talk most, toss most, do most of the work do they, eh? Why you told me yourself, Helen—"

"Pshaw! Dr. Warner, you know perfectly well what I mean. You are not sure enough the South is going to succeed. And you visit among those Union people just as much—more, I believe—than you do among good Secessionists. Nobody can get any thing out of you. Look at Dr. Ginnis."

"Which do you think the best doctor of the two? No, my dear, I'm a physician in large practice, I believe; all my time is taken up with my patients. Dr. Ginnis is more politician than medical man—talks about the war at the top of his big voice at the bedside of the sick, and, no matter how sick they are, for the hour at a time. If he likes, and they like, let him. I prefer to do my way, physic them, and come home to my family. You know what a quiet sort of man I am. Besides, you have patriotism enough for us both, Helen. Take your way my dear—let me take mine."

"Yes, Dr. Warner. Oh yes; I dare say. Very fine. But what worries my life out is nobody can tell. When you are with Secessionists you are as mum as a mouse, or open your ears only to dispute something. When you are with these Union people, oh I know you! Why don't you denounce them, tell me that? Every body in Somerville is talking about you. Mr. Neely told me only last Monday, when he was here to see about Bob drawing those pictures for the blackboard, as if you can expect a child to respect a Yankee teacher!—told me, humph, much faith I have in him, loud as he talks—told me he'd soon told him that Dr. Peel said he really believed you were nothing more'n less than a Abolitionist, if the truth was known!" But to describe Mrs. Warner's emphasis on the word is beyond the power of type.



"And this great Dr. Peel knows, of course, more about me—he has been here less than a year, I believe—than you do, or than they body who has known me here for ten years," says Dr. Warner, pushing away his plate from before him.

"I told Mr. Neely to tell Truman to tell Dr. Peel from me that it was a lie, and I'd like to see him," said Mrs. Warner, promptly enough. "If he hints such a thing to me, the big, hideous old puppy, I'll slap those ears of his! But don't you go and say any thing to him," adds Mrs. Warner, who had got her husband's ears more or more than once in their married life, as he rises from the table.

"Not the least fear of me. I would be a fool to mind any thing any one says of me in these days," replies her helpmate.

"But this delightful, manful news! Are you sure you are not mistaken? It can't, can't be true! I'll put on my sun-bonnet and run over to Mrs. Rut Bowles and she'll know all about it. Though, poor thing! how such a man as Colonel Ret Roberts ever came to marry her, soft, my nothing sort of a thing—oh, one thing, Dr. Warner, engage me ten pounds of coffee at Mr. Ellis's. If my body has any conscience left he—But, Dr. Warner"—and his wife seizes upon him as he passes her—"do you really think, really now, there's any doubt about the South succeeding?"

Nature gives every living thing some mode of defense, or of least escape. People that have feeble hands generally are compensated with edmirable legs. Master Fox does not pretend to the rear nor to the teeth and claws of the lion; but then Sir Reynard is not deficient in cunning. This Dr. Warner can no more stand before the eyes and the tongue of his wife than he can before Atropos. Thin-haired, florid, unaggressive, fat, too, he does obey what nature has left him to do—droops his head and takes it. It is a great deal he has to take, when she is fairly at it. Spare in fat — as she is, but oh, the interpreting of her eyes and lips are about as awful a scourge r need be!

"I'LL READ YOU ONE ITEM FOR MY NEXT PAPER YOU MAY LIKE."—[SEE PAGE 39.]

Sure — for rest in the kitchen, take their share of Mrs. Warner black and silent as night — she, the two children, dodge and escape out of range, with steadily growing contempt for her in her bursts of fondness and reserves as to her anger and loathing. At last, the Doctor gets the largest share of Mrs. Warner and her black eyes; he escapes by never looking up while she is carrying on. The words he simply hears. Long habit helps him there. As the storm lulls he flatters — consciously, awkwardly, transparently flatters. Him, then, flattery is for ever; and here was Mrs. Warner's only source thereof.

So that when Mr. Warner pressed upon him the question last recorded, one being asked at that period over every table at the South, what does the Doctor say?

"Hush, Helen; Sarah not there might hear. I'll whisper, that is, I'll let you know exactly what I really think and feel," and approaching his lips cautiously to her ear, this deceitful practitioner pressed a rapid kiss upon the convenient cheek, disengaged his arm, and was gone.

It was a little strange, such disastrous news too, but it was the first time Dr. Warner had kissed his wife in two years!

THE ACTION ATTEMPTING TO DESCRIBE SOMERVILLE.

CHAPTER II.

IT strikes me, dear reader, that every writer ought to have, from the outset of his book, a perfectly understanding with his reader. They have often noticed that no public speaker succeeds in what he has to say unless there be such an understanding between himself and his audience. And, among speakers, he is an orator of the highest order who, from the opening of his lips to the moment he ceases to speak, is on terms of the closest and clearest mutual understanding with those to whom he addresses himself.

Now, there is one thing in which I will venture to create such an understanding with you, dear reader. I can not describe. You will catch my meaning when I tell you that I have set here some ten minutes nibbling at the end of my pen holder, desirous of describing to you the good town of Somerville in which our story is laid, and find it impossible to do so. It is the same step toward this to say that Somerville is situated in one of the Southern States. Which of these States it may be in, try as I may to conceal it, the reader will be certain to find out long before he reaches the last page — it will slip out, I am satisfied. Each State has its own distinct individuality, a kind of personal identity which impresses itself upon each one of its children. Now, I have more than a notion that I could, after half an hour's conversation with a stranger, tell him to be a preacher, if he was one, and even the very denomination of which he is a preacher; and so if he be lawyer, doctor, planter, schoolteacher, or what not. So of State identity. Throw me down with a man, and I can give you a shrewd guess whether he is a Southerner or not; and if I miss it in naming the very State at the South which he is a native of I will be the first time. And yet I must add one thing more, that the whole truth may be told. Very often have I more nearly hit what one was generally known as the peculiarities of the New Englander — reserve, caution, sharpness in trade, obsequious parsimony, and yet, who had never been outside of his native South in his life. And often, too, have I been quite assuredly assisted with one having all the opposite peculiarities of the Southerner — frank, cordial, generous, radiant with every noble impulse — but we somewhat mournfully claim to be the characteristics of a thorough-blooded Southerner, yet, at last, born and "raised" among the snows and nutmegs, not at all tropical, of New England.

The truth is, we of these American States are at last one people. Our origin and history so far, railways, intermarriage, and other powerful processes of approximation and assimilation now working, at a more and more fierce pace and rate are leavening us into one, and that altogether irrespective whether we like it or not. Those of us who look upon this continent from the point nearest to that from which the Almighty regards it, well know that all things, even the most unlike, are learning millions by a process, which is none other than the purpose of God, into a unity infinitely sublimer than any thing and every thing we have hitherto understood by the word Union! You know this already? Well, but let me say it.

However, it is of Somerville we are now attempting to speak. And how shall it be described? To say it contains some twelve hundred people learns but a very little to the average mind. Could I describe a river as meandering beside it, or forests as engirdling it, or mountains as towering above it, this would be some help. The only objection to this is, that it would not be the truth — a level, post oak, sandy plain is the locality, no mountains, no forests, and no scrubby forest.

It may assist us to say that Somerville is mainly built on one principal street, with tributary streets, like rills to a river, emptying into it on either side. The court-house, too, should be specified as square brick building in the centre of the town. But why should one feel the strong aversion I feel for that gloomy building with its black-pencil portico, its well-worn and exceedingly dirty stairwity, its breezy court-room above, its yellow walls spangled at a young man the figure with the uneven joints, its bewhittled benches and hide-bottomed chairs, its dozen and posts plastered with cut Sheriff's notices, its cracked bell writing, and with notices of cattle lost, written in all possible varieties of spelling and grammar?

The architecture of the four churches yields me nothing whatever to describe in regard to them. Plain, unpainted, wooden structures they else and nothing more — having in many respects a painful resemblance to the dreary court-house. And yet a sound, practical sermon was usually delivered in one and all. Sincere worship, too, as ever was offered in stately cathedral and towering minster, have those unpainted walls witnessed. Or, if there ever was lack of fervor in the morning and night services at which the white congregants of the various churches met in the place. Let us not mind so excessively much about our color and condition in this present world in other regards, if we intend to be found safely in heaven there will be infinite, diviniest influences operating on us there, with an eternity for them to operate in.

Nor will we say any thing of the post-office, two doors off from the principal hotel; if it will help us not to say that Somerville is situated on the one, and Staples, Joe, host in the other, let that also be added; nor of the dry-goods stores, with the red blankets hung in front, nor of those of the provision stores, sticky with sugar and molasses, and greasy with great piles of bacon.

I am aware of it being unpardonable in a story that it is impossible to describe Somerville. In a journey across the State you pass through a dozen towns just like Somerville, and there is nothing at all by which you can remember it from the other towns; just the same sort of post-office at which the cars stopped with you to give out and to take in the mails, just the same grocery and provision and dry-goods, just the same sort of tavern at which you could have dusty meal; like beads on the thread of your travel, they slide on and slide off with the hours. But there is to Somerville a focus, a point having the same relation to Somerville, and to the county of which Somerville is the capital, that even to the State in which Somerville is located, that the brain has to the body. I refer to the office of the Somerville Spy.

Imagine a two story frame-house, not very far from the post-office. True, the huge sign-board which is suspended in front of it has fallen down, but then the largest half of what remains has been stood up against the side of the house on an end, and some one has painted upon it who already know what is inscribed thereon. All the printing is done up stairs. The editor's room you enter through a door in front of the office. Nor need you knock; the door is never locked, and all you have to do is to push it open, if it should be shut, and walk in. You need not wait to introduce yourself, and you will be waved by the editor to a seat and to the last paper. If you are any body of importance, and any where on this side of the country, a Judge say, or a candidate of the same views as Mr. Lamum, or a Colonel of some regiment which Somerville may have had, have only to make yourself agreeable, and in the next number of the Somerville Star you will read how "greatly pleased and honored by a visit from our excellent friend," Colonel this or General that. . . . "We are extremely gratified to learn from him, or . . . that the sentiments he has informed by him," and then you will read the information you may have incidentally communicated to the editor, which you may be sure will be in print vastly more important and decided in its expressions than you ever dreamed it to be at the time you mentioned it.

At the very moment Dr. Warner and his wife are conversing upon the news of the night before at their breakfast-table, Lamum and Dr. Peel are full of it in the editorial sanctum. This is not quite correct, however, as there is an individual in Somerville — in the whole land, in fact, who is not at the same time conversing upon the same subject.

"I say, Lamum, between us, you know, what do you think of this news?" It is Dr. Peel who asks the question. He has read the bit of brown paper upon which it is printed some six times over, and holds it to read several times over yet before he is done.

"I think, Sir, that one half is false and the other half is exaggeration," replies Mr. Lamum, promptly. Lamum has printed a paper too long not to know all about such things. We call him Mr. Lamum. The fact is, he is called Colonel Lamum and General Lamum and Major Lamum indifferently. Mr. Lamum by very few. Indulge me in the weakness of dropping all his titles and calling him simply Lamum. People never called him any thing else except in speaking to him.

An authorized man is Lamum. He may be shirty, and he may be fifty years old — you can form no conclusion on the matter merely by looking at him. Excessively lean; eyes much stooped in the shoulders; face very pale, and with a singular color under any possible circumstance; nose long and sharp; thin black hair; a of swift gait in walking; prompt and sharp speech; very shabby in clothing — that is the man.

Although continually associated with people that do, Lamum never smokes, never drinks, never plays a game — at least of cards. You never catch him in a billiard-room or doggery, unless it is at a church or common school to hound nowhere else. Lamum rarely enters a church — never, in fact, save for some political reason, such as the delivery of a political prayer or sermon. Yet Lamum swears only when very gentlyly provoked. No one has ever breathed a syllable against him as a profane man. In regard to his various pecuniary transactions his enemies violently assail him; but then his friends as vehemently defend him. All these transactions are enwound in lawsuits without number, it is impossible to decide upon them in advance of the jury.

One word expresses Lamum from his earliest manhood upward, heart and soul, body, mind, and spirit, every thing and conduct — he is a politician. Above politics, beneath politics — if it had any beneath — Lamum has not a thought or emotion. All his reading is political papers; he holds no conversation, when he can help it, except upon political topics. He knows no ties to any living creature except political ties. As to his wife he sees her only across the table at meals, or, perhaps, in bed; in bed is when he comes in late at night. His printer's devils have a joke that all his courting consisted of political conversation. This is believed generally why she married him Venus would have to ask of all the gods of Olympus to ascertain; perhaps Mars could tell about it. Certain it is, all of his street fights have been with political foes. There is nobody in the world — perhaps his wife excepted — he is so thoroughly, he has no time for such nonsense — loves this pale, cold, eager man.

There are many who fear him throughout his State; but oh, how unanimously throughout the State, which he rules with his pen, is he hated! Rebels hang in effigy, there must be a resemblance between the very appearances of the two men. Like Robespierre he loves politics not for the glory of it — he brings him no wealth — for the dry sake of politics itself. Something like the intense fealtiness — not so much of a rabbit for the sake of a dog-skin — possesses his mystic game. He has a cold yet infinite zest in the intrigue, the twisting of facts, the moguling of cold nothings, the diffinishing of disagreeable somethings — the downright lying, the bullying, the bribing, the rewarding, the punishing — the wielding of Power; that is it. Robespierre had his guillotine, had he? Every Saturday's Spy has like an axe. Terrible weapon! some if not his neck! Talk about the unscrupulous devotion of a Jesuit to his order!

Let it suffice to say that Lamum was, in the most exclusive and intense sense possible to the word, a Politician, not in the sense of a statesman. Lamum was a politician, feeble voice could not make speeches, never tried. But his pen! Ah, how powerfully he spoke through that! Ah! how he could with it hammer away in every county in the State who did mount the stump.

"Look here, General," says his companion yet again, "you are going to print this ridiculous dispatch, are you? I say, you will fix it so that your name shall not be entered in the office. Dr. Peel resumes his brown dispatch. A large, dark man is Dr. Peel. What you might call a bilious temperament, with very black hair and whiskers, singularly black. Dr. Peel possesses deep black eyes as singularly restless and eager for the news. The Doctor has been in Somerville but a few months; shortly before the blockade was established over the Southern ports he arrived. Dr. Peel has long given up his practice, he says — has means enough to live on.

And the Doctor has means, plainly it would seem — gold. No man can be more prompt in paying his board bill; nor does he make a single client a present. He is constitutionally a liberal one and all, and purchases freely. The Doctor is partial to buggy-riding, and makes it a point to take some one of the acquaintances with him whenever he drives out. Though he has been in Somerville for so short a time he knows every body. Especially is he bland and glove with Dr. Ginnis, Mr. Neely, Colonel Roberts, old Mr. Jugler, the Rev. Mr. Bolger, Lamum, and the rest of the genuine, from-the-start, unmitigated mistake Secessionists. Of those who are suspected of Union people he has the most unmitigated horror.

"Thank you, Sir; I wish to have nothing to say to such traitors" — he remarks — "I'd just as lief hang them as eat my dinner." He has frequently observed, "I'd put an ounce of lead through them, or six inches of cold steel into their ative livers and black hearts as quick as take drink, Sir, and a — sight quicker!" ar ance his hands would clench, his whole will, p he would curse the individuals in question ith a species of frenzy that left any other man ar behind.

Not a war-meeting of any sort but he was the first to be present and the last to leave, if he could not to augment the longest to contribute. On one occasion, at least, he publicly offers from his own pocket to equip and clothe in a full uniform to the fifty-dollar bounty, to every man that will enlist in the new company being raised. From the earliest hour of the day till the latest moment at which he can find any one to converse with him, he has but one topic — Secession and the War. He can not come from the house even at table. It is confessed that he is stronger and louder and more violent in the matter than any other man in or around Somerville. There is a ferocity of manner, a recklessness of assertion, an insanity of feeling about him, which rather cooler than otherwise the most violent of his associates.

Considering all the circumstances of his advent in Somerville; that he is — he has — the money — not paper-money, but gold, Sir, round twenty-dollar piece — I'll be hanged, Sir, if I don't believe they the men has no occupation here at all but talk Secession and the War — I'll be — —, Sir, if I don't firmly believe that Dr. Peel is a spy. And here the voice of the speaker is sunk into a whisper, and is received with a start and an oath by the hearer: such that often before are remarks made in Somerville.

"There is my trunk, gentlemen." Dr. Peel remarked when a committee visited his room at Staples's Hotel to investigate matters. "Don't forget the lid part of it, please. My extra coats, waistcoats, and breeches are hanging on the hooks behind the door. I will take off the clothes I now have on also. Don't forget those extra boots under the bed — might have papers in the linings or between the soles. There you see my revolvers too; pair of howie-knives also — examine the sealskards, gentlemen. My Enfield rifle stands in the corner. The mattress, too, and the books on the table. Make a thorough search, please."

No man's room can be more unembarrassed than Dr. Peel by the visit and the suspicion which led to it. One would have supposed that he would have felt somewhat at it, resented it, killed some one. Not a bit of it. Dr. Peel was not ruffled a feather by any thing of the sort.

There was in the some singular discrepancies in the Doctor's statements in regard to the place of his birth, in regard to his having corresponded ence with his cold and intimate friend Beauregard," which "had got confusedly mislaid" when desired to produce; but no evidence could be found as to the Doctor of a negative nature, and so he "sued his course louder than ever.

It was a little singular, however, the conduct of Dr. Peel, after having stely exerted to the door of his chamber the committee above referred to — Bob Wilson, Jugler, Lamum, study Dr. Ginnis the committee were. Seating himself, having called out after them as they descended from the stairs the last direction, even cordial good-morning, with his hands in his lap, forefinger and thumb arched to meet forefinger and thumb, his first thought it seems, then began to smile, at last rolled himself upon his bed, fairly convulsed with laughter, genuine, prolonged, complete, sparkling from every pore, nostril, streaming in tears from his eyes, possessing him and shaking his every frame from head to foot.

"Going to the war? I am going," the Doctor had often remarked, in answer to questions on that effect. "If you think, Sir, I'll run away when there are Yankees to be killed? No, Sir, I am going; and if I was to see my own brother fighting against me I'd not scruple to shoot from my rifle here through their hearts first one. To you think money could pay me to stay behind? And the Doctor had proceeded to point out the rest of the feelings of his soul on the subject in a way which left nothing to be desired.

And yet Dr. Peel's burly figure was still to be seen in every store, at every street corner, before every bar. It was singular. In constant correspondence with Beauregard! Called from my rifle here through their hearts first one. To you think money could pay me to stay behind? And the Doctor had proceeded to point out the rest of the feelings's for his soul on the subject in a way which left nothing to be desired.

And yet Dr. Peel's burly figure was still to be seen in every store, at every street corner, before every bar. It was singular. In constant correspondence with Beauregard! Called from my rifle here through their hearts first one. To you think money could pay me to stay behind? And the Doctor had proceeded to point out the rest of the feelings's for his soul on the subject in a way which left nothing to be desired.

And yet Dr. Peel's burly figure was still to be seen in every store, at every street corner, before every bar. It was singular. In constant correspondence with Beauregard! Called from my rifle here through their hearts first one. To you think money could pay me to stay behind? And the Doctor had proceeded to point out the rest of the feelings's for his soul on the subject in a way which left nothing to be desired.

"THE NEWS OF TUESDAY NIGHT.

"Thank Heaven, we know our readers well enough to know the manner in which they received the news of Tuesday night. Unbounded exultation was what all men, who have said, 'At the first glance, we take for certain that large part of the report which is manifestly and palpably false. Months ago the North was taught, and the nation generally, to believe that some sort of victory, a turn which one of the South have always known as well as we know our own existence. We feel certain that the people are the very appearances of our hopes expressed.

"It is because we suppose that this has been other than the case at Fort Donelson? Did not the last dispatch distinctly declare that the enemy had not yet entered force assaulting that fort? But yesterday we were telling in which we stood as a matter of fact. Why, then, do we pay the least attention to-day to the grossest possible which have come to our ears? We feel certain that intelligent readers will trust such trash with the contempt it deserves.

"Even supposing the Federals have met with some slight success in Tennessee, it is but for a moment. All the news all the South will pour forth its legions by millions, and, ah! by then, on many fields, and, above all, will the Federal armies be driven back, but our territory will be freed, and Louisville, Nashville, Memphis and Chicago! Looking at this news as we will, by any news we find in a general copy of register. Besides Europe this our Government has been recognized by every nation in Europe, hailing with enthusiastic welcome its advent among the noblest nations of the earth. The Seventh, already exercised by the whole civilized world. North, already exercised by the whole civilized world. North, already exercised by the whole civilized world. can not endure two months longer its enormous expenses. For what we know, our independence has been achieved elged by the North even in spite of this sheet could pen we will say—very sincerely—that and by to bring about this a line but the utmost ability was in the warmest sympathies from their very constitution of his soul, in the establishment of this nation, and long of his life. Of the establishment of this nation, and time it will come for very establishment, rank second to none else on the globe, we are as certain as of our very existence.

"Good as wheat!" exclaimed Dr. Peel, as the editor laid down his blotted sheet on the table.

"Oh, that is only one article!" replied the editor. "I will have a dozen like it, longer or shorter, in the next number."

"It's good, very good," said his companion; "yet it seems to me you do not pepper it or stimulate enough. Why don't you print as I talk, as you talk? Pitch in, you know; lay it on scathing hot. You don't let on your steam, nowadays."

"If I did I would simply burst the boiler. No, Sir," said this Machiavelli; "that is the blunder other editors and all stump speakers make, eternally falling into. They go it with too much rush—overdo the thing. It is in politics as it is in a battle, the heaviest-needs people always get the whipping. It is the cool, deliberate ones that gain the victory. I show myself positive and absolutely certain; but no fuss, no fury. Strike the wedge too hard and it bounces out, you know."

At this moment a gentleman, evidently a country planter, entered the room. The editor hailed him as Colonel Juggins.

"That is I, Colonel," he added, with a wave of the inky hand toward his companion.

"Oh, I know the Doctor. Many a good, warm talk we've had over the Yankees," said the Colonel. "But look here, General," he continued, "what about this news? I tell you things is looking pretty: this child came mighty nigh taking a scare."

"We've read the dispatch, Colonel?" asked the editor, indifferently.

"Yes, I do read that doggoned dispatch," said his visitor, anxiously, "and I'm mighty anxious to get your next paper to see what you will fix it up. Fact is, I couldn't wait; I thought I must see you right away. I want to know what you think of things now?"

"And is it possible, Colonel Juggins, that a man of your sense can ask such a question, and you know the Yankees as well as you do?" began the editor.

"Don't know nothin' about them; never was there in my life; never want to be," interrupted his visitor. Fact is, you and Mr. Neely is about all the Northern-born people I ever see to say intimate with. I don't suppose such as you are fair specimens of Northern folks. Yes, I've known a lot of overseers in my time hailing from the North. But what I want's they hand on the hands! But go on, General, go on; I'm anxious to hear what sort of a way you have got to have news, if it's hard to swallow, I tell you!"

"Well," continued the editor, "if you don't know our drastically enemies, you can't pretend to say you do not know our own brave boys?"

"I know, as well as you, General, they'll fight to the last drop. My Tom is among them. I suppose I ought to know. Fight!" and Colonel Juggins had not breath left to say more.

"Well, then," said the editor, "you know my opinion of the enemy?"

"Yes; but look here. Executed Bowling Green, didn't they? Beauties, that's our forwardest fellows do, supposin' they meet overwhelmin' numbers, or their guns won't carry as far as the others, or they've got corned at their lead, or their waistcoat buttons about, or their fodder gives out, or—"

"If you will listen a moment I will let you know what I think," interrupted the editor; and he proceeded to read aloud the leader he had just written, besides one or two articles in the same effect, to all which his visitor listened with the deepest and most painful attention.

"If you want any thing further to set your mind completely at rest, Colonel," continued the editor, "there is a whole pile of the latest papers lying about the floor there. Read them, Colonel, see what they say, all of them! You'll find there's not a paper there isn't just as confident as I am, and every Southern man ought to be."

"Well," said Colonel Juggins, with a glance at the pile of newspapers and a contraction on the floor, but with a sigh of relief, "I dare say it's all right. You see all the papers, General. Besides, you live out at the North and ought to know the sort of people they raise there. What fellows they are to make things, calicoes and such like, and to invent machines, and to make cars and sewing machines, and fifty thousand such contraptions. I'm glad you think they can't fight. Now we've got it on your say-so we can put the thing through. My place keeps me so hard at it, breakin' up and plunkin', and cleanin' out the weeds and pickin', and gittin', and pressin' all the year round, I don't her any time to examin' into things at all deep like. One thing heightened me up a little," continued the old planter, as he settled himself to read, "Pete Shehan fell in with me as I rode into town this morning. It happened so, you see, or else he didn't believe one word of this doggoned news. If the truth was known, says Pete, Beauregard is this minute in Baltimore."

"Who is Pete Shehan?" asked General Lamum.

"Well, Pete isn't any body in particular, a sort of well-digger like," answered Colonel Juggins. "Irish, he is. He's been at me to let him dig a well two hundred and fifty feet, and down to the quarters. I must her them wells, but then Pete he gets drunk all the time, and, that's more, he never gets sober. But Pete's all right on the goose—strong for Secession I tell you. Another thing Pete told me: he know the British had recognized us; he ought to know, he said, since he came from one of the British islands himself. Pete's only Pete, but he cheered me up a heap. However, don't let me interrupt you, General," added Colonel Juggins, for the editor had taken his pen and was busily engaged writing.

"Make yourself at home, Colonel, you'll find plenty to encourage you in the papers," said the editor, never taking pen from paper while he spoke.

Colonel Juggins ventures on the first of the pile of papers.

"I don't forget to give it to those Union chaps this week," remarked Dr. Peel at this juncture. "I tell you what, gentlemen," he said, "when I got that news last night I was sitting up till it came in—if I had met one of those Union men with any thing like a glad look on his face I'd killed him dead on the spot. If I had met one of them, I believe I'd have shot him down any how, I was so savage."

But in leaving out the oaths and curses with which Dr. Peel garnished his remarks, very cold and meagre and unlike the Doctor's diction in his recent Address.

"Look here, Dr. Peel," said Colonel Juggins, paper in hand, "I must know about this Tennessee body known as the Union man, but I can't chime in with you there. Them fellows is dreadful mistaken, but they've been forced, they've been put upon, that any of us. All they her in the world is in and around Somerville. They always was opposed to this here war. You and I would ruin this country, and all that. They ought to go into the thing now we are in it. I know; it's a shame they're in it. I'm not denying that, even though. Almost every man of them is Southern born and raised; every soul of them owns his own hands—"

"Don't, you mustn't speak ill of Neely," in a volley of oaths. "There's that Guy Brooks to begin with—"

"Why, Dr. Peel, Guy owns fifty hands!" put in Colonel Juggins.

"I don't care; he is from Kentucky, and Kentucky is as rotten as East Tennessee. Then there is that Parson Arthur—"

"Why, what has he been doin'?" asked the old planter, with amazement.

"Nothing, Sir, nothing at all, and that is the very reason he ought to be looked after. Comes him into town from Bethel, and, I find Barker on the streets all the week, using all his influence one way. Go to his church on Sunday, his sermon from one end to the other is the best sort of stump speech I ever want to hear. Did you ever hear one of his prayers?"

Colonel Juggins made no reply. "Oughter one of his members," he added.

"There's a prayer for you; prays for the Confederacy, prays for Jeff Davis, prays for our army, prays for victory—and it's worth going ten miles to hear that man pray for the defeat and the utter destruction of the Yankees. Barker the Rector sealed his cordial approbation of the Reverend Mr. Barker's prayers with the most emphatic oaths, and Colonel Juggins,

"Parson Arthur, I suppose you know," said the planter, "was born and raised at the South. Barker says he was born in Ireland, but Parson Arthur is different. When we had that burying about Know Nothin'ism, Arthur he kept clear of it, though I should about like him then a heap; staid inside of his pulpit like. Brother Barker, you'll remember—no, you won't remember, but you were in Europe, but General will, though—Brother Barker he pitched in, went all over the country organizin' the Know Nothin' lodges. I preached Know Nothin'ism, prayed Know Nothin'ism. Oh, Brother Barker he is a full team, specially on a camp ground when things is full blast. Parson Arthur, he is different. Old Master didn't make him that sort; he's quiet, sober-like. However, seems to me, Parson Arthur ought to—don't much of a hand reading papers, specially where there's so many. Glad to learn from you, General, things ain't as bad as I feared. Parson Arthur looks a little squally like. You see, I'm from old Tennessee myself, and all that about Nashville and Fort Donelson and Henry County Court House. Good-mornin'."

"Hold on, Doctor, one moment," said the editor, as that individual rose to depart, "you are a Union man, and that immense stores to the value probably of millions have fallen into the hands of the Confederates, our men will be thwarted in prosecution of Washington! He may be there even as we talk!"

The same gentleman who informed our friend that there is no longer any doubt of the fact that Gen. Beauregard has abandoned Richmond, and, England, and, probably, by all the other powers of Europe. The Confederate army, which was to be so much increased in effect, and one who has had access to the highest circles in Europe, has no doubt whatever that the recognition, important as it must be, is but an indication of the final acknowledgment of the Southern Confederacy by the civilized world. We give this news as we heard it, but we think our readers may rely upon its correctness.—[ED.

"Why, General, how did you get it? when did it come? why didn't you tell me of it before?" asked Dr. Peel before his companion was well through, and, mingled with his oaths, there was a singular nervousness of manner which strongly resembled anxiety.

"You heard it yourself from Juggins," answered the editor coolly, even indifferently.

"Yes, but, look a-here! Pete what's-his-name? Come, General, you don't mean to say—"

"Hush your racket, Peel," said the editor rather testily, while his friend indulged himself in convulsions of laughter mingled with hearty swearing.

"Lamum, you are a genius?" exclaimed he at length, wiping his eyes, and emphasizing his opinion with a string of oaths.

"But how if Juggins—?" he began to ask.

"Do you suppose the old codger will ever receive opinion in a thing he information?" replied the editor, coolly.

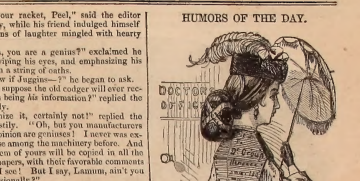
"Recognize it, certainly not!" replied the Doctor, hastily. "Oh, but you manufacturers of public opinion are geniuses! I never was exactly so close among the machinery before. And then this item of yours will be copied in all the rest of the papers, with their favorable comments upon it!" Ha! ha! But I say, Lamum, ain't you afraid occasional?"

"Are you fool enough not to know that whatever appears in paper to-day is knocked completely out of the minds of the people by what will come out in it to-morrow? It's with all sort of shavings we keep the pot boiling. Search those papers," continued the editor, pointing at the heaps of them which covered table, floor, and chairs of his very dirty and disorderly office, "and you will find they are made up of just such items. They originate now here, now there, and all the rest copy them, commenting on them, swell them. The people read at little else all the time. Most do it, Sir; we've got into this way that we have to fight or we get out of it! They beat hollow drums and blow brazen trumpets to urge them on when in battle—our editors keep exciting the people are doing, in our way, exactly the same thing. We are in for it! Any thing is better than the old Union. That we should go to submit to—to submit to—don't care what comes so that is down. 'Disgardless of all possible consequences,' was what Jackson used to say; that is the jog we are under—our motto in place of old E Pluribus Unum! I believe in what Pryor, and John Tyler's son there is, that we are in the rest of them now."

GERMAN UNIONISTS IN TEXAS.

THE engraving on our first page illustrates an interesting and affecting episode in the history of the rebellion in Texas.

In the summer of 1862, when an attempt was made by conscription to drag into the rebel army the Germans of West Texas, a number of these gathered from the mountainous counties of Kerr, Kendall, Llano, and Gillespie, with the determination to proceed to Mexico, and, if possible, to join the Union army. Their plan was defective: they had no rifles, and the evening of August 9, in the neighborhood of Fort Clark, where they encamped in a little valley surrounded by a thicket of cactus, they were awakened by a volley of musketry. Two of their pickets, wounded, came running in and gave the alarm. A sharp fight of an hour ensued, before a red men it was impossible to say, was advancing upon the camp. Two pickets, ERNEST BESELER and LOUIS BOERNER, were killed in the fight.



The small and badly-armed band of Germans prepared for resistance. Daylight, now at hand, disclosed to them the strength of a body of a hundred strong. Their own ra'ks had been thinned by desertion, but the fight was at last hopelessly maintained. The struggle had lasted an hour and a half all but twelve or fourteen of the Germans were wounded and the others were wholly unmanned. Retreat was resolved upon, but while withdrawing from the field they twice repulsed their assailants, who then desisted from pursuit. The band now numbering but forty-two, of whom eighteen were wounded, fled to the mountains, where they found shelter in a cave, and where they remained in cactus leaves. Some of them got astray and were captured, some were murdered by the rebels.

The widow of the Union man who had been killed were left on the battle-field, and so long as the rebel flag floated over Texas no parent or friend ventured to afford them the slightest aid. As soon, however, as the United States had re-established its Government in the State, E. DEGENER, the father of two of the victims, accompanied by twenty-five men, relatives and friends of the slain, went to the battle-field, collected their remains, and brought them to Comfort. Degener received the honors of Christian burial, on the 29th of August, 1865. The funeral ceremony was of an imposing and touching character. Our artist has taken a faithful sketch of the loyal people, headed by the fathers of four of the victims—old men of sixty and seventy years—who bared the deep furrows made by four white horses. Under the Union banner lay the remains of the MARTYRS OF LOYALTY. A detachment of United States troops, under Lieutenant-Mesmer, accompanied the cortège. At the grave E. DEGENER pronounced an oration which brought tears of grief to the eyes of the assembled, who manifested patriotism the hearts of the loyal mourners. He concluded thus:

"The sacrifice that we, the fathers of the slaughtered, made to our country and to liberty is great and dolorous. We shall, however, console ourselves; we shall be capable of having offered to our cause the Lord, if the glorious victory of its arms bear all the fruits that this nation and the whole of humanity justly expect from its cause!"

The Government of the Federal troops fired a salute over the grave, and the liberated soil of Texas inclosed the remains of its brave and faithful sons. The little remote spot where they rest must be to the nation as sacred as those places where thousands of her fallen defenders are deposited. Small in number, far away from the patriotic heart and the strong arm of the loyal North, surrounded by foes and enemies of the Union, these brave and devoted Germans offered their lives as a holy protest against the treason of the recreant rebels.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

ONLY A HINT.

OBSERVE CAREFULLY THE SHADOW OF "A SMALL WHAT," AND YOU WILL SOON DISCOVER A LARGE DOCTOR'S BILL AND THE OUTLINES OF A COFFIN!

"HAVE any of Toby Continent's stories been printed in book volumes?" inquired a country gentleman in one of our book-stores the other day.

"Toby Continent! Who's he?"

"Why, the man that writes so many stories for the papers. I see he came to more newspaper copies than any other man, and I want to get 'em in bound volumes."

The salesman answered in the negative, and the gentleman continent went elsewhere with the inquiry, which we dare say he will be continued.

Is there any kind which can sing The Lays of Ancient Rome?—Yes, they are MODERN LAYS.

But look a simple a man with his hands in his trowsers pocket and a pipe in his mouth, looking on to see how it will come out. Good luck to a man of pluck, and he catches, his sleeves rolled up, working to make it come out right.

MY OWN IDEAS.

I would rather fall in love than from Bunker's Hill monument.

I would rather feed a boa than be a seal.

I prefer a legal tender to a tax-collector.

I would rather wait my brave than knit my stockings.

I would rather be kicked by my dog than by my enemy.

The "other" most parts of the earth are supposed to be the parts which nobody else want to live in.

INTERPRETATION OF DREAMS.—To dream of a mill-stone around your neck is a sign of which you may expect if you do not keep straight side. When a young lady dreams of a coffin it indicates that she should immediately discontinuing her tight, and also that she should not go out in wet weather. To dream of fire is a sign that—if you are married and your wife has lights in your house are out before you go to bed. To dream that your nose is red at the tip is an intimation that you had better leave off brandy-and-water.

THE ONLY MILITARY COMMAND THAT THE SUTLER UNDERSTANDS.—Charge!

Don't open your purse to lustily or too wide—nor your mouth either.

The latest invention is a "palpitating broom" for the ladies, which is said to render by concealed spring when an extra display of "emotion" is required.

FEEING OR FEEDING.

Whoever dwells at big hotels
Should be prepared to "feed"—
The guest, 'tis said, can't be well fed,
Unless the waiter's fee'd.

The order of the country grace, who sent to the proprietors of a morning newspaper for some of the "latest dates," which the paper announced as just received, has got his best grammar with.

How was the weather on Monday last—Joe Halligan's title?—Because it was quite complex.

We hear constantly of absconding railroad contractors. It is not a matter of much surprise to us, when we consider that it is a regular business with these fellows to make tracks.

The man who was "carried away" by the eloquence of a certain popular preacher, was brought back on the following Sunday by the same influence that carried him away.

When is a smack on the mouth no offense?—When it is received from the lips of a pretty woman.

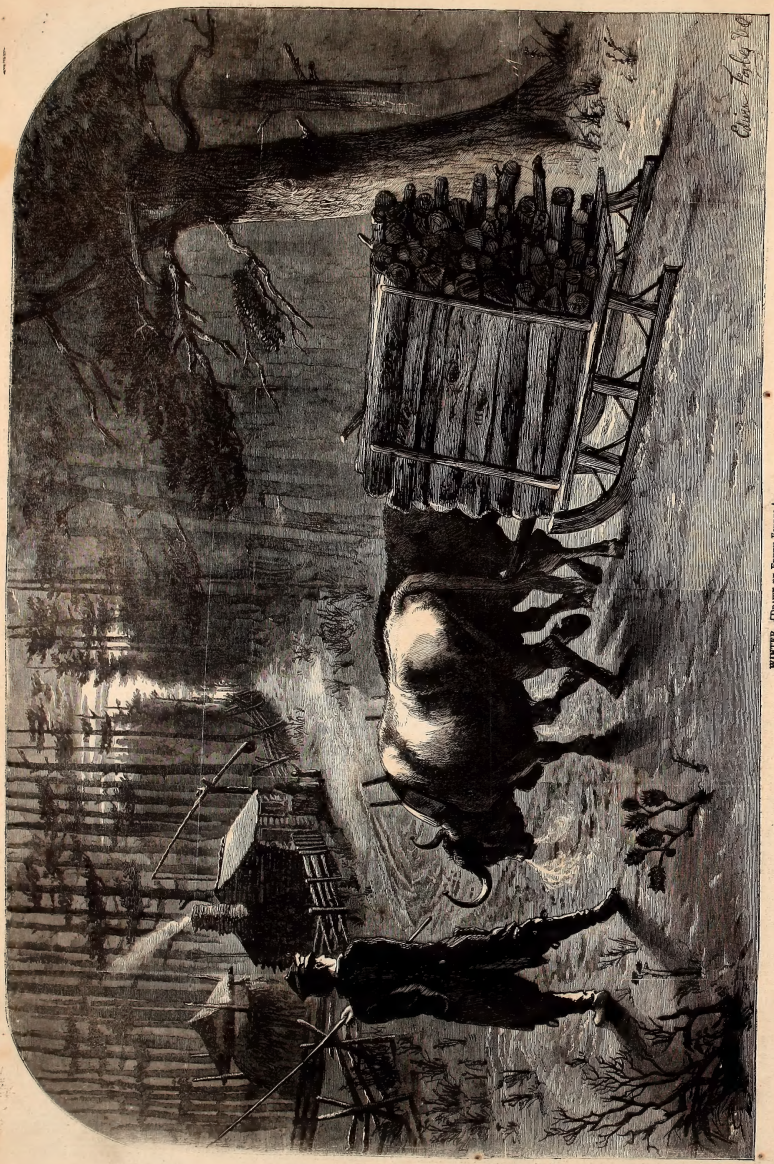
A wag in Detroit has been taking liberties with the reputation of the Prairie republic. He was asked whether he knew of an accident on that road, and replied: "Only one, and once a week." Inquiry elicited the routine for Detroit, and died of old age at Binghampton—half-way!"

When a broker loses all his money he is dead broke; but when he dies he is dead beat.

Love's fetters were formerly made of flowers, but in our day gold bonds are preferred.

In a Southern exchange we find a column containing what is termed "A Brief Treatise to the Memory of—sketches of men setting up with the body."

Easy way to make a bank canoe. Take any canoe and put a dog in it.



"Hallo, Mr. Englishman! can't you stop your steamer a minute or two?"

"Stop the boat! What for?"

"Why, we want to look at your biler; she's afraid of it herrin'."

"Dear me," said Mrs. Partington to Ike the other day, as she was reading the paper, "what an astonishing circumstance, poor, dear man! I suppose it was the wind on the eternal deep. I do believe boat." Here she came to the paper, and found the paragraph, as she supposed headed, referred to a death of an esteemed gentleman on view as a visionary respectfully.

Why is a dog's tail a very great novelty?—Because no one ever saw it before.

WINTER.—DRAWN BY EDWIN FORBES.

TYPES OF AMERICAN BEAUTY.—[FROM PHOTOGRAPHS BY C. H. WILLIAMSON, BROOKLYN, L. I.]

BREAKING THE SNOW.

SEE the masses of the snow
Piled across the trackless highways,
Choking all the lanes and by-ways,
Covering brooks and hiding bridges
And the leeward sides of ridges;
Dazzling, cold, so smooth and white
That the fox tracks overnight,
Delicately stepped and straight,
From the wood to farm-yard gate,
Miles away his courses show.

Ho! The stalwart men are out,
Traveler blind with ghostly light
Of the snow and of the night,
Doctor, weary of patient pale,
And the carrier of the mail,
Farmer, with his load of corn,
Woodman, rising ere the morn,
Through the drifts must come and go.
Ho! The breakers of the snow
Come along with call and shout.

Bob-sled quickly down have they,
Drawn by many a patient pair,
And wild steers, with sullen air,
Flouncing wheezing, dragged along
By the leaders, slow and strong,
Through the drifts with sinking feet,
Wet with struggling, white with sleet,
Till they know man's will and thought,
And their great wild eyes are brought
All his mandates to obey.

Muffled breakers of the snow,
With high boots and shovels bright,
Toss the masses left and right,
But the boys, too quick to shift,
Work to play in bank and drift;
Tumble in half-smothered heaps
While the great dog on them hops—
And some man, who keeps the joy
In his memory of the boy,
Reaches them with long-armed throw.

Life of health in mind and limb,
Self-exerted, free and pure,
Full of all that shall endure,
As the firm foundation-stone
Of a nation's hope alone,
Proof against the storm and cold,
Cut like granite, sharp and bold,
From eternal quarries deep,
Where earth's strongest forces keep
Empire through the ages dim.

ABBY DILL'S FORTUNE.

WE taught school together. It was a district school "down East," and she had the girls under her charge and I the boys. I presume she was eighteen when we met, and I know I was twenty-five. I had heard her name before I saw her. It was Abigail. I am an ugly man, and I expected to see a spinster to match. That was perhaps why she seemed so very pretty as I caught the first glimpse of her in the golden morning light streaming on the old school-house steps. She had on a white dress, and the blue frill on at her neck was no bluer than her eyes. Fourteen dazzled calls I let hair red. It was really burnished gold. When I stood beside her she said, simply, "My fellow-teacher, Mr. Lorne, I presume. I am Abby Dill."

And we shook hands and were friends from that moment.

There is little romance in the rule of a district school. Do you wonder that I strove to find a little for myself in the presence of Abby Dill? Most young men of five-and-twenty would have done so and—the circumstances. Weary of boy faces, dull or saucy, of stammering names and stupid eyes, I turned to look at her over my desk a hundred times a day by way of relief.

It always helped me, I never saw her flushed or angry. I never saw her sleepily drudging at her task. Always alert, always pleasant. Sometimes with a pencil stuffed behind her rebellious, sunborne with a comic lifting of the eyebrows (quite involuntary I knew), when the biggest dunce in the class fell prostrate over some childish stumbling-block.

It was not the sedate placidity which will at times pervade a mature lover, but a merry good temper not to be soured by trifles.

I had taught before with one Mrs. Goodenough, and only my wife's status, or some church who knows watch over poor schoolmasters, kept me from flinging the dictionary at her head, when, in moments of more than mortal trouble, I caught sight of her with the same fat smile, the same front teeth visible, the same sleepy folding of her hands at her waistband.

Abby Dill, smiling or grave, always made me feel comfortable. Pretty soon I began to think what pictures I would make of her were I an artist. Whether I should choose the time when the sun burnished her golden hair, as it fell through the window near her seat, when cheek and lip and lily throat were three-like masses of high lights and color, or that hour when the long shadows crept over the school-house and amidst them the fair face was mellowed and toned down to that of a Madonna.

Then I began to think of a home and fireside where she should welcome me after the day's toil. I fancied her running to meet me at the door; sitting opposite me at the table; sewing while I read to her in the long winter evenings; leaning on my arm as we walked together in the summer moonlight, and then I acknowledged that I was in love with Abby Dill.

It was not the work of a few days nor of a few weeks. She had taught together a year before I said, "I must have her for my wife or be wretched." And then I hardly knew whether she liked me or not.

In that country place "courting" was performed after a set fashion. The gentleman was paired off with the lady on all festive occasions. They sat together and whispered in public. They made no great secret of kisses, and the usual manner of promenading, even in broad daylight, was with the masculine arm about the feminine waist. Consequently no mortal guessed the state of my feelings, and village gossip never suggested the possibility of Mr. Lawrence Lorne and Miss Abby Dill "keeping company."

But I think she knew how I loved her. I thought then she liked to know it. She had a look she kept for me; a tone in her voice. I believe, I alone heard. Loving all the world as she did, I could not help hoping that she loved me best of all. Yet I was not sure.

I tried to find out for myself without asking—all in vain. At last I resolved to tell her how I felt. That day, after school, I wandered away into the woods, and sat there thinking. I knew I was not rich: I knew she was as poor as I: were we really too poor to marry? Should youth wait for gold and labor before it took love to its heart? Were gray-beards right, and the heartless boys who disobeyed them wrong? It seemed to me not. We were young. I had energy, hope, and strength. She had all that I possessed, with the sweetness and beauty that had made me her. Why, if she loved me, should not we begin the world together?

The breezes sighing through the branches whispered, "Why not?" The birds sang it. The sun smiled it in the golden blotches of light dropped through the leafy shadows. My heart said, "Why not?" in its every beat. And the noon and went to her home across the fragrant clover-field, where the honey-laden bees seemed once more to drone it, "Why not, if she loves you?" I found her sitting on the porch, sewing. In the cozy parlor her old grandmother sat asleep over her Bible.

The summer day was nearly over, but it was light yet, and the windows of the houses and those of the little church were turned to flame-color by the setting sun. All along the road tinkling bells told of homeward-driven cows; sweet labores trudged out of the fields into the village. Everything was peaceful and calm, and then a flitting flock of birds flung a passing shadow to the earth, and far away a sweet-toned bell was ringing. It was going for a forty bell; I knew that, yet it minded me of the olden peal of the curfew. And still the sweetness and the loveliness of Nature, the look in Abby's blue eyes, the throbbing of my own heart seemed to say to me, "Why not, for she loves you?"

But I could not speak out there. If I had this story would never have been told. She must be quite alone with me before the words I must speak could come. So I asked her to walk with me. She assented.

"But we must have tea first," said she. "I am not ethereal enough to dine on love and air, and grandmother is ready for hers, no doubt. Come in!"

So she folded up the muslin she was covering with bits and blossoms, and went to the door where the table was spread with a snowy cloth, and the homely home-like tea-time sights and odors asked the same old question.

I remember she had just poured out a cup of tea for me, and that in taking it my hand had, by chance, touched hers, thrilling me through with its velvet softness, when some one came to the door and knocked. Abby said, "Come in!" and in walked a great hulking lad, a scholar of mine, whose father kept the Post-office.

"Evenin', Miss Abby," he said. "I was comin' past, and father said I'd call and get his mail. It comes in this time afternoon, and looks important."

Abby took the letter.

"Thank you, Tom," she said. "Won't you have a cup of tea?" But Tom, scarlet with confusion at the request, "hadn't time, couldn't stay," and shambled out.

The letter remained upon the table, a large envelope, with a great red wax seal, four or five postmarks, and in many corners of the globe the existence of other Winstons. Miss Abby Dill had waited several weeks for her letter, whatever it was, and it really "looked important."

"But it is not," she answered, with a laugh. "How could an important letter come to me?"

"Mercy on us! Are you going to read it, nih? you, Abby?" asked the old lady.

"Yes, by-and-by, when I have had my tea and my walk, grandma."

"Have you no curiosity whatever on the subject?" I asked.

"Yes," she said. "I will own the honest truth. I never was so silly before; I'm actually afraid of the letter. I know of no one who would write to me on any subject of importance. I can think of no possible event which, in any great degree, could give me joy or pain of which I should hear by letter; but I am afraid of the letter. That seal seems an ominous red eye staring at me."

"How you do talk, Abby!" cried the grandmother. "I couldn't rest until I read it, if I felt that way."

But Abby left the letter on the table, and, when finished our meal, and had cleared up her bonnet, and still never touched it.

At the door the old lady called her back.

"Abby, you never behaved so before; I'm curious about that letter, if you are not."

"I suppose there must be something terrible in it, grandmother," said Abby, with a laugh. "I want my walk first."

"At night?—with these spectacles that never suited me?"

Abby looked at me. "Well," she said, "must I read it?"

"Well try," said I, and took a penny from my pocket. "Toss up for it. Heads, Miss Abby Dill reads the letter now; tails, she reads it after her walk."

I spun the coin in the air—Fate brought the head uppermost.

The candles were lit by this time, and —th a laugh Abby sat down near them and opened the envelope. At the first words I saw her change color and grow deeply interested, and at the close she started to her feet.

"Important! Tom was right," she cried.

"To think that such a letter should come to us. It's like a fairy tale. Am I really awake?"

She was too much excited to read the letter aloud, but soon I understood from her words that a far-away cousin of her father's, who had been fond of her as a child, was dying, leaving her all that he possessed. She had not heard of him for years, but that he had never forgotten her was plain in the fact that, by his death, she had become his heiress.

The letter had been several weeks upon its journey, and had reached her an hour too soon at last. An hour too soon for me. She was so startled on our walk before it came, I should by that time have told her how I loved her—should have known whether she loved me. Now, when she had suddenly become a rich woman, I could not do this. What would she think of me were I, who had never uttered a word of love to her, to speak the first one that night? She would see in it the most transparent fortune-hunting, and reject me with scorn. I must, at least, wait longer now, and I hated myself for not having had the courage to speak before.

We did not go for our walk. She seemed to have forgotten, and I did not wish to remember it. I could not congratulate her, I could not talk at all. My only words were those of a cold farewell.

Going home through the summer moonlight, the katydids chirping shrilly in the bushes seemed to answer the question I had never had asked me in the sunny afternoon—"Why not?"

"Ah, Lawrence Lorne! because she is a rich woman and you are a poor man."

It was not so much that she was a rich woman, after all, had she been an all-hour; but now, Abby Dill must always be a rich woman. I could not bring say to her the words which would have been uttered that night had the letter been delayed a little longer. The passionate love, the tender appeal were to a forgiving than he knew of the next day, as he blundered over his spelling-book.

Was she aware of this, or I cool to her? 'I can not tell; but our intimacy seemed to diminish. She was very busy, too, for they were going to New York in a week, and the person had already agreed to take her place in school.

The day before they left I went to see her. I could not stay away. I had not the courage to be forehand, I found myself walking with her in her garden, all aglow that evening with gay autumn flowers. She picked a bouquet for me, and sighed as she was tying it.

"Who will watch these flowers blooming next year, I wonder?" she said; "I have been so fond of them."

"You can have finer flowers," I said, "and will forget them and every thing else here very soon."

"Am I so very fickle?" she asked, quickly.

"I'd give the world to be sure you were not," I said, but to that she made not one word of answer.

Next time I saw her she was in the cars to the depôt, and, as I watched them go, I knew the first step of what might be an eternal parting had been taken. My heart said, "Follow her," but I could not say a word to hinder it, even had I hoped she liked me well enough to make it worth the while.

We walked a few steps by the broad path of the garden quite silently after the bustle was past. She had written her city direction on a card, and I had put it in my pocket-book. She had hoped "she would have a pleasant trip." She had hoped that "I should find the new teacher a pleasant person." Why we were so formal and so coldly courteously distant that afternoon I can not tell. One tremulous tone, one tender look, would have broken down my resolution, but they were not to be spoken.

At last I said, "Good-night." It was night now, for the sunset had passed and the gray twilight dimmed the path.

She answered, "Good-bight, Mr. Lorne."

Our hands just touched, though I was filled with a wild longing to clasp hers to my breast and kiss them.

"Do not leave me so. Tell me you love me, Abby."

And then the gate had opened and closed after me, and I stood in the road alone.

She was miles away when I took my place at my desk next day, and I was left with only time whether I should ever see her again. I also should leave the school in a few days, for the term was nearly over, and I had to look about for some path in which a fortune might be won, become a rich man, and then—

Alas! Time was fleeting, and one of us might die, or another might win her; or, when the wealth was won, the heart might be too dull and cold to beat as it should. I knew that as well as any one could have told me, but I was a dreamer by nature, and one dream beings gone I must have another to live by.

Almost without an effort on my part the chance I longed for came. I received a letter from Abby, reviving a long absence from my native land, a residence in a country for which I had but little love, and with which I had but little to do, and bring with it a chance for speculation; and possibly a fortune to match Abby Dill's. I undertook it cheerfully. I packed my office zealously, and, receiving a few farewell dinners, and five years from the day of my departure from America returned to it a rich man. Not as rich as I had hoped to return to Abby Dill, and did not know, when I set foot upon my native shores, whether she were alive or dead, or single, or married to another. But I felt that I must probable, for she had health and beauty, and was now full five-and-twenty years of age.

I went straight to Winston. I never expected to find Abby there, but she had made friends in the place she would hardly drop, and they might know her whereabouts, I hoped. I found Winston altered. Somewhere of rick dwellings had grown up. There were a dozen stores instead of one. The church had a new steeple, and there was a fine new academy of fice, known as the Methodist meeting-house, besides. As for the school-house, that was altered past knowing, and had a porch, a two-shaded playground, and four new class-rooms. It was vacation-time, and it was quite empty, so I was free to visit the rooms and admire the improvements if I chose. All I did was to sit down at my old desk and fancy Abby Dill among her girls in the light of the long-south window.

Opposite the school arose another edifice, handsome and exceedingly pretentious—the Winston Bank, an institution of which the Winstonite were wondrously proud. But it shut out the prospect of distant hills, and the little pond with the willows and drooping flags and rushes was quite hidden, and I did not like its alteration.

On the way home I passed Abby's little cottage. Some one lived there now who cared more for beans and cabbages than for flowers, and I gave one look over the palings and walked away.

Yes, Winston was altered, but I heard pleasant news that Miss Abby Dill had returned to Winston and lived with her old grandmother in a beautiful cottage on what was called The Hill.

She had returned from Europe, they said, but she was single still, and "kept company" with nobody.

On Sunday I saw her at church. She had not altered. She was even lovelier than ever, and I felt that the path lay clear before me, and that I was free to woo and win her.

But I put a restraint on myself and never went near her. I wanted her to learn that I was there, and that I had become wealthy and sought her not without being accused of mercenary motives. A monomaniac for the time being, I withdrew all that I possessed from sundry excellent investments and deposited every cent in the Winston Bank, that gossips, amiable-tongued enough in Winston, might carry the news to Miss Abby. On Wednesday I called to call upon Abby Dill and begin my wooing. Alas! the most positive intentions fail to be carried out at times. On Wednesday evening, coming home in the dark, I struck my schrobye against the door. Next morning I had a terrible black eye. To present myself in that state the first time in a night was simply impossible. I fumed and fretted in vain. I was not presentable for, week despite the spotbeauty's kindness. She was going to church once more with the intention of offering Abby my escort home I found her sent empty. She had gone away on a visit with her grandmother, and would not return for a fortnight. When they returned there came with them a lady and gentleman, brother and sister. The gentleman was a splendid fellow of twenty-six or thereabouts, who devoted himself to Miss Abby Dill in the most noticeable manner. He walked with her, talked with her, sang to and at her (for now often I listened, miserably enough, under the cottage window as the summer evenings drew on), and in short was said to be favored by her as no one had been favored before.

I would not see her while this rival must be seen also. Yet I felt conscious that I was leaving the field free to him, and that, by acting as I did, I manifestly underrated his influence.

One day, desperately bitter, I set off for a long tramp through the woods on a dump, foggy sort of day. Lost my way, caught a cold, and an interwitten fever came on. I was ill for weeks. When I grew better there was news in store for me. My landlady understood it. She came and told me, as I sat, pale, weak and worn, at a garden bench and began,

"This is a world of trials, Mr. Lorne."

I acquiesced.

"And trouble comes when we least expect it, and when we are feeling our best, Sir," she added, "Now are you prepared for bad news, Sir?"

My thoughts flew at once to Abby Dill. The words, "Is she married?" passed my lips unawares, and my landlady cried,

"Who? Abby Dill? Lor! it's nothing about marriage. I wish it was. There's a deal of trouble here just now, and you have a big share in it. They said you were rich, and I suppose Abby Dill broke, Mr. Lorne, and nobody that has had money there will ever get a cent of it as long as they live."

I heard her through without a word, and then arose and walked away. For the next few hours no mortal eye saw me, and I can only desire to forget them as though they had been.

In the evening I went out into the village. The stores were full of people talking over the event; some curious spectators of the woes of others; some truly sympathetic; some crushed into a sort of stupor by the losers; and others, more selfish, uttering threats against the bankers, and cursing them and their own folly. I heard my own names more than twice, but spoke to no one. Also I went home and locked myself in my room, but not to sleep. Long after every light was out in Winston I paced the floor.

Midnight had passed and the moon had set, when against the dark sky I saw, as I gazed from my window, a dull-red glow, which grew brighter, which puzzled and attracted me. As I gazed forked tongues of blue flame burst through the lurid mass, and I knew something had begun to burn. In a few moments the sky grew crimson, and I could see the flying sparks and cinders plainly. The fire was not in the village, but beyond it, on the wood shore, with other of the best houses of the place.

At the thought I started from my post beside the window and dashed down the stairs and out into the street.

A bell was ringing by this time, every door open, and people hurrying to and fro. The direction of the fire. Two bank directors occupied dwellings there, and some mad wretch, ruined by the failure of the Winston Bank, had become an incendiary, forgetful in his wrath that between the two stood the abode of one innocent of all wrong-doing—Abby Dill's home, which was in one broad blaze from roof to cellar when I reached the spot.

They had the old grandmother safely out by that time, and she was seated in the front yard, and carried her bodily through flame and smoke; and now she stood wringing her hands and calling for help for Abby.

"My child!" she screamed; "my sweet, good child! Save her! save her!"

But all stood helpless, gazing on the roaring flames hopelessly. I pushed my way through the crowd and dashed toward the doorway. Some one cried, "Stop him! It's certain death!" And then I was in the midst of a suffocating smoke, in a forest of horrible heat.

But the worst was past in a moment, and I was on the stairs calling softly for Abby to answer me, and a faint voice replied, and, springing forward, I clasped a white figure in my arms and turned—but one moment too soon! Each Hanson's mercy brought me safe in life and limb through the greedy flames to the sweet outer air.

I was weakened by illness, though excitement had sustained me to perform my task; but when all was over a death-like swoon crept over me, and I had conscious moments. I thought, I knew myself dying, and was happy; for, as sight and hearing left me, I knew my head reposed on Abby's arm. It is there still when I awoke to life again. It was gray dawn when I stood with her and looked upon the ruins of her pretty home. A tear was in her eye, and a sad look on her face.

"Poor old house!" she said; "I loved it; but I should not grieve so were it not for grandmother. She will feel the privations of narrow circumstances more than I."

I looked at her curiously.

"Surely no house will make but little difference to your circumstances," I said. "Others are to be thought or built."

"With money," she answered. "I have none. A mouth ago I was a rich woman; but every cent I had was in the Winston Bank, and you have seen enough to know what that implies. I'm as poor now as when I first began to teach in the old school-house yonder."

I acted on the impulse of the moment, and caught back Abby's little hands in mine. Standing thus I told her all I had got, and then I said:

"I must begin life over again, Abby, will you help in it with me?"

And she did not draw her to me, and kiss her on brow and cheek and lip, and hold her to my heart—my promised wife, my best be ved, who loved me.

"The path will be rough for your feet shall not be bruised," I said. "The thorns of life shall neer pierce you, my treasure!"

But she answered me not, if there are ills I must share them, and I have little fear: love can compensate for poverty. Then with a change of look she said, "And mother? I cannot leave her. You must know that vacation is almost over, and they have asked me to teachers in the old school. You can sail without me, and the world again together. Shall it be so, Lawrence?"

"If you also, darling," I said, and kissed her, for once while I was master of my fate, with the old scarray of broad red faces before me; but beyond, among her gifts, my golden-haired wife-to-be while I lived. Then I said she should be queen no toil hard, no lot humble, that was shared with her.

We are richer now; and there is more silver than gold in her bright hair, for we are old people together, and have grandchildren about us; but we are not rich enough, or old enough yet to despise that dear old school or the life we began together there.

THE RUINS OF CAPE HAYTIEN.

BY JAMES REDPATH.

The rebellion in Hayti has been unfortunately extinguished. While I regarded it (from my personal knowledge of its character) as a spontaneous (Jean Crosiere) as an uprising of the barbarous elements and hopeful for the success of the existing government, I deeply regretted that the suppression of the revolt is due neither to the amnesty nor to the arms of the President, but wholly to the unwarrantable, lying, and cowardly intervention of the English fleet. This fact will embitter not the native and educated classes only against GEFFRARD's triumph, but probably a large majority of the negro population is opposed to his Excellency. An attempt to gather a supposed declaration on the part of his Admiralty Instructions to the naval authorities, was the cause of an attempted insurrection at Gonaives a few years ago, the rallying cry of which was—

"Vive le reprime article de la Constitution?"

The seventh article referred to is in these words:

"No white man, whatever be his nationality, shall ever be subject to the soil of the Haytian Territory, nor shall he own, in future, to acquire there either real estate or the rights of citizenship."

As it would have been unfortunate for us if England or France had aided us in suppressing the slaveholder's rebellion, so it would be such a triumph would have engendered a bitterness in the Southern heart, and a just contempt for our power which no effort on our part would ever have been able wholly to remove—so the fact that the rebellion in Hayti was put down by strong as ever, still defiant, still able to repel every attack of GEFFRARD troops when left to themselves would undertook to interfere and "pacify" the trade. The President "master of the situation," as the official account published it, will, in all probability, cause a sullen submission to his power for a time, but it is dreaded then open revolt.

The reports of events in Hayti are always so unreliable and contradictory that I have waited until I could learn from worthy sources how the rebellion was suppressed before I completed my record of its civil war.

It is my opinion that an uprising of the blacks, in sympathy with the movement of SALNAVE at the North, was attempted at Jeremie or Jeremie, but that it was promptly put down by the upholders of the Government. It is charged that GEFFRARD by his cowardly conduct has made himself exceedingly obnoxious to many of the best families of the capital, and that, instead of prosecuting the offenses which followed on his advent to power, he has been slavishly seeking to purchase his safety by a mean submission. It is further alleged that his unpopularity with the masses is sufficiently indicated by the fact that there have been eighteen attempts at revolution!

Whether these are the capricious complaints of the Cote Outs merely, or just indictments, will presently appear; for if GEFFRARD increases his efforts to educate all the people, and pre erves peace and order combined with freedom of the press and religion, he will not be unfavorably affected by them the cavils of his opponents. I am not at all convinced that the President is unpopular because so many efforts have been made to depose him, nor am I sure that the prompt extinguishment of these attempts was not due as much to his popularity as to his alacrity. I do not speak with confidence on either side, but of no person, unless his correspondence with the island is more extensive, has he can justly judge of her political combinations. For the last three years we have had no party politics. The Haytian method of depositing a ruler is by inciting a revolt, printing dozens of proclamations, appointing a Cabinet, and then with a yell "Hip! hurrah! and "Vive la Republique d' Haiti," or "Vive l'Empereur!" as the case may be, entering Port-au-Prince. The next day the old rule of DESSALINES, generally on board a vessel bound for Kingston, Jamaica. Speeches, new proclamations, eloquent denunciations of the "late unfortunate" that has been deposed, and an election of a Chief Magistrate for life follow. Thus, whether the ruler of Hayti be called Faustin or Geffrard, he is in fact the head of a limited military monarchy—limited, if he is a mulatto, by a fear of the blacks; and, if he is a negro, by the contempt of the mulatto aristocracy. In these revolutions no lives are lost and no damage done to property. The troops on both sides understand perfectly that the bullets are intended to hurt each other. It is only when the parties are of equal strength, or when the rebellion is powerful enough to overthrow the Government, but unable to capture the capital, that bloodshed ever ensues.

The recent rebellion was evidently more formidable than the means of the Government represented. It held the North with stubborn tenacity. Every assault on the rebel capital was successfully met and promptly repulsed. SALNAVE and the leaders were not killed. The port was not blockaded. On the contrary, the Government lost its largest steamer by capture. The bombardment of Cape Haytien and the rebellion would have been successful if the English war-vessels had not interfered. Whether the protected steamer would have left on the establishment of a Northern "Empire," and left the South to "go to the gold," a separate and independent republic, as in the days of CHRISTOPHE and PETION, it is impossible for us to guess with any accuracy. The probabilities seem to be that it would have left to a compromise, which would have given GEFFRARD to reign, and DAMIEN, or some other distinguished leader, to be put forth, by parties, to succeed him as President of the undivided Republic.

The pretext for the intervention of the English was forcibly stated by the leader of the rebellion to recognize the right of the British Consul to rank him in his own capital. The "bold Hilton" undertook to defend and protect several persons—Haytians—who had become obnoxious to SALNAVE and SALNAVE. On demand he declined to deliver them up. SALNAVE, with his usual impetuosity, the Consulate, seized the refugees—and shot them. The Building—Her Britannic Majesty's B. D.—a ship of war, is now "all hurray, and o' nothing to do," burning itself by bombarding the rebel fort. The fort fires back; B. D. got scorned. The situation becomes serious and the Commander of H. B. M.'s B. D., B. D. to save it from the courageous negroes the order was given, and the B. D. was blown up! The monument of the British Consulate, Hilton, probably felt as the overwhelmed but unconquered citizen of Charleston did when a negro soldier stepped up and asked him if he would like to see a monument. His "feelings were hurt;" his dignity outrageously infringed on; but amusement—complete and stupendous—overcame all resentment. To think of the audacity of the act—for negroes to dare to interfere with the amusements of H. B. M.'s officers! It was too much!

But incredible as it was, H. B. M.'s commander of the late B. D., when he saw his vessel blown to fragments, at once, and with the utmost determined on revenge. He posted off to Jamaica for aid.

On the 7th of November, writes a resident of Cape Haytien, "the English fleet of the Galatea arrived from Jamaica, bringing the English Consul-General, Sir JOHN, from Port-au-Prince. The rebel Admiral, SALNAVE, which was then lying in the roadstead sent commissioners on board to learn what conditions were to be proposed to them. The demand was made by Consul-General Sir JOHN that SALNAVE and Monsieur DE LORME, the chiefs of the movement under JOSEPH. Knowing what their fate would be in the power of the enemy, at the same time replied that, as they were unable to offer any resistance, they would gladly give up the city. Whereupon the Admiral of the British fleet, who was present, fire was opened from both steamers on the rebel batteries and on all the forts in possession of General SALNAVE, which were soon silenced. This occurred on the morning of the 9th. The firing of the steamers was accurate. Fort Madeline (commanding one portion of the harbor) was battered and three hours, very gallantly—no Briton flinching as he fired, no Haytian trembling as he assailed it. The fort was soon evacuated and the guns dismounted. All the guns were spiked. General SALNAVE and his devoted friends had taken refuge on the Yankee steamer, De Soto, which carried them to the adjacent port of Monte Christo, in the Dominican Republic.

It was reported, when the news of the fall of Cape Haytien first arrived, that the British vessels had reduced the town to ruins, and that the troops of GEFFRARD "occupied the site of what was once the city." The absurdity of this statement caused me to withhold credence in it, as this report until more trustworthy information should reach us.

I find this passage in a private letter, which I believe to be a correct account:

"During the bombardment, and before GEFFRARD'S troops entered the city, some desperate characters set fire to the principal quarters, and all the most valuable retail shops and dwellings around the market and in the Rue Espagnole were soon reduced to ashes. They also tried to destroy the foreign warehouses on the sea-side, but without success, as these were saved from fire though not from pillage, having been mostly broken open and plundered of every thing they contained, particularly the houses of such persons whose occupants were known to be hostile to the rebellion. These were completely gutted; furniture of every description being thrown into the streets and broken up by them. In the case of Vaudelin many families have been ruined and driven to seek refuge in the plains. Previous to the bombardment, which seems to have been expected, if not known, every one was busy all day long in carrying off their goods to the white foreigners took refuge on board the French and American steamers, as well as the English; and Captain Walker, of the De Soto, particularly, has earned the gratitude of hundreds of unfortunates by his kindness and consideration toward them during the whole time he has been in the station.

"The fire burned for two days, and this lately-thriving city, which, with the exception of the French, was their 'Paradise on Earth,' is a second time little more than a heap of ruins. Property was totally destroyed by earthquake and fire in 1842, and since which time it has been rebuilding slowly by its citizens without one dollar of any foreign aid.

"The policy of the rebellion, after the occupation of the city by the President, was the total destruction, by fire or order, of that port or suburb known as the Fosette, inhabited mostly by the commercial class, and the most active and bitter opponents of the Government, and to leave open those streets where the houses belonged to the lower of the citizens, as well as foreigners, by this rebellion, have been protected, and it will take years to place them where they were before it began; money is very scarce, and no one can afford to rebuild except for his own residence, have been reduced almost to beggary.

"President GEFFRARD has not entered the city with his troops, published a general amnesty; notwithstanding which it is to be feared that blood will still be shed on those of prominent citizens for their complicity in the rebellion against him—either openly or secretly."

Cape Haytien used to be called by the old planters the little Paris of the Antilles, and their "Paradise on Earth." It is not to be, in fact; but it is very questionable whether the luxury and wealth that they boasted of were not vastly exaggerated.

When I visited Hayti, Cape Haytien had as many ruins as Venice has canals. This destruction will be severely felt for many years to come. Houses are not plenty, and many have suffered by good fires within a few years; and although the value of property destroyed bears but a small proportion to the whole amount owned in the Republic, yet the Barbarity of the tropics needs years where we require months only to rebuild the waste places.

There is at present, however, a speedy increase of wealth in Hayti, excepting by universal education, the disbanding of the present army, and the substitution of a few hundred well-drilled and well-equipped regulars in their place. It is to be hoped that GEFFRARD will now go vigorously to work and accomplish these reforms, and win for himself a proud place in the history of his country and his race.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

"WOMAN and women!" exclaims MRS. BROWN; "this exceeds any thing we have had yet!"

"What now, my dear?" inquires her liege lord, looking up from his newspaper.

"Just look at that gas bill! Perfectly outrageous! Never before in my married life was I save ever look at a item we have not burned five in proportion to it. The fact is, we are positively surrounded by gas-men! and something is very wrong about the whole of it."

"Well, well," returns MR. BROWN, soothingly, "that is a fact, but what can we do? We must have light."

"I know it," responds the lady; "but if I were the city of New York, or the Legislature, or somebody—I'm sure it must be somebody's business—the gas companies should not have it all their own way. It is a perfect swindle." And the indignant matron, in her excitement, nicely thrust the offending gas bill into the lowest corner of her pocket.

"Why don't you burn candles?" suggests the country cousin, who has been quietly toasting her toes at the grate.

"Burn candles!" echoes the astonished matron. "How would write a moment by candle-light? But it wouldn't make the slightest difference. I am convinced, if we did not light our rooms for a week or so long as we have a meter and burners in the house, we should have a gas bill regularly presented, graduated according to the season of the year."

Whereat they all laughed, and concluded they might as well light their rooms as not, since so much gas we there wanted.

We agree with MRS. BROWN, in the main. We can't burn candles; oil is disagreeable; and good gaslight is not only a luxury, but almost a necessity nowadays. But is the case of New York, how New York is not one whit better off in regard to gas than London is; and we generally fancy ourselves a notch ahead of that or any other city. Certain companies have recently invigilated bitterly against certain of their moneyed corporations, in the endeavor to break down and destroy the monopoly of their business, people are compelled, as it were, to patronize them. So, also, is it in New York. Competition is a thing unknown, and the extreme selfishness of mankind—poor human nature is to weak. Whenever that is excluded the people are forced to accept the extort offered at any extortionate price demanded, or go without it. "These things ought not to be."

Meanwhile, as we remarked or applied, we join with some unknown sufferer, in the following appeal to the Gas Companies:

Oh, makers of our gas! relent
What rates on us you levy!
It surely can't be right or meet
Our "light" should come so "heavy!"

Blame not my verses if they halt,
Or rhyme in lines complete are;
You ought to know how oft a fault
Will happen in the meter!

By law just ten per cent. your gains,
You did it honest, surely!
At twice that sum to fill your mains;
Your profits then are nearly—in fact,
I'm to a gas-tric fever!

Give us cheap gas! you'll find it pays
As well (I'm certain quite of it!)
Gas is no trifle nowadays,
Although a very light of it!

Every body has heard the phrase, "Frightened out of your senses," rough and true though it may be, but I believe no one ever wondered what the origin of it was, and queried whether originally man had seven senses, and some fearful fright exposed him to the danger of losing that as it may, some enterprising individual seems to have found one of the lost senses, or discovered a new one. This is the proof. Let there be a couple of cubical blocks of wood, of the same size and appearance, one, however, is—vitally filled with lead. Take them in your hand and you instantly detect the difference in weight. Not by the sense of touch, sight, taste, hearing, nor smelling. What is it then? It is said to be by the sense of weight. Who will discover the seventh sense?

It is often said that a good, hearty laugh is better than a dose of medicine, and certain it is that merriment has a wonderfully happy effect oftentimes upon the sick. A story is told of a young wife, apparently dying from swelling and inflammation of the throat, so much that she was unable to stop the way; she could swallow nothing; every thing had been tried. Her friends were standing round her bed in misery and helplessness.

"Try her wi' a compliment," said her husband, in a most unromantic manner.

She had genuine humor as well as he; and as physicians know, there is a sort of mental tickling which is a bypassal and above control, being under the reflex system, and as instinctive as sighing. She laughed with her whole body and soul, and burst the abscess and was well.

Advertisements, and paragraphs of various kinds, often find their way into newspapers, in which, by the omission of a comma, or more frequently, in some excess of an awkwardly constructed sentence, the most extraordinary statements are made. For example: A newspaper states:

"A child was run over by a wagon three years old and cross-eyed with parakeets [a misprint for paralysis] which died."

An exchange, describing a celebration, says:

"The procession was very fine and nearly two miles in length—we saw the mayor & Dr. Perry the chaplain."

A Western paper announces:

"A cow was struck by lightning and instantly killed, belonging to the village physician, who had a beautiful calf four days old."

In the report of a certain School Committee the following paragraph occurs:

"We have a school-house large enough to accommodate four hundred children for one school."

It gives one an idea of progress to see such an advertisement as this:

WANTED—A young man to take charge of a pair of horses of a religious turn of mind.

In this connection it may be mentioned that on the table of Representatives, near Tycoon Johnson, is placed a book in which is inscribed the following:

"Any person passing beyond this point will be drowned by order of the Committee."

We clip the following flaming advertisement for the benefit of all interested in household economy:

"WASHING MADE EASY.—A lady having discovered a new and inexpensive method of washing clothes, without the trouble to Three Hours' Hard Labor of a washer-woman or the use of machine or soap in less than half the time usually required, sends for circulars addressing (inclosing stamped addressed envelope), MRS. ——, Lock Box ——."

This is truly delightful! No more putting things to soak, no more wringing, no more tea with a washing in it, no more weak tea to mend! All this is done in two hours—and the things wash themselves, for there is no woman and no soap needed. Alas! that the doubting Thomases will not believe us by the story, we are about to send off the stamped directed envelopes, and suggest that perhaps after all the circles and the discovery ellis "won't work!"

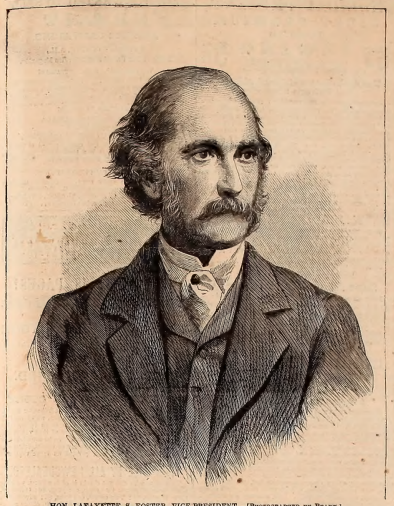
Apropos of this they have a method of washing in Syria, which, if we mistake not, is yet more easy and economical. There ladies who have the care of this weekly vexation have only to know that wives are duly appreciated in some countries.

"According to the laws of the Greek Church, the clergy may marry once only, and if the wife dies, may not take unto to choose a successor. It is said, and may easily be believed, that this practice for the lady is a super-mortal respect and attention than is usually the lot of her sex in the East. The husband residing in the same compound, on entering the house of a bereaved priest, to find him engaged in the duties of the office of washer-woman, and quitting the room of each on apparently unrelated occasions, he is met by the gentleman replied: 'I am sorry to see my wife labor; but she may live the longer; for you know that the loss of one husband is the gain of two to have another, and I wish to keep this as long as I can."

Not long since a lady was passing along the streets in Cincinnati, when she came upon a nail projecting from a packing-box which had been left on the sidewalk, and the result was a hideous rent, whereupon the lady, in righteous indignation, entered suit for damages. The owner of the packing-box undertook to have the dress repaired, but it was not to be done, and the suit was pressed. Whereupon her husband brought suit against him for wrongfully obstructing the public highway. The unfortunate packing-box was pronounced a nuisance, and defied himself by getting on the sidewalk was ten feet wide, and that the offending packing-box occupied a space three feet wide, so that in fact the lady an unobstructed passage seven feet wide. He claimed that this was room enough, and that it was negligence on the part of the lady to run against it.

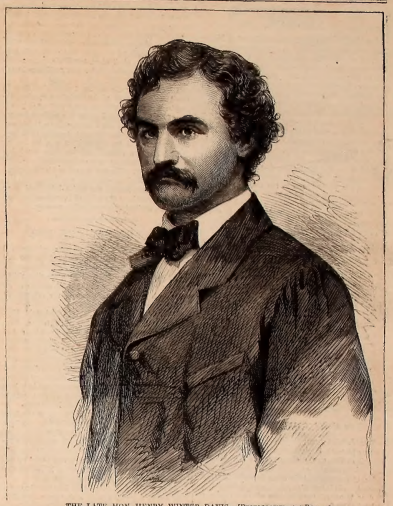
The English Court of Law held otherwise, and gave a judgment in favor of the lady, and the damages for the dress had sustained. We don't believe that packing-boxes have any business to occupy so much space on sidewalks as they do in the streets of New York city. But the ladies of this city will be delighted to know that it will be understood henceforth that a breadth of seven feet is within the proper and legal limits of a lady's skirts.

Here is a new and interesting revelation:



"A French sewer says that Adam was a hundred and twenty-three inches in the collar, and, for a man so hauled and eighteen feet nine inches and three-quarters. Noah he declares was a giant of two hundred inches."

Since cooking schools have come into vogue it is believed that it will only be fashionable for the lady to know how to cook. "Only fancy," remarks some hungry husband, "what a comfort it would be to mankind if ladies were so well educated in dressing a meal that we generally are in dressing themselves out for one! No longer than would husbands be obliged to wait for the tardy dread of both, cold mutton, and potatoes underdone. We would not wish our wife to be seen always with her apron on; but even if she were the Emperor of the French, we should wish, in case of need, that she knew how to broil a steak for us."



The other day a New York lady,—who justly prides herself upon having every article that comes upon her table nicely cooked—remarked: "I would give a great deal if I knew practically how to make good bread. My bread does not rise, and, though I understand the theory of bread-making, I do not know enough about it practically to be sure of success; so I must let my cook take her own method, though I don't like the appearance of it. I would not be unlike, in such a case, to waive all pride, and remind spelling a few batches for the sake of learning how to make such an im, yeast article as good bread.

RECORDER HOFFMAN SENTENCING MR. EDWARD KETCHUM IN THE COURT OF SESSIONS, NEW YORK, DECEMBER 30, 1865.—[SEE PAGE 46.]

HON. LAFAYETTE S. FOSTER, VICE-PRESIDENT.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

THE LATE HON. HENRY WINTER DAVIS.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

VICE-PRESIDENT FOSTER.

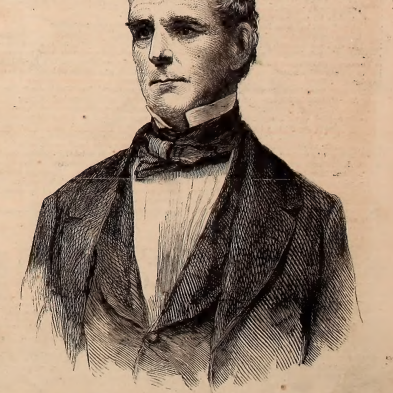
THE Hon. LAFAYETTE S. FOSTER, Vice-President of the United States, was born in Franklin—part of the old town of Norwich—Connecticut, November 22, 1806. He is a direct descendant of MILES STANDISH. At the age of twenty-two he had completed his collegiate education at Brown University. He then entered upon the legal profession, studying at Norwich with the Hon. CALVIN GODDARD, and was admitted to the bar in November, 1831.

Mr. FOSTER began his official political career as a member of the General Assembly of Connecticut, in 1839. He held this position during that and the subsequent year; was again elected in 1846 and the two years following, and again in 1854. In 1847, 1848, and 1854 he was Speaker of the House. He had in the mean time, in 1850, received from Brown University the degree of LL.D., being at that time Mayor of Norwich.

In May, 1854, Mr. FOSTER was elected United States Senator from Connecticut for a term of six years, and at the expiration of that term, in 1860, was again elected. During his Senatorial career Mr. FOSTER served as a member of the committees on Revolutionary Claims, Private Land Claims, Public Lands, Territories, Indian Affairs, the Judiciary, and Foreign Relations, and was at one time Chairman of the Committee on Pensions. He was elected President pro tem. of the Senate March 6, 1865, and about six weeks afterward, upon the death of President LINCOLN, he became acting Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER is a man of quick perception, and is one of the best presiding officers in the country.

HENRY WINTER DAVIS.



THE death of the Hon. HENRY WINTER DAVIS, on the 30th of December, 1865, deprived the country of a very able statesman. Mr. DAVIS was born in Annapolis, Maryland, in 1817. He received his collegiate education at Kenyon College, Ohio, and after his graduation devoted his energies to the study of law. He grew rapidly into a very large and lucrative practice at the Maryland bar.

In politics he was a Whig until the dissolution of that party, when he joined the American party, then very strong in Maryland. In 1856 he gave a warm support to Mr. FILLMORE. He had been the previous year elected to Congress, where he served on the Committee of Ways and Means. He was elected to the next Congress, and was the only Southerner who voted for Mr. PENNINGTON as Speaker.

During the war Mr. DAVIS was a strong and ardent supporter of the Union cause, and if he ever differed from the Administration it was because he thought a more radical policy ought to prevail than was adopted by the great body of the Union party. Our readers will in this connection readily recall to mind his part in the celebrated "WADE-DAVIS Manifesto," which administered somewhat of a rebuke to President LINCOLN, on the ground that the latter, in his policy of reconstruction, disregarded the views of Congress. Though somewhat eccentric in his political views and conduct, Mr. DAVIS was a man of great ability, a fluent speaker, and an accomplished gentleman. His erratic course in politics probably deprived him of a large measure of the influence to which his talents entitled him. His funeral took place at Baltimore, December 31, 1865.

THE LATE REV. J. W. CUMMINGS, D.D.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.—[SEE PAGE 46.]

THE LATE GERARD HALLOCK, ESQ.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.—[SEE PAGE 46.]

SENTENCE OF EDWARD KETCHUM.

THE last but not least memorable act of Mayor HOFFMAN's official career as Recorder was the sentencing of EDWARD KETCHUM, for the crime of forgery to the State prison at Sing Sing, for a period of four years and a half. Five years is the full extent of the time of imprisonment allowed by law for this crime, and the full penalty would have been exacted but for the limitation preventing the criminal from being released during the shorter months.

Many there were who, judging from precedents, thought that a respectable family, wealth, and the easy enormity of the crime would afford a cover for this derelict young man. Recorder HOFFMAN thought otherwise. His address to the prisoner was direct, at the same time full of dignity, honor, and temperate. He alluded briefly to Mr. KETCHUM's former position and to the confidence which business men had reposed in him. His confidence he had betrayed, and the consequence had been reckless to money. He had given a check to credit and business from which the business interests of the city did not readily recover. Referring to the pleas offered in defense by Mr. KETCHUM's friends Mr. HOFFMAN said:

"Your friends and those who ask for you the mercy of the Court say you were laboring under a mania. But every man whose personal sympathies are with you entertains the judgment known that it was no other mania than that which enters on every man who commits a crime in order to seem a personal calamity which he can not endure to meet. If, sitting here as a Judge, I should mitigate your punishment for any of the reasons assigned, or because hearts are aching and fainting, or because of my own personal sympathies with those who mourn for you, I should feel that every sentence I had passed upon a first offender had been a wrong, and that I was indeed a respecter of persons."

Mr. HOFFMAN's official integrity in his late position gave good promise of economical and faithful administration of the city government during his term of office as Mayor.

REV. J. W. CUMMINGS, D.D.

REV. J. W. CUMMINS, D.D., whose portrait we give on page 45, holds the pastorate of St. Joseph's Church in this city, died on the 4th instant, aged nearly forty-two years.

Dr. CUMMINS's family came from the North of Ireland. He is not of Celtic descent, belonging, we believe, to one of those families whose existence in Ireland dates from the overrunning of that island by the old Scotch Covenanters under CROMWELL. He narrowly escaped being brought up a Protestant, his mother not having received the full creed till after his birth. The family emigrated to this country in the midst of the American Revolution, and settled down in the District of Columbia Captain. WORTHY STEPHENSON, Dr. CUMMINS' maternal grandfather, was one of the founders of the city of Washington, and was at the head of all the ceremonies on the day when General WASHINGTON laid the corner-stone of the Capitol. Dr. CUMMINS's mother was left by the Captain's decease to rule three of his large farms, and numerous chattels were the consequence. These and the child's connection to Catholicism, which occurred very shortly afterward, caused much estrangement among the older members of the family, and the early years of Dr. CUMMINS, who was born in Washington, April 5, 1821, were thus necessarily passed almost entirely within the restricted limits of his mother's immediate sphere, to which circumstance is due, in great measure, those habits of philosophical introspection and reflection for which he which the subject of our sketch was distinguished.

After a preparatory course of training, first in New York and subsequently in a collegiate institute on the Hudson, Dr. CUMMINS was sent to Rome there to be fitted under the auspices of the Propaganda for the work of the ministry. Here he resided fourteen years, and in 1841, at the age of 20, he returned to his native country. He was attended at St. Patrick's Cathedral by Bishop DUBOIS, from thence removed to a school-house which he had built on Twenty-seventh Street and Madison Avenue, and of wood erected St. Stephen's Church in Twenty-eighth Street. At the altar, at the pulpit, in his pastoral ministrations, he was always popular and beloved by his people. In the simplicity of manners and refined amiability made him many friends outside of his denomination as well as gained him the esteem of those of his own politics was only equaled by the courtesy with which he consistently maintained them. Dr. CUMMINS was an accomplished musician, and in none of our churches can be a sublime harmonies of the Catholic ritual be listened to such advantage as in St. Stephens. MISS PICCOLOMINI and nearly all the great opera-singers have been during their stay in the city regular attendants at this church.

On Sunday, the 7th instant, after the children's mass at St. Stephen's Church, the pupils of the Sunday-school, to the number of several hundred, attended, visited the pastoral residence to look upon the features of their departed teacher and friend. A room the editors and a few friends of the deceased gathered together in the mortuary chapel at the residence, where a short service was recited by Dr. MCGLYNN. Then the body was laid in a handsome purple and borne to the church by eight bearers. Among these were one or two Protestant gentlemen, friends of Dr. CUMMINS, to whom, in a recent social interview, he had expressed his conviction of approaching death. "But," said he, with his usual naivete, "you must come to my funeral; we shall have some splendid music." The scene at the procession entered the crowded church was most solemn and impressive. When the body had been placed upon the catafalque, and prayers recited, Dr. MCGLYNN made a brief address. As he spoke of the great charm, the good priest, and the loving friend they had lost, the entire audience was melted to tears. At the conclusion of Dr. MCGLYNN's address the congregation began passing in the aisles to view the body. From the time the congregation commenced moving until six o'clock in the morning it was computed that the mourners passed through at the rate of four thousand an hour. The funeral was celebrated on ... ... Father HECKER preaching the discourse. The music was indeed beautiful. CHERUBINI's Grand Requiem was sung with sublime effect, the choir of St. Stephen's being assisted by a large number of the best musicians in the city.

Dr. CUMMINGS was the most promising man in the American branch of the Church. Indeed, he had been the favorite of the Pope, and when he left Rome he came away bearing the highest honors which the college of the Propaganda could bestow. More than once he has declined the office of bishop. His position was an independent one, he having erected his own church, and therefore not being subject to removal by any ecclesiastical authority in this country. He was liberal in his theological views, advocating the diffusion of Bibles in the English language among the entire laity, and more nearly approaching the spirit of Protestantism than any of his clerical brethren in this country.

GERARD HALLOCK, ESQ.

GERARD HALLOCK, ESQ., whose death occurred on the 4th instant, was formerly senior editor and proprietor of the New York Journal of Commerce, a position which he occupied for more than thirty years, commanding the respect and esteem of all who knew him, whether through the columns of his paper or at private life.

GERARD HALLOCK was born in Plainfield, Massachusetts, March 18, 1801. His father, MOSES HALLOCK, was a noted divine, who, out of four sons, sent three to college. GERARD entered Williams College in 1818, and was then a little more than fifteen years of age. After graduating with honors in 1819, he spent two years in teaching, and in 1821 went to the Theological Seminary at Andover. In 1822 he opened a private school in Salem, Massachusetts, where, in addition to his pupils in Latin and Greek, he also taught mathematics. In 1824 we find Mr. HALLOCK in Boston, at the head of a weekly paper, the Boston Telegraph. In 1826 the Telegraph and Recorder were united on equal terms. Two years later Mr. HALLOCK sold his share of the paper for $7500, and bought one half of the New York Observer, of which paper he was sole acting editor until 1828, when his connection with the Journal of Commerce began.

At that time the paper, which had been in operation about a year, was in a desperate condition. Mr. ARTHUR TAPPAN had started it, and his principles of abolitionist at the outset militated principles were unpopular in this State. Mr. HALLOCK was invited, under these circumstances, to enter into partnership with Mr. ARTHUR TAPPAN. From that time, for the third of a century, Mr. HALLOCK devoted himself exclusively to the editorial conduct of the Journal. When Mr. HALLOCK assumed the charge of that paper there was great excitement in connection with revolutionary movements in progress in Europe, and the paper became, by extraordinary effort, successful in anticipating all the other papers in the publication of foreign news. This contributed greatly to the wonderful success achieved by the Journal.

Mr. HALLOCK was an indefatigable worker. From Monday to Saturday he was steadfastly at his desk, and for a good portion of the time attended to the duties of night-editor, preparing the paper to press at two or three o'clock in the morning. This secured for the paper extraordinary accuracy of statement, which was noticeable in whatever returns. His industry has been abundantly rewarded in influence and fortune.

A few years ago Mr. HALLOCK retired from the conduct of the Journal of Commerce. He was a man of great sincerity, as able editor, and one of the most noted of profound. It is worthy of mention that probably a hundred slaves have been emancipated through the beneficence and influence of Mr. HALLOCK.

The last days of Ex-President Martin Van Buren were made comfortable by the use of Jones Whitcomb's Asthma Remedy. It relieved the sufferer from his physician, and from Mr. Van Buren himself, express much gratification with the results of its use.

Extracts from the "Life of Washington by Washington" by his nephew. Pierre M. Irving. Vol. IV., page 272:

"The doctor prescribed, as a last resource, what had been suggested by Dr. (O. W.) Holmes on his late visit—Jones Whitcomb's Remedy for Asthma, a teaspoonful in a wineglass of water, to be taken every four hours. A good night was the result."

In no case of pitiful A-hoastic character has it failed to give prompt relief. Sold by druggists a pc-manent cure has been effected. No danger need be apprehended from its use. An infant may take it with perfect safety. It is prepared by JOSEPH BURNETT & CO.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

PARLOR ORGANS.

THE HORSEY PRIMER, A SPECIAL GOLD MEDAL, was awarded to us by the late great Fair of the American Institute over all competitors for the best instruments.

A Gold Medal was awarded to MASON & HAMLIN, BOSTON, & CO. for the best Reed Instrument on exhibition—most just instinctive!—WATSON'S Art Journal.

"I can speak of them in the highest terms"—G. W. MORGAN.

"The finest instruments of the class I ever saw."—GEO. F. BRISTOW.

"The best instruments of their class."—WM. A. KING.

"They have the power, quality, and individuality of color of an instrument of a similar kind."—CHARLES FRADEL.

Illustrated Catalogues sent by mail.

CABINET ORGAN CO.,
Nos. 97 East Twenty-third St., New York.

HOLIDAY PRESENT
FIRST PREMIUM
IMPROVED
$5 SEWING MACHINE. $5
The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originally patented May 15, 1852; Improvement patented, 1st June, 1865. The only low-priced FAMILY SEWING MACHINE, with CRAWFORD attachment, a most wonderful and elegantly-contrived Novelty, by which the operator can use the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, and move horizontal, vertical, and diagonal seams with perfect ease. Makes the SEWING-STITCH more perfect and regular than by hand, and runs with extraordinary rapidity, making 1500 stitches to each evolution of the Wheel. Will HEMM, SEW, RUFFLE, BRAID, TUCK, QUILT, EMBROIDER, &c. &c. Warranted not to get out of order in 3 years. It has taken the FIRST PREMIUM at the Fairs where exhibited, and all the principal Journals and of those who have tried it.

The "Crawford" is invariably the first home bought—hold it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Ladies' Book.

"With a single or double thread, is strong, even, set right nicely, with a common needle, makes the run-ing stitch exactly like hand-sewing."—New York Tribune.

Single machines sent to any part of the country per express, packed in box, with printed instructions, on receipt of the price, $5. Self-delivery guaranteed. Agents want ed in every County, to whom liberal inducements, sent free.

FAMILY SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
Office 102 Nassau Street, New York.

Superfluous Hair Removed

From all parts of the body in five minutes, without injury to the skin. DUNCAN'S PUMICE TOILET POWDER. Mailed to any address for $1 25, by S. C. UTHAM, 25 North Eighth St., Philadelphia. Sold by all Druggists.

CHRISTMAS GIFT.
A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.
EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER
ONE DOLLAR EACH.

PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 29, 1865.

AN EXACT AND RELIABLE POCKET TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen, Travelers and Invalids, Students and Sporting Men, Steamboat and Railroad Employés, Merchants and Clerks. Correctly constructed on the most improved Scientific principles, and warranted to keep GOOD TIME with absolute certainty and the utmost precision. It never runs down, requires no winding (or winding up), never gets down, and can never be too fast or too slow. It is a remarkable and well-devised Novelty. It goes. Just introduced into this country from Europe, where it is creating a sensation. Letter-size. Price for a single one, with plain or fancy white dial, in gold or silver cases, only $1 00. Sent, postage paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Safe delivery guaranteed. Liberal terms to Agents and the trade. Sent by mail with a view to extending the public, by offering a useless article (with a splendid case) at a price which will secure a host of genuine Timekeeper. All orders must be addressed to E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO., SOLE PROPRIETORS, 204-206 Broadway, New York.

Wonderful! Wonder!—Full instructions, by which a child can understand it, sent with each Timekeeper. Do not be humbugged. Satisfaction given, or money refunded. Send for Circular. E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.

AGENTS WANTED. New Books—Now Ready. Get the best. From Official Sources.
The most complete work on the War.
By the popular historian, J. T. Headley.
Author of "Napoleon and his Marshals," &c. Complete in one volume, handsomely illustrated.
The most attractive work on the War.
Active Agents are selling 10 copies per week.
Extra inducements now offered.
Address E. B. TREAT & CO., 130 Grand St., New York.

AGENTS ALWAYS WANTED.
Circulars free. Address B. W. HITT, HOCOK. 14 Chamber St., New York. Mention Harper's Weekly.

This is a Metal Top Lamp
Chimney that will not break by heat, gives a LARGE FLAME, BURNS UP ALL GAS and common OIL. It is the MOST PERFECT ARTICLE KNOWN.

New Lamp Chimney Co.,
73 Warren St., N. Y.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 BROADWAY (St. Nicholas Block).

Photographic Materials, Stereoscopic Goods, War Views, Scenery, Groups, &c.
Photograph Albums, great assortment, Cartes de Visite of Noted Persons, &c. &c.
French Engine, and American Novelties.

"ACROSS THE CONTINENT," with Speaker Colfax, by SAMUEL BOWLES. A volume of 500 pages, graphically describing the Pacific Railroad, Salt Lake City, the Mormons, the Mines, and society on the Pacific Coast, with 100 fine engravings, and a large map. Price $3 50. Address SAMUEL BOWLES & CO., Springfield, Mass.

AMERICAN POCKET TIME-KEEPER.
FIFTY CENTS EACH.

The most novel and useful invention of the age. Constructed on the most approved scientific principles, and warranted to keep correct time. Is manufactured in one of the most expensive gold or silver reporter, while the low price will place it within the reach of all who wish to own one. It is emphatically the timepiece for the million. Some, since the introduction of the Watch, have become a great craze of order. No one should be without it. Price, with other useful dial in gold or silver case, $0 50. Sent by mail postpaid to any part of the world. CAUTION.—To the introduction of the American Pocket Time-keeper, numerous counterfeits have been put in circulation, and all parties are cautioned against buying or offering for sale any Watch purporting to be or bearing the word Time-keeper. Address AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Providence, R. I.

$1500 PER YEAR!
We want agents every where to sell our improved $20 Sewing Machines. Three months' trial allowed. Warranted five years. Above salary or large commission given. Circulars free. Address, with stamp, Gold Medal Sewing Machine Co., 823 Broadway, New York; No. 726 Carter St., Philadelphia, Pa.; No. 14 Lombard St. Block, Chicago, Ill.; No. 118 West Fourth St., Cincinnati, Ohio; or No. 7 Spring St., Boston, Mass.

LADIES' LETTER.
Five Autotonal Engravings, with Explanations.
By an Experienced Nurse and Female Physician.
Sent free to any Lady sending her address.
Address Mrs. Dr. KEWLEE, Brooklyn P. O., N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED TO SELL
GRANT
AND HIS CAMPAIGNS.
By HENRY COPPEE, A.M.,
Editor of The United States Service Magazine,

With splendid STEEL PORTRAITS of
Lieut.-Gen. U. S. GRANT, Major-Gen. SHERMAN, Major-Gen. MCPHERSON, Major-Gen. THOMAS,
Major-Gen. HANCOCK, Major-Gen. SHERIDAN,
Major-Gen. LOGAN, Major-Gen. RAWLINS,
And MAPS, PLANS, &c. &c.

1 volume, 8vo, 600 pages, $3 50.

This splendid work is published
UNDER GENERAL GRANT'S SANCTION,
and is the only authentic and official record of his extraordinary campaigns. It is the work for which everybody will send, and our agents every where are doing splendidly.

SOLD ONLY BY SUBSCRIPTION.

Agents wanted in every town. Exclusive territory given, and liberal inducements offered. Address

E. B. TREAT & CO., Publishers,
No. 540 Broadway, N. Y.

NEW-YORK WEEKLY MAGAZINE
OF
48 PAGES! 48 PAGES!
For 10 Cents a Week.
In the Number for January 13 is
HOW I MADE A FORTUNE
IN WALL STREET
AND HOW I GOT MARRIED.
A SPLENDID
ORIGINAL AND TRUE STORY,

Written expressly for the NEW YORK WEEKLY MAGAZINE, by a gentleman of great experience, who knows all the ins and outs, and who will give more information about the straight and crooked ways of that celebrated street than has been ever published. To be complete in a few numbers. Also, a great variety of Miscellaneous and Instructive Literature, well printed on large type and clean paper.

FOR SALE BY ALL NEWSDEALERS.

To parties who can not obtain it of newsmen, we have the following TERMS: One copy, one year, $4. One copy, six months, $2. Two copies, one year, $7. Five copies, one year, and one extra to agents, $20. Specimen copies sent by mail on receipt of ten cents. Address

O. H. BAILEY & CO.,
PUBLISHERS OF NEW-YORK WEEKLY MAGAZINE,
No. 7 Beekman St., New York.

PHARAOH'S SERPENTS.
Age of Reason, Bible Miracles, Prophecies, Book ignited, will evolve in a few seconds a harmless Serpent, several feet in length. It can be had by mail, on receipt of address 50 cents, by S. U. UTHAM, 25 North Eighth Street, Philadelphia. Trade supplied.

THE HORACE WATERS GRAND, SQUARE, and UPRIGHT PIANOS, MELODEONS, and CABINET ORGANS. Illustrated Catalogues mailed. WAREROOMS, 481 Broadway, N. Y., each pair of which contains a Piano. Prices lowest and TERMS easiest. HORACE WATERS.

Ladies and Gentlemen, use the Patent Fasteners. Sent by mail for 25 cents. W. C. HOWARD, 305 Broadway, N. Y.

$30 per month! The very best chance ever offered! No humbug or risk. Full particulars sent free. J. C. ADAMS & CO., Madison, Conn. Box 84.

Youth and Beauty Restored
To the gray-headed by the use of
Webster's Vegetable Hair Invigorator.
DEMAS BARNES & CO., N. Y., General Agents.

HOW TO MAKE CIDER WITHOUT APPLES or other fruit. The Hunter's Secret completed. Instructions of importance to Cider Makers and many other things worth knowing, will be found in the "Boy or Work" for 1866. Sent by mail for 25 cents. Address S. C. UTHAM, 25 North Eighth St., Philadelphia.

ENGLISH BOOKS! ENGLISH BOOKS! ENGLISH BOOKS! Just received and now opening a superb collection of new, standard, and miscellaneous books. Public and any standard books will be sold cheap for cash at BUNN & CO.'S, Broadway, Corner Duane Street.

COFFIN'S Navigation and Nautical Astronomy, prepared for the use of the U. S. Naval Academy. By J. H. C. COFFIN, U.S. Navy. Illustrated. For Sale and published by D. VAN NOSTRAND, 192 Broadway, N. Y. A Copy sent by mail on receipt of price, $3 50.

NEW MUSIC.
Come, sing to me again. 30
I have heard Sweet Music stealing" 30
The Blushing Rose" 30
"I love but thee." German and English words 40
Art can not give thee back" 30
For Piano. Price, each, 50 cts.
Silver Trumpets, played at Rome on the Pope's Jubilee 75
Silver Trumpets, grand processional March 75
Silver Trumpets, Polka Mazurka 50
Mailed free. FREDERICK BLUME, 736 Broadway.

DUMB-WAITERS.
JAMES MURTAUGH'S celebrated DUMB-WAITERS are manufactured only at No. 1335 Broadway, New York, where a model is to be seen.

DEMI-VERT MONTHLY, acknowledged the best and model Parlor Magazine, offers a $55 WHEELER & WILSON SEWING MACHINE as a premium for a club of 8 each, and in addition a beautiful and valuable premium to each subscriber. Specimens, 15 cts.

A elegant present, combining the Beautiful, Artistic, and Useful, and Monthly Reminder of a Refined Taste and Generous Spirit. An Gift in which would be found an acceptable as a year's subscription to Demorest's Monthly Magazine, the Model Parlor Magazine of America; or, the New York Independent says, "universally admitted to contain the most artistic, useful, entertaining, and brilliant array of novelties ever combined in one periodical." Yearly, $3, with a steel or mezzotint plate premium to each subscriber. Published by W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 473 Broadway, New York. Splendid premiums and terms for Clubs. Only $2 to subscribers received at the New York Office, during December. Single copies mailed free on receipt of 20 cents. Specimen copies, Number now ready. Back NUMBERS, as specimens, 20 cents.

CONSTITUTION.

LIFE SYRUP,

COMPOSED OF

IODIDE POTASSIUM,

WITH THE COMPOUND CONCENTRATED FLUID EXTRACT OF VALUABLE MEDICINAL ROOTS AND HERBS.

PREPARED BY

WILLIAM H. GREGG, M.D.,

Graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York; formerly Assistant Physician in the Blackwell's Island Hospitals, late Medical Inspector of the New York State Volunteer Depots, under Governor Edwin D. Morgan.

Constitution Life Syrup

HAS PRODUCED A REVOLUTION IN MEDICINE.

What may seem almost incredible is that many diseases hitherto considered hopelessly intractable are frequently cured in a few days or weeks; and we cheerfully invite the investigation of the ill-informed and educated to cases which have no parallel at the present day.

During the past five years we have contended with obstacles, and overcome opposition, as herculean as were ever encountered by any reformers.

RAPIDITY OF CURE.

Some say, "Your cures are too quick." While others doubt their permanency, and think that diseases can only be cured by the "slow, recuperative process of Nature."

Their error lies in that the body, like a well-balanced scale, is in a state of Equilibrium. But when, from any cause, down goes one side of the scale, we have the effects of disease. What is requisite is to restore the normal balance of the scale.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Is a positive and specific remedy for all diseases originating from an IMPURE STATE OF THE BLOOD, and for all (secondary) Diseases transmitted from PARENT TO CHILD.

PARALYSIS.

It is so universally admitted that CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP is the only true means of restoration to the various forms of Paralysis, that we need not reiterate that it is emphatically the Source of Life-giving Power.

DYSPEPSIA.

INDIGESTION, WEIGHT AT STOMACH, FLATULENCE, LIVER COMPLAINT, WANT OF APPETITE, BAD BREATH, CONSTIPATION, BILIOUSNESS.

SCROFULA.

ULCERS, KING'S EVIL, GLANDULAR SWELLINGS, ERYSIPELAS, ULCERATION, SALT RHEUM.

This taint (hereditary and acquired), filling life with untold misery, is, by all usual medical remedies, incurable.

RHEUMATISM.

(ARTHRITIS), LUMBAGO, NEURALGIA, SCIATICA, GOUT, OR DOLOCUREAS.

If there is any disease in which the CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP is a specific, it is in Rheumatism and its kindred affections. The most intense pains are almost instantly diminished—sometimes entirely arrested. Cases chronic or vicarious, of twenty or thirty years' standing, have been cured by us.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Purges the system entirely from all the evil effects of MERCURY, removing the Bad Breath, and curing the Weak Joints and Diminished Bone which the use of Calomel is sure to produce. It hardens Spongy Gums, and secures the Teeth as firmly as gum.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, like

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES,

And all other disfigurements of the face, which so much disfigure the outward appearance of both males and females, often rendering them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

For all Forms of Ulcerative Diseases,

Either of the Nose, Throat, Tongue, Spine, Forehead, or Scalp, it stands in the greatest eminence.

Both Pimples upon the Female face, requiring upon a discovery of same, as the Lily, are very soon seen in the purging pile and matter. A few bottle s of CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP will, by its gentle action, and searching the past, wash it directly under the skin.

Diseases of the Ear, giving rise to Hauger, Dizziness, Indigestion, Weak Stomach, or an Disorded or queruous condition of the system, are connected with burning or other unpleasant symptoms, will be relieved by the use of

Constitution Life Syrup.

As a General Blood-Purifying Agent, the LIFE SYRUP stands unrivaled as a preparation in the world.

THE RICH AND POOR

Are liable to the same diseases. Nature and Science have made the CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP for the benefit of all.

PURE BLOOD

Produces health in every form, and if the constitution is neglected in youth, disease and early death is the result. No one can tell when the seeds are to sear at hand, and within the reach of all.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

IS THE POOR MAN'S FRIEND, AND THE RICH MAN'S BLESSING.

Buy it, Take it, and be Cured.

WILLIAM H. GREGG, M.D.,

Sole Proprietor,

NEW YORK.

SOLD BY EVERY DEALER IN MEDICINE IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

MORGAN & ALLEN,

WHOLESALE DRUGGISTS, AGENTS,

No. 46 Cliff Street, New York.

SOLD WHOLESALE BY

JOHNSON, HOLLOWAY & COWDEN, Philadelphia. Pa.
GEORGE C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass.
FULLER, FINCH & FULLER, Chicago, Ill.
JOHN H. TAUK, Cincinnati, Ohio.
COLLINS BROTHERS, St. Louis.

A New Novel by Anthony Trollope.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.
Publish this Day:

THE BELTON ESTATE.

A NOVEL.

By ANTHONY TROLLOPE,

AUTHOR OF

"CAN YOU FORGIVE HER?" "ORLEY FARM," "DOCTOR THORNE," "FRAMLEY PARSONAGE," "THE SMALL HOUSE AT ALLINGTON," &c., &c.

8vo, Paper, 50 Cents.

☞ HARPER & BROTHERS will send the above work by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of Fifty Cents.

Agua de Magnolia.

A toilet delight! The ladies' treasure and gentlemen's boon! The "sweetest thing" and largest quantity. Manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia. Used for bathing the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to prevent eruptions, to perfume clothing, &c.

It overcomes the unpleasant odor of perspiration.

It removes redness, tan, blotches, &c.

It cures sore throat, sunburn and chafes, inflammation.

It cools, softens, and adds delicacy to the skin.

It yields a subdued and lasting perfume.

It cures mosquito bites and stings of insects.

It contains no material injurious to the skin.

Patronized by actresses and opera-singers. It is what every lady should have. Sold every where. Try the Magnolia Water once, and you will use no other Cologne, Perfumery, or Toilet Water afterward.

DEMAS BARNES & CO.,
Prop. Exclusive Agents, N.Y.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

CHEAPEST AND BEST. Price of Press, $10, $16, $20, and $30. Price of Office, with Press, $35, $50, $60, $85, and $71. Send for a circular to the LOWE-PRESS COMPANY, 66 Nassau-st., New York.

GOLDEN PALM OIL SOAP.

For the bath and Toilet.
For sale by druggists.
LINDLEY M. ILKINTON, MANUFACTURER,
118 Marguerite Street, Philadelphia.

Great American

PRIZE CONCERT

AT

CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, FEBRUARY 22d, 1866.

20,000 Valuable Gifts worth $20,000 will be presented to Ticket Holders.

100,000 TICKETS WILL BE SOLD!

One Gift, in Greenbacks	$10,000
One Gift, in 7-30 Bonds	5,000
5 Gifts, Residence three miles from Chicago	5,000
9 Square Grand Pianos, $1,000 each	9,000
50 Eng. Pat. Lever Gold Watches, $250 each	12,500
50 Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machines, $100 each	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 American Lever Silver Watches	2,500
50 Gifts, 50 Silver Lever Watches, $50 each	2,500
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Toy, Morocco Gold Chain Albums	25,000
5,000 Gifts, 4,500 Clary Albums, $1 each	4,500
10,000 Gifts, $10,000 Cash, $1 each	10,000
20,000 Gifts, Total value of which	$90,500

The great feature of any Public Concert, is the number in which gotten up, differing from anything of the kind ever before offered to the public.

1st. The Prizes are a great deal more valuable.

2d. All of the pianos are of Steck's Patent and Silver gods, the very best manufactured. The Pianos and Sewing Machines are all in a, and the manufacturers have given sufficient guarantee that they are surpassed by none.

3d. The manner in which it is drawn. Each ticket has its duplicate No., these are placed in a wheel, and thoroughly mixed, a disinterested person, selected by the ticket holders present at the Concert, draws these duplicate No.'s from the wheel, they are then drawn out gets the largest Prize, the next one drawn out, the next largest Prize, and in like manner until all are drawn.

To enable us to give away the valuable Prizes, we first sell a limited number of tickets for the above Prizes, and the Prizes are then distributed in order as the duplicates are drawn—and, when the 100,000 Tickets are sold, whether your ticket, and should you draw a large Prize the Proprietor makes a clear loss of the value of it. Each ticket has its duplicate No., these are placed in a wheel, and thoroughly mixed, a disinterested person, selected by the ticket holders present at the Concert, draws these duplicate No.'s from the wheel, they are then drawn out gets the largest Prize, the next one drawn out, the next largest Prize, and in like manner until all are drawn.

To enable us to give away the valuable Prizes, we first sell a limited number of tickets for the above Prizes, and the Prizes are then distributed in order as the duplicates are drawn—and, when the 100,000 Tickets are sold, whether your ticket, and should you draw a large Prize the Proprietor makes a clear loss of the value of it. Each ticket has its duplicate No., these are placed in a wheel, and thoroughly mixed, a disinterested person, selected by the ticket holders present at the Concert, draws these duplicate No.'s from the wheel, they are then drawn out gets the largest Prize, the next one drawn out, the next largest Prize, and in like manner until all are drawn.

To enable us to give away the valuable Prizes, we first sell a limited number of tickets for the above Prizes, and the Prizes are then distributed in order as the duplicates are drawn—and, when the 100,000 Tickets are sold, whether your ticket, and should you draw a large Prize the Proprietor makes a clear loss of the value of it.

Don't throw your money away on valueless concerns, but send us your address for tickets now. If you would secure them; over 50,000 already sold. Every ticket is registered before being sent out, the number, name of party purchasing, and address, and all will be notified by mail of the result of drawing.

Tickets, $1 each, or eleven for $10, sent by mail on receipt of price and stamp addressed envelope.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.
144 Dearborn S^t, Chicago, Ills.

PileRemedy

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is recommended to cure.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

Coughs

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Hoarseness, Croup, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.
For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

A Household Necessity exists for the Use of

DURNO'S CATARRH SNUFF,

Which, in the first stages of a cold, sets like magic. Headaches, Hoarseness, Dizziness, and Drowsiness, Sore Eyes, Deafness, Bad Taste and Smell—being the result of Catarrh—this Snuff removes and prevents all these, and leaves a healthy head. Its effects are pleasant and safe, even for infants who suffer from Stuffies.

It has the highest profes-sional testimonials. Sold by all Druggists, or sent by Mail to all parts of the United States, for 25 cents for One Box, or $1 for Four Boxes.

Address JAS. DURNO, P.O. Box 2128, New York.
Wholesale by D. BARNES & CO., 21 Park Row, N.Y.

144 COMIC VALENTINES

Mailed free on receipt of $1. B. W. HITCHCOCK, 14 Chambers St., New York. Circulars free.

To LADY READERS.—An entirely new method of learning French cheaply, quickly, easily, thoroughly, and to speak it fluently in three months, by DR. H. CARLOS, Linguist and Professor of Literature, 229 East Fifty-second Street.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Splendid Jewelry,

Watches, Diamonds, &c.

The house of BOSANQUET, GIRAUD, & CO., Paris, have the pleasure of announcing that they have opened, as agency in the City of New York for the sale of their world-renowned Jewelry, Watches, &c.; and for the purpose of making their goods as extensively known and appreciated in the United States as they are now, and have been for over 10 years, in Europe, they have determined on a plan by which purchasers in this state may have the advantage of their splendid styles. As a preliminary, they would remark that having purchased and sell No Intrinsic Jewelry or Watches, but

All are Warranted Gold of the Finest Workmanship.

Our customers will also have the great advantage of a constant selection of new and recherche styles and patterns with which we shall keep our New York Agency supplied.

We have adopted the plan of sale, now so popular, of charging a uniform price, and this price will invariably be ten per cent under, no matter how costly it may be. The expenses of conducting our New York Agency are paid by the Parent House in Paris, and consequently, the enormous articles. To no Circulars or sale at 5 per cent, or less for Ready Cash sent, we shall at once mail the holder the particular article he or she is entitled to on payment of an additional 5. If the articles named on the Certificate is not desired, the holder will oblige us, when he returns the Certificate, by sending what other article of the same value he or she may prefer, and it will be sent with pleasure. Our aim is to please, and every means to that end will be exerted. We refer, a trial from every one into whose hands this may come, and we shall give a fair and satisfaction.

THE STOCK COMPRISES

An extensive assortment of splendid Checks, Gold and Silver Watches, Rings set with Diamonds, Rubies, Pearls, Garnets, and other precious solitaires and in clusters, Ladies' Sets of Jewelry, comprising Pins and Ear-rings of the most fashionable styles, and in a recherche flavour of every variety, together with a large assortment of Gold, Enamelled, and Jewel sets, Studs, and a most splendid assortment of the most beautiful patterns, Gents' Bosom and Scarf Pins, and an endless variety of Bracelets, Chains, Mat-ched Sets, Headdresses, Combs, Charms, &c. In case any of our patrons are not in want of articles of Jewelry, and would prefer silverware, we will send, for any Certificate returned by us, a richly engraved Set of Spoons, or Butter Dish, beautifully cleaned and plated.

Agents are wanted in every part of the United States and Provinces, and to all such very liberal inducements will be offered, and, application, a circular of terms will be forwarded. We prefer money sent in Post-Office Orders where they can be obtain d, or by Bank Draft to our order. Address all orders to our agency, which will be conducted by Messrs. JAQUET, STERLING, & CO., 181 Broadway, New York.

DR. CLEVELAND'S LIVER TABLETS relieve Sick Headache, Dyspepsia, Costiveness. They give a perfect ease and comfort. Sold by druggists, hotels, hardware, grocers, &c. No. 11 Ann Street, New York. Established 10 years. Send stamp for Pamphlet.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine it or send stamp for circular or sample. Or send a sample sent from by mail for 50c that retails easily for $6; by R. L. WOLCOTT, 159 Chatham Square, New York.

PORTABLE PRINTING OFFICES

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular sent free. Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., 10 cts. ADAMS PRESS COMPANY, 79 Ann St., New York.

Pimples on the Face

PRESCRIPTION, FREE OF CHARGE, FOR THE CURE OF "PIMPLE BANISHER." MAILED TO ANY ADDRESS FOR STAMP. Address, Dr. J. C. ADAMS, 25 CENTRE ST., P.O. BOX 2128, NEW YORK. PHILADELPHIA. Sold by all druggists.

Marvin's Patent

ALUM AND DRY PLASTER, FIRE AND BURGLAR

SAFES

Never lose their fire-proof qualities, corrode the iron, or mould their coin s.
Sideboard and p ate her safes for silverware.
MARVIN & CO.,
265 Broadway, New York.
721 Chestnut-st reet, Philadelphia.

Allcock's Porous Plasters.

A celebrated physician says he was amazed at the great number of diseases it relieves produced by one of these Plasters. He affirms that headache is cured by one worn just below the temple-bone; that one placed over the navel will cure hysterics as well as dysentery, and affections of the bowels.

CURE OF VARICOSE VEINS.

GREY TOWN, VA., December 24, 1865.

T. ALLCOCK & CO.—Seeing your notice in the Pilot Gazette, I got four of your Porous Plasters, and placed them on the knee where the pain was the most severe, and in less than twelve hours could walk as well as ever. I could hardly believe it, I was so well pleased. I wanted to see if Dr. Jamieson would come back on me or not, so I did more walking that day than I had done for a week. The next day I had some pain in my hip; but I put on a plaster there, and by noon here the pain was all gone; nor have I felt it since. Certainly they are the best application for the relief and cure of pains in the joints and back, and for varicose or enlarged veins, I have ever known; and I would not be without them at any money.

Yours, truly, JOSEPH GAZEWOOD.

MY CELEBRATED EUREKA HAIR-DYE is warranted to produce ready or gradual effects, for which get a beautiful jet black. Sent free to any address, with full directions for use, on receipt of $2 00. Address BRYANT M. LEWIS,
No. 39 E. E. STREET, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

SERPENTS DE PHARAON,
OR,
SERPENTS EGGS.

The latest scientific miracle.
Truly marvelous and apparently inexhaustible—London Times.
Wholesale and retail by
OLIVER A. SAWYER, 206 Canal St., New York.
Fifty cents a box, free by mail. Liberal Discount to the Trade. Agents Wanted.

[From the Rev. J. W. Poland's Autobiography.]

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

It was early in the spring of 1865 that this Compound was originated. A member of my family was afflicted with an irritation of the throat, attended with a disagreeable cough. I had for some time been giving attention to the preparation, having for its basis the last-named of white pine, and as it so completely set to be very useful in the case of the throat and lungs. To test the value of it in cases alluded to, I compounded a small quantity of one Medicine that I had been planning, and gave it to a member of the family. The result was gratifying. Only in two cases the first days of the trial was removed the cough entirely relieved, and the throat well. And, since that time some to a be in hands to serve. So it, from the many testimonials that have come under my notice, I have developed by a sudden cold, and had only a month to deal with those, no one found relief, and some few cases. Only took about ten ounces of it, and got well. In November, 1865, I first advertised it, and in the name of WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

As a remedy for kidney complaints the White Pine Compound stands unrivaled.—See our Journals.

This great cure was discovered by accident, and was offered to the afflicted, nothing in a pr vail by the test of eleven years of the Compound which is now offered to the public as well known. It cures sore throat, coughs, all bleeding, pulmonary affections of blood, and many other diseases of the system. It is a remedy for diabetes, which I grant the strength and vitality of the system, and for all kidney and urinary ills it is found valuable. Sold by druggists and dealers in medicine generally.

GOLD BY SWETT, M.D., PROPRIETOR,
Boston, Mass.
BURNHAM & VAN SCHAAK, Chicago, Ill.
JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio.
And by Druggists and Dealers Everywhere.

Magic Leather Preserver.

"Truly marvelous and apparently inexhaustible."—Economist Commercial.

Warrant on to keep the sole of Boots and shoes from leaking in the most severe weather. Sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of 75 cts. per box, or 6 boxes $3. Address J. W. YOUNG, 167 & 169 Chatham-st., New York.

HARPER'S

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

FOR JANUARY, 1866.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each; and Twenty for $60 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $8 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements. Their terms are, for a single insertion: one quarter of a page, each Number, $75; one half, $125; one page, $200. Advertisements of an objectionable character will be excluded. HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each; and Twenty for $60 00. Postpaid invariably in advance.

The Postage to subscribers to HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent to any part of the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of 20 cts. each.

Cloth Binding . . . . . $2 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco 3 00

Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.

Two Volumes will be sent by Express, free of Expense, for Ten Dollars.

Fifty Cents per line for inside, and Two Dollars per line for outside Advertisements, each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

AN EXTRAORDINARY ENVOY FROM SPAIN.

[From a Photograph taken near Valparaiso.]

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad St., New York,
(Two Doors from Wall.)

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks, Bonds, and Gold will receive our personal attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

Take no more Unpleasant and Unsafe Remedies

For unpleasant and dangerous diseases. Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU and IMPROVED ROSE WASH.

MOTHERS!

Children die by thousands.—Worms the cause.—whose lives might have been spared, had they used VAN DUZER'S WORM COMFITS. Children are as fond of them as they are of Candy. Sold by Merchants. 25 Cts. a Box. Sent by mail on receipt of the price. VAN DUZER BROTHERS, Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

POLLAR & SON Manufacturers, 601 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for circular. Pipes $6 to $50 each.

Enfeebled and Delicate Constitutions,
Of both sexes, use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU. It will give brisk and energetic feelings, and enable you to sleep well.

TO CURE
Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL, and disorders arising from excesses, use
Smolander's Extract Buchu.
Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York, and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

A Ready and Conclusive Test
Of the properties of HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU will be a comparison with those set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

Clergymen, Teachers, The Press,
Unite in saying that the new Juvenile Magazine,
Our Young Folks
is the best Magazine for the Young ever published in America. It is filled with attractive illustrations, and its articles in prose and poetry, are by the best writers for children in the country.
It is sold at the low price of two dollars a year. Each number contains thirty-four pages, beautifully printed. A liberal discount to clubs. Send 20 cents for a specimen copy and circular to the Publishers, TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

ARRANDALE & CO.'S
Great Gift Apportionment
OF
Jewelry, Silverware, &c.
No. 167 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

MERCHANTS, BANKERS,
And others would send to all parts of the United States by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, 66 Broadway.

Ladies and Gentlemen,
Send for our MEASURING CARD, and
Take your own measure, and we will send a
PERFECT FIT.
575 Broadway, N. Y., E. A. BROOKS, AGENT.
Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, and Slippers, of every description, for ladies, gents, boys, misses, and children.
N. B.—LARGEST ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY.

MAKE Your Own SOAP with
B.T. BABBITT'S POTASH IN TIN CANS
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
PURE CONCENTRATED POTASH,
Or READY SOAP-MAKER. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 6 pounds, and 12 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 15 gallons of Soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market. B. T. BABBITT, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., N.Y.

SALERATUS.
B.T. BABBITT'S, SALERATUS
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
If you want healthy bread, use B. T. BABBITT'S best Medicinal SALERATUS. "Made from Common Salt." Brand made with this Saleratus contains, when baked, nothing but common salt, water, and flour. B. T. BABBITT, Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington Street, New York.

LIGHT BISCUIT
Made in fifteen minutes with
B.T. BABBITT'S
STAR YEAST POWDERS
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT BUCHU
IS THE GREAT DIURETIC.
Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla
IS THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.
Both are prepared according to the rules of Pharmacy and Chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

DEAFNESS
And Discharges from the Ear Radically Cured
By the use of the recently-discovered Vegetable Extract
OTITINE.
Price $2.00 a bottle. For sale by all Druggists. WEEKS & POTTER, Druggists, No. 170 Washington St., Wholesale Agents.

TRADE MARK.

OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 15 Chambers Street, New York.

PINE APPLE CIDER
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

"American Union Company."
Manufacturers of the NEW ORGAN-TONED PIANO, EQUAL, if not SUPERIOR, to any. Warranted in every particular. Warerooms and "Agency," 467 Broome St.

For non-retention or incontinence of urine, irritation, inflammation, or ulceration of the bladder or kidneys, diseases of the prostrate glands, stone in the bladder, calculus, gravel or brick-dust deposit, and all diseases of the bladder, kidneys, or dropsical swellings,
Use Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu.

For Great Sale of
FRENCH JEWELRY
(PURE GOLD)
See Advertisement of
BOSANQUET, CRAUD & CO.
On Inside Page.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU
Gives health and vigor to the frame and bloom to the pallid cheek. Debility is accompanied by many alarming symptoms, and no treatment is submitted to, consumption, insanity, or epileptic fits ensue.

PATENT REVERSIBLE
PAPER COLLAR
The Cheapest Collar Ever Invented,
Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides. Made in white, fancy and printed stitch.

Is made of the best Spring Steel Wire, and is just the thing to wear with Paper Collars, being far superior to elastic cord for holding "Butterflies," "Uniques," "Bows," &c., in place on the shirt button.

PATENT EXPANDED
STAR COLLAR
This Collar, showing a space for the cravat, excels all others by its superior shape and weight, and the exquisite finish and elasticity of the linen.
MARCH BROS., PIERCE & CO., AGENTS,
Winthrop Square, Boston.
Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf Supporters at the lowest Boston prices, by—
BOWEN BROTHERS ..... Chicago, Illinois.
J. LOWMAN & BRO. ..... Cincinnati, Ohio.
MAYER & HARTER ..... Cleveland, Ohio.
CARRUTHERS & CO. ..... Louisville, Kentucky.
C. CARPENTER ..... 295 Broadway, New York.
WM. A. SMITHURST ..... 7 Bank St., Philadelphia, Pa.
A. BUSHMAN & CO. ..... Detroit, Michigan.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER.

This new celebrated Revolver excels all others for exactness, effectiveness, durability, power, and safety in carrying. Is light (14 oz.), small (only 7 in.), with larger metallic water-proof cartridge ($3.50 ball) than any Revolver made of like size and weight. Send for circular. GEO. A. HICKCOX, 54 Cliff Street, New York.

The Glory of Man is Strength.
Therefore the nerves and debilitated should immediately use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

$50 per Week.
10,000 ACTIVE STIRRING AGENTS (men or women) wanted in every city, town, village, hamlet, factory, and shop in the land. Business strictly honorable, and little or no capital needed to commence. The right sort of employment we offer inducements which will enable them to make $50 per week in the town, and a proportionate amount in the interior.
Send $1 for five samples, worth $1 each, for your own use, if you do not choose to sell them again, and our confidential circular of terms to Agents will be also forwarded.
T. & H. GAUCHAN & CO., Importers,
116 Broadway, New York.

LAVADENTEM
BUY IT—TRY IT.
BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Wholesale Agents.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu
Is pleasant in taste and odor, free from all injurious properties, and immediate in its action.

WARD'S,
PERFECT FITTING
SHIRTS.
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars, sent free every where.
THE CASH CAN BE PAID TO EXPRESS COMPANY.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
S. W. H. WARD, No. 637 Broadway, New York.

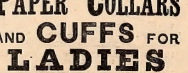
The Graefenberg Vegetable Pills.
The best liver Pill, and the most certain remedy for all bilious and digestive troubles. Price 25 cents a box.
MARSHALL'S UTERINE CATHOLICON, now acknowledged to be the only certain remedy for Female Weakness and uterine complaints of women. Price $1 50 per bottle; 5 bottles for $6. Use none except with the seal of the Graefenberg Company. Sold wholesale and retail by the Graefenberg Company, No. 250 William St. (near Fulton St.), New York. Inquire of dealers every where.

MANHOOD and YOUTHFUL VIGOR
Are regained by HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

TAXIDERMISTS' MANUAL,
GIVING full instruction in Skinning, Mounting and Preserving Birds, Animals, Reptiles, Insects, Eggs, Skeletons, &c. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of $1.00.
ADDRESS S. H. SYLVESTER, TAXIDERMIST,
Middleboro', Mass.

Shattered Constitutions Restored
By HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU.

Holloway's Ointment—To Mothers.—Children are frequently exposed to such accidents as cuts, bruises, burns, scalds, &c. This Ointment will immediately relieve the pain and remove all the bad consequences of the casualty. Sold every where.



LARGE PROFITS
Can be made by active men in the Stencil Name Plate Business. Complete outfits of tools and stock furnished by M. J. MEYCKLE & SON, 101 Union Street, Boston. Send for Price-List.

"THE last Ninety Days of War in North Carolina," the first of a series of articles by an able writer having access to private papers; a new Poem by Thos. H. Hill, and other papers. See "Watchtower" for January 13, 1866. Terms of this large and well-filled Journal of Literature, Religion, Art, Science, Finance, and Politics, edited by Charles F. Deems of North Carolina, $4 a year. Office, 119 Nassau St., New York.
The trade supplied by the American News Company.

CURIOUS FASTENERS for Ladies and Gents. Sent for 25 cents. W. C. WEMYSS, 575 Broadway, N. Y.

WANTED—every man in the United States, who has lost either an Arm or Leg—to engage in a profitable business. Send Twenty-five Cents, for Sample, to A. F. BELCHER, Box 45, Philadelphia, Pa.

WARD'S
PAPER COLLARS
AND CUFFS FOR LADIES
& GENTLEMEN.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
387 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Ladies' Victoria Turn-over Paper Collar.
Ladies' Empress Turn-over Paper Collar.
Ladies' English Standing Paper Collar.
Ladies' American Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies French Paper Cuffs.
Ladies' English Paper Cuffs.

Gentlemen's Piccadilly Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Standing Paper Collar.
Gentlemen's Turnover Paper Collar.

Gents. Reversible Paper Cuffs.
Gents. English Paper Cuffs.

Ladies' Collars from 75 cents to $3 per 100.
Gentlemen's Collars from $6 50 to $8 per 100.
CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—These are the only paper collars and cuffs that are made from pure linen stock.
NOTICE TO THE TRADE.—Wholesale Price-Lists sent by mail. Also, our Sales for sample.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. X.—No. 474.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 27, 1866. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1866, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

Tar-a-ker. Fe-ti-o-ki-ma. Log-qu-lish. Too-bi.

INDIAN DELEGATION OF IOWAS, SACS, AND FOXES FROM NEBRASKA TO WASHINGTON.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY A. GARDNER, WASHINGTON, D. C.—[SEE PAGE 50.]

THE TURKISH MAIDEN.

TURKISH maiden! Turkish maiden!
Draw aside this cruel veil,
If my eyes are doomed to fade in Sight of Eden, let them fail.

Maybe, like the Hebrew prophet,
'Tis to spare a heart like mine,
And you dare not draw it off it,
For its brightness is divine.

If he from the lofty mountain
Saw the "Land of Promise" gleam,
Let, oh! let me see the fountain,
Source of Eden's fevered stream.

In those brilliant eyes are burning
Flames like Sinai's fearful scene;
Save, ah! save mine, as I, turning,
Hide them from its fatal sheen.

Breathe, oh! breathe no cruel sentence,
Horeb's thunder 'twere to me,
Lest I die (without repentance)
For my daring wish to see.

No! She smiles—a piteous token,
With a look so sweet and calm,
That my heart, so nearly broken,
Is now healed with "Gilead's balm."
JOHN P. BROWN.
CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 18, 1865.

THE WINTER WIND.

THE night it is wild and stormy;
The chilly rain falls fast;
The blast is sobbing and wailing,
The dreary winter blast,
Sobbing and wailing and calling
Like a voice from out the Past.

Oh, what is it saying, I wonder,
The wind as it rises higher,
To the rich man in his palace
As he sits by the glowing fire,
With every comfort round him
That the vain heart can desire?

It is shouting his power and his splendor—
What sultan is grander than he;
It is counting the sum of his riches,
And telling of what they shall be;
It is lauding his palace so costly,
And naming his ships on the sea.

Oh, what does it say to the woman
Who is sitting with him there?
It is chanting a hymn to her beauty,
It is praising her eyes and her hair:
It is wooing her like a fond lover,
And calling her stately and fair!

Oh, what does it say to the beggar,
Outside in the stormy street,
As she treads the city's pavement
With cold and naked feet,
Looking in vain for shelter
From the cruel rain and sleet?

To her, half-famished and homeless,
'Tis a mocking voice that calls,
And its influence, like a shadow,
Across her spirit falls;
And its dreary, dismal wailing
Her hapless heart appalls.

What does it say to the children
When they wake from dreams at night,
On a sudden in the darkness,
And find no cheering light?
'Tis an ogre's voice that is calling,
And they cry aloud with fright.

Oh, what does it say to the sailor,
The noisy winter blast,
As he keeps his watch at midnight,
Or climbs the dizzy mast,
When the shores of home have vanished
And the friendly capes are passed?

It shouts aloud to the sailor,
In the dark and stormy night,
It speaks to the gallant sailor
Of the cottage window bright,
And the hearth inside all ruddy
With the glowing embers' light.

Oh, what is the depth of meaning
To my weary heart addressed?
It seems like the voice of old longings
That for years have filled my breast—
The passionate voice of old longings
That will not be at rest.

THE INDIAN DELEGATION FROM NEBRASKA.

We give on our first page portraits of four of the Indian delegates from Nebraska. A party, consisting altogether of eight Indians, arrived in Washington on the evening of January 2, in company with Major J. A. BERDAN, United States Indian Commissioner for the Great Nebraska Agency. The Indian delegation of the Iowa tribe and three of the Sac and Fox tribe. These, of our portraits are of IOWAS, namely: LAG-LER-LASH, or BUFFALO, TWO-BIL BEIDE ROSE, and TARA-KEE, or DESHAM, the two first being half-civilized, while DESHAM represents the wild portion of the tribe. PE-TI-OE-SA, or HARDSHIP, is a wild representative of the SACS and FOXES.

Many of the delegation are dressed in wild aboriginal costume. Some years ago one of them, MOLESH, was sent to Kentucky, and received a very liberal English education, which, however, he failed to improve upon his return to his native wilds, and consequently he derived but little benefit from it. GEORGE GOMEZ, the interpreter of the SACS and FOXES, is a fearfully ugly old fellow, who, report among his people says, has had seventy-five or eighty wives.

The tribes represented by this delegation occupy fifty sections of land, are surrounded by whites, and are quiet and peaceable. The Iowas are the most thrifty; cultivate their lands, and carry on extensive dealings in wood. One of the delegates, MAH-HOE OF THE KNIFE, has an extensive woodyard on the Missouri River, and Major BERDAN thinks that, next to the Cherokees, Iowas are the most civilized of the Indian tribes. They are also truly loyal to the Government of the United States, and during the late war the Iowas sent over one-half of their braves into the Union army. They served principally in Missouri and Arkansas under Kansas regiments, but many were scattered among Missouri and other border regiments.

The main object of the present visit is to have a "talk" with regard to a treaty made in 1861, and to have it renewed. When they sold their lands to the Government, they understood the agreement to be that they were to receive the purchase-money in hand. The United States holds the principal, however, and the Indians are regularly paid the interest.

But of course enjoyment is partly the object of their visit, for an Indian considers it one of the greatest events of his life to visit Washington and see his "Great Father," and nothing gives him more pleasure, or makes him livelier, than to be received by others of his tribe, a great man, than when he can rehearse to a listening audience what he has seen and heard on his travels. They will also carry back with them new silver peace medals, a number of which are now being struck at the Philadelphia Mint. The medals for President JOHNSON are of full size. On the face is an excellent cast of the President, with the words "ANDREW JOHNSON, President of the United States." On the reverse is a pedestal bearing in a wreath of laurel leaves the word "PEACE." In front of the pedestal two figures—an Indian and America—are clasping hands. At the feet of the Indian lie the pipe of peace and the tomahawk, and in the background are a herd of buffaloes. In the back-ground, near America, are represented a train of cars passing over a bridge, and a limnacle wheel and an anchor lie at her feet. The medals are beautifully designed, and are about two inches and a half in diameter.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 27, 1866.

A LONG STEP FORWARD.

THE order of General GRANT, defining the military authority of the United States in the late rebellious States, should reassure our friends who fear that the Government is too ready to imperil the public peace by delivering the whole authority of those States unconditionally into the hands of a class which can not be expected to use it in good faith.

The General's reply to the request of Governor PARSONS, of Alabama, that the national forces should be withdrawn and the local militia armed, is also significant and sensible. It is as follows:

"For the present, and until there is full security for equitably maintaining the rights and safety of all classes of citizens in the States lately in rebellion, I would not recommend the withdrawal of the United States troops from them. The number of infantry posts might be reduced, but a movable force sufficient to insure tranquility should be retained. While such a force is retained in the South, I shall use the propriety of putting arms in the hands of the militia."

The bill of Senator TRUMBULL'S continuing the Freedmen's Bureau and extending its operations to every part of the country in which freedmen are to be found in large numbers, is the complement of these military orders. It will undoubtedly be generally the Republican and become a law. This is another of the plain signs that neither the President nor Congress wish to make haste unwisely, and should certainly tend to temper the acrimony of debate upon the general subject.

Senator TRUMBULL'S bill recognizes two vital and fundamental facts of the situation. First, that the National Government means to protect and secure the personal liberty which it has conferred; and second, that it is essential the freedmen should have property also. Without that provision every other device will be futile.

At this moment, it should be remembered, the freedmen, excepting those settled upon the sea islands by General SHERMAN, and whose freehold Mr. TRUMBULL'S bill confirms, are without land and without the means of buying it. They are helpless in the midst of a population which is generally hostile to them, and they have no chance of bettering except from the landowners who may choose to employ them. Any landholder may say to them: "You are free to go. I do not wish to employ you. Get off my land." And they must go, or starve. The tragedy of his situation can hardly be exaggerated: and although the feeling against him may mellow with the lapse of time, and although the necessities of the case will gradually persuade the landholders not to quarrel with their bread and butter, yet meanwhile, under these winter skies, and amidst hostile bayonets, the suffering of the freedmen is terrible and incalculable, and the duty of the country is plain and imperative.

The freedmen are placed by General GRANT'S timely order under the protection of the military power. But that power can not feed them, nor house them, nor enable them to work and be paid for working. Mr. TRUMBULL'S bill authorizes the President to reserve for them 3,000,000 acres of good, unoccupied land in Florida, Arkansas, and Mississippi. The laborer or family is to have forty acres at a rent agreed upon by the Commissioner and the freedmen. Afterward the tenants may buy the land at a price to be named by the Commissioner and approved by the President. Meanwhile the pauper freedmen are to be provided with such lands as the United States may have in any district, and necessary schools and asylums are to be built upon them; while as the paupers become productive laborers the land is to be sold to them under fair conditions.

The necessity of immediate and decisive action upon the subject is urgent. Give the freedmen land free which they can not be compelled; protect their rights against all aggressors by the national power; and Time, the great mediator and educator, will gradually show the prosperity of landholders in the late rebel States that their interests is one with that of their late slaves, now become citizens; while the necessary labor will be found, the wages and the education for which the freedmen are so anxious and so ripe will develop the self-respecting and independent manhood which will fit them for the political power which can not long be withheld.

OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS.

THE wish expressed by us a week or two since that the public might be informed of the present state of our foreign questions has been gratified by the publication of the correspondence between our Government and that of France. The important point of that correspondence is that on the 18th of October M. DRUYN DE LHUYS, the French foreign Minister, wrote to the MARQUIS DE MONTHOLON, the French minister at Washington, that the United States would recognize MAXIMILIAN, France would doubtless be able to withdraw its forces from Mexico. On the 6th of December MR. SEWARD replies that the condition suggested is impracticable; and on the 16th of December he writes to MR. BIGELOW that the United States earnestly desire peace with France, but that peace would be impossible if MAXIMILIAN and France should retire from Mexico, and he expresses his regret that from a conversation which MR. BIGELOW had had with M. DRUYN DE LHUYS, the French minister had understood that the United States would recognize MAXIMILIAN.

The position of this country upon the question is fully defined. It will not recognize MAXIMILIAN, and it maintains diplomatic relations with JUAREZ and the native republic. In its eyes, therefore, MAXIMILIAN is an interloper, and dangerous to the United States. The interests and safety under present circumstances require his departure: and if, after a forcible and courteous remonstrance, a declaration of war is the bugbear of every honorable persuasion, France still persists in sustaining MAXIMILIAN by arms, it will become a practical question for the United States whether to abet and how to help by the sustain JUAREZ. The whole world is aware that the circumstances under which France and the United States stand are changed. The French enterprise depended for success upon our national destruction, and France must conform to the unexpected result of our triumph by a change of policy. This consideration is suggested by MR. SEWARD, politely, but plainly and emphatically. We believe, as we have always believed, that France will not push the matter to extremity.

The question of our Alabama claims upon Great Britain has also taken a definite form. On the 21st of November MR. ADAMS informed Lord CLARENDON that the United States declined the proposition for a joint commission. On the 8th of December Lord CLARENDON replies that, while the correspondence discloses "the British Government have steadily and honestly discharged all the duties incumbent upon them as a neutral power." His Lordship says that the vessels which we call, and he known as the Alabama, and then his rejoinder would have been consistent and complete.

The history of the Alabama has been written by MR. GEORGE BEMIS, of Boston, in a series of exhaustive papers upon the subject. He shows from the Parliamentary Blue-books, including those of documents, that the insurgent vessel did depart from a British port to cruise against American commerce. That question is not open. And if the British Government is contented with the precedent of neutrality which it has established, it is satisfied with a course that must inevitably destroy its own commerce the instant it is engaged in war.

But as we do not expect that France will proceed to extremities upon the Mexican question, so we do not believe the United States will make war upon Great Britain to enforce the Alabama claims. In both cases the position of the United States is just and dignified, and it is certainly a matter of honest pride that in the gravest hour of our history our diplomatic ability has been as masterly as our military skill.

THE PRESS AND PUBLIC OPINION.

NOBODY believes that there is any party among loyal men opposed to the speediest national reorganization, although there are many who say or in the Democratic journals that capital. The sole practical question is one of method, and we are much more likely to err by haste than by reflection. We are very sorry, therefore, to see journals of which a fine sense of duty was to be expected abdicating their function of enlightening public opinion by argument, and raising the cry that the people have made up their minds to a certain result, right or wrong, and that any party will be ruined which tries to withstand it.

None can be more conscious of the enormity of such a cry than some who raise it. The business of an honest journalist is not to guess at the tendency of the popular current and then float with it upon the theory that it can not be resisted, but it is to endeavor to turn that current in the true direction. RICHARD COBDEN did not exhort the people to believe that the British mind was set upon protection, and that any party which opposed it would be destroyed, but he went to work to show the British mind that it ought to favor free trade. And for what, indeed, are free speech and a free press valuable but to mould public opinion? The people are the controlling force, to be moulded by a tyrant as by the tyrannical fear of a majority; and the most contemptible newspaper in the United States is such because its only aim is to reflect what it believes to be the current opinion, however base.

We are not unmindful of the necessity of parties to the discussion of the great political reforms, and of the peculiar necessity of union among the true friends of the Government at this time. We are indeed quite sure that there is rather an apparent than an actual difference in the Union party. But nothing more surely tends to create a schism than hot and reckless talk in Congress and in newspapers, and contemptible which is amusing in a katydid and ridiculous in an editor or a legislator.

There can be no assumption more utterly baseless than that the people of the country, who have the decision of the question, are solely anxious to have the form of the Union restored without consideration of the means by which that work shall be accomplished. They are not anxious to put fire to gunpowder and consider afterward the question of explosion. Public opinion, we are glad to know, is more thoroughly fixes the just and honorable settlement of our great questions, and it is the pleasant duty of the press to sustain and fortify it.

But these words butter no parsnips. The people are not deceived as to the real feeling and condition of the late rebel section. They know perfectly well that the most conciliatory treatment was adopted there because the voters could not help themselves. The President made it an indispensable preliminary step toward reorganization. That step has been accomplished, and the President waits patiently to see what other steps Congress may deem desirable and essential. That question will not be "rushed," and the country has only to wish for peace and security, desire that it should be. It will be considered thoughtfully and thoroughly, and settled ingeniously and securely.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE "NEPTUNE."

WHOSE duty is it to take care that a poor woman arriving in an emigrant ship at this port, and being confined after her arrival, shall not be left for two days in a state of utter dirt and a berth with a little straw to lie on, "very cold and damp and wet," and there to remain "exposed and cold" until she is frozen to death?

This was the fate of MARY ANN GILROY, a passenger by the Liverpool ship Neptune, Captain ENOCH W. PEABODY, belonging to Messrs. H. MARSHALL & CO. Captain PEABODY is of opinion, according to his testimony, that it is the ship's doctor's business to look after the sick passengers, and is satisfied that he has performed to the best of his abilities all the duties under which he shipped his passengers. The Captain says that it is the business of the Commissioners of Emigration to take charge of sick passengers arriving in port; and although he did not report to them that there was a woman on board prematurely confined, yet MR. LAWSON, one of the Commissioners, told him that the Commissioners had been notified.

MR. FARNSWORTH, inspector of Customs, testifies that he boarded the Neptune on Tuesday afternoon, and at eight on Wednesday morning the passengers were all removed by an agent of the Commissioners of Emigration, excepting MARY ANN GILROY, who had been confined on Tuesday night. All Wednesday the poor woman lay in the wet and cold straw. The inspector thinks that there was a blanket over her, and can not say whether there was a bed under her. At some time he saw the ship's doctor and a woman attending to her. On Thursday afternoon at five o'clock she was moved from the ship by the authority of the Commissioners of Emigration. On Friday morning she died. In her ante-mortem examination MARY GRAY testified that four days before reaching port she told the doctor that her feet were "frosted," and he "wouldn't believe it;" paid no attention to her, and forced her to come on deck to get her medicine. DR. BEACH, who accompanied the Coroner, talked with the unhappy woman, found her sensible, and able to converse intelligently, and is of opinion that she died from want of proper care and attention.

A helpless woman has been frozen to death upon a ship in the harbor of New York. Death's work is responsible. Who is guilty of this murder? Is it the Captain, the Doctor, the Commission of Emigration, the owner of the ship? It is pitiful to think of the sorrow and suffering of these emigrant ships, and how easy it is for the guilty to screen themselves. But here is an offence that will not be hidden. Are our laws impotent to protect the defenseless? If not, by what process will keep this tragedy fresh in the public mind until the offender is brought to trial and to punishment.

YOUR DOXY AND MY DOXY.

In the time of the Inquisition it was frightful, it is now happily only very comical, to hear a man state his view of a religious question, and then, drawing a long breath, add one rotten egg, pressing with both hands, both feet, and both knees upon all the keys and pedals, exclaim: "To doubt or deny this rule is infidelity begun."

Of course it is. The blatant infidelity of assertion. But whether his assertion be the truth is quite another question.

Thus there is a familiar Biblical phrase that the husband is the head of the wife. What is the exact significance may be is a fair question. Does it merely state a fact, or imply a rule? Does it mean as the intellect is generally more pronounced in man than in woman, or women, therefore the guiding force will naturally be in the husband? Does it mean that a drunkard or an imbecile has a rightful ascendancy over his wife, or that where the superiority is all with the woman she is to yield always to the inferiority of her spouse? Does it mean that if the husband be the head he may do as he chooses with his wife? and if not, is she to be the judge when he transcends the rights of headship? It is a fine truth, a phrase which will be as variously interpreted as men's minds are different.

But that any man should now, and in this country, pronounce a doom of his interpretation of this or of any scriptural passage as infidelity, or doubt of the essential truths of religion, is so preposterous as to be incredible. Yet it is done: and the Christian gentleman who does it would doubtless be amazed if he in turn were convicted of infidelity by the same easy and absurd method. The Romish Church would inform him that his whole interpretation of Christianity is the beginning and end of irreligion and infidelity. To believe in the antipodes was once held to be infidelity, and the plain teaching of the Bible. Yet the truth upon that subject has been tolerably demonstrated, and the Bible is not discarded. In the light of to-day it may be very properly suspected that to doubt or deny any individual interpretation of a passage in the Bible neither imperils good morals nor religious faith.

THINGS OF COURSE.

THE New York World, a few months ago, spoke of ANDREW JOHNSON as a "drunken, drunken brute, in comparison with whom even Caligula's horse was respectable."

The same paper prescribed an acrimonious assault upon SECRETARY SEWARD, the head of President JOHNSON'S Cabinet, as "the scraping of the old sow SEWARD."

It need surprise no man that the same paper now denounces ABRAHAM LINCOLN as a thief and a swindler.

What could more happily illustrate the original sagacity than that the party of which this paper is the fit organ has been utterly spewed out by the American people?

ROBERT B. MINTURN.

The true treasures of a nation are its good men, and neither Death nor Time can steal them. The man, indeed, dies, but the memory of his character still survives, and is a perpetual inspiration of the noblest activity. This is a solace to all of us in the high and clear-sighted moments of life, that every honorable man would wish to build his monument, like that of ROBERT B. MINTURN, in the unmeasured respect and tender love of his friends and neighbors.

Gentle, just, and generous; modest, humane, and sagacious: honored by the most successful and prosperous, beloved by the poorest and most forgotten; his sense of responsibility growing with increasing fortune, until his devoted life was that of an humble steward of the Divine bounty—this was the New York merchant, the American gentleman, the serene Christian, whose life was a public blessing, and whose death is a universal sorrow.

Wholly withdrawn from what is technically called public life, and declining every position of merely personal advantage, there was no citizen of New York whose name was better known, and known only for an ideal probity in all business relations, and for the most earnest and unwearied practical humanity. He was one of the first Commissioners of emigration, because he knew what severe and often repulsive labor the sincere and faithful discharge of that duty demanded; and therefore he was not content to give his name and his money to the relief of the suffering emigrant, but he gave his time, his sagacity, and his strong train of the poor, who knew him as their friend, and who, when his sudden death was known, came weeping to the house to look upon his face once more—have known that, once when a poor emigrant woman lay ill of ship-fever and neither nurse nor medicine could be had, he threw her for necessary removal from her bed to a carriage, he quietly took her in his arms and tenderly carried her, they would have known that one of the endless services of his practical charity, from which no fear or fatigue was entirely could deter him.

But his sensitive sympathy did not impair his sagacity. Too finely balanced for extravagance in thought or deed, his mind and heart were in the fullest harmony, and his distinctive trait in his business relation was as wise, unobtrusive, and faithful as his charity. The most conservative and reasonable as his impulses were generous, so that all who knew him well and those who but seldom met him equally bore testimony to his impression of manly symmetry and completeness.

The death of such a man to those who were nearest him is a bereavement the most poignant. But to the community his influence is so vital and enduring that it should rather be grateful that he lived so long. His example is the best of sermons. When RICHARD CORDEN died his political opponent, DISRAELI, said of him that there were "some members of Parliament" whose loss, when they should be present, are still members of this House, are independent of dissolutions, of the caprices of constituencies, and even of the accidents of life." It is true, also, in a corresponding sense, of some men in the larger sphere of society, and of none truer than of ROBERT B. MINTURN.

PORCELAIN PHOTOGRAPHS

The beautiful porcelain photographs of MESSRS. HUSTON and KUNZE, of No. 895 Broadway, fully justify the high praise which we have bestowed. They are printed directly from the negative, so that the outline is exact, and they are then exquisitely colored with the most accurate regard to likenesses, with all the delicacy, softness, and tenderness of the most finished miniatures upon ivory. They are also as durable as the porcelain plate upon which they are painted, and may be wiped and washed and exposed to the sun without losing their brilliancy and freshness. Many of these pictures we seen are colored with great skill; and this application of the art must be regarded as a very important step in the progress of photography.

"INSIDE."

THE second number of this interesting and striking story is published in this paper, with the illustrations of MR. NAST, who delicately characterizes the peculiar individuality of each of the tale. The spirit and dramatic skill of this "Chronicle of Secession" will surely commend it to the faithful attention of those who begin, as every body should, with the beginning.

WHILE THE DAYS ARE GOING BY.

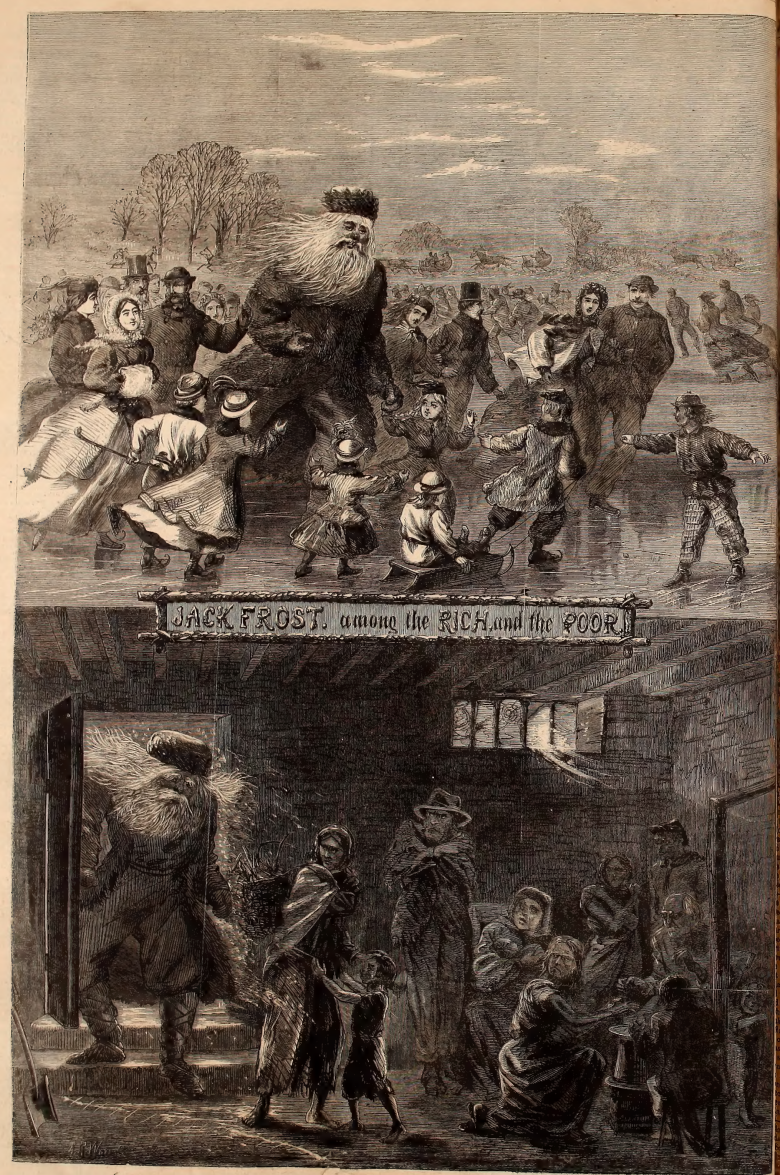
Tares are lonely hearts to cherish
While the days are going by;
There are weary souls who perish
While the days are going by;
If a smile can make us merry
As our journey we pursue,
Oh! the good we all may do,
While the days are going by!

There's no time for idle sorrow
While the days are going by;
Let our face be like the morning
While the days are going by;
Oh! the world is full of sighing,
Full of sad and weeping eyes:
Help your fallen brother rise
While the days are going by.

All the loving links that bind us
While the days are going by,
One by one we leave behind us
While the days are going by;
But the seeds of good we sow,
Both in shade and shine will grow,
And will bear a golden crop
While the days are going by.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.



January 9:

In the Senate, MR. SUMNER presented a memorial soliciting for the donation of public lands for educational purposes to colored soldiers and sailors. MR. WILSON offered a resolution, which was adopted, appointing WM. J. McDonald, Chief Clerk of the House, to pay salary due. Another resolution offered by MR. SUMNER was adopted, inquiring if any legislation is needful to prevent the kidnapping of freedmen and their transportation as slaves to Brazil or Cuba.

In the House, MR. Washburne of Illinois introduced a bill to repeal the Fugitive Slave Law. MR. Baldwin, of Massachusetts, declaring that the real purpose of the New York and Washington Air Line Bill was not to operate against the Camden and Amboy monopoly, but to relieve the Central Pacific Railroad Company from its obligation to carry United States mails and troops free of charges. A resolution was offered declaring that the Bill as it had been hastily passed under a call for the previous question, thus suppressing debate, and that therefore many members who voted for the bill had done so misunderstanding its real purport. It was finally agreed that the bill should be debated for two hours on the next session.—MR. Broomall, of Pennsylvania, introduced a resolution, which was referred to the Committee of Fifteen, to the effect that, before Congress conferred the necessary power to enable the rebellious States to form State governments the rights of those among them always true to United States should be guaranteed and protected.—MR. Voorhees, of Indiana, then called up the resolutions heretofore submitted by him declaring the President's Message as an able, judicious, and patriotic state paper; recommending the appointment of a Select Committee to the Soldiers' Union; and pledging Congress to uphold the President's policy. In the course of the debate MR. Voorhees declared by Congress to immediately admit the Southern representatives and was followed by MR. Cox, of Ohio, who declared him of his former attitudes against Federal coercion. Delegates appointed to attend the Soldiers' Convention at Pittsburg here have manifested the slightest disposition to be influenced by the Executive.—MR. Cox, of Ohio, also made up a conflict with him. "If the day ever comes when we will take sides with the President we will be in Hell were buried so deep that the hand of resurrection can never find us." MR. Cox then read the President and extracts from his friends." In conclusion he offered the following as a substitute for the resolutions of the gentleman from Indiana: "Resolved—That this House hereby declares its confidence in the President: that in the future as in the past he will co-operate with Congress in restoring on equal political rights with the other States in the Union all the States lately in insurrection." Under the call for previous question Bingham was supported 167 to 32.

January 10:

In the Senate, MR. Wilson offered a petition of the colored citizens of Savannah, asking confiscation, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. A resolution reported the House bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain claims of Internal Revenue. MR. Sumner said he would vote for the bill on the understanding that the Judiciary would act on his own authority, as he had done heretofore, relieve the citizen by appointing a Commission. The bill passed by 27 to 9. The bill was laid over.—MR. Wilson introduced a bill to increase the efficiency of the peace establishment of the United States. It provides that the military peace establishment of the United States shall hereafter consist of seven regiments of artillery, ten regiments of cavalry, eight regiments of infantry, and such corps of engineers as may be provided for by this act. Section 2 provides that, in addition to the five regiments of artillery now organized there shall be added one regiment, to be composed of white persons, and one regiment to be composed of colored persons—the officers of which shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 3 provides that in addition to the six regiments of cavalry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 5 provides that there shall be added to the present force of the line of infantry, and ten Brigadier-Generals, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 6 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 8 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 9 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 10 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 11 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 12 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 13 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 14 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 15 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 16 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 17 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 18 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 19 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 20 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 21 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 22 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 23 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 24 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 25 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 26 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 27 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 28 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 29 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 30 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 31 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 32 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 33 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 34 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 35 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 36 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 37 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 38 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 39 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 40 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 41 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 42 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 43 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 44 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 45 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 46 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 47 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 48 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 49 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 50 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 51 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 52 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 53 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 54 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 55 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 56 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 57 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 58 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 59 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 60 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 61 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 62 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 63 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 64 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 65 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 66 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 67 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 68 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 69 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 70 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 71 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 72 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 73 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 74 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 75 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 76 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 77 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 78 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 79 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 80 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 81 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 82 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 83 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 84 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 85 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 86 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 87 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 88 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 89 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 90 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 91 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 92 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 93 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 94 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 95 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 96 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 97 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 98 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 99 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 100 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 101 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 102 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 103 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 104 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 105 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 106 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 107 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 108 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 109 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 110 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 111 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 112 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 113 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 114 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 115 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 116 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 117 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 118 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 119 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 120 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 121 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 122 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 123 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 124 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 125 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 126 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 127 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 128 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field. Section 129 provides that in addition to the six regiments of infantry now by law authorized there shall be two regiments to be composed of white persons. Section 130 provides that there shall be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Brigadier-General, who shall have the same pay and emoluments as Brigadier-Generals now by law authorized to be appointed by the President and by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall be selected from among the volunteer officers of the country who have served not less than two years during the war, and who have been distinguished for personal gallantry in the field.

JACK FROST, among the RICH and the POOR.

ered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.)

INSIDE.

CHRONICLE OF SECESSION.

IN TWENTY-FOUR CHAPTERS.

COLONEL JUGGINS GOING HOME.

CHAPTER III.

COLONEL JUGGINS emerged from the office of Somerville Star like an honest blue-bottle newly he carried away a good deal of the about him out of the den of a spider. very much better the Colonel felt in leav- than when he entered its door.

en he heard of the investment of Fort Don- by the Federal forces, never had the Col- been more certain of the rising of the sun ayer than he was of the repulse and de- on of the Yankees. When the news ar- that the fort had actually capitulated, that Federate forces had failed to make a stand Nashville, it fell upon his ears, and upon very many like him, more like the tid- some great phenomenon, some unpre- interruption of the laws of nature itself, erally as the news of battle and defeat. mind left most painful impression was Heavens! if we have been defeated— the South—defeated once, what may not hereafter! The truth is, the events of so far had settled the common mind in ople, and throughout the South, in the direction of which had always been ed opinion, that Northern troops could ed before Southern. True, Bowling had been repulsed, but that was easily ; it was a splendid stratagem to draw mind troops further South, and so make a ish of them.

e historians will write Mannassas as the of the Confederacy. The cup of victory there drank was followed by a of intoxication to the South, of a greater which history has no instance. As has ed before, the universal opinion at the of Southern invincibility had hardly need ning to establish, and Manassas petri- opinion into granite certainty.

ld the events following Manassas fail to this certainty, had such increase been possible.

So thoroughly settled was the South- upon the whole subject that the vague Northern preparation going on excited no interest. The same sentiment pos- like the people, the press, and the offi- least, from no quarter was heard a syl- to the same note. Any one who had otherwise would have been marked as creature, unsettled in his wits by an attachment to the Union, which ought regarded as traitorous, if it were not so implied as contemptible.

the most firm among the Union men beginning to settle themselves down to med the will of Heaven—tasting about the best of an inevitable matter. Nor to be wondered at, when it is remem- now successfully all intelligence from the was excluded from the South. By a most policy, the Southern press copied from ern and European papers, as a general that which was favorable to the South. more than human to withstand an influ- unmingled and universal.

as to the inherent and unchangeable wrong of the matter, the minds of men were unchanged; but they had be- now to the thing as to a Providence too to be understood—as a thing in which remained but submission to the will of the destiny, whatever it was to be called. the Border States may have been less ful, but to the people of the States far- th, thunder from a cloudless sky is less than were the tidings that Federal had actually run up the Tennessee to that Fort Henry was taken, that Fort had fallen, that Nashville had capitu- The dominant feeling was—bewilderear Helen," Dr. Warner remarked to his wife, in a calm which had followed one of his domestic tempests, "you may depend on it, and your own clear, strong sense will say yes to me in it, truth is much the best plan. Frankly and truthfully, from the first, with my patients is my plan. They have confidence in me then; they are sure to follow my prescriptions faithfully. There is a mutual understanding between us; no miserable dodging and deceiving on either side; and, whatever the result is, we at least know that all has been done from the start that could be done. The South has been grossly deceived by its doctors, I mean its leaders, from the first."

"Yes, you always hated Secession," broke in the partner of his bosom, the casual-gates opening.

"I was not speaking just then, of Secession, but of the course pursued since then; but it is all of a piece. Either our political doctors were themselves all deceived, or they deliberately and systematically deluded, the unfortunate people who had been cast into their hands," observed the mild physician.

"Went it blind, ma," said Bub, who was making a kite on the floor beside his parents, and who could not possibly have been the child of quick-witted Mrs. Warner and not have known himself smart.

"Hold your tongue, Bub!" broke in his mother. "Nice thing, Dr. Warner," she continued, "you are not satisfied not to be a whole-souled Southern man yourself; you are poisoning even the mind of your own child. I have no patience with you, Dr. Warner—cool, slow, patient submission to rogues! They were days of giving up to those vile Yankees! Before I'd do it I'd die a thousand times over! You laugh at old Colonel Juggins, I know; but if he is a coarse, ignorant, old man I only wish to goodness you were as hearty in the war as he is! He was always wondering what Johnson was doing, staying there at Bowling Green, when he ought to have been across the river into Ohio. And Davis, and his set of clever men, were not more than twenty miles from Washington, month after month, instead of marching right on, taking Washington, catching and hanging old Lincoln. Set of cowards! You men are all alike. Oh, if I was only a man!"

"What would you do if you were a man?" asked her impassive husband.

"Do! I'd raise fifty thousand brave men, lead them right on into the North, burn every house, batter down every town, kill every man I could! I tell you," said this Mrs. Warner, her black eyes sparkling, "I'd kill and burn, and cut their throats till they'd be glad enough to make peace with us. That's what Mrs. Bowles and Dr. Ginnis say. Instead of that, they are evacuating Bowling Green—running away, I call it—and Davis there in twenty miles of Washington and not going right on! Never things," continued Mrs. Warner, with bitter sarcasm, "will I read some morning the precious news that they have evacuated Columbus—even Massfassas!"

"My dear," said Dr. Warner, helping himself to another slice of ham—for they were at dinner on the same day as that in which we first introduced them to the reader—"my dear, I do firmly believe that if you were a man you would succeed vastly better than nine-tenths of our men. But we have to take them as we find them. However, if you were a man I would have missed the most active and excellent wife in the world, and Somerville the best housekeeper going!"

And it was only the fact; Mrs. Warner was the greatest housekeeper in Somerville; as to the other the Doctor lied, and he knew it.

But it was of Colonel Juggins we intended to speak in entering upon this chapter. Slowly rode the Colonel home meditating upon the news. Lamum and Lamum's pile of newspapers had relieved his mind somewhere, but not entirely. There is a certain mysterious assurance which a fact always carries with it wherever it flies: you may deny it loudly, you may hate it heartily; but when a fact comes to the ear, the mind receives it as such by some mystic affinity as a fact—recognizes it by spontaneous appetite as the palate recognizes its natural food. As well as he knew his name did Lamum know that the disastrous news from Fort Donelson was true. Dr. Peel knew it. Even Colonel Juggins knew it—acknowledge it? no—yet none the less every body knew it to be true. It was as if the sun had varied from his path. Gracious Heavens, what might not be the next news!

Somehow, before he alighted from his horse at home—some five miles from Somerville—all Lamum's consolation had been dissipated from his mind, and the ugly news remained in all its hideous reality. The Colonel belonged to one of the three classes into which all slave-owners at the South may be divided. As a representative man of this class let us say a word or two in regard to the Colonel.

Tom Juggins was the son of a rich Tennessee planter. There had been six or eight children in all, but what with being thrown from unbroken colts, and cholera morbus from eating green water-melons, and chills and fevers, one by one all the children had died except Tom. As to him, he doubtless owed his special strength of constitution to the fact that he had been suckled from his very birth by a negro "mammy." In that mammy's cabin passed the days of his infancy, his mother being a confirmed invalid, and his father having an unfortunate habit of spending in town and in intoxication pretty much all the time he could spare from field and cotton-house. On the earth floor of his mammy's house Tom learned to walk, and around the chicken-coops in front of it were spent his first hours of play.

In her way never child had a more loving mother than Tom had in his mammy, preferring him, as she decidedly did, to all of her own dark brood. And a very paradise of childhood Tom had of it; permitted to get as dirty as he pleased, very little washing, and no switching whatever. Nor was his childhood less suspicious as it advanced into older years. With a troop of little blacks at his heels he haunted the calf lot and stable-yard, worrying the calves, riding the horses to water "bare-back," hunting and eating all the eggs. With his allies to back him did he stone the cats and the birds, clip the tails and ears of the puppies, kill the snakes, paddle in the spring, and climb the trees. Among his sable associates, too, did he learn and practice many a vice peculiar to their semi-savage nature and easily ingrafted into his.

In due time Tom was sent to school; yet it was very little Tom learned. What with playing truant, and "barring out" the schoolmaster, and holidays occasionally, and idleness all the time, it was very little Tom learned beyond reading, writing, and the beginning of ciphering.

The rest of the story is soon told. After a month of breaking horses and swimming and hunting, and accompanying the cotton-wagons occasionally to the nearest city, and frolicking a little at weddings and corn-huskings, Tom fell in love with and married a neighbor's daughter, and settled down. The death of his parents not very long after deceased to a "place," with all its negroes, on his hands, and Tom went to work ginning cotton and selling it as his fathers did before him. The old log-house in which his father lived did well enough for him. True, he did once take a notion to build, had vast quantities of sand and sand-lumber hauled for the purpose; but something or other turned up to postpone the matter, and there the heaps of material continued to lie, an admirable lurking-place for snakes, laying place for hens, and playing-ground for the swarms of little negroes, till winds and rain and towering weeds had made a medieval ruin of the whole.

Year after year in a row of wretched cabins did Tom, now Colonel Juggins, continue to live, as contented in his house as any hand in his little inferior hut hard by. He had become accustomed to blubbing his head in passing through the low doorways, to walking over the rolling pancheon planks which composed the floors. As to the roof, a chap-board or two could be nailed on in half a minute to keep out the worst of the rain, and a rock or so, with a handful of mud, could close up the worst of the cracks between the logs of the wall. Abundantly able to build a stately mansion, the Colonel saw little in his limited travels to awaken desire for any thing beyond what he already was so accustomed to. Besides, the Colonel was fat.

And so rolled the years by with Colonel Juggins. Hardly would he do as a specimen of the terrible slave-holder of excited imaginations. Such there are, but not one of that class was the Colonel. His dwelling was first cousin to the worst which any slave on the place occupied. His clothing was rather inferior than otherwise to the Sunday suits of his men. As to his daily food, it was about the same in house and in hut. Very often, in fact, was Mrs. Juggins glad enough, when company unexpectedly came, to borrow of some of their "people" the honey, poultry, eggs, or butter with which to eke out the dinner.

True, the Colonel voted and his hands were denied that inestimable happiness; but, then, the Colonel knew very little more at last about the principles voted for or against than they would have done. The Colonel, having all the responsibility and bother of the "Place," was, upon the whole, much the least happy man of it, and, as to his religious principles, if he was a churchmember, so was almost every one of his grown hands, and they had the opportunity of receiving just as much and as good religious instruction from Sabbath to Sabbath as he.

There are two other classes of slave-owners, each as distinct from the other as his is from both. The Yankee owner of slaves, Mr. Neely for instance, and the aristocratic slaveholder, Colonel Ret Roberts as a specimen. Of them we will speak hereafter. I am altogether unwilling to say that the Colonel is the largest class, the base of the pyramid, because I am not entirely certain that it is so.

"What I've got to say is this: why can't they just stay at home where they are, mind their own matters, and let us alone." That was Mrs. Juggins's opinion in regard to the war, she always mentioned it at table when company was present and the war the topic. With her it was a plain, common-sense solution of the whole matter, embracing the whole thing entirely and conclusively. "We are not going where they live, and bothering them! Why can't they let us alone!"

But since the Yankees would come South "with their guns and things," Mrs. Juggins yielded to the necessity of sending Tom, their only son, to help drive them back. In her idea it was an operation precisely like having the chickens driven out of the garden—troublesome, but not very dangerous. Often had Mrs. Juggins heard the plan suggested of building a wall around the South, over which no Yankee was ever to intrude. It was intended as metaphor, but Mrs. Juggins adopted it as highly feasible. The fact is, Mrs. Juggins was the duplicate of the Colonel. And you have been introduced to the Colonel, and an hour after met his wife in a store, say the first time, you would have said on the spot: "There is Mrs. Juggins, and I know it!" Both bore in weight about the same relation to two hundred pounds, both had the same large, red, good-humored country face. It was little education Mrs. Juggins had when she married, and she certainly had seen time for nothing except the management of the negroes and of her fast coming, fast going too, as for that, children since that event. Except an almanac, a Bible, and a hymn-book or two, there was no reading in their house save the papers.

Of those that he took the Colonel decidedly preferred his religious paper, which, while it gave him all the news of his church, gave him also Secession in its moral and religious aspect. No, sir, Heavens! why is it that the more say so of a mortal has so much more weight and force when printed than it has when only spoken? No mistake about that paper!

"WHAT I SAY," ADDED Mrs. JUGGINS, "IS JUST THIS."—[SEE NEXT PAGE.]

Never in his life could the Colonel read a paper, or any thing else, except aloud and very slowly. In consequence of this his wife managed to get her news without much trouble on her part. Every syllable was heard by the Colonel as he read it, and by his wife with a double faith, because of the fact that it came to her from the lips and backed by the opinions and assurances of her husband. If angels are permitted to hover over mortals, one would think the very tongue of such visitants would have unwrigled to speak out and apprise this poor Colonel Juggins and his wife of the enormous falsehoods which they fed upon thus from day to day with such a pitiful, implicit belief. But no; the Colonel and his wife then in their extreme were the representatives of millions at the South—millions willing to know and to do the right, yet so systematically, so awfully, so utterly blinded! To keep them apprised of the arts by which they were deluded would have withheld the heavenly enjoyment from all the experiments and rules in unintermitting artillery. Ah, how even angel bosoms must have heaved to smite with flaming swords the guilty authors of the gigantic delusion! How patient is God! And if the inhabitants of heaven know what goes on upon earth, largely must they be partakers of the astonishment of the divine nature—else would heaven cease to them to be heaven, at least so long as earth continues to sin and to suffer Juggins!

It was an immense relief to Colonel Juggins, as he entered the door of his house, to find Brother Barker there. Peter Barker had assisted him in regard to Fort Donelson for a time as he rode into town, Lamum had cheered him in it little the moment, but Brother Barker was worth more than all besides. Pete, Lamum, and the rest were all very well, but Brother Barker was the ear on the ear of the Colonel with all the weight of religious truth. From his earliest recollection the Colonel had been accustomed to receive as certainly true what his preacher said whether in the pulpit or out of it. Besides, Brother Barker proved all his points from Scripture itself. To doubt Brother Barker's conclusions was irreligious, and the Colonel hadn't been a "member" for thirty years now—class leader, steward, and all—to do that!

"And what do you think of this last Fort Donelson news?" asked the Colonel, unbuttoning after saluting his guest, and making himself comfortable by seating himself in a hide-bottomed chair and tilting himself back in it against the wall.

"As I see you do, Brother Juggins—painful, painful indeed!" replied the preacher, sighing.

"You believe in it, then?" asked the Colonel, slowly and with a sinking heart.

"Believe in it? Certainly I do. There isn't the least doubt, as I can see, but the Federals are in possession of Donelson and Nashville, Tuscumbia and Huntsville, and—for what we know!"

"Well, you take it easier like than I can," said the planter, with a gloomy brow.

"Why not, Brother Juggins? It is of the Lord, isn't it? Besides, what is it, and what ought you to care about Donelson, Nashville, and the like, when I know and when you know that the end of it all is going to be so? Why, Brother Juggins, whatever I expected of a worldling I didn't expect it of you. A man out in the world, now, I wouldn't be surprised at, but you!" And the preacher shook his cheerful as his host was gloomy.

"I was jinjin' strong it wasn't true," said the planter, after some time. "To me it sounds mighty bad, no use tryin' to hide it."

"And take after all you know on the subject, after all the talk we've had! Well, Brother Juggins, you must pardon me saying it, but I am surprised and grieved," said the preacher.

"Surprised at what?" asked the planter. "Bad news is bad news, I suppose."

"Strange human nature, really! oh, yes, of course; ought to expect it at last," mused the preacher, with his head down on his bosom as if in soliloquy. "So many thousand years ago it was those Jews talked the same way! As in the instant they heard Pharoah's chariots rattling behind them. Very like the people of the wheels they forgot Moses, forgot God, forgot every thing except that Pharoah was after them, Dimph! Well. Yes."

"I hadn't thought of it exactly that way," said the planter, accepting the reproof humbly, and seeing consolation in it.

"Did I ever say we would escape some fighting, some bloody defeated before we got through? I asked the preacher—"tell me now, Brother Juggins."

"You did at the first, as I mind," said the planter with a thoughtful brow. "Christian Israel you know we were. Baldwin, he made that plain in his book. And then we came from his father's house, our forefathers drir of God over the ocean, God's special people in both cases. Thirteen tribes settled in Canaan, thirteen colonies settled in America. Some of them tribes split off from the rest, some of our States split off from the rest, too. And, you mind, when Secession first started, come to think of it, you proved from the Bible there would be no fight, not a bit. God wouldn't let that fool son of Solomon fight the tribes that split off even when he wanted to. There was goin' to be no fight, no fight at all! God himself would interpose to hinder, you said. And it did look mighty plain."

"But, Brother Juggins—" began the preacher.

"In one moment, Brother Barker. I've been studyin' over it, and I want to speak about that Christian Israel idea while I remember. I've been wantin' to ask you; it don't seem to gee like. In the Bible the tribes that split off were all except two; in our case it's the fewer number has split off from the larger number. Then, and this hurts me worst, the tribes that split off were the ones that sinned against God in the thing, that became worse and worse, that went to—what did ever become of Jeroboam's tribes that split off from remained the favored people of God, had Jerusalem, and the Temple, and all. Let me, Brother Barker—I was all very pretty when you first look at it, but the more you study into it—there was that about three long as Solomon's lifetime, that between the tribes when the break-up took place. I declare, for one man, I don't understand it!" concluded the old planter, somewhat testily.

"Brother Juggins," said the preacher, graveley, "do I understand you to say that you have studied Baldwin's book from end to end, deeply, thoroughly?"

"No, Sir," said the planter. "It's near three inches thick, that book. I only skimmed over it—a little here and a little there."

"I really do not think, Brother Juggins," said the preacher, in a kind of expostulation, "that you ought to decide so upon what you say yourself you never studied to the bottom."

"Well, perhaps so," said the planter, as he remembered how ponderous was the material question, and how very little he had mastered its contents. "But there was not one syllable about Secession in the whole book, I know that, that was in it. Was Secession the character the author was to fight the battle of Armageddon in the Mississippi Valley. Not one hint about Secession!"

And Colonel Juggins was not the only one who had puzzled over the book in question—"ARMAGEDON, OR THE SOUTH AND HER PROPHECY." You saw the thick and well thumbed volume on every shelf during the two or three years before the war.

"Brother Baldwin was mistaken about that," consented the preacher. "But he has found out his mistake, and they say, is recasting the wild-fire every where setting people right. I believe as certain as I do my own existence those prophecies in the Bible mean the South and our Confederacy. I'll talk with you any day about them as long as you like. No man, at least no Christian man, can read the Bible prophecies and say they don't have reference to the Confederacy. But we won't talk about that now. Brother Juggins, will you kneel down with a little by me?"

The Bible was found, dusted, and brought. Mrs. Juggins drew still nearer with her knitting.

"Brother Juggins," said the preacher, after he had found the place in the large, well-thumbed Bible, and putting on his pulpit manner as an Episcopal clergyman would put on his gown, "you often say you are a plain man. Well, you can understand a plain passage in the Bible—"

"That passage in Timothy?" inquired the Colonel.

"I know we've been over it often before," said the preacher, "but we can hardly have too much of the Bible, I suppose. This book was given to guide us. Brother Juggins' Sister Juggins?" Very solemnly. The persons in question nodded their assent. "Now then," continued the preacher, and he read, in a slow, solemn manner: "It's First Timothy, sixth chapter. Those who are servants under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honor, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed. And they that have believers to the pint." Next is: "If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness." That is, ay thing against slavery he's just been speaking about, "he is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness."

Now let us hold on one moment," said the preacher, closing the book, with his finger in the place. "I put it to you, Brother Juggins, Sister Juggins, isn't all that a description of the Northern people—the Abolitionists?"

"I suppose so," said the planter for self and wife.

"What I say," added Mrs. Juggins, "is just this. Why can't them people stay at their own home, mind their own business, let us alone? We ain't goin' up where they live to trouble them."

"Exactly, Sister Juggins. But here's what I want to get at," continued the preacher. "This is the Word of God we're reading. It says all that of the Northern people plain and clean. Next it tells us exactly how to deal with them—it's as plain as any part of the Bible. Listen," and the preacher opened the Bible again, and, pointing with his finger, read, slowly and very slowly and with prodigious emphasis, the rest of the verse, "'From—such—withdraw—thyself!'"

"Yes, just so; that was your sermon about Secession. I can't see how any thing can be clearer from Scripture than that," said the planter.

"Wait a moment, Brother Juggins. I'm not through yet. I want to ask you one plain question. Do you suppose God ever commands a man or a people to do any thing and then punishes them, or permits any body else to punish them, for doing it?"

"No, Sir!" said the planter.

"Well, we are coming to see our way out, then. As you well know, Brother Juggins, the South was only obeying this direct command of God in withdrawing itself from the North and setting up for itself. A man is stone-blind who don't see that our Secession was the command of God. And here you are talking to me about Fort Donelson and Nashville," continued the preacher, becoming greatly excited, "frightened by the uprising Egyptians, exactly like those Jews were, as if God did not command us to leave, as if God was not going with us in leaving! He will be with us through Nashville, he taken just to prove us and to try us, as he said to the Jews, and I'd like to know how we are standing still! We have won the greatest victory at Manassas just to show us, in a way we couldn't help seeing it we was to try it, that God was with us. But what is the result? People forget God, say we did it all ourselves; we're waxing fat and kicking, and now He is letting us be whipped a little just to show us it is that ruineth up one and casteth down another."

"I liked mightily what you said in your last sermon, Brother Barker," remarked the planter, after a pause of rumination; "all that about the hearts of the kings in the hand of the Lord to turn about as he pleased. Only I wish England and France would make haste and show some of it. Them Egyptians have been a goin' to acknowledge the Confederacy every paper I've read since we set it up; somehow they hain't come to it yet."

"Brother Juggins," interrupted the preacher, in a tone of reproof, "I am surprised that your old notions about that old Union in the first place; it was like drawing your eye-teeth, and it was like pulling out your right eye to look truck it is awful work to keep you to it. It's true, we have been acknowledged by England and the rest of them, and they will be, and it soon will be; but, don't you see, it's wrong in us to look to them so much. Trusting in Assyria and going down into Egypt for help—not that I see as it was the sin of God's other peculiar people. I tell you now, we're going to get it worse and worse from the North, and from England and in the Lord. I believe you know I've had some experiences in religion—real, warm experiences; you want to know if I am not sure of mine? Experience now—the religious feeling which happifies me most?"

The planter and his wife looked up expectingly.

"It is that we here in the South are God's chosen people. Promises of Scripture have come out to me plain before now; but I just tell you this, nothing in the life of this book has ever stood out before me as it has in the last year. The North has gone off into Free-Loving, Garrisonism, Mormonism, Spiritualism, and that worst and basest of all, Infidelity, Atheism, Abolitionism. There was some religion there once; I grant that makes it worse—gone apostate in the North has there, and is apostatizing, wide-spreading, universal apostasy—and God has just given them over to it. So he has rescued the South—he has called us out. If there was a single free here at the South I never saw it—not even Universalism. Talk to me. No, you don't see that you may as well give up all the Bible if you give up what it says on our side? God on our side? Is there any doubt of it? Are not the only people who have apostatized from him? I'm as certain this day he's on our side as I am there or ever will be in Heaven. Are not they those people—can't do it? Look at the Jews! Don't you see how he punished their enemies in which they were? Punishing them in this life. If those poor, miserable, blinded Yankees only knew it—the ruin that is coming upon them from his hand! Ah, Brother Juggins, it is a revival in my life as I've felt to pray for their defeat and destruction. It's the Lord in me! Sure sign when I feel so. Why, I was there in New York, in the General Conference of fortyfour, the Church South has been praying and praying for years that God would "lay his hand," he has heard our prayer! For one, I'll trust him for the rest!"

It would be unreasonable to suppose we can record all that Brother Barker said. A small, pale man was Brother Barker, with thin, dark, black hair combed flat to his head, and narrow forehead. Were you to see him in a crowd his small and stooped form promised little of the strong currents of passion contained by him. There was a peculiar thickness and heaviness about his eyelids which gave an additional sense of darkness to his look. Yet, as Brother Barker get fairly into the stand, and fully under way in a sermon, brighter and brighter grew the preacher and brighter his arms, and words rushed to his lips faster than he could deliver them. Like most of his denomination, the Methodist Episcopal Church South had begun in his bosom an alienation of feeling from the North, which had steadily increased ever since the Church was divided in the two denominations; but Brother Barker's Church was peculiarly in the lead, as it was the first in the agitation.

Perhaps not a member or minister of the Church South was more deeply and thoroughly it was leavened in the matter. The spirit of Secession revealed an earnestness and intensity of vitalization in the Southern Church, in which surprised the Southern politicians as much as it gratified them. Bishops, presiding elders, preachers, pastors, were all engaged in consecration ready to the work—in their eyes a religious work. As with every religious body the feeling was deeper and stronger than any merely political body of men ever know. Even the most heated politicians now themselves utterly distanced by the religious fervor of the clergymen as Brother Barker. It was not only heart, it was soul these threw into it. And no one can doubt the immense power exerted by such men in all the denominations at the South.

Accustomed to receive as religious truth every thing coming from such a source; impressed, and which is far from being the popular feeling in regard to the politicians, with the disinterested, heart-felt sincerity of their spiritual guides; aware of the moral purity, too, of these, is wonder the masses of the South were so moved by the unceasing efforts of their ministers. No one at all familiar with the South but knows that the Southern clergy accomplished more for Secession than all other influences combined. By far the ablest arguments and the most eloquent appeals for Secession were from ministers; and what the mass of Southern writers lacked in ability and eloquence in the pulpit and by the press they more than made up by their subtlety, adroitness, and persistency during the week, and the power of, at least, their public prayers on the Sabbath.

Assuming as they did, that their theological foundation for slavery which the last thirty or forty years has been evolved from Scripture, those among the Secessionists who were Southerners in the Bible planted themselves thereupon as upon rock—making thereupon and therefrom their confident appeal to God and the world. And since the universe afforded no other conceivable ground to stand upon in the matter, the pious were not the worst ones to accept this theory position. Multitudes who never opened the Bible had awful reverence for this one divine institution, for no other could compare with it. Around infidels, too, accepted eagerly so much of Sacred Writ as proved slavery right, even though they scouted all the remainder as fable. And it is a fact worth recording, that, as a universal thing, from the right side of the line, the whole movement settled down; amidst a thousand side considerations, unanimously into this. The abiding of the appeal was to God in the matter. From this point, in case it was decided against the institution, was a contingency which never entered the mind of a single person of any pretension to trust. History furnishes no instance of men more absolutely confident of the will of God in their course than the Southern people. Such history is seen in the case of the Zealots in Jerusalem at its bloody fall. Ah, direct of all infatuation to the opposite of what the Almighty God is upon our side when He is—not!

THE BONE MAN OF HOSTONIC.

IN a recess beside the great west door of the church in Hostonic, a tall figure, stood for many generations a gaunt skeleton, its skin dried upon the breast, and the hands folded as though in prayer. Underneath it was a tablet with the words legibly once reading in the neighborhood, but now extinct.

The strange attitude of the skeleton fixed the idea in the popular mind that the Bone Man prayed without ceasing to a dead woman who lay in the church-yard, but who was not there, her body removed from its niche and buried under the grass sod in the church-yard, but on the following morning the Bone Man was found in the same grave open and the turf folded back, and within the sacred building stood, as before, the white Bone Man with his hands folded in prayer, and his face downward. And well might he be condemned by the judgment of God to stand thus, year by year, before the tomb, for long ago he had been a living man, with flesh, lolly once residing

The maid recoiled in horror, and her cheek blanched.

"Oh, Sir!" she said, faintly, "do not make a mock of me in my misery, and tempt God with such profanities!"

But the other brothers praised him who had made the offer, and drawing their purses from their pockets they threw out thalers and groschen, and made of them a small pile in the middle of the table.

"There!" shouted they, "fetch us the Bone Man, and you shall have this as a baptismal gift for your trust."

The poor girl trembled in every limb; she looked at the money and then at the red, heated faces of the drunken men, and she knew not what to say. That little pile of silver would, indeed, be a good end to her—but at what a cost was it to be won? She thought of the gloomy church-yard, and the sad-eyed church, shrouded in darkness, and of the skeleton standing in the wall niche before the tomb.

"Come, you must not be long making up your mind," said the eldest of the brothers; "we do not make such offers more than once."

"I am not two minutes to decide," she begged, looking once more at the money, and then, flying to her chamber, she bent over her little one and kissed it. "Any thing for thee my poor one!" she sighed, "and if it be a sin, may God in His mercy pardon me." Then, after having crossed herself, she returned to the parlor and agreed to do what the three men required.

As she left the tavern all was dark, a keen wind blew over the country, and a still, starry sky, without a cloudless sky; it was all among the eaves of the houses, and tossed the autumn leaves about in the square of the fir trees by the church door. As she rose; as the young woman approached it her heart beat faster.

She opened the church-yard gate as the evening bell tinkled; she stood still, and recited her "Ave Maria" with fervor, then stepped out of sight, to allow the sexton to return without observing her. The old man, bent double with age, went coughing from the grave-yard to his bed, and she remained alone among the dead. For some moments she struggled within her; she shuddered at the prospect of what she had to do, and felt disposed to return to the inn, but the next late prevailed, and she walked up the path leading to the church door.

"And now there was a feeble glimmer in the east, and the pure stars twinkled above the bottom; and she shuddered as she stepped into the shadow of a mulberry-tree which grew to the church porch.

She turned the handle of the door, and the latch flew up with a noise which was echoed through the vaults and arches of the nave. A feeble, yellow glow from the lamp burning before the Blessed Sacrament gleamed on the altar, but a white monochrom through a high window in the west, where the west bringing out the skull and folded hands as frosted silver, in strong relief against the clon gloom of the recess in which the skeleton of the Man of Mammon. As the frightened girl looked on the skeleton it seemed to her as though the fleshless mouth moved in prayer, and as though a blue flame flickered in the eye-cavities.

The girl summoned up all her courage, grasped the skeleton's arm above the wrist, and true through the church-yard, passed the gate, flew with her rattling load across the market-place, dashed into the tavern, and threw the Man on to the table, and, sinking on to a bench, burst into a flood of tears.

A silence fell upon those in the room; all looked with a shudder at the heap of bones, and then in astonishment at the girl. Even the three brothers recoiled from the skeleton as it was flung before them; but recovering from their amazed thirst, they had reckoned on her turning back at the church-yard gate, and had calculated on joking her on the failure of her courage.

But the eldest, staggering to his feet, said: "I told you all, the lass has well earned her money. She shall have it, and sit down by us and have a drop of something to warm her too."

In the mean while the girl had somewhat recovered herself, and raising her head, as she was ready an account of her expedition. But she, still pale with fear, only replied to their questions with:

"God save you from any thing very terrible; but, as I carried the skeleton, it seemed to me as though some one were following. Not for any money would I do it again."

"But what is to be done with the Bone Man?" asked one of the brothers; "he can not remain here, and I daren't take him back."

"Nor I," said the second.

"And I am quite sure," hiccoughed the third, "that I couldn't walk as far."

"The skeleton must go back, that is positive," said the first: "we shall get into trouble if it is found here."

Then let her who brought it take it back," thundered out the second with an oath.

The maid, shuddering at the thought of having to make the horrible expedition again, exclaimed, "But was not part of our agreement. I have kept my portion of the contract, and you have sait yourself that I have earned the money."

"So you have, my girl; so you have, undoubtedly," said the fellow "but have it we don't want to have a skeleton lyin—long our glasses, and under our very noses, while we are making merry. I'll take it myself to its proper place, were my legs steady enough, and my conscience clear. I will give you more money, if you will replace the Bone Man in his old position in Hostoch Church."

"Oh, Sir!" gasped the maid; "I can not, indeed! I swore that I never would tempt God by this again for the love of gold."

"Nor shall you," quoth the toper; "not a groschen shall you get from any of us, if you do as we bid you; but this will I promise—I have no children of my own, and I will pay for the education of your little babe when it is old enough to go to school, but I will call three comrades here to witness that the lad shall not be unrewarded in my will."

The maid loo'ed with trembling at the hideous object which sprawled across the table. Her breast heaved, she rolled her hands in prayer and closed her eyes. The agitation of her feelings, and the battle of conflicting passions, were clearly traceable on her countenance. Suddenly her face became calm.

"As you wish," she said, resolutely; it is God's will, I soon be the sin, and you will have to answer for it."

As she spoke she lifted the clickering frame of bones, and slung it on her back. Clasping together her load, she went forth into the night, and none ventured to follow her.

What can you know the cause of the girl's courage? As she had prayed, an idea shot into her brain as an inspiration from God, that she should dedicate her child to the church: she took the thought as a revelation of Divine will, and vowed there and then that it should be one to God, if He would protect her on her expedition.

She traversed the market-place with her clattering burden, and passed through the hill, scarcely hearing the rattle made by the bones, for she had become used to the sound.

But as she neared the grave-yard the weight of her load became greater and greater, and the burden bowed her down. She also did not observe at first, as her senses were in a whirl of confusion, but, at the lych gate, it became so evident that she was filled with overwhelming horror. In crossing the churchyard she took repeated rests with her knees, all but prostrated beneath the load which seemed to weigh a hundred-weight. It was with a desperate effort that she stumbled into the church, reached the niche, and tried to shake off her awful burden. With unspeakable horror she found that the skeleton was no longer in her arms, but seemed interlaced upon her bosom, and the arms held her as in a vice.

A voice like the moaning of wind through distant trees rushed into her ear, and a chill breath stirred over her cheek.

"I will not let thee go till thou swearest to obtain pardon for me from her below. Descend into the vault and pray for me."

Every limb of the poor girl's head stiffened, and a cold sweat broke out upon her brow. She shrieked as aloud in the wind, and was unable to articulate a word in reply.

"Wilt thou do my will?" asked the voice, and the maid felt the hands tightening their grasp, and heard the creaking of the bone fingers against each other.

"I will!" gasped the girl, scarcely fear. The fingers fell apart with a click, and the unclean shape from her shoulders. She turned and looked at the skeleton. A dim and phantom life seemed to animate its countenance; the eye-cavities glared in unutterable eagerness in the fleshless face, and a shiver of anxiety vibrating through the bony limbs. The lips opened, and the same strange voice rushed into the girl's ear.

"Lift the stone from the vault door, and go down into it. You will find a dead Christian woman in black, sitting in her coffin, by lamplight reading a book. Plead with her for pardon. Till her pardon and I can find no fellowship with God."

The maid obeyed. She lifted the slab from its place by the iron ring which was riveted into it, it fell upon her touch, and disclosed a steep flight of stone steps.

With swimming brain the girl descended into the vault. By the flame of a lamp which burned in a niche, a soft coil air breathed over her cheek. As she reached the lowest step she looked round. The vault was square, and was supported by huge drums of Romanesque pillars. A feeble glimmer irradiated it. On all sides were stone coffins, some ornamented, bearings sculptured upon them. On some lay withered wreaths of flowers, on others corroded swords or helmets. The light by which all this was revealed was a lamp suspended in the small saffron flame of a lamp suspended in the centre of the vault over an open sarcophagus. There, draped in black, in her stone coffin, with her pale face supported on her hand, her head surrounded by her long golden hair, sat a woman, motionless, out of a large book which lay open on her lap. The maid approached her with vacillating steps, and with the book before her. Not a motion in the solemn reading figure. The white face was not raised, nor the shadowed eyes lifted from the pages of the book.

With faltering voice the girl besought forgiveness for the Bone Man. No answer. The woman in the coffin seemed to be unconscious of the presence of a living being before her. More earnestly pleaded the maid, her heart beating, and a deep anxiety to obtain the delight which would follow her compassionate bosom. She called to the woman's remembrance her old love for the knight, the deep sorrow which he had endured for so many ages, standing deprived of rest before her tomb.

The reading woman shook her head without raising her eyes.

With heavy heart the girl retraced her steps, despairing of obtaining any thing from the lady in the vault. At the top of the stair-case the Bone Man bathed in pure moonlight, an expression of agonized expectation on his face, every bone clickering with emotion.

"Am I forgiven?"

"She has not forgiven you," answered the maid, in a scarcely audible voice.

"Back, back into the vault, and plead till you be obtained my pardon."

The maid would have spoken, but the skeleton raised its hand and pointed perem-torily toward the vault, and the girl felt constrained to obey. Fear now disappeared, and she felt the warm blood flow into her cheek as evenly as though she were at home rocking her babe.

Again she knelt to the woman in black, and prayed with fervor for the Bone Man. She pleaded by the hopes of salvation, the mercy of God, the Redeemer's wounds, but the lady never raised her floor; she wrung her hands, and sobs broke the thread of her prayer. Still the pale woman remained unmoved: still did she read in the great book without raising her eyes to the weeping petitioner before her, and only at intervals shook her head. An hour passed thus; the girl clasped the rim of the sarcophagus, and writhed in the vehemence of her supplication on the pavement. There was no change in the pallid woman, save that the wreath about her temples had shed its withered leaves, and had broken into tiny fresh buds.

Faint and weary, despairing of success, the poor girl again retraced her steps to the upper world. The skeleton was in the porch, leaning forward in breathless eagerness, and gray fear spread over its ghastly face.

"Has she forgiven me?"

The maid sadly shook her head.

"Back again," moaned the strange voice; "without you I can not obtain pardon. If you can not procure my release I am accursed forever. Quick! midnight is long past, and all must be decided before cock-crow."

The trembling bony hands were wrung in bitterness of distress.

One more the maid descended. The same scene was re-acted. Again she supplicated, and again for all answer she obtained was the shake of the pale woman's head. The girl had pleaded by the name of every thing sacred, and had failed; she seemed to have nothing left by which to plead; but, with her head on the cold floor in the exhaustion of her hope, she asked for pardon for the knight in the name of her own little new-born babe.

At the word the great book was closed, the pallid woman looked up, and a flush ran over her face, the wreath of roses around her head burst into a glorious white flower, filling the vault with exquisite fragrance.

"For the sake of thy little babe be it pardoned," said the woman. Then she sank back in her coffin, the great book fell closed on her breast, the lid shut down with a clash, and the lamp went out.

The maid hurried above with joyous heart, guided by the patch of silver which the moon cast on the opened step.

"She has pardoned you!" she cried, as she saw the white face gleaming down to her.

The voice which replied was soft as the murmur of a summer breeze among the corn.

"You have done well in saking in behalf of an innocent child. If my life spared not innocence, and God sentenced me to find no rest till in the name of an innocent child I could obtain release."

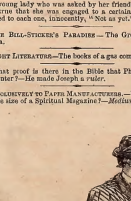
The skeleton knelt toward the Blessed Sacrament, before which burned the sanctuary lamp.

"Glory be to God!" he said, and extended his fleshless arms, and his eyes moved in prayer and thanksgiving.

The girl looked at him, kneeling in the glory of the moon, and a sweetness and calm settled over the face, divesting it of all that was dreadful. Softly and almost imperceptibly he seemed to melt away, with the peaceful and beautiful expression on the uplifted countenance steadily brightening, and when the crowing of the cock rang out sharply through the night air the Bone Man of Hostoch was a little heap of dust.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

DARWINS YIELDS.—Two individuals were inveighing against the last ingoing of Brooklyn. "It's infernous!" exclaimed one. "Why, look at that gas. I declare it's quite black." "Yes, you may say, lamp-black," rejoined his companion. "And jet-black, too," as quickly added the first denunciator. And the witty pair disappeared in the gloomy distance laughing. It was evident that with them, at least, the brightness of their humor made some amends for the darkness of the streets.



A young lady who was asked by her friends whether it was true that she was engaged to a certain gentleman, replied to each one, innocently, "Not as yet."

THE BILL-STICKER'S PARADISE.—The Great Wall of China.

LIGHT LITERATURE.—The locks of a gas company.

WHAT proof is there in the Bible that Pharaoh was a carpenter?—He made Joseph a ruler.

EXCLUSIVELY TO PAPER MANUFACTURERS.—What should be the size of a Spiritual Magazine?—Medium, of course.

WATERFALL VERSUS FAL. ON THE ICE.

WARY OLD GENT. "Fell on your back, did you?—Well, do as I do—borrow a waterfall from one of the girls—makes a capital fender!"

SIGNS OF WINTER.

When you think that you don't know whether the fir. t bell has been rung or not.

When it strikes you that your watch is at least ten minutes fast; and so if you get up when the minute-hand is "at a quarter to" you'll be in capital time.

That if you could only be taken out—and "to be washed and dressed in a second by machinery, you wouldn't mind getting up.

That another five minutes' sleep will make you all right for the day.

That it's three minutes to the half-hour, and you'll get to exactly at the half-hour.

That it's just one minute past the half-hour, so you'll up directly at the thirty-five minutes.

That as five minutes won't make much difference, say, get up at the quarter exactly.

The following considerations will also lead you to the conclusion that the winter has come:

That you can't get up without hot water.

That you don't bring that water in a can hot.

That he had better bring a little more water, please, will take care that it is quite hot.

That you can't get up until your clothes are all ready for you.

That a little cocoa while James is bringing the clothes and while he fetches some more hot water will do you all the good in the world.

That when you do get up you won't be a second dressing.

That you'll get up in exactly ten minutes from now.

That (the two minutes having passed) you'll just settle down you're going to do to-day, and then get up.

That, if that's the first bell, you've plenty of time; and if it's the second, it's no good hurrying up now, as you're late any how.

The consideration that is generally required before making a move out of bed is in itself a pretty sure sign of the presence of winter.

THE HUMBUG OF GOOD-BREEDING.—The glenns Champ and Arnx, it is said by those who know them, are most estimable persons, and indeed we must allow that every one looks up to them.

SIGNS.

When a cat prepares to wash its face, it is a sign that you in the house will shortly receive a visit.

If a woman cuts her nails every Monday it is lucky for her husband.

To strike a grass-eyed cat with a white spot on her nose is lucky, and keep pure will be the consequence.

To have sixteen warts on the left hand is a sign that you are unfortunate.

To take the gridiron down from the nail where it is hanging, with the left hand, is a sign that there will be a broil in the kitchen.

If you are in a hurry and hear a baby cry it is a sign of marriage—or if it isn't, it ought to be.

The Scientific American has an article on "Water as a direct agent in the production of milk." We believe the evidence in this case is unquestionable.

"What would you take, my man, to carry a message for me from here (the Fulton Ferry-house) to the Cocoa Grove?" asked a gentleman of a colored man the other morning, at the same time pulling out his purse. "Faith, Sir," replied the man, "as if I'd do it at all for ye, I'd take the FIFTH Avenue Omnibus!"

The following is a verbatim et literatim report of the evidence given in a magistrates' court by a young man named Doctor Jones, who accused another negro man named Washington of stealing his watch:

"I'm some Doctor Jones—name so 'cause old master named Doctor. I was settin' in de sitty my watch hangin on de wall. Dat nigger pointing to Washington) came in, and down, got up went out, and de watch was dis-missed. Dat's all I know about it."

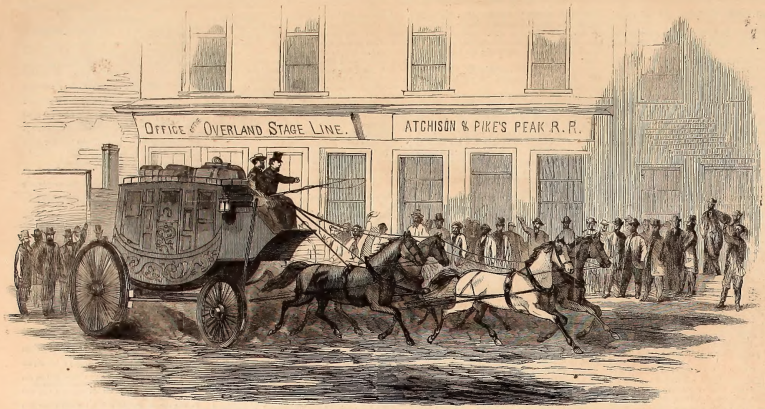
CON. BY A CREDITOR.—Why should every lamplighter be named William?—Because they turn up so quickly.

LOCKS.

What lock frequently represents union without unity?—Wedlock.

What lock is most in request among physicians?—Lockjaw.

What lock must be looked for out of doors and on the ground?—Hemlock.



What lock is generally lost in the decline of life?—Locks of hair.

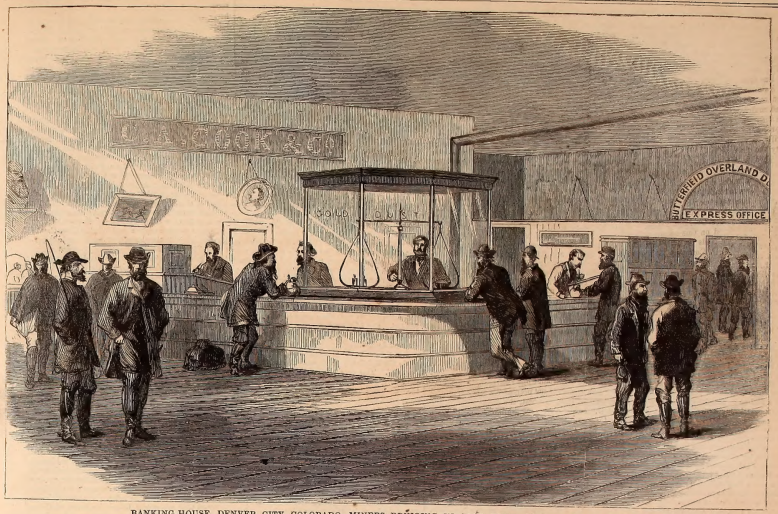
A QUESTION FOR REFLEXION.—When a star shoots how many stars does it shoot at?

DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE.—Houses are run up in a few weeks by landlords, and run down by tenants ever after.

THE CATTLE PLAGUE IN IRELAND.—The plague, we regret to inform our readers, has broken out among the Irish bulls—several of which, driven jocularly into conversation, have fallen dead among the audience. To prevent the spread of the disease the Lord Mayor of Dublin has ordered that "The time the old cow died on" shall not be played in any public thoroughfare.

A gallant captain of a whaler took for his motto, "Blubber forever." "She's it," said his wife, now a widow.

BUTTERFIELD'S OVERLAND MAIL-COACH STARTING OUT FROM ATCHISON, KANSAS.—[SKETCHED BY WILLIAM M. MERRICK.]



DRIVING THE FIRST SPIKE ON THE ATCHISON AND PIKE'S PEAK RAILROAD.
[SKETCHED BY WILLIAM M. MERRICK.]

EASTERN TERMINUS OF BUTTERFIELD'S OVERLAND ROUTE, ATCHISON, KANSAS.
[SKETCHED BY WILLIAM M. MERRICK.]

OUR ARTIST'S TRIP ON THE OVERLAND ROUTE—"COUNCIL OF WAR" ON THE PLAINS.—[SKETCHED BY THEODORE R. DAVIS.]

BANKING-HOUSE, DENVER CITY, COLORADO—MINERS BRINGING IN GOLD DUST.—[SKETCHED BY THEODORE R. DAVIS.]

JOURNEYING ON THE PLAINS.

THERE are many things which at this time draw our attention toward the GRAND OVERLAND STAGE ROUTE across the plains of Kansas, Colorado, Utah, and Nevada, to California, making it a subject of intense popular interest. One of these things is the Pacific Railroad project, in which there is now so lively an interest—the route proposed for that road being very nearly identical with the Overland Route. The recent trip of Speaker COLFAX and his party "across the continent" by the Overland Route is also attracting attention to the route itself. And, finally, the raids of the Indians upon parties journeying by this route across the plains have added a tragic interest to the subject. We publish on this page and on page 56 several illustrations relating both to the mail route and to the proposed railway line from Atchison to Pike's Peak. This proposed railway line, together with that from Aspinwall to Panama, which we illustrate on page 61, are characteristic of the energy and enterprise of the American people.

THE EASTERN TERMINUS of BUTTERFIELD'S

THE OVERLAND COACH OFFICE, DENVER CITY, COLORADO.—[SKETCHED BY THEODORE R. DAVIS.

Overland Stage Route (of which BEN HOLLIDAY is sole proprietor) was removed in 1861 from St. Joseph to Atchison. This latter place, the outmost point of our Eastern railway system, is situated in the northeastern corner of Kansas, along some low bluffs on the west bank of the Missouri River, 200 miles from St. Louis, and 20 miles below St. Joseph, the metropolis of Northern Missouri, communicates with St. Joseph and Leavenworth by railway; is the head-quarters of the Overland Stage Company, and is also one of the chief points on the border for the transhipment, from cars and steamboats to wagons, of all sorts of stores bound to the mines of Colorado, Idaho, Montana, and Utah. Atchison is also probably the border town of the West, and is memorable for its connection with the dark days of Kansas history. It was the settled by border ruffians of the worst type, with SENTOR FELLOW at their head. New England proved too much for the ruffians, however, and one morning long Atchison awoke a Puritanic town, having gone to bed the night before with strong Southern proclivities. The town has prospered ever since.

The daily line of the Overland Mail Route leaves Atchison at 8 o'clock A.M. This line employs over one hundred coaches, about one thousand horses, five hundred mules, and seven hundred and fifty men. The distance of the entire route, before it reaches the terminus of the Sacramento railway at Placerville, is about two thousand miles. To Denver City the distance is six hundred miles, and is accomplished in fifty-six stages of about ten miles each. It takes five days to reach Denver, twice that time to make the journey to Salt Lake, and seventeen days to reach Placer City, California.

The Indians have made such havoc on the Plains during the past year that food for man or beast has been very scarce, and the Overland Company has been very much crippled on this account, making the grain with which it feeds its horses some eight dollars per bushel. The company has also lost about half a million in buildings, grain, and stock by the Indians, and another half a million, probably, from the loss of receipts in consequence of roads by the noble red men of the forest." Upon General CONNOR devolves the important duty of taking care of the Indians on the Plains. Among the principal chiefs of his command are two regiments of Pawnee Indians from the old reserve. They cheerfully re-enlisted into the national army, calling themselves "galvanized Yankees." It was only last autumn that General CONNOR's protection was extended to the Overland Route.

The Butterield Overland Dispatch coaches are frequently crossed with an encounter with the Indians. An event of this kind took place in November on the route between Chalky Bluff Station and Denver. The circumstance had just been received of depredations and murders committed on the Smoky Hill route by a band of Indians supposed to be Cheyennes, under the lead of "Fast Bear," who, on the 23d of November, the Overland Dispatch coach left Chalky Bluff Station with a small escort of cavalry. Among the passengers were General BUSWEIER and our special artist, MR. THEODORE R. DAVIS.

The coach reached Monument without any adventure, and left that station on the morning of the 24th; accompanied by an ambulance under the charge of Sergeant N. G. WHIPPLE. Mr. DAVIS thus gave was apprehended that only an escort of eight men was considered necessary. three of whom were in the ambulance with WHIPPLE, while five mounted men rode in advance of the coach. The coach had nearly reached the next station when the ambulance driver cried out, which did not pass the station but which joined the main road a mile further on. The encounter which followed is thus described by the MR. DAVIS correspondent:

"When within fifteen hundred yards of the station, MR. DAVIS, of the Overland Mail, observed that a party of Indian Indians were charging down on us. He at once gave the alarm and on the road alike with his Belted rifle, which performance was immediately imitated by General BUSWEIER, MR. HANSCOM, and Your Special. MR. DAVIS doing duty with his revolver from the outside of the coach. As the Indians approached with Bedlam, we threw the party off quite so fast as they came, two of them bearing the marks of our speed in the shape of rather elegant cones of lead. The driver of our coach was not wanting in the cool nerve which does his team up to him. We left the coach at once, and discovered that another party had succeeded in passing the horses and mules that were grazing near, disappearing them. As the stock-tenders had started at the first alarm to gather the mules from the grazing near the station, only the Indians discovered him and gave chase just as we got out of the coach. We quickly mounted him and started with him—to help the stock-tender. The Indian drove us across the valley, and, finding himself cut off from the fort from MR. DAVIS rifle ended the little performance, and the Indian was left to the tender mercies of the stock-tenders who saved him from being scalped. The Indians were all armed with rifles, and were dressed in the usual Indian fashion. The whole affair was over in a few minutes, and we all went on, but the mules were brought back to the station. The Indians were all young men, and the party was probably a war party on a hunting expedition."

In the mean time the ambulance was pursued by some fifteen or twenty Indians, and the four cavalrymen were dispatched to its assistance. The party in the ambulance made a brave skirmish, till the wagon and retreated toward the cavalry sent to their aid, and thus escaped with safety. The whole party now brought up the unmolested twelve-mule team, all well armed, but they were surrounded by Indians on all sides. In the critical situation they resorted to the method which the garrison at Smoky Hill Station had dug in the hill-side, where they determined to await the arrival of the Government train that was due that evening or the next day. No serious thought was made by the Indians upon this bomb-proof, and the shot day the Government train arrived, and after a slight skirmish with the red-men the whole party proceeded on to Denver.

Denver is the leading town of Colorado, and lies under the very shadow of the Rocky Mountains, a few miles south of Pike's Peak. The vast trains of prairie schooners, as the tented wagons seen in our sketch are called, give the place an appearance of activity which, indeed, the amount of business transacted in Denver is wonderful, when the small number of inhabitants is considered. The RAILROADS are crowded with miners in all sorts of costume, bringing their bags of "dust" to exchange for greenbacks, the dust being sold at so much per ounce. It is not an uncommon thing for barbels of gold dust to accumulate in the safes of the principal bankers.

"PEACE ON EARTH."

BY THOMAS HUGHES, M.P. FOR LAMBETH.

THE last time that the season of peace on earth and good will to men" came round, the great struggle for the existence of the United States in America had not yet come to death-grips. Here, at least, many people still believed that the Southern States were only trying to get, in a more safe manner later to establish their independence, and a new policy which would set for the one hand a check to the destructive to the dangerously popular institutions and ideas of New England. The year has passed, and the great revolutionary war has been fought to death. Perhaps some of us may still stop short of Mr. Seward's triumphant summing up "Death," he says in his yearly address to his fellow-citizens at Auburn, "death has removed his victims; liberty has crowned her heroes; humanity has crowned her martyrs; the sick and the afflicted have been cured; the divine combatants are fraternizing; and the country—the object of our just pride and lawful affection—once more stands collected and composed, firmer, stronger, and more majestic than ever before, without one cause of dangerous discontent at home, and without enemy in the world." We may think him somewhat too hopeful in the breadth of his assertions, and may have our fears that it may take a generation yet, before the nations can be reconciled all the States of the Union. But, when he predicts so fearlessly that "under next October's vote no doubt will be cast by disloyal persons in Auburn, to rejoice in the restoration of peace, harmony, and union throughout the land," we can not but own that he speaks truly, which must be correct at least as rash, have been fulfilled almost to the letter. In my case, we do all willingly and cordially, and hope, the majority of our fellow-citizens with which the great game has been played out by the American people. A few of the more English, who show their faces in that people never faltered during the contest, I do most heartily rejoice to see that all classes of the people, and all the parties are ready to appreciate, but hearty in their appreciation of, what has been done for freedom in America in the revolutionary war. For my own part we now only want further knowledge of facts to honor out with and across the Atlantic as they deserve to be honored, for the most unselfish struggle that is there made of all that was most precious and dearest to them in a struggle upon which not only their own life as a nation, but the future of at least one-third of the world, was at stake.

In this belief, I think that Christmas is the right time for letting the North and the South see their right a side of the drama which has not been as yet fairly presented to us here: I mean, first, the strain on the resources of the North during the war which was lasted, and, secondly, the heroism of the men of gentle birth and nurture, who, so far from shrinking from the work, and fighting manfully (as he was asserted by some of our leading journals), took at least their fair share of all the dangers and misery and toil and hardship of the war.

First, then, as to the people's work; and, highly as we may value the men who have come to the front, and whose names are known to all Americans are now known over the whole world, we must acknowledge that the true hero of the war is after all the American people. In no part of this I will take one or two of the Northern States, and look for a moment at what the call was which was made upon them, and how it was answered to it. Let us look, as a first instance, at the smallest in area of all the States, and the smallest in population of all who fought for the Union—Little Island, at the census of 1860, just before the breaking out of the war, contained a population of 174,620. Of these, by far the largest people, the negroes consisted nearly exceeded the males, and of the latter there were 82,204 altogether. Up to December 1, 1863, that is to say, in less than two years from the first call of the President for troops—Rhode Island furnished 23,763 men to the army and 1400 to the navy, or almost 1 in 5 of her total male population, and, of course, far more than that proportion of her able-bodied fighting age. And this is not all. In the first enthusiasm, when the call for 500,000 men came in the summer of 1861, the quota of Rhode Island was 1,500, and she furnished 1,804, in order to give the later returns, because there appears to have been a large number of substitutes among her regiments and batteries. It is impossible to say exactly whether these were or were not natives of the State. There is no need to overstate the case, and I should, on every consideration, be inclined to think that Little Island, though the smallest, is tenth in rank of all the States as a producer, and her people are consequently the least numerous. But, in the first months of the war, they found substitutes in large numbers, it must be, at the same time, remembered, that they contributed nearly seventeen men to the army in proportion to numbers, to that noblest of all charities—the Sanitary Commission.

But Little Island was very likely say, "Give us an instance of any but a New England State: they are exceptional." Let us take Indiana, then, one of the Western States, whose population is certainly scarce half a century old. A stronger contrast to Rhode Island could scarcely have been found. Indiana, in 1860, possessed 11,262,294 acres of improved farming land; Rhode Island but 329,884. Indiana was fifth of all the States in agricultural production, and fourteenth in manufacturing—Rhode Island standing tenth, or three higher than her gigantic younger sister. Yet we find the same readiness of response to the President's call to arms among Western farmers as among New England mechanics and merchants. The population of Indiana is returned at the census of 1860 at 1,350,428, and her males at 693,469. On the 31st of December, 1863, she had furnished 102,688 soldiers, besides a militia home-guard when her frontiers were threatened. When Morgan made his raid into the State 60,000 rendered their services within twenty-four hours, and nearly 20,000 were on his track within three days. I do not happen, in this case, to have the later returns, and so must turn back to New England, to the old Puritan Bay State, to give one perfect example of what the American people were in the great struggle.

Massachusetts, at the outbreak of the war, held a population of 1,230,600 or thereabouts, out of which there were 571,000 males between the ages of 15 and 40. The first blood shed in the war against the slave power, as in the Revolutionary war against England, was Massachusetts blood. The 6th Massachusetts was fired on in the streets of Baltimore on April 19, 1861, and had to fight its way through the mob, after having 4 killed and 36 wounded in the operation. Well, the number of men demanded of Massachusetts during the war was 171,624. The number actually sent (by her quota was all to the three years' standard) was 125,437, being a surplus over all calls of 7815. Besides these 6670 were considered in order to a call for three months' men in 1864, which were never credited to her by the Government. Look at the meaning now of this other fact, that the nationally sent more men to the war than are now to be found in the State liable to do military duty. How does this tell as to the sacred fire of the human material in those Seventeen regiments. The last assessors' return gave three at 438,767; while the total number who served (including the three months' men, and those not adhering to the three years' standard) was 155,486. Of these how many died? The statistics on the head has probably heard more or less of "stopping the war by prohibiting emigration from Ireland," and of "the Irish brigade being more numerous than to do the fighting"? think were foreign recruits? Just 907. This does not include men born out of the United States, but only foreigners who joined during the war broke out. These latter, however, I suppose, could not come within the definition of foreign mercenaries. Of the men receiving in America during the war, Massachusetts enlisted, as I have said, 907 out of 150,000. While on this point, I would be sorry to have captured strangers to the whole forces of the North show that of native-born Americans there were nearly 80 per cent., of naturalized Americans 15, and of foreigners 5 per cent. only, in the ranks.

I can honestly say that I have chosen these States at random, without the scrutiny of which examining free States would give a very similar result. And now let us consider what that result is. Rhode Island and Massachusetts were poor; perhaps equal in population this metropolis with its immediate suburbs; while one of them alone actually sent to the front within the four years of the war, an army equal in numbers to the total volunteer force now under arms in Great Britain. Rhode Island is not a manufacturing State, but a State in seven months she armed and sent South 15,000 of her citizens. I know that England in like need would be equal to the task. Let us hope, then, that as they deserve the people of our own lineage to whom the call has come, and who have met it.

I need scarcely stop to note how the Northern people have paid in purse as well as in person. Let one instance suffice. In 1864 the assessment of Massachusetts for the purposes of national government amounted to fourteen millions, every fraction of which was collected without impediment or delay. Into the State treasury the taxes and the amounts contributed to the Sanitary Commission and other organizations for distributing voluntary contributions in support of the war fund we should reach a figure almost exceeding belief. I have no means of stating it accurately, but am inclined to believe that it had risen to 25 000,000 dollars, actually raised and paid, by a State with a population less than half of that our metropolis, and one twelve-month.

And now for my second point—the example set by the men of birth, wealth, and high position. Here, I think, we have the most simple facts, drawn at hazard from the mass which I have under my hand, will be more than enough to satisfy every fair and just mind as to the truth of my statement, and I am proud to believe that, whatever our prejudices may be, there are few indeed among us to deny such an appeal to be made in vain.

I have said above that the mass of materials is large. I might have said unmanageable. It is, indeed, impossible to deal with them as one would here and there, and to bring these out as clearly as one can in the limits of an article. Let me take as a name a family with which one or more of each of those members I have the honor of friendship or acquaintance. And, first, that of J. Russell Lowell, the son of the late poet, and a gentleman distinguished specially for intellectual power and attainments. Surely the sickle of war has never mown down a more promising youth in any field! First in order comes Willie Putnam, age 21, the sole surviving son of Lowell's sister, a boy of the highest culture and promise, mortally wounded at Ball's Bluff in October, 1861, in the first months of the war while on the staff of gaining to the help of a wounded companion. At the same time fight his cousin, James Jackson Lowell, aged 24, by no company raised in Boston. Warren Goddard fell at Bull's Run, in August, 1862. Many of us here was remember the account, which was reprinted in the Times and other papers, of the gallant conduct of colors to the 24 Massachusetts Infantry, by Mr Morley, at Boston, in the summer of 1861. It attracted special attention from the fact that the author of the "History of the Dutch Republic" had been so lately living among us, and was so well known and liked here. The agony of officers who received those colors were the very paroxysm d'agonie of Massachusetts—Quincy, Dwight, Abbot, Robinson, Russell, Shaw Gordon, Savage, Perkins. Such a roll will speak volumes to all who have any acquaintance with New England history. These colors have come home riddled, tattered, blackened; but five-sixths of the young officers have given their lives for them, and of the 600 rank and file who then surround them scarcely 150 survive. This to the way. I refer to the muster, Thomas Russell Sullivan was among the officers—a name already honored in these pages, and another nephew of Lowell's. Shaw's sister married Charles Lowell, of whose sons, previously. We all know how Robert Shaw, after two years' gallant service, accepted the command of the first black regiment raised in Massachusetts (the 54th), and he had been in the operations before Charleston, and was buried with his "negroes" in the pit under Fort Wagner—the grandest sepulture ever given to a soldier of this century. By his side fought and died Captain Russell, the third of Lowell's nephews, then a captain of a black company. Stephen George Perkins, another nephew, was killed at Cedar Creek; and Francis Charles Russell at one of the innumerable Virginian battles.

I pass to the last on the list, and the most remarkable. Charles Russell Lowell, the only brother of the James who died "dressing his line," was also the first scholar of his year (1854) at Harvard. He had visited Europe for health's sake, and was long riding-tours in Spain and Algeria, where he became a consummate horseman. On the day after the 6th Massachusetts were fired on in Baltimore streets, Charles Lowell heard of it, and started by the next train to Washington, passing through Baltimore. All communication between the two cities was suspended, but he arrived on foot at Washington in forty-eight hours. In the first days of confusion he became aide-de-camp to Mr sachusetts Governor, and brought order out of chaos for his own State before joining the army. His powers of command and organization gained him major promotion. He served with distinction in the Peninsula campaigns of M'Clellan, and, after Antietam, was selected to escort the captured standards to Washington. He raised a second cavalry regiment at home in the winter of 1862. He was placed in command of the cavalry of the force which protected Washington during the dark days of 1863. In Sheridan's brilliant campaign of 1864 he commanded the cavalry brigade of four regular regiments, and the Massachusetts volunteer cavalry. He had thirteen horses shot under him before the battle of Cedar Creek, on October 19; was hard wounded early in that day, and lifted on to his fourteenth horse to lead the final charge, as Sims, that he had to give his orders in a whisper. Urged by those around him to leave the field, he pressed on to the critical point of attack; and himself fell mortally wounded while cheering on the most obstinate battles of the war. It is the death of this nephew which wrung from Lowell the lines which opened the series of the last.

"Bigelow Papers," published in one of last winter's numbers of the Atlantic Magazine—

"Wot's words to them whose faith and truth
On War's red touchstone rang true and clear?
Who ventured life an' love, an' youth
For the gret prize of freedom dearer
To him who, deadly hurt, agen
Flashed up afore the battle's wonder,
Tippin' with fire the tost of men
To cheer his comrades through the thunder?

"Taint right to her the young go first,
All thankful full of grit an' joy,
Leavin' life's prospect dry an' dust
To crawl back to its wormy old nest;
Nothin' but tells as wut we miss;
There goes our love, an' there our say is,
An' that 's wut seems so far from this,
Let 'em be leaders to grow gray in."

He died exactly as any of his comrades, leading a widow of twenty, himself not thirty. The Gazette, in which his commission as general was published, did not reach the army till after his death. Sheridan, with the generosity which most of the great Northern captains have shown, declared that the country could better have spared any man, and that there was no one quality of a soldier which he could have wished added to Charles Lowell.

My list ended then, gives the one family, in which there was no soldier in 1860, losing eight young men under thirty in little more than three years' fighting.

I have mentioned the name of Motley above. Let us see how it fared with his circle. He has asserted me more than once that of his own immediate family there were fewer than the averages in the ranks; but he had at least five near relatives serving—his son Thomas, one of whom was killed in Louisiana, Major Motley, badly wounded in Virginia early in 1864; and Major Stackpole, another family-officer, a graduate of Harvard, who served through the whole war, and has now resumed his practice as a barrister. Mr. Motley married Lydia Ives, a gentlemen of fortune in Rhode Island, who was traveling in Europe when the war broke out. He immediately left for home, commanded the Potomac flotilla, and accompanied Burnside's expedition to North Carolina, where he contracted the disease of which he died soon after. Both his cousin Robert Ives, also a man of large fortune, volunteered into the army, and was killed at Antietam. I believe that these are the two last men who bore the name of Ives in their State.

The name of Wadsworth is better known here than most American names in connection with English connection. The head of the family was a country gentleman living on his estates at Geneseo, in New York State, when, up to the age of thirty of three sons and three daughters. At the news of the attack on the Union troops in Baltimore he instantly chartered a steamer, loaded it with provisions, and sent her up the Potomac—a most timely aid. The capital. He acted as aid-de-camp to M'Dowell, and was his right-hand man in the Bull Run campaign, his "youngest as well as his oldest aid;" was made a general soon afterward; and, after several years of active service in Maryland and Washington. His reputation as an officer had now become such that at the beginning of the last cam-

Potomac applied to the War Department to have him with them as brigadier. He was killed in the Wilderness in the last advance on Richmond. His three sons have all served, the youngest having enlisted at sixteen. Thus every man in the family served; and the only married daughter is the widow of Colonel Montgomery Ritchie, one of two brothers, both of whom served with distinction, one to the sacrifice of his life by the same subtle disease which struck down Captain Ives.

I could go to any length, for every acquaintance with whom I am large, and I scarcely know a man who has not lost some relative in the war. But, apart from one's own acquaintance, which is scarcely one of the famous Colonial and Revolutionary names which has not been represented. The Jays, Livingstons, Schuylers, Livingstons, Van Rensselaers, have not failed their country in her second great need; and have fought well, and worked hard, though the present holders of these honored names, mostly quite young men, have not had time to reach their ancestors' places. The bearers of great names, I take it, do not get such a start in life as those in with us at home. A descendant (a grandson, I believe) of Alexander Hamilton, however, became a general, while several of his cousins entered the lower ranks. Colonel Fletcher Webster, only surviving son of Daniel Webster, was killed in Virginia. Perhaps no one man who excited more the pride and martial enthusiasm of Americans in the first months of the war was Major Theodore Winthrop, a descendant of the famous Governor John Winthrop. A traveler, poet, athlete, who was killed at the disastrous battle of Great Bethel, June 10, 1861. A son of General Porter, who was distinguished in the Mexican war with us, fell as a colonel in the spring campaign of 1864. Even the families famous, as yet, for wealth only have not shrunk from the call. Hamilton Aster, at least, and Cuttings, Schermerhorns, Lydigs, and others, having held their gun in the volunteer ranks.

Or, let us come to names more familiar than any other Transatlantic ones to us—the Boston group. Longfellow's young son (Charley, as he is familiarly call him) has managed to fight a campaign, and get badly hit in Louisiana, at an age when our boys are thinking of their freshman's term at Oxford. Oliver Wendell Holmes (poet, artist, Greek scholar, virtuoso, has been twice—I was going to say killed—shot through the body and disabled and again in the heel; and, having fought through all to the end of the war, is again hard at his pen and pen. Olmstead has fought, with mightier weapons than rifled cannon, at the head of the Sanitary Commission. Of four brothers Lowell, two have been killed, and a third fought his way to general. Whittier, Appletons, Lotings, Crowninshields, Dehons —but I will not pay my readers' (or my own) wits with rolls of names which, perhaps, except of these, will be names, and nothing more! Let this last summing up of the work of men of all ages participation in one State suffice (I choose Massachusetts again because, thanks to Governor Andrew, we have more accurate returns as to her than as to any other State). Since the declaration of war, 434 officers from Massachusetts have been killed—2 generals, 16 colonels, 11 lieutenant-colonels, 20 majors, 15 surgeons, 2 chaplains, 110 captains, and 245 lieutenants. Of the 35 general officers from that State, 10 only have not been wounded. Of all the living graduates of Harvard (the university of highest repute in America), one-fifth, or to be as accurate as possible, nineteen and some fraction per cent., have served with the army. At Yale College the percentage has been even higher. Conceive a struggle which should bring out in every five of men who have taken degrees at Oxford and Cambridge under fire, and which should call on us, under our regular army, to find, arm, and recruit for three years; volunteer army five times as large as our present one!

Such plain facts and rats as these will, I am sure, convince the last skeptic. If there be one left among us at this Yule tide, 1865—that New England has not spared of her best blood in the day of the Lord, under the burden and heat of which the whole North has reeled and staggered indeed, but without a fainting heart or failing knee, and is gaining fresh power, through three years of war which have seemed—nay, which have been—lifetimes. In such a time sin is not committed in forty days. The America which looked on, paralyzed and doubtful, when John Brown prophesied all these things on the way to the scaffold, looking like a child as he passed along, while Stonewall Jackson and his pupils guarded the globet—the America of State secrets and Dred Scott decisions, of which the Gospel news meant avowedly "Good will to white men," and abolitionism was loathed as a vulgar and mischievous fanaticism—is far from the America to-day for all practical purposes as the England of the Stuarts, or the France of the Regency. That it remains, for the Old World as well as for the New, I will not pause to consider. My estimate might miss many perverse criticisms and sneers at the war which (good as they are in their right time and place) I can anxious here to avoid.

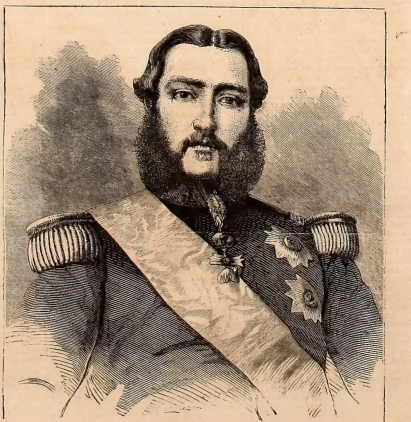
I prefer waiting to endeavor now to put my readers in sympathy with the spirit, the heart, and conscience, of the North, in the presence of their astounding success. I am not do this better than by a glance at the Commemoration of the living and dead soldiers of Harvard University. Commemoration Day at Harvard, 24 July, 1865, must indeed have impressed the self indelibly on the memories of all those sons of the first of American universities who were present at the gathering. To me, I own, the most touching reports are got over here in the American papers were so speakably touching. The irrepressible joy of a people delivered, after years of struggle and patient waiting, from an awful burden, almost too heavy for mortal shoulders to bear, tempered, as it was, by the tenderest sympathy for the families of the fallen, and a solemn turning to give glory and thanks with the heart to that God who giveth victor, and healeth wounded! spirits, and sustaineth above His people as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land—the magical power of triumph, and agony, and trust, and love, which went up from the very heart of that meeting—must ever, to my mind, rank among the most noble, the most sublime pieces of history of the century in which we are living. Let the reader consider the following as compared with ordinary commemoration poetry. The first is an hymn written for the commemoration service by Robert Lowell:

"Thy work, O God, goes on in earth,
With choirs of war, with harvest songs;
A ready will is all our worth:
To Thee our Maker all belongs."

ING LEOPOLD AND HIS SUCCESSOR.

No event in European story has been the subject of greater comment, the occasion of more profound speculation, than the death of King LEOPOLD of Belgium, which occurred December 10, 1865. We give on this page a portrait of ing LEOPOLD, and also e of his son and successor.

The death of President NCOLN, of PALMERON, and of King LEOLD were the three great ituries of the year terated. LINCOLN died an act of violence, but th Lord PALMERSTON d King LEOPOLD lived a ripe old age, and ir deaths, though of great significance, had m long expected. — OPOLD was a Prince of e-Coburg, and uncle Prince ALBERT, consort of the British Queen. was born December 1790, and had thus rly completed his nety-fifth year. He was husband of Princess ARLOTTE, and was, over, connected by riage with the principal thrones of Europe, had latterly been the fidential adviser of the de family of sovereigns. His second wife a daughter of LOUIS LIPPE, but that circumstance did not prefer him from being a nd and confidant of Emperor NAPOLEON. was related to the ian, Prussian, Austrian, Italian, and Portuse royal families, and Empress of Mexico is daughter. His ancestors were the famous tors FREDERICK and s, who had protected EM from the wrath e priesthood in the of the Reformation. ESS CHARLOTTE, his wife, was heir-presumptive to the throne reat Britain; and at time it seemed not ely that LEOPOLD d hold the same poin relation to the ish throne which at er day was so sadly filled by his w, Prince ALBERT. PRINCESS CHARLOTTE in childbed in 1817, event cast a deep over the nation. VICTORIA was born two years later, and was the daughter of Princess LOUISA VICTORIA, of SAXE-COBURG, sister of LEOPOLD, her father being the Duke of Kent.— On the occasion of LEOPOLD's marriage with the Princess CHARLOTTE the British Parliament voted a large sum as an outfit for himself and the Princess, and £50,000 for their joint lives, and for the life of the survivor.



The French Revolution of 1830 brought to an end the ill-assorted union between Holland and Belgium. The conflict in Paris by which LOUIS PHILIPPE succeeded CHARLES X. powerfully affected all the kingdoms of Europe. The Provisional Government of Belgium declared that kingdom independent, and ordered Belgian troops to drive out the Dutch from the country. The great Powers united in disavering Belgium from Holland, and appointed LEOPOLD king of the Belgians. In the establishment of the independence of Belgium Lord PALMERSTON, then Foreign Minister of England, took a prominent part. The Belgian Congress, out of gratitude to the French nation, as the only power giving material aid in freeing the country from the Dutch, had elected the Duke de Nemours, son of LOUIS PHILIPPE, to the throne. The great Powers generally, and England in particular, objected to this arrangement, and hence the appointment of LEOPOLD. The latter was elected June 4, 1831. A war followed between Holland and Belgium, but France sent 50,000 men to the aid of the latter, and a treaty was signed in October, in which Holland recognized the independence of Belgium. In the following year LEOPOLD married LOUISE, daughter of the French king. When, in 1848, LOUIS PHILIPPE was driven from the French throne, there was great excitement in Belgium, and a cry was raised for a republic. LEOPOLD met this crisis with dignity, disarming his opponents by an appeal to the people. Subsequently his reign was a tranquil one, the chief difficulties of his position arising from

MOTHER'S DARLING.

THE LATE KING LEOPOLD OF BELGIUM.

LEOPOLD II., KING OF BELGIUM.

ASPINWALL, CENTRAL AMERICA—THE PANAMA RAILROAD TRAIN STARTING FOR PANAMA.—[SEE PAGE 62.]

the conflict between the Church party and the Liberals.

And this leads us directly to the prospect open to his successor, LEOPOLD II. This latter prince is somewhat inexperienced, he having had no participation with public affairs heretofore, on account of his well-known leaning to the side of the Church party. What future complications there may be growing out of the succession of LEOPOLD II. to the throne we know not. We only know that the new king has entered upon his reign in the midst of a popular applause apparently sincere, and with the expression toward him of the good-will of the principal reigning heads of Europe—expressions apparently equally sincere with those made by his own people. But in either case these expressions have been made while yet the late king had not been buried, and are in great measure a tribute to the wise and temperate reign of the latter. Certain it is, however, that the chief difficulties which are likely hereafter to disturb Belgium will arise, if they should exist at all, from internal dissensions rather than from external aggression on the part of other powers. There is now a lull in the affairs of Belgium—but at any moment the storm may open, and the affairs of that country become again the subject of foreign concern—it may be of foreign intervention, and perchance of another European war.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR JANUARY, 1866.—[SEE PAGE 62.]

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Open "cold soup" has come and gone. An old-fashioned "January thaw" is threatening to follow in its wake. But these change is the end of all things, and one fancies that when they may bring forth, whether ice or "slush," Cornhill is it, however, that the 5th of January, 1866, stands out as the cold day in half a century. Not since 1806 has the temperature been so low in this vicinity. A few old times which that period the mercury has fallen below zero; but on the present memorable Monday it run away down from seven to fifteen degrees below the point, varying in different parts of the city.

This terrible blast from the Frigid Zone swept over the east coast of the United States so suddenly that they compelled even in closest proximity to a bright coal fire, and forced the water-pipes with unusual sensitive ness. And what a dismal green the unfinished housewife gave as she found no cream for her morning abstinence.

"My dear," says she, with chattering teeth, to her spouse who is still enveloped in blankets and comfortables—"My dear, all our water-pipes are frozen up—this day."

But he might be frozen too for all the impression she can make upon him; and so she energetically rouses an action—and summons the plumbers—feels are ripped up, walls are pulled down, the offending pipes are reached. But where must be left, in many cases, to the slow process cure, which will be announced in due season by overflowing floods. Breakfast, in such circumstances, is a difficult affair.

"My love," says the good man of the house, with a spasmodic effort to speak quickly, and regardless of the mouthful dressing gown about him closer, "What shall we do? The water all frozen—the milkman son cut—and I have just discovered that the key of the coal-bin closet is missing!"

But the woman's ingenuity in time solves or dissolves the difficulty, and patientalone, having satisfied his appetite, complacently betakes himself to his newspaper. Only those who are married can venture out to express our sense to the affectionate wishes of Jack Frost. Close to the fire as possible; and if not warming though it burns with little impression on the circumjacent air. Evening brings a new vexation—the gas won't burn, and candles must be substituted.

But these comparatively slight annoyances, which the recent "cold snap" brought to house-keeping people in luxury usually unknown to the rest of the world suffering of the multitude of half-clad, half-fed poor. While many sheltered and comfortable before the glowing grate, there were more mourning for lack of fire and food.

"Young America," however, never gave a thought to suffering or poverty but regarded it as capital fun to have every thing freeze up. He had but one sole-memory, skating—and that gathered a state of hilarity and hilarious quite overwhelming. Even before the weather had comfortably moderated the various lakes and ponds in Central Park and vicinity were thronged with gay folk. But when a bright, mild, sunny day came crowds of both sexes and all ages flocked to the ice—as on a day of rest—seen. The Central Park ponds presented the appearance of a gay carnival. Experienced skaters shot across the ice in a variety of fantastic groups, or drew on the ice the flowing wonderful gyrations and fancy figures, whilst novices, who fell on the ice, rising on again, laughed at others, and made merry over their own downfalls. Here and there were couples skating together with ease and dexterity. Along the right and lones were seated, as we done by "children of larger growth." One little miss, no more than ten years old, attracted special attention as to most of her companions, by the grace and ease of her picturesque attire—a bright, calumet dress, black velvet basque, embroidered in gold, and jaunty hat to match.

It this connection we can not forbear a criticism upon the dress of many of the ladies who indulge in this delightful and healthful exercise. A long skirt should never or without crinoline—none have tried the experiment of laying aside the last mentioned article—as experience tells the dress must be looped up. But the present style of crinoline, having such an immense circumference, is very ungraceful, especially if they are skating together, and is not unfrequently results in an unsolicited expose. A small crinoline only is suitable to skating. For those who do not own any the common gymnastic dress, worn in classby ladies, would not form as appropriate, convenient, and tasteful costume. We might refer to the bird of Paris as a matter for consideration while they are waiting for the "ball" to "go" again.

Young ladies look better be a little shy of making hasty acquaintances every where.

A nice young man in Sandusky, Ohio, the other day obtained an introduction to a young lady on the ice, and shortly after stole her skates, which she had permitted him to assist her in putting on.

There is an ice-house at Lyon's Falls, New York, which has not been empty for twenty years, nor has a pound of ice been put into it. The building is constructed after the ordinary method, and when it is designed to fill it, a nose jet is placed in the water-pipe, and as the water comes through it is chilled and drops into the ice-house, where it forms in the solid mass.

If skin is really a practical method of filling ice-houses, why do we . . . dealers adopt it generally? We should think it might save time to supply ice more rapidly and cheaper rates than they have done for a few years past.

QUITE A DIFFERENCE!—The Savannah Republican of date some few weeks ago says:

"Are we ever to have a cold day in Savannah during the winter season again? Was not Christmas-day last more like the 4th of July than the ordinary Christmas? Wood-cutters are complaining bitterly at how dull business is, for nobody will buy fire-wood. Nothing but the lightest summer clothing is worn, and our charming Southern belles go to church with their bright bright faces shaded with many bright flowers in their summer hats. In the evening, at the moment the sun set on this glorious day, the most part in their short-sleeves and bare-headed, quietly smoking their cigars."

Here is an original method of settling matrimonial difficulties:

A couple in Litchfield County, Connecticut, had lived together for ten years, supposing themselves married. Difficulties having arisen, one applied to law counsel for redress. Upon investigation it was found out that they had never been married. Like sensible people, they gave up the idea of a divorce and were married.

Not every body, however, can apply the same remedy, and wives who are found to be legally single can be married, some people find wonderful reason for trying to cut it. For example:

A wife in San Francisco lately put a petition for divorce in the court on the ground that her husband was a "confirmed fool." The judge, who was an old bachelor, wouldn't admit the plea, because every man would be liable to the same imputation who gets married.

A man in Unity, N. H. (He certainly did not dwell in single blessedness) went from his wife because she used a pound of tea a week. In his bill he talked to her with all the eloquence of a Cicero, Webster and Clay.

It may be invidious to make a selection from the numerous advertisements that present no body of relief—discontented couples. But, really, the following bears such an air of high-minded candor that our readers can not fail to appreciate it for what is it worth!

DIVORCES OBTAINED WITHOUT PUBLICITY IN any different States; all other law business attended to on the square.

A California editor, speaking of the complaints by his readers that he don't publish all . . . local items they desire, says he justly publishes but it. That is more than they do not sending the facts. He says don't like to publish a birth after the child is seven years old, a marriage before the groom is over, or the death of a man after his widow is married again.

A good story is told illustrative of business enterprise in country towns:

A grocer from an adjoining village sent his clerk to New London, one morning, last summer, with a load of produce to dispose of. The young man was gone all day, and at night returned with a load of goods from the depot, and dumped it on the floor with the remark: "There's your groceries, sir; I've sold everything—God's!" "Why," said the grocer, "haven't you sold any?" "Sold any? I guess I've sold any. Sent to New London for any thing and nobody sold any thing about green corn. Two or three fellows said me what I'd got to any beg, and I told 'em 'twas none of their business."

How ingenious women are! . . . Who ever met her equal in any contingency?

Whisky is said to be smuggled from Canada into the United States in the wire "bird-cages" in their tails, resembling something in shape and size real live "linnets." But, on examination, the "linnets" turn out to be in this case containing from three to five gallons of whisky. And, to give the deception a finishing touch, the other day, thirty-two such women with such babies were found in a train coming from Canada across the line, and thirty of them were arrested, and over 100 gallons of whisky recovered.

A lady-smuggler, the other day, had a pint flask of brandy attached from the top of her stocking.

The London Illustrated News of the World has a good story of a pedlar horse.

He was peacefully carrying with his wife in Ireland, some one day, in the course of his rambles, to the town of Wicklow, when, passing through a village, he met a considerable of excisemen, eagerly hugging for the honor of his gathering. The original title on the pedlar's horse was not observing. Dick, shame and faith, your Honor, take my word, the horse is the most perfect "Wicklow" I ever met with the peculiarity of the inducement, the gentleman engaged. Not in any the least, your Honor, for the pedlar's wife, luggage, and Paddy safely mounted. Soon after starting, the good-natured woman was seen to dismount, and, though the rate of progress was, to say the least of it, not all that could be desired, she kept close behind, and would not allow Paddy to ride, and said, "Now, Paddy, why did ye not tell me before that the horse was a Wicklow? Sure, you say your horse was a Wicklow, and don't he go much more in comparison than in reality?"

The following is a recent item we have been following Wilkie Collins's novel, "Armadale," in the page of Harper's Magazine:

There is a vessel lying at present at the Hankinson Dock (Liverpool) called the Armadale. On Saturday a gentleman called at the office and asked to see the ship. On Sunday another keeper, a pilated in his place, was refused admittance. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and yesterday another man was found dead on board."

It is said that among the Parisian ladies incessant exertion can not be found to keep the hair in order, and the "Empire" dominates, and to draw the skirts tighter and tighter around the figure. "Empire dress," as it is called, may suit to me the other day, while deploring these unbecoming tendencies, "lies in the good taste of the lessons, who is known to be the best in the city, and she replied, "Now, as we must all know that an Empress looks well in any dress, I think I can introduce, I think the "empe" very groundless and slight.

The leading Parisian dress-makers have been fully occupied of late in preparing mourning.

Mourning articles were now considered suitable for mourning, which formerly were only to be seen in colors. Even the last number of the Journal des Modes says, and when the mourning is about to be laid aside, pearl-gray or white crêpe, with black trimmings, make a very stylish toilet.

Black crêpe lace is considered the most dressy toilet for day wear, and the low crepe for evening wear.

For evening dress, white crêpe, over white satin, is much admired; crepe, striped with silver, is also made in this way. It looks very sombre, but is said to be very rich in an exceedingly pretty effect. Steel stars are in vogue for decorating mourning dresses, and black silk cord, with steel beads are used for looping up black skirts. For the first days of mourning, jet ornaments are worn, and the black velvet coronets, studded with jet cameos, linked together with jet chains, are considered the most suitable for the milliners have invented for the present court mourning.

Very few flowers are used for the mourning bonnets: pansies and narcissi are the only flowers now fashionable. Empire crepe bonnet, as a wreath round the crown of a fine crape bonnet, but they are too sombre for young faces. Some round bonnets, covering jet stars in black tulle bonnets, bands of black pleated or stitch feathers in velvet bonnets, are also fashionable. Black velvet bonnets with mourning bonnets are made of crepe lisse in pelerine, trimmed with a fall of crepe lisse fringed with jet, and tied with wide gros grain ribbon, starred at the ends with jet.

England certainly excels America in one respect. We never heard of our theirs being so religiously inclined to the following item from world holiness:

A well-known thief stole a horse-collar at Liverpool recently, and on the night of Christmas-day, he and his wife fell upon his knees and burst out into prayer. The policeofficer determined to watch the effect of prayer, and the prayer seemed to be interminable cut it short by walking his prisoner off to jail.

ASPINWALL AND THE PANAMA RAILROAD.

THE sea-port town of Aspinwall, on the coast of New Granada, in the Gulf of Mexico, is the Atlantic terminus of the Panama Railroad. Until lately passengers are conveyed in a few hours to the shore of the Pacific Ocean. It is, as all the world knows, quite a busy place, having been founded in the eighth part of its surface is yet cleared. As opportunity offers trucks-loads of earth are brought down and the swampy ground is gradually filled in, but this process is a very slow one. When completed, however, Manzanilla ought to present a solid surface. There is no fresh water on the island; and all the water required for the consumption of the inhabitants has to be carefully collected from the mainland or brought in pipes from the main land. The principal fea ure of the place is the railroad, with a number of hot-house cars, which thrive amazingly. The streets are filthy, and there does not appear to be the slightest effort to improve the condition of the town. The roadstead or port of Aspinwall is very exposed; between the months of October and March tremendous northers visit the coast, and commit great havoc among the wharfs and shipping.

Our engraving represents the starting of the train on the Panama railroad, for Panama, in the early morning. The railroad was constructed by an American Company, and is one of the most striking examples of American energy and perseverance. It was constructed in 1850, and finished in five years, being the first railway ever undertaken in a tropical country. Its length is forty-seven miles and a half, and the charge (there is no distinction of class) is over fifty cents a mile—the most expensive railway traveling in the world. The fortunate shareholders receive a dividend of 30 per cent., but much more is earned. Each passenger is allowed 50 pounds of luggage, and has to pay five cents for any more. Freight is equally dear. The time of crossing from one ocean to the other is about four hours. The rolling-stock is American, and the engines are acknowledged by Englishmen to be an improvement on those of the English railways.

FASHIONS FOR JANUARY

THERE is no particular change to chronicle in the fashions for any thing, the robes get rather longer and the "cataques" shorter. The latter are either trimmed with fur or lavishly embroidered with gold braid. Bonnets have undergone no change. "Ecstines" are made to come higher up than ever, and are generally trimmed with sable, astrakan, or swandown.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

No. 1. Ball-dress of white tulle, looped up at the side with black velvet ribbon, and bordered with three rows of the trimmed with a flounce. The body is cut low and pointed.

No. 2. Morning robe of silk, with epaulets of the same. The head-dress is of simple lace.

No. 3. Evening dress made for the Princess de Metternich. Blue satin tunic bordered with a passementerie composed of two rows of ribbon with embroidered bullbetween; the bolt and trimming of the corsage of the same material. The jupe is of white tulle covered entirely with silver crescents. The under jupe, which is of silk the same as the tunic, is fluted at the bottom. The coiffure consists of a wreath with bows of blue satin and a diamond star.

No. 4. Toilet worn by the Princess de Metternich at the wedding of Princess Anna Murat. Robe of white silk striped with green. Over-skirt of green satin with long tunic of the same material. Corsage and jupe are trimmed with gray narrow fur. White bonnet, trimmed with light green velvet, with ostrich feather fastened by a gold clasp. Muff and stockings.

Chintz Dress.—Frock of black moire. Jacket of black velvet, lined with chintz. Hat likewise of velvet, with their canoe ornaments and a red feather.

The costumes and accessories worn in the engraving are from the establishment of Worth & Bobergh, Rue de la Paix, Paris; the head-dress of Mme. Elise Reiffer's, Rue de la Paix; and the head-dress of the morning toilet is from Mdme. Alexandrine's, Rue d'Antin.

DR. EDWARDS'S OLIVE OINTMENT.—DR. EDWARDS'S PREPARATIONS have secured such a reputation that comment is unnecessary.

Ladies and Gentlemen will find a variety of useful information in DURYEA'S ROYAL HAND-BOOK" for 1866, embracing, among other things, the most complete dictionary of the Language of flowers ever published, as well as a descriptive list of the choice preparations of this House. It will be distributed gratuitously.—Boston Journal, December 8.

JOSEPH BURNETT & CO., Boston, Proprietors.

For sale by all dealers in medicines, perfumery, fancy goods, and groceries.

ADVERTISEMENTS

VALENTINES! VALENTINES!
NEW DESIGNS, NEW MOTTOES,
NEW STYLES.
$10, $20, $30, $40, and $50 lots always on hand.
Send in your orders at once to the VALENTINE DEPOT of T. W. STRONG, 98 Nassau Street, New York.

GOLDEN PALM OIL SOAP.
For the Bath and Toilet.
FOR SALE BY DRUGGISTS.
LINDLEY M. ELKINTON, Manufacturer,
138 Market Street, Philadelphia.

144 COMIC VALENTINES
Mailed free on receipt of $1. B. W. HITCHCOCK, 14 Chambers St., New York. Circulars free.

DON'T BE FOOLISH
You can make Six Dollars than Fifty Cents. Call and examine an invention superior needed by every body. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50c. that retails easily for $5, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York.

Central Park
SKATING and POCKET
LANTERN.
No person should skate after dark without this Lantern; enabling the Skater to discern and avoid bad spots in the ice.
It is adapted for any other purpose.
Sent to any address on receipt of $1.
BRUNDRETT BROS.,
103 Beekman St.,
New York.

THE DAYS OF
BRASS JEWELRY
Are Over.
THE COSMOPOLITAN
JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,
Capital, $2,500,000.
Great One-Price Gold Sale.
Sell no Brass or so-called Plated JEWELRY.
WARRANT ALL JEWELRY GOLD, OR NO SALE.
Let it be distinctly understood that this is emphatically a GOLD SALE, by an association of manufacturers, on a one-price average system, and that not a single article of brass or plated jewelry is included in the whole immense stock.
250,000
PIECES, Gold and Silver Watches, Diamond Rings, Sets of rich Silverware, Fine Gold Jewelry, Photograph Albums, &c.,
Worth $2,500,000,
All to be sold for two dollars each, an average price of one-fifth the usual cost, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.
INSURING TEN DOLLARS WORTH FOR $3.
☞ THE PROOF.—We guarantee to send any customer, in exchange for the least article they may get for $3, a splendid richly chased or engraved silver Butter-Dish or Cooler, fine plated, worth at $20, or a solid gold Watch. The entire morocco Photograph Album, valued at $6; and you have a possibility of getting a
Fine Gold Watch or Piano.
Send 25 cents for the Golden Envelope, containing valuable receipts and songs; and one of the sealed Certificates, which are well mixed and taken out regardless of choice. It will be sent, which will inform you what you can get for $3, from a Butter-Dish or Cooler, worth $16, to a Watch or Grand Piano, worth $1000. Also will be sent our circular, containing list of articles and full particulars and terms to agents, to whom great inducements are offered.
Two for 60 cents, with a beautiful Photograph; 5 for $1, with a Silver Nut-Pick, worth $1; 11 for $2, with a Silver Napkin Ring, worth $1; 17 for $3, with a Silver Fruit Knife, worth $3; 30 for $5, with a Gold Pen, Extension Case, worth $5; 65 for $10, with a Gold Dollar Locket, worth $13; 160 for $18, with a fine Silver Watch, worth $18; 200 for $20, with a Silver Hunting Watch, worth $20.
In all cases, upon receipt of the money, the premiums as above will be sent with the envelope.
Address CALKINS & CO., Managers,
No. 37 Park Row, New York.
Or, if nearer you, 36 South Fourth St., St. Louis, Mo.; or 83 and 85 Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.
EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.
ONE DOLLAR EACH.
PATENTED IN THE UNITED STATES, June 26, 1866.
AN EXACT AND RELIABLE POCKET TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen. Correctly constructed on the most approved SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES, and warranted to KEEP SOLAR TIME with absolute certainty and the utmost precision. It never runs down. It requires no key and no winding up; WOUND RUNS DOWN, and can never be too fast or too slow. It is an instantaneous article. Approved by the PRESS and ALL WHO HAVE USED THEM. Just introduced into this country from Europe, and secured by Patent by the LETTERS PATENT. Price for a single one, with plain or fancy dial, by mail, securely packed in a box, with a three postage paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Sole delivery of agency for the United States. Agents to imitate this advertisement with a view to swindling the public, by offering a useless article, will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. Address the sole proprietor and manufacturer, M. JULIUS MEYER, 207 Broadway, New York, or SOLE PROPRIETORS, 594-596 Broadway, New York.

Wonderful! Wonder!—Full instructions, by which a person can make the finest art of ventriloquism in a few hours' practice. Satisfaction given, or money refunded. Sent by mail for $1. Address J. A. D. SPENCER, Calhoun, Ill.

AGENTS ALWAYS WANTED.
Circulars free. Address B. W. HITCHCOCK, 14 Chambers St., New York. Big chance for Agents.

Chapped Hands and Face,
SORE LIPS, CHILBLAINS, &c.—HEGEMAN & CO.'S CAMPHOR-ICE WITH GLYCERINE cures chapped hands, &c., instantly, and keep the skin soft and smooth in the coldest weather. Sold by druggists. Price 25 cents. Sent by mail for 30 cents. HEGEMAN & CO., Chemists and Druggists, New York.

$1,000,000 Worth
of
Watches, Jewelry, and Silverware.
To be disposed of at ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, not to be sold for under that price. Read what are to receive.
100 Gold Hunting-Case Watches . . . . . each $125 00
500 Silver Watches . . . . . each 20 00 to 35 00
10,000 Gold Pens and Silver Cases . . . . . " 5 00 to 8 00
And a large assortment of Jewelry and Silverware of every description. The method of disposing of these goods at ONE DOLLAR each is as follows:
Certificates, naming each article and its value, are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 25 cents; five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5. Agents wanted, to whom we offer liberal terms and premiums. Address A. D. BOWEN & CO.,
88 Nassau Street, P. O. Box 4230, New York.

Holiday Presents.

GREAT SALE of WATCHES, CHAINS, DIAMOND RINGS, &C.
One Million Dollars Worth!
TO BE DISPOSED OF AT
ONE DOLLAR EACH!

Without regard to value!! Not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive!!!

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES!

All to be sold at One Dollar Each!!

500	Musical Boxes, each	$1
150	" with Bells and Castinets	200
500	Silver Teapots and Coffee Urns	250
500	" Chasting Dishes	300
1000	" Pitchers	150
1500	" Syrup Cups with Silvers	200
5000	" Cake Baskets and Pitching Cakes	300
5000	" Castors, from	150
700	" Fruit, Card and Cake Baskets,	300
10	" Dozen Silver Tea spoons, per dozen,	1000
10	" Table Spoons and forks, per dozen,	2000
50	" Table Cutlery,	4000
50	" Ivory-Handled Hunting-Case Watches,	4000
50	" Ladies Gold and Enameled Hunting-Case Watches,	4500
50	Gents' Hunting-Case Silver Watches,	3500
50	" Diamond Rings,	4000
5,000	Gold Vest and Neck Chains,	400
5,000	Gold Guard Chains and Bracelets,	400
6,000	Jet and Gold Bracelets,	600
2,000	Gentlemen's Albs and Guard Chains,	1000
7,000	Solitaire and Gold Brooches,	400
5,000	Cameo, Jet, and Emerald Brooches,	600
5,000	Mosaic, Jet, Lava, and Florentine Earrings,	400
7,500	Coral, Opal, and Emerald Ear Drops,	400
4,000	Gentlemen's Diamond Breastpins,	800
8,000	Gold Fob and Vest Watch Keys,	200
4,000	Fob and Vest Ribbon Slides,	800
5,000	Sets of Solitaire Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c.,	800
5,000	Gold Thimbles, Pencils, etc.,	400
20,000	Medallion Lockets,	1000
4,000	" Magic Spring	1000
5,000	Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, etc.,	400
5,000	Plain Gold Rings,	400
5,000	Chased Gold Rings,	400
2,000	Stone Set and Signet Rings,	800
1,000	Ladies' Gold Watches,	1000
1,500	Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Set and Pin,	1000
4,000	Sets Ladies' Jewelry—Studs, Pencil, Opal, and other Stones,	400
10,000	Gold Pens, Silver Extension Holders and Pencil,	400
10,000	Gold Pens and Gold-Mounted Holders	600
5,000	Gold Pens and Gold Extension-Holders	1500
5,000	Gold Pens and Ivory Holders,	800
5,000	Ladies' Gilt and Jet Hair Bars and Balls	500

AREADA & CO., Manufacturers' Agents, No. 167 Broadway, New York, announce that all of the above list of goods will be sold for One Dollar Each.

In consequence of the great stagnation of trade in the manufacturing districts of England, through the war having cut off the supply of cotton, a large quantity of goods in the jewelry, originally intended for the English market, has been sent over for sale in this country, and will be SOLD AT ANY SACRIFICE.

Under these circumstances, ARRANDALE & CO., acting as Agents for the principal European Manufacturers, have resolved to Send Out Appointments, and to dispose of nothing to the following regulations:

Each person will receive what is described in an envelope, undisturbed, sealed up; and, when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent to the party who may draw for them.

On receipt of the certificate you will see what you have to have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not. Purchasers may thus obtain a Gold Watch, Diamond Ring, or any box of Jewelry on our list for ONE DOLLAR.

Send 25 cents for Certificate.

In all transactions by mail we shall charge for forwarding the certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be enclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; one hundred for $15.

What the "Press" say of us.

The Lafayette (Indiana) Daily Courier, March 18, 1865, says: A letter of inquiry, some weeks since, to an assortment of jewelry can not be found on the Continent than ARRANDALE & CO., are now offering for sale at One Dollar each, and which, we are informed, are of the same description of goods as those which they have been selling at from $5 to $10 per piece. The statements may be implicitly relied upon, both as to the character of their goods and the manner of doing business especially, in all parts of the country, are realizing handsome profits as agents, and if any of our readers desire to interest themselves in the enterprise, they may do so with perfect confidence.

GREAT GIFT DISTRIBUTION.—A rare opportunity is offered for obtaining watches, chains, diamond rings, silverware, etc., by Messrs. Arrandale & Co., at No. 167 Broadway. They offer an immense stock of articles, worth $1 value, and all are offered at one dollar each. The distribution is by gift system—you serve to get any article of a certain article, enclosed in an envelope, and are not required to pay your dollar unless you choose to take the article, which will certainly be worth more than that amount, and may be $50 or $100. An excellent mode of investing a dollar.—Sunday Times, N. Y. City, Feb. 19, 1865.

Messrs. Arrandale & Co. have long been personally known to us, and we believe them to be worthy of public confidence.—N. Y. Scottish American Journal, June 11, 1864.

Messrs. Arrandale & Co.'s arrangement the advantages must be very great to the customer. So he has every thing to gain, and nothing comparatively to lose. We know what he will get for his dollar beforehand, and he need not send it if he is not satisfied.—N. Y. Leader, Aug. 8, 1864.

We have the firm in question to be very respectable and thoroughly worthy of public confidence, and recommend our friends to favor their advertisement.—N. Y. Leader, Sept. 3, 1864.

LADIES, BEWARE FOR LADIES.—The most eligible and profitable employment we have heard of for ladies in the sale of certificates of the Great Gift Distribution of Arrandale & Co. A lady of our acquaintance has been very successful in this line, not only in filling up her own time, but also in doing a good turn to those to whom the sold the certificates, as will be seen by our advertising columns. Gentlemen can also be thus engaged.—N. Y. Evening Herald, August 14, 1865.

The British Ship of Kingston, C. W., say, Nov. 26, 1864, one of our subscribers has sent an order for Arrandale & Co., and by request brought home twenty certificates, sent a party over her agency, to call for inspection, and without hesitation we can state that each and all of the articles were worth treble the amount of cost to the recipients, and some of them six times.

We have had some very pretty specimens of Table and Tea Spoons, Gold Watches, Gold "Chains, Pins, Bracelets, etc., which have been sent by Arrandale & Co. to this place for $1 each.—Angerson Reporter, N. Y. State, Feb. 15, 1865.

AGENTS.—We want agents in every regiment, and in every town and county in the country, and those acting as such will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, besides, powerful their remittances to one Dollar. Also other inducements, which can be learned on application. Agents will collect the money for each Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. ARRANDALE & CO.,
167 Broadway, New York.

FIRST PREMIUM
IMPROVED

$5 SEWING $5
MACHINE.

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originally patented May 15, 1862; Improvements patented March, 1865. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with complete attachments, is the most wonderful and elegantly-constructed novelty, is noiseless in operation, has the strength of any high-priced machine, sews with double or single thread of all kinds. Makes the strongest-stitch alike on both sides. Lighter than by hand, and with extraordinary rapidity, making SIXTEEN STITCHES to every revolution of the wheel. Will stitch, RUN, HEMBLE, BIND, TUCK, DARN OR BRAID THE, &C., &C. Every machine has instructions. Warranted not to get out of order in 3 years. It has taken the PREMIUM at STATE FAIRS, and received the highest testimonials from journals and of those who have used it. It is the only low-priced machine that has ever been offered to the public that is PATENTED. ALL OTHER sewing machines at the same price are counterfeits.

"For the drummaker it is invaluable; for the household it supplies a want always felt."—Godey's Ladies' Book.

"With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly sews, hems, gathers, binds and runs; in short, performs quickly the hand-sewing."—New York Tribune.

Single machines, ALL COMPLETE, sent to any part of the country per express, packed in box, with printed instructions, on receipt of $5 per piece. Sole delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted every where. Circular, containing liberal inducements, sent free. Address

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
Office 323 Broadway, New York.

Superfluous Hair Removed

From all parts of the body in five minutes, without injury to the skin, by "DYKE'S DEPILATORY POWDER." Sent to any address, free of postage, for $1. Depot 25 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. Sold by all druggists.

Allcock's Porous Plasters

CURE LUMBAGO, PAINS OF THE SIDE, VARICOSE VEINS, AND ALL WEAKNESS.

An Electrician, who has great experience of their effects in local rheumatism, in the dolorous, and deep-seated nervous and other pains, and in affections of the kidneys, &c., etc., strongly recommends the Porous Plasters, and pain-relieving effects to their electric qualities. He asserts they restore the healthy electric condition equilibrium of the part, and, that being restored, pain and morbid action cease.

Lame Back.

BRANDRETH HOUSE, NEW YORK, Nov. 25, 1859.

T. ALLCOCK, ESQ.—Dear Sir: I was entirely relieved yesterday from a weakness in my back. Having heard your Plasters much recommended in cases of the kind, I procured one and applied it, and all that I could desire. A single Plaster cured me in a week.

Yours, respectfully, J. G. BRANDRETH.

General Agency, 274 Canal street, New York.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicines.

VIOLINS and BOWS

Sent to any part of the U. S. on rec't of following prices: GERMAN, Best or brown, $2 50, $3, $4, $5, $6, $8.
ITALIAN LEAGUE, Best, $5, $6, $8, $10, $12, $15, $20.
JAPANESE, Blocked and inlaid, $8, $10, $12, $15, $20.
ITALIAN, Very fine, $15, $20, $25, $30, $40, $50.
OLD MASTERS. Very fine tone, $40, $50, $75, to $200.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of every description at lowest Cash Prices. Send for Illustrated Catalogue.
Especial attention given to this department.
WM. A. KING, 297 Broadway.

HOWARD MISSION AND HOME FOR LITTLE WANDERERS, No. 37 New Bowery, New York.

Board of Managers—Joseph Stickle, President, 151 Broadway; H. S. Terbell, Vice-President, 69 Worth St.; H. Ketcham, Secretary, 37 New Bowery; Wm. Frith, Treasurer, 384 Canal St.; A. Baldwin, 321 Broadway; W. Allen, 8 Pine St.; Wm. Whitlock, Jr., 3 Wall street; W. Abbe, 8 Pine St.; W. Sanford, 229 Water St.; Rev. W. C. Van Meter, Superintendent.

"The Next Song."—Three days ago, in a cold room, sat, freezing and starving, three little children. The eldest, a girl of nine years, had but a few months since received from having had nurtured her through fever and the winds pipe, by her brutal mother. The other two are brothers, the youngest scarcely three years old. Had the heartrending exhibition of perishing infancy or neglected childhood. They were the children of parents who had already given up by the parents. For the first time they enjoyed the luxury of warmth, food, and clothing, and the shoes, toys, combs, and brushes had finished their work, nose, soft, warm clothes, so kindly sent by friends, and the pieces of flannel wrapped around their feet and around the register they warmed into new life, and our heart smiled as we heard sweetly, from the eldest girl of their little hearts, they sang:

"I'm happy, I'm happy, I'm so my way to Zion;
I'm happy, I'm happy, I'm so my journey home."

God grant that these little ones may remember that perishing little ones in our city! We want home for the little ones. Who will help us? Who will help him? We have received over $600 in four years—more than $200 in the last four months—but we need $1,000 more to be comfortable. One Dollar a Week will buy food for a child. Who will help us? Send to our agent, Mr. Whitlock, 3 Wall street, or to the treasurer, Mr. Wm. Frith, 384 Canal street, or to the superintendent, Rev. W. C. Van Meter, 37 New Bowery.

January 1, 1866.

There is no Book for Choirs

Superior to the "HARP OF JUDAH," by L. O. emerson. Seventy-five Thousand Copies have already been sold, and the demand for the present indicates a continuation to all who have used it. For choirs, singing schools, conventions, and singing classes, it is unequaled. A musical that is universally liked. Price $1.38 a copy; $12 a dozen. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

Pile Remedy.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

Coughs

DR. STRICKLAND'S SHELLBLOSSOM COUGH BALM will be found invaluable for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all other forms of Throat and Lung Disease.
For sale by Druggists. 25 cents per Bottle.

PARLOR ORGANS.

The Highest Premium, a Special Gold Medal, was awarded to Dr. Liv. the great Fair of the American Institute over all competitors for the best instruments.

A Gold Medal was awarded to CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO. for the best Reed Instrument on exhibition—a most just testimonial.—Tribune, Oct. 14, 1865.

"I can speak of them in the highest terms."—G. W. MORGAN

"The finest instruments of the class I ever saw."—GEO. F. BRISTOW.

"The best instruments of their class."—WM. A. KING.

"Their tone, delicacy, and power, is the perfection of any other instrument of a similar kind."—CHARLES FRADELBURG.

Illustrated Catalogues sent by mail.

CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO.,
No. 97 East Twenty-third st., New York.

S—T—1860—X.

Drake's Plantation Bitters.

They purify, strengthen, and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an unfailing cure for cramps of voice and diet.
They overcome the effects of dissipation and late hours.
They strengthen the nerves and relieve the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the blood and acidify the stomach.
They cure dyspepsia and constipation.
They are a specific for diarrhœa, and cholera-morbus.
They cure liver complaint and nervous headache.

They are the best farmers in the world. They make the most work out of the least nourishment from grass and water. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated California Tonic, and the roots and herbs which form the groundwork of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particular attention is invited to these bitters requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels, Saloons, and Country Stores, and by the proprietors at No. 10 Park Row, Room 2, Brown & Counterdicks and refitted below.

P. H. DRAKE & CO.,
21 Park Row, New York.

In those cases of scanty, retarded growth the present season of 1865, the balsam of the Spruce Swamp Shrub has been found to excite the Beard, Mustache, &c., to a rich and vigorous growth. (See Dandelion.) The History and a small Sample of this Balsam will be mailed to those requiring it.
JOHN EAWLINS, 815 Broadway, New York.

THE HORACE WATERS Grand, Square, and Upright PIANOS, MELODEONS, and CABINET ORGANS. Wholesale and Retail. To let, and rent allowed if purchased. Twenty pianos received for the trade, and one and piano at bargains from $80 to $225. Factory and warerooms, 481 Broadway, New York. Second-hand Pianos. Pianos tuned and repaired.

HORACE WATERS.

Youth and Beauty Restored

To the gray-headed by the use of

Webster's Vegetable Hair Invigorator.

DEMAS BARNES & Co., N. Y., General Agents.

HOW TO MAKE CIDER WITHOUT APPLES or other fruit. The Hunter's Secret complete. Information of value to Ladies, and those interested in things worth knowing, will be found in the "HOUR OF WORKING." For Agents' Terms, address H. DOW & CO., Boston.

DUMB-WAITERS.

JAMES MURTAUGH'S celebrated DUMB-WAITERS are manufactured only at No. 1335 Broadway, New York, where a model can be seen.

$1500 PER YEAR! We want agents every where to sell our NEW and CHEAP $20 Sewing Machines. Three new Holds. Under and upper feed. Warranted five years. Fully licensed and protected by law. Do not be swindled by travelling peddlers. We pay no Salaries. Address or call upon SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine, or at No. 335 Broadway, New York. No. 298 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.; No. 14 Lombard's Block, Chicago, Ill.; No. 181 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.; Boston Office; or No. 8 Spaulding's Exchange, Buffalo, New York.

PHARAOH'S SERPENTS.

Eggs of the largest and most rich of Pharaoh's Serpentgirted, will evolve if a few seconds a harmless Serpent, several feet in length. Full set of ten eggs mailed to any part of the country, for 50 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 37 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia. The Trade supplied.

DR. GLOVER'S LIVER TONIC relieves and cures more ruptures than any other. Sold by druggists generally. Also, his unfailing stockings, belts, bandages, crutches, &c. No. 11 Am Street, New York. Established 20 years. Send stamp for Pamphlet.

Pimples on the Face

REMOVED AT ONCE BY THE USE OF "UPHAM'S PURIFYING POWDER FOR THE SKIN." Sent anywhere for 75 CENTS, by S. C. UPHAM, No. 37 SOUTH EIGHTH ST., PHILADELPHIA. Sold by druggists.

HOME EMPLOYMENT.

A GOOD MAN WANTED IN EVERY TOWN and County in the United States to engage in an honorable employment. Fifteen cents per hour. Light manufacturing required are tact and industry. Address, with Half Stamp, ROBERTS BROTHERS, 13 Bond Street, Jersey City, N. J.

$19 PER DAY. Active, enterprising men wanted everywhere to sell the article required by every person. Useful, attractive, and quick sale. Business honorable and respectable. Full particulars and a sample sent free by mail. Address American Golden Pen Co., Hartford, Ct.

PORTABLE PRINTING OFFICES

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular with Specimen of Type, Cuts, &c., 10 cts. ADAMS PRESS COMPANY, 70 Ann St., New York.

This is a Metal Top Lamp

Chimney that will not break by heat, gives a LARGE FLAME, BURNS UP ALL GASES, * SMOKE—Is fort, the MOST PERFECT ARTICLE KNOWN.

New Lamp Chimney Co.,
78 Warren St., N. Y.

Holiday Presents.

140,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.,

Worth $500,000!

TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH,
WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE.

AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

		EACH.
100	Gold Hunting Case Watches	$115 00
100	Gold Vest Chains	70 00
300	Ladies' Gold Watches	60 00
500	Ladies' Watches	18 00
10	Revolving Castors	$15 00 to 18 00
2000	Diamond Rings	40 00
5000	Oval and Chased Gold Bracelets	6 00 to 10 00
2000	Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	8 00 to 10 00
3500	Ladies' California Diamond Rings	3 00 to 8 00
8000	Magic Spring Lockets and Chains	4 00 to 10 00
10000	Gold Pens, Silver-Mounted Holders	4 00 to 8 00
10000	Gold Pens and Ivory Holders	4 00 to 8 00
5000	Sets Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
5000	Tea, Dessert, and Table Forks, per doz	5 00 to 10 00
5000	Dessert and Table Forks, per doz	4 00 to 8 00
4000	Butter Knives, per pair	4 00 to 8 00
5000	Napkin Rings, per pair	4 00 to 10 00
5000	Silver Ladles	4 00 to 10 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first placed in envelopes, sealed, and mixed; and, when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, free of all, for a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail on receipt of one, 3 cents; five, 15 cents for $1; 20 for $3; 45 for $10; and 100 for $15.

Agents wanted every where. Great inducements to ladies and gents to act as such. Full not to send for circular, which gives great inducements, and particulars.

Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.
Post Office Box 5,643.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 BROADWAY (St. Nicholas Block),
Photographic Materials, Stereoscopic Goods,
AND STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS,
SCENES IN EUROPE, &c.
Photograph Albums, great assortment, Cartes de Visite Photograph Albums.
French English, and American Novelties.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
FOR FEBRUARY, 1866.

CONTENTS:

BLACKWELL'S ISLAND LUNATIC ASYLUM.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—The Asylum, from Road to Stormbost Landing.—On the Way to the Asylum.—Entertainment: the Examination.—At Dinner.—The Office and Employment Room.—Lunch Hour.—The Doctor's Morning Round.—The Retreat and Yard.—"Mrs. Brodessant."—The Violently Disconsolate.—Amusement: Tony.—Infirmity.—The Admiral.—Quigley.—Within the Walls.—Without the Walls.—Next Many.—Thomas Many at Home.—Black Jimmy.

RUTH'S HOME.

HEROIC DEEDS OF HEROIC MEN.—X. CHARLES KLAUS AND THE NEW YORK MARY'S DOMAIN.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Charles Klaus.—Mary Stuart.—Elizabeth.—Mary Stuart Receiving and Visiting.—The Queen of the West and the Wooden Walls.—Loss of the Queen of the West.—The Indianola passing the Batteries at Vicksburg.—The Admiralty.

INDIAN SUMMER.
With an Illustration.

AN INTERNATIONAL AFFAIR. (Concluded.)
With Illustrations.

THE RED-JACKET MEDAL.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Red-Jacket (by Wm.).—Red Jacket (by Darley).—The Red Jacket Medal.—S. S. Parker.

THE WITNESSES.

AMONG THE WILDEBEESTE.
BOOK THE FOURTH.
CHAPTER XLI. Love and Law.
CHAPTER XLII. A Scandal at the Station.
CHAPTER XLIII. The Mad Man's Journal.
ILLUSTRATION.—Miss Gwilt and the Gorgons.

TO THE UNRETURNING BRAVE.

DIAMONDS AND OTHER GEMS.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Forms of Diamonds.—The Mattan Diamond.—The Koh-i-noor, before Recutting.—The Koh-i-noor, after Recutting.—The Star of the Southern Cross; Dark View.—The Koh-i-noor; Recut, side View.—The Koh-i-noor; Recut, front View.—The Regent; Side View.—The Austrian Yellow Brilliant.—The Pasha of Egypt Diamonds, Side View.—The Diamonds.—The Star of the South.—Star of the South, Side View.—Star of the South, Front View.—The Dresden Green.—The Hope.—The Polar Star.—The Comet.—The Nassak.—The Nassak.—The Piggott.—The Dresden Brilliant.

CHRISTMAS GUESTS.

THE HOLIDAYS ... AND NEW-YEAR'S TO TWELFTH-NIGHT.

THE SEARCH TO THE SEA.

CHARLOTTE BRONTE'S LUCY SNOWE.

THE LOST HOUR.

NAMES OF PLACES.

EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.

MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.

EDITOR'S DRAWER.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or Six Copies for $20 00. Postage (gratuitous) is allowed.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $8 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements in Harper's Magazine at the following low rates: one quarter of a page, each Number, $75; one half, $125; one page, $200. Advertisements for Harper's Magazine is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00

An Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Postage (gratuitous) is allowed.

THE BOUND VOLUMES OF HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent to any part of the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, viz.:

Cloth Binding . . . . . $2 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco . . . . . 3 00 "

Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—One Dollar and Fifty Cents per line for inside, and Two Dollars per line for outside Advertisements. HARPER & BROTHERS.

LADY-PHYSICIANS.

Who is this interesting invalid? It is young REGINALD DE BRACES, who has succeeded in Catching a Bad Cold, in order that he might Send for that rising Practitioner, Dr. ARABELLA BOLUS!

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad St., New York,
(Two Doors from Wall.)

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks, Bonds, and Gold will receive our personal attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

MOTHERS!

Children die by thousands—Worms the cause—whose lives might have been spared, had they used VAN DEUSEN'S WORM CONFECTIONS. Children are as fond of them as they are of Candy. Sold by Merchants. 25 Cts. a Box. Sent by mail on receipt of the price. VAN DEUSEN BROTHERS, Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.

Calenberg & Vaupel's AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

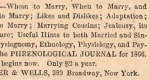
HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

FOLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 602 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $30 each.

TO CURE
Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL, and disorders arising from excesses, use
Smolander's Extract Buchu.
Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York, and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

LADIES will find THE ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for 1866 most interesting. There are "SIGNS OF CHARACTER" in the Head, Face, Hands, Walk, Voice, Ears, Eyes, Nose, Chin, Neck, Arms, Hips, Teeth, Hands, Skin, Hand-writing, illustrated and explained. It is exactly adapted to the social circle, and all the members will enjoy it. Only 20 cents a number, or $2 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, N. Y.

DEAFNESS
And Discharges from the Ear Radically Cured
By the use of the recently-discovered Vegetable Extract
OTITINE.
Price $2 00 a bottle. For sale by all Druggists. WEEKS & POTTER, Druggists, No. 170 Washington St., Boston, Mass., Wholesale Agents.



Clergymen, Teachers, The Press,
Unite in saying that the new Juvenile Magazine,
Our Young Folks
Is the best Magazine for the Young ever published in America. It is filled with attractive illustrations, and its articles in prose and poetry, are by the best writers for children in the country.
It is sold at the low price of two dollars a year. Each number contains sixty-four page, beautifully printed. A liberal discount to clubs. Send 20 cents for a specimen copy and circular to the Publishers, TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

MERCHANTS, BANKERS,
And others should send to all parts of the United States by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, 58 Broadway.

Ladies and Gentlemen,
Send for our MEASURING CARD, and
Take your own measure, and we will send a
PERFECT FIT.
575 Broadway, N. Y., E. A. BROOKS, AGENT.
Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, and Slippers, of every description, for ladies, gents, boys, misses, and children.
N. B.—LARGEST ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY.

LOVE, COURTSHIP, and MARRIED LIFE.—Whom to Marry, When to Marry, and Whom Not to Marry; Likes and Dislikes; Adaptation; Right Age to Marry; Marrying Cousins; Jealousy, its Cause and Cure; Useful Hints to both Married and Single; with Physiognomy, Ethnology, Physiology, and Psychology, in the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for 1866. New volume begins now. Only $2 a year.
FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR
The Cheapest Collar Ever Invented,
Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides. Made in white, linen and printed stitch.

Is made of the best Spring Steel Wire, and is just the thing to wear with Paper Collars, being far superior to elastic cord for holding "Butterflies," "Uniques," "Bows," &c., in place on the shirt button.

PATENT EXPANDED STAR COLLAR
...This Collar, showing a space for the cravat, excels all others by its superior shape and weight, and the exquisite finish and whiteness of the paper.
MARCH BROS., PIERCE & CO., AGENTS.
Winthrop Square, Boston.
Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf Supporters at the lowest trade prices, by—
BOWEN BROTHERS ..... Chicago, Illinois.
J. LOWMAN & BRO. ..... Cincinnati, Ohio.
MAYER & HARTCH ..... Cleveland, Ohio.
CARMICHAEL & CO. ..... Louisville, Kentucky.
C. CAPEN ..... 593 Broadway, New York.
WM. A. SMITHSETTER ..... 713 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa.
A. BURNHAM & CO. ..... Detroit, Michigan.

Old Eyes Made New,
Without Spectacles, Doctor, or Medicine. Pamphlet mailed free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

CROUP.
How it may be easily Prevented without Medicine; also its Cause and Cure. Sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

COMFORT AND CURE FOR THE RUPTURED.—Send free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE, 400 pages, 100 Illustrations, $1 00. Sent by mail every where, postage prepaid. Contents table sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

"A TIP-TOP" NUMBER. The PICTORIAL DOUBLE NUMBER, PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for JANUARY, now ready, 30c. For the year, only $2. Contains "Signs of Character, and How to Read Them," Physiognomy, Psychology, Ethnology, with Portraits of the Good and Bad; Love, Courtship, and Marriage, Training of Children, Choice of Pursuits. Should be read by every family.

Marvin's Patent
ALUM AND DRY PLASTER, FIRE AND BURGLAR
SAFES
Never lose their fire-proof qualities, corrode the iron, or mould their contents.
Sideboard and parlor safes for silverware.
MARVIN & CO.,
265 Broadway, New York.
721 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

TO LET.
The Four-Story Building, No. 21 Broad Street, 28 feet front. Possession 1st of May next. Apply to
HARPER & BROTHERS, Franklin Square.

JAMES'S CELEBRATED LINIMENT
For NEURALGIA, RHEUMATISM, and SCIATICA. WARRANTED. 8 Astor Place. Price One Dollar.

MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP with
B.T. BABBITT'S POTASH IN TIN CANS
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
Pure Concentrated Potash, or Ready Soap Maker. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 3 pounds, 5 pounds, 6 pounds, and 12 pounds, with full directions, in English and German, for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 16 gallons of Soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market. B. T. BABBITT, No. 64, 66, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington Street, New York.

B.T. BABBITT'S SALERATUS 70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
If you want healthy bread, use B. T. Babbitt's Lest medicinal Saleratus. "Made from Common Salt." Bread made with this Saleratus contains, when baked, nothing but common salt, water, and flour. B. T. BABBITT, No. 64, 66, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., New York.

B.T. BABBITT'S STAR YEAST POWDERS 70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
Will make Light Biscuit in Fifteen Minutes.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.
For scorbutics, diphtheric, putrid sore throat, quinsy, mumps, and all kindred local affections, these medicines prove a sheet anchor, holding the putrid wreck in safety till Nature quells the storm, and the sinking frame is rescued. Sold every where.

$5 GIVEN AWAY.
The great BLOOD PURIFIER, and other valuable information, mailed free. Address
STEPHENS & CO., 229 Broadway, New York.

WANTED—every man in the United States, who has lost either an Arm or Leg—to engage in a profitable business. Send twenty-five Cents for terms, to A. P. BELCHER, Box 48, Philadelphia, Pa.

Family Knitting Machines.
THE BEST IN THE WORLD.
Send Stamp for a Circular.
Dalton Knitting Machine Co.,
537 Broadway, New York.

PINE APPLE CIDER 70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
A certain cure for Cholera, Dysentery, Heart Disease, Fainting Spells, and excellent for old people, as it quickens the circulation of the Blood.

"LOTS OF GOOD THINGS."—See the Pictorial Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for Jan. Love, Courtship, and Marriage, Choice of Pursuits, a Good Match in marriage, with the moral, intellectual, and social nature unfolded. Also "How to Read Character." Only 20 cents, or $2 a year. FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

THE CHOICEST MAGAZINE OF THE MONTH.—Those in pursuit of what is best in American magazine literature should examine or send for the FEBRUARY Number of
BEADLE'S MONTHLY,
whose contents embrace the following choice matter:
For What? Ballad. Illustrated. — Learning to Skate. Humorous Story.
Dead Letter. Serial. Illustrated. — Tobacco: its When, Where, and How. Illustrated.
To Red River and the Wood Crees' Country. Illustrated. — A Mad Night. Story.
Curiosities of Rome. Illustrated. — Christening at Rome.
Moonlight. Poem.
Americus and their Work. —William of Orange.
Life in Rebel Prisons. — Gossip. Story. Physiology of Perfumes.
Prairie Dog at Home. Illustrated. — How to grow Old. Essay.
Current Notes on Men and Things.
Sold by all newsdealers and bookellers, or sent, postfree, on receipt of price—TWENTY-FIVE CENTS PER NUMBER. BEADLE & CO., Publishers, 118 William St., New York.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

"American Union Company."
Manufacturers of the New ORGAN-TONED PIANO, ORGANS, of set EXPRESSION, to any. Warranted in every particular. Warerooms and "Agency," 667 Broome St.

WARD'S PERFECT FITTING SHIRTS.
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars, sent free every where.
THE CASH CAN BE PAID TO EXPRESS COMPANY.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
S. W. H. WARD, No. 387 Broadway, New York.

CURIOUS FASTENERS for Ladies and Gents. Sent for 25 cents. W. C. WEMYSS, 575 Broadway, N. Y.

WARD'S PAPER COLLARS AND CUFFS FOR LADIES & GENTLEMEN.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL, 387 BROADWAY, N.Y.

ladies' Victoria Turn-over Paper Collar.

Ladies' Empress Turn-over Paper Collar.

Ladies' English Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies' American Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies French Paper Cuffs.

Ladies' English Paper Cuffs.

Gentlemen's Piccadilly Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Standing Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Turnover Paper Collar.

Cents. Reversible Paper Cuffs.

Cents. English Paper Cuffs.

Ladies' Collars from 75 cents to $3 per 100.
Gentlemen's Collars from $2 50 to $4 per 100.
CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—These are the only paper collars and cuffs that are made from pure linen stock.
NOTICE TO THE TRADE.—Wholesale Price-List sent by mail. Also, one collar for sample.

HARPER'S WEEKLY
A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

VOL. X.—NO. 475.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1866. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1866, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

BIRDS IN WINTER.

THE birds have been called God's Messengers ever since that old and holy time when the prophet Elijah, waiting for his evening meal, saw the broad-winged ravens painted black upon the golden sunset, which flooded with glory the brook Cherith, by which he knelt. Our Saxon ancestors called those birds that built about the churches God's Birds, and held them in as great reverence as those which reared their nests against the temples erected by David and Solomon.

We read of winters in England so severe, even within the last century, that nearly all the small birds perished. There were very few robins, wrens, linnets, or larks seen the following spring, and it was the end of sum mer before any young birds appeared. During those hard winters thousands of birds were picked up frozen to death, for all the rivers were ice-bound, and it was so cold that the oil was frozen in the street-lamps, and they could not be lighted, so that the towns were left in darkness. Freezing showers often fell during those hard old winters, coating every thing they touched with clear bright ice, even the plumage of the birds; while the crimson holly-berries showed as if they were under glass, and the moss and lichen looked like jewels inclosed in crystal cases. How do the small birds live during our severe winters? Where do they find their food?

Even in the severest weather there are millions of leaves in our forests amidst which insects are to be found. Then, too, the birds find berries in considerable quantities. There are also myriads of insect-eggs glued on tree, bush, or hedge, to foliage that never falls, and these the birds find out and devour; and well would it be if our gardeners looked a little more closely to the few leaves which remain on the fruit trees at the end of winter, for they will be found covered with squares of insect eggs, all glued so close together that it is difficult to force the point of a fine needle between the rows. Amidst mosses, among withered grass, in the open hollows of no end of weeds and reeds, in decayed wood, in the thatch of stacks, dwellings, and outhouses, insects are concealed, and seeds are to be found which are only visible to the sharp sight of birds. We see them searching every hole and cranny in old walls, holding on by their claws and the pressure of their tails, and can fancy that the light of their sharp, flashing eyes must be as startling to the poor insects they fasten upon as the bull's-eye of a policeman's lantern is when turned upon a concealed felon. In farm-yards, in places where flocks and herds are foddered, amidst every variety of foliage and herbage, the birds find food that we know nothing of. Watch some bird busy pecking, then kneel down and examine the ground closely, and all you find will be grit, sand, and loam—to your eye nothing else is visible: what else might be revealed can only be discovered through the aid of a microscope. The sight of birds is marvelous. They will drop down like a stone upon an insect from such a height as in our eye would render it as indistinct as a grain of sand on a gravel walk.

The birds pass two-thirds of their time in mid-winter in sleep, during which they require no food. The same Providence which causes so many created things to hibernate during the period they would perish for want of food if awake, also provides rest and sleep for the birds, during which they feel no hunger, and renders the few brief hours of winter daylight long enough to gather a sufficiency of food before retiring to roost.

Chief favorite of all our winter birds is the little robin. He never leaves us, but still sings the old year out and the new year in, as his forefathers did, centuries before a Christmas carol was heard. His beautiful red breast and the crimson holly-berries are generally the only bits of warm coloring we see out of doors, where all the landscape is whitened with winter. He hops on the window-sill, leaving the print of his long claws in the snow, while he peeps through the pane with his bold black eyes, asking, in his way, for food, and will enter the room, after a few visits, if he is treated kindly. He has such winning ways that all the children love him, and would not harm him for the world, were he caught and placed in their hands. How delighted the children are to stand at the door and feed the birds in winter, to watch their shy habits, as they draw nearer and nearer until they reach the furthermost crumb; then they open their wings and are off in the twinkling of an eye! Throw up a few shovelfuls of earth in the garden, and there the robin is rummaging among it to see what he can find, almost before our back is turned; or else we find him perched, impudently, on the handle of the spade we had left sticking in the mould, and singing away, with all his might, as if trying how much space he could fill with his song, since all the other birds are silent. Neither does he forsake us for long together, either in spring or summer, except at breeding-time, but comes every now and then, as if just to look on and say he has not forgotten us. Then he comes again, with his little family about him in their juvenile suits; and you must look very close at them to see a likeness, for they are too young to wear the red waistcoat—the proud crest of the house of the Robins: but they will put it on in autumn, and be able to take a part in the Christmas carols.

In England, where the climate is less severe than in this country, the scene which we illustrate on this page is a very common one in the winter. There the wrens, robins, and finches are frequent visitors at the window. And as for the sparrow, it is never absent. They are the plague of the English farmer. They eat up the early seeds which he sows in February. They are born thieves, and are even said to fight each other in the winter for no other reason than to keep warm.

There are thousands of secluded homesteads scattered over England, where tender-hearted children may be seen administering "out-door relief" to the birds in winter, such as our artist has so beautifully pictured. The speckled fieldfare and the bull-picking bull-finches gaze timidly from the branches of the holly-tree; while the shy, wild blackbirds seem afraid to draw nearer, and the thrush crouches low, as if he feared the noisy sparrows, who make themselves quite at home any where. The timid greenfinch, the graceful chaffinch, and the merry wagtail seem shy, though the chaffinch has approached so near to the noisy sparrows; while bold Robin Redbreast has ventured on the window-sill, and we see a sweet face turned toward him from behind the diamond-shaped lattice.

BIRDS IN WINTER—OUT-DOOR RELIEF.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1866.

UNION.

IT is a matter of sincere congratulation that the vote upon the Suffrage in the District of Columbia shows that the great Union party does not mean to serve the purposes of its enemies by fatally breaking its ranks. There is an honest difference of opinion as to the wisdom of unqualified suffrage. The party in Congress seems to have been about equally divided. When, therefore, Mr. HALE proposed to recommit the bill with instructions to the Committee to report certain qualifications, the Democrats hinged by joining the radicals—who put a convenient distinction—against the motion, to compel the Conservatives to vote against the bill as it stood, in which case the Democrats hoped that their vote united with that of the Conservatives would finally defeat the bill.

These fond hopes of a foolish faction were utterly baffled. The Conservatives refused for the recommittal. The Radicals and Democrats defeated it. The question recurred upon the bill as reported. The Democrats voted solidly against it. But the Conservatives, with insignificant exceptions, voted solidly with the Radicals for it, and carried dismay to the enemies of a sound and peaceful reunion. Then the Senate has passed upon the bill and the President has signed it, the union of the Union party will be closer than ever.

This result just at this time is of the highest importance, for there were beginning to be very serious doubts not of the intention but of the sagacity of the Union party. A few days since a gentleman sitting in a circle of persons unfriendly to the Government read aloud Mr. RAYMOND'S Indiana bill. After the most sarcastic comments by the company, an ex-rebel officer said: "No matter. Don't trouble yourselves. The dominant party is going to pieces fast enough, and there will be still Democrats will just have things our own way."

It was a very plain statement of a very plain peril. The consequences of a serious defeat in the Union party at this time would be inconceivably disastrous, and whoever precipitates it, whoever does not labor strenuously to prevent it, incurs a responsibility which will be cruel every honest man in the country. It would be infinitely worse than a mere party defeat, it would involve the honor and peace of the nation. Every object for which the Union party is now contending, with whatever differences of view as to method, would be wholly lost. The Union policy of reorganization would be scornfully repudiated, and the President, whom the ex-rebels and their abettors now obsequiously flatter, refusing, as he would refuse to submit to their dictation, would be contemptuously set aside.

Why should men sincerely devoted to the wise reorganization of the Union and to securing the evident results of the war tolerate the mere possibility of such a peril? Surely we are all agreed upon certain substantial, fundamental points. Upon the abstract question of the exact status of the unorganized States we differ. But that is a purely theoretical question. The essential practical point is, that they are not to resume their full powers in the Union except upon certain conditions, and upon that point there is no difference. Thus we all agree that the constitutional right of secession must be plainly disavowed; that the rebel debt must not be recognized; and that the Emancipation amendment must be supported in good faith. But still further we are agreed, and the President and the Lieutenant-General assent, that there must still be military occupation of those States for the security of their own inhabitants as well as for that of the country; and that the Freedmen's Bureau must be maintained to make the radical change of the industrial system as smooth and easy as possible. Me. And more than this there is no serious disagreement among Union men as to the fact that the Republic, becoming by the war an emancipation free men, must sooner or later share every guarantee of individual rights that any free man enjoys, including, of course, the suffrage.

Upon these great vital points there is substantial unanimity of opinion. For these ends we are all working. But if we allow the differences of method to drive us to the fatal extremity of party dissolution, we shall see a spirit quarrelsome to the Government and Union triumph through our folly. We shall see the military removed, the Freedmen's Bureau abolished, the rebel State debts approved, the national debt repudiated, the faith of the nation to the freedmen broken, and those who for four years by arms or by sympathy sought the overthrow of the Government, controlling it to its destruction, and we shall have our own criminal conduct to thank for it all. The late vote happily reveals the clear conviction among our friends that the defeat of any particular method of action can not be so hazardous to the country as a party schism. And however deeply the superior wisdom of any particular policy may be felt, and however earnestly defended, we are very sure that the good sense which saved the country in the present instance will continue to inspire Congressional action.

THE TAX AND EDUCATION.

THE report of the Commissioners upon the revenue system is awaited by the whole press and heroes by all who feel that the recommendations of gentlemen so wisely selected, and who have so faithfully devoted themselves to their arduous work, must necessarily have great weight with Congress. We trust that two facts will not have escaped their attention; that English publishing houses are rapidly establishing agencies in this country, and that school committees and teachers in all parts of the land are busily devising means to avoid the expense of schoolbooks, the prices of which are necessarily so high.

Cheap school books are surely a cardinal necessity of this United States. Is any one thing that should escape taxation is education. We certainly do not say that any trade should be favored at the expense of any other, but we do ask whether what is essentially benefited by the circulation of school-books do not harm the country more than they help it?

Paper, which is the principal material of books, after the chemicals used in its manufacture have paid a heavy duty, is taxed as a whole under the Internal Revenue act. The printing-ink and all the materials used in bookbinding also pay separate taxes. Finally, the finished book is taxed as a whole. In England, where, as in this country, foreign reprints are imported, books, paper, etc., are entirely exempted from taxation, and the English manufacturer is able to pay his duties and land books in New York or Boston at about half the price at which we can make them here.

The inevitable tendency of this state of things is to send our book-publishing to England, to stop our paper-mills, and force our skilled workmen into other channels of labor. Yet three-quarters of the works now published in this country are books of education. Do we wish that England should write and make them for us? Newspapers are justly exempted from taxation. But are the spelling-book and geography less essential? No honest trader wishes to shirk his share of the common burden. But ought those who manufacture articles of such primary necessity to pay much more than their share? If the Commission should recommend that books, as such, be exempted from taxation, they will recommend only that which common sense has reduced; while the increased circulation caused by the reduction will partly compensate the Government for the apparent loss.

We earnestly trust that the Commission will simplify the whole system of taxation, which is now an exasperating snarl of perplexities; and, when they have done that, and, with the other great luxuries, will emancipate popular education from the chains which are forging for it at the very moment in our history when cheap school-books universally diffused are a national necessity.

ABSTRACTIONS.

WE have elsewhere repeated what we have said more than once, that the question of the present exact status of the unorganized States is practically unimportant. As Mr. SUMNER has expressed it, it is "a pernicious abstraction." But SENATOR DOOLITTLE in his speech, a few days since, warmly denied that it was unimportant, and declared it to be a vital question.

So it would be if the Senator held strictly to his view of the question and agreed to abide by the inevitable consequences of his view. But he does not. Like every statesman, he is wisely illogical upon occasion. Indeed, the only truly logical advocates of his theory are the ex-rebels and ex-Tycoons. They assert that "once a State always a State," and rebellion having ceased, arms being laid down, Alabama and South Carolina are as much entitled to Wisconsin or Maine, and are, therefore, entitled to unconditional representation. They hold, and upon their premises justly, that the whole procedure of the President in the matter of reorganization, has been absolutely arbitrary and unconstitutional.

We say that the Senator is wisely illogical, for while he roundly asserts that a State can by no possibility lose its status as a State in the Union, he declares in the same breath that some States shall not recover their status as States in the Union unless they will submit to certain conditions imposed by the National Government. Yet does he suppose that the State of South Carolina adopted the Constitutional Amendment as freely as the State of Massachusetts? Of course he does not. But if so, is it not clear that whether a State can go out of the Union or not it can so derange its relations to the Union that they can be restored only as a new State is admitted, namely, by the consent of the Government?

The Senator seems to forget that the war is not over because the rebels have laid down their arms. The war continues until the Government determines it is ended. Every thing that the President has authorized in the lately belligerent States he has authorized as Commander-in-Chief. The military civil Governments in all the Southern States are, as SENATOR TRUMBULL truly says, merely tolerated by the Government of the United States. Governor ORR, of South Carolina, frankly recognizes this fact. The President continues the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus in those States. General GRANT continues military occupation. The supreme controlling authority in all those States is that of the nation.

Now nothing can be plainer than the duty of the nation not to relax that authority except upon perfectly satisfactory terms. In the actual situation the plea of State rights is pure folly. State rights are not to be resumed except upon conditions prescribed by the United States, and the United States are the sole judges of those conditions. Suppose the Government to suspect a conspiracy extending throughout the late league of rebel States to rise in arms as soon as the national hand was withdrawn. Would it be the duty of the Government to withdraw that hand because there was no present armed rebellion, and because the white inhabitants declared that they sequiesced in the result? But if the Government has the right to impose any condition whatever to satisfy itself that no rising could be successful should be attempted, it has the right to impose every condition necessary to the same satisfaction.

That is our situation now. Of course the choice of those conditions must be sagacious if it would achieve the end in view. Senator DOOLITTLE asks whether we would seriously undertake to govern the people of the unorganized States without representation. The Senator must first explain on what ground he proposes a system of State government, by which a third of the citizens are to be ruled entirely without representation. He is willing to admit Senator MARVIN from Florida. But will he explain on what ground he favors the assumption by the Union by the States which have a proportionably superior representation?

However, the question must be settled according to the Constitution, says some one. Certainly it must. The war was waged under the Constitution, and it must be ended under it. But the Constitution did not prescribe the methods in which the war should be carried on; and it does not specify the conditions upon which its results are to be secured.

THE FINANCE BILL.

THE financial measure before Congress, which contemplates the reduction of the currency by funding, is of so alarming a nature that it can not be passed upon too hastily. Not only have the Committee of Ways and Means implicitly obeyed the behests of the Secretary of the Treasury, they have gone further, and invested that functionary with powers which he never even thought of soliciting—powers greater than any organized Government in the world ever conferred upon any executive officer.

It was explained a few weeks since in these columns that the aggregate volume of debt to be funded or paid in the next sixty thirty months does not vary much from $1,800,000,000. Mr. MCCULLOCH in his report asked for power to fund this debt, and seemed to intimate that from one to two hundred millions a year might be funded. On this the Committee of Ways and Means, through the MORRILL sub-committee, prepare a bill which empowers the Secretary to sell bonds, or bonds, bearing any rate of interest not over 6 per cent., running for any number of years not over forty, at any price whatever, at any time or times, and in any amounts he chooses; and further permits him to receive in payment not only the lawful current money of the country, but any of the short dated 7-30 Treasury notes which the Government has been issuing. It is hardly necessary to say that, if such a measure became a law, Mr. MCCULLOCH would be created an omnipotent a dictator of the money market of the country as Congress and the Supreme Court are of our political concerns. By offering bonds for sale in large amounts, he could at any time produce a stringency in the market which would involve a general fall in prices; by accepting all, or nearly all, the bids, he could cause a general panic; while on the other hand, by rejecting bids below a certain figure, or by accepting in payment of his bonds securities not used as currency, he could relieve the monetary market at once, and cause prices to react as quickly as they had risen. Under this bill he might offer $250,000,000 of bonds for sale for lawful money. He might offer would assist an active recall of loans, a decline of 5 @ 10 per cent. in all securities, and a general turmoil in commercial circles. When the fall had taken place he might announce that no bid under par would be considered, and that Seven-Thirty notes would be received at par and interest in payment of his bonds. Such an announcement would cause an instantaneous "let up" in money, a rebound of 5 @ 10 per cent. in all securities, and a sudden recovery in merchandise. All this he might do without violating the law, or exposing himself to the slightest blame or censure. Is it safe to intrust such power to any one man? Is it fair to any man to expose him to such temptation?

HON. MCCULLOCH enjoys the perfect confidence of the American people. For many months he has had opportunities to learn all of the secret sales of gold made by the Department, of realizing fortunes for himself and others. And no responsible person, not even his bitterest political enemies, has ever even hinted that either he or any one else has made money by an early knowledge of the intentions of the Department with regard to sales of gold. The practice of selling gold secretly has been generally condemned on grounds of principle. But by common consent all admit that HUGH MCCULLOCH is an honest man, and that he will not himself speculate, or permit others to speculate, on what he does as Finance Minister of the United States.

If it were mathematically certain, therefore, that the extraordinary powers conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury by this bill would never be exercised by any one but Mr. MCCULLOCH, the country might view its passage without much alarm. But what if Mr. MCCULLOCH resigned, or should become, or died? Such things have happened before. And though there is good reason to believe that Mr. JOHNSON would be careful in selecting his successor, it must not be forgotten that we have had, heretofore, Secretaries of the Treasury and other Cabinet Ministers who were also carefully selected and who proved to be not above suspicion. HOWELL COBB was Secretary of the Treasury, and, as we all thought, a most respectable man; yet he did his best to ruin the public credit. THOMAS, of Maryland, a most respectable man, was Secretary of the Treasury, and equally unfaithful to his trust. The post of Secretary of the Treasury has always been filled by an able and an honest man; but how would the public view the placing of such enormous and irresponsible power in the hands of such persons as the late Postmaster-General or ROBERT J. WALKER—both of them in their time Secretaries of the Treasury? How if such men as ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS and R. A. TOOMBS—both of them United States Cabinet Ministers in their day—chanced to be appointed to the Treasury Department?

The very fact, and the necessity for dictatorships may fairly be assumed to have passed away. It is about time not only that all public officials should scrupulously avoid assuming needless responsibility, but that Congress should, as heretofore, hedge its grants of power with proper restrictions and limitations. A curtailment of the currency being deemed requisite, the Secretary of the Treasury may properly be invested with the power of selling bonds to retire short securities or legal tenders. But the amount to be sold, the kind of money to be received in payment, the periods at which such sales may take place, the price at which the bonds may be offered, and the character and interest payable on the bonds, should all be fixed beforehand and openly by Congress, and not left to be determined privately by an executive officer. The public have a right to know what is going to be done in the vital matter of the currency.

There are two other points—we pass over the objections raised to the issue of Sterling Bonds as trifling and immaterial—upon which exception may fairly be taken to the financial measure now before Congress.

The first of these is the repeal of the section of the old law which establishes a Sinking Fund. That section had been flagrantly disobeyed by Mr. CHASE, and has been disobeyed by his successor. Finding it a dead letter Congress repeals it. This is repudiation. Men of means demand and at length obtain from the bonds on the faith that a sinking fund would be established which would gradually pay them off. Congress has no more right to abolish the Sinking Fund than it has to alter the rate of interest payable on the bonds, or the date at which they shall become payable. The Sinking Fund was one of the essential conditions of the contract between the United States and their creditors. It may have been an unwise condition. But it was voluntarily and deliberately established by the United States, and to abolish it now is to break faith with the public creditor, and to enter upon the broad highway of repudiation.

The second objection has reference to the payment of the currency interest on Seven-Thirty notes, debt certificates, and the like. By Mr. MORRILL'S measure it is proposed to absorb a large proportion of the legal-tender notes now afloat. Assuming that the bill will pass and will be a success, in this respect, it is clear that the Treasury Department will not be able to pay its currency interest in legal-tender notes, but will be compelled to pay it in the currency received for taxes—national bank notes. This also will be repudiation. When the Government put forth the compound-interest notes, the Seven-Thirty notes, and the debt certificates, it covenanted to pay to the holder so much per annum as interest. The covenant necessarily implied, as all covenants do, that such interest should be paid in lawful money. If JONES agrees to pay BROWN $6000 on a given day he must pay in legal tenders or gold, or he can not claim a discharge. Now if Government, before the maturity of the Seven-Thirty notes and compound-interest notes, so contrives to reduce the volume of the legal tenders that all its taxes are paid in national-bank notes, it will have no means of paying the currency interest due on the securities in any other medium than in national-bank notes, which may, and probably will, at the time be worth much less than legal-tender money. Sound banking authority predicts that if $200,000,000 of our legal tender currency be withdrawn from circulation, the remainder will be worth from 2 to 5 per cent. more than national-bank notes. In such an event, to pay the interest on the Seven-Thirty notes, compound notes, and debt certificates in a currency worth considerably less than the money in which Government agreed to pay when it borrowed the money of its creditors, will be a very shabby piece of repudiation.

It is not very likely that the Committee of Ways and Means or Congress will pay much attention to the warnings of the press. Party discipline proves to have quenched individual freedom of opinion, and there is to little financial ability in Congress that both the committee and the body of which it forms a part are generally content to obey the orders of the Treasury Department. Were it otherwise, some effort might be made to induce Congress to let the currency alone for the present, and to take advantage of the large revenues of Government to reduce the public debt by selling the surplus gold in the Treasury, and by paying off each short date obligation as it matures. This would be the way to diminish our burdens without producing a commercial crisis, and in the end, it would probably prove an efficacious as Mr. MORRILL'S method for bringing down the price of gold. But there is no chance that any recommendation of the kind would be heeded.

COMMUTATION ON RAILROADS.

The principle of commutation is simply this, that a low rate of fares to permanent residents along the line of a railroad stimulates settlements and improvements resulting in profit. It supposes that the growth of such a population may be encouraged with advantage, and that there is a maximum attainable low rate for the solid advantage of the road. The policy applies whenever a crowded city is located at either terminus capable of throwing out a large suburban population. In England all the numerous railroads leading out of London and other principal cities have practiced it from the outset with perfect confidence in its direct remunerative system. The two great lines leading northward from New York (the Hudson River and Harlem roads) pursued the policy until they had passed into the hands of their present owners, who manage them so as to discourage further settlements, greatly to the injury of those doing business in the city who were induced by moderate fares to establish homes in the country. Rates to commuters who use the road daily were increased last season in many instances over three hundred per cent. A step so decisive warrants the conclusion that the policy of commutation is regarded by the proprietors with distaste, and that further experiment to settlements will not be afforded except other and different views prevail.

The subject is one of sufficient importance to justify public discussion, and particularly as the true interests of the roads and of the large number of property owners along their lines concur in the establishment of rates at which commuters can afford to pay, and such as will encourage improvements. The population along both lines is rapidly increasing, and with that along the English roads, but may be increased by a wise and permanent policy to an extent certain to reward the stockholders with ample revenues. The policy which gives the largest possible compensation from each commuter treats the present population as having attained its maximum, and strips them of all means to influence others to build up adjacent homes. These residents, instead of being the earnest and constant friends of the road, as they were at the outset for mutual benefit, are forced to make the complaints which prevent additional settlements. On both lines the great body of commuters, living at points not influenced by counter inducements, are dissatisfied, and could not be relied upon for any friendly service to either company. In the matter of taxation, trials before those not influenced by free tickets, coroners' juries, the sufficiency of fences, and applications to the Legislature, these roads will constantly be met by opposition from those commuters who regard the late sudden increase of fares as wholly unjustifiable.

This state of feeling could easily be changed by adopting the policy in use on all the English lines, of discriminating in favor of commuters owning or occupying houses along the line, which can be done with equal advantage to both stockholders and the public.

The London and North Western Railway adopted in 1862, and have since continued the following mileage scale of rates for season tickets for one year for ordinary commuters who use first-class carriages, although authorized by Parliament to charge higher prices per mile. Certain resident commuters pay half these rates. From one to five miles, inclusive, £7 10s. per annum, or say $36 gold. For each additional mile up to fifteen £1 per mile, or say $85 for fifteen miles. For each additional mile above fifteen 16s., or say for forty-eight miles $213. This distance, forty-eight miles, is the greatest on the Harlem road for which commutation is allowed. The Harlem road charges for commutation to Croton Falls (forty-eight and a half miles) $212 per annum. The rate between White Plains and Croton Falls is in very nearly the same proportion. Tickets, one hundred at a time, purchased, the use of which may be deferred for any period within four months.

The English rates are reduced 50 per cent. in perpetuity in favor of owners of houses rented under twenty pounds per year of rental value, and are continued to any successor or other occupant. Students or apprentices living with their parents at the distance of their residences pay also one-half the established rates. The Great Western line has adopted very nearly the rates specified above. Other lines charge about 25 per cent. in excess. The Chester and Holyhead Railway has established the following rates per annum: for seven miles £8, for fifteen £12, for fifty £28, for sixty £30, for eighty-five £40.

The extravagance of the Harlem rates is the more conspicuous if the amount of accommodation is considered. The commuters on White Plains there is but one morning train to New York, which is the only one a business man going daily to the city can be expected to use; there is but two afternoon trains up, and four in the whole each way per day. It is unnecessary to say that this is very, very far short of the accommodation furnished on the English roads. We understand that their commutation tickets are good for three hundred and sixty-five days, while here they are good for only the week days of the week. The commuter there is not restricted in the number of times he may travel back and forth, but here he must go or return more than one trip each week per day. Abroad, a general ticket is issued which is exhibited only when called for, here a ticket must be surrendered on each excursion and entered or exhibited on return.

But the important difference between the two systems is the assurance of a permanent policy in the English roads looking to the substantial interests of those who erect improvements along their lines, tending strongly to mutual benefit and the entire failure of the managers of these two roads to establish any such policy. This may be due to the fact that these lines have recently come into the hands of those who, although of large experience in other matters, are without experience on this subject, and hence they have adopted a rate of commutation which must diminish the population, repress industry, and actually damage property along these great lines of travel.

THE EIGHT-HOUR SYSTEM.

J. T., who is sanguine of the success of the eight-hour system, is agreed by our saying that the British laborer drudges fourteen hours a day for a pittance, and would deny the truth of the statement, but that he understands us to have asserted that fact as an illustration of the law of supply and demand. He thinks we should have said ten hours a day. But if drudging for ten hours a day is not a pittance to the British laborer, what would drudging eight hours give him? That we did not misrepresent the substantial fact of the condition of the British laborer is our saying what Mr. BRIGHT said in his late speech at Birmingham.

"Have you read," says MR. BRIGHT, "a paragraph which lately appeared in the newspapers about J. CROSS, a Dorsetshire laborer? He worked six days in the week. He had an excellent character from his employer. On which he worked 24 years at the rate of 8s. per week.....I tell you that many thousands of cases like that of JOHN CROSS could be found throughout England, and especially in the south, and that their condition is such that hitherto the most anxious investigation has been unable to solve the mystery how they manage to live and soul together." It is truly, as he calls it, "a desperate condition." Does J. T. think that if the British Parliament were to reduce the daily hours of labor to six that JOHN CROSS could keep body and soul together any better?

J. T. is a stone-cutter. He says that as yet there are no mechanical inventions to lighten his labor, and that competition is so intense that when a stone-cutter's day's labor is done he is too utterly exhausted for any mental application, or even enjoyment, whatever. He adds, that the trade in New York, Brooklyn, and the neighborhood, have given only nine hours for a day's work since November 10, 1863, and that no more has been required. This was undoubtedly in pursuance of the law that we mentioned in the "Saturday Sermon," of the practical limitation of effective labor. Nine hours' work at stone-cutting is doubtless, upon the whole, as valuable as twelve, and it is worth, therefore, the wages of twelve. If eight hours' work is equally valuable, it is worth the same. But the question is, whether a law can make eight hours' good labor worth the same as ten hours' good labor. If it can not, the inevitable effect of the law would be to drive capital where it could get the best return for investment.

J. T. thinks that if the Legislature will pass the eight-hours' law "they will check the selfishness of both labor and capital." But how? Can you compel capital in a particular direction? If you try it you will merely paralyze both capital and labor. Suppose the Legislature of New York were to pass a law that nobody should work more than five hours a day, nor be worth more than twenty thousand dollars. Might they not just as wisely and successfully enact that every body should be comfortable and happy? There are some things that laws can not effect, and laws about labor are wise and effective only so far as they enact the natural relations of capital and labor. That it is found that in the work of computation for the census and other statistics six hours a day is quite enough. It would be a very foolish law that would limit it to fifteen.

It seems to us that the friends of the eight-hour movement are of opinion that it needs only an act of the Legislature to secure eight hours' work, eight hours' sleep, and eight hours' recreation. J. T., however, while apparently urging this kind of legislation, expresses his opinion that it is not so much to secure that our social evils can be removed by legislative acts." What arguments, then, and to what end, shall be addressed to Congress?

ONE QUESTION SETTLED.

ONE of the perplexing questions has been virtually settled. The petition of the colored veterans of Ohio to be enlisted from the noblest impulses, and who after long service have been discharged, often from illness and wounds, and bounded out of the army without the least enlisted troops, was so plainly natural that it could not well be set aside.

But the Paymaster-General reports that it would take $10,000,000 to equalize the bounties. In view of such a sum and the present condition of the finances, do the patriotic petitioners themselves retain their honorable claim? Some kind of provision might be possible, but who would advocate such an addition to the burden of the country?

We want to see before we are generous, and the necessity of absolute economy is imperative. It is not only the duty of the nation but of individuals. Let us all be a unit even to the conduct of the people during the war if they universally and individually economized to help pay the debt as they nobly supported its necessary creation.

FIFTH AVENUE SKATING POND.

Now that the skating season has fairly commenced, we take pleasure in reminding our readers of the advantages connected with MAJOR OLTMANS' Skating Pond, on Fifth Avenue. It is the favorite resort of all lovers of the sport, both male and female. This pond is always open to visitors when the skating is good, except on Sundays.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

January 16:

In the Senate, MR. CHANDLER'S resolution to withdraw our Minister from Great Britain, etc., was laid upon the table, 25 to 19. MR. SUMNER'S resigne fixing the pay for the District of Columbia, MR. DAVIS indulged in his usual abuse of the negro. "Curley," he said, "had a descent of the Africa, but he ought to have added that a fool only descended from his skin, and not the least noble in the ground."

In the House, MR. CONKLIN, one of the Committee of Fifteen, offered a resolution, which was objected to, providing for the following amendments for the restoration of the Southern States: first, renunciation of secession; second, prohibition of the payment of the rebel debt; third, human rights to all populations of color; fourth, the impartial distribution of the representative population of the country, so that four millions of people shall not be represented as five hundred thousand; proportionate taxation the same thus they are excluded from political rights and privileges; fifth, a general amnesty. The resolution is referred to Congress.—MR. DEMING, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill reviving the office of Major-General in the army, which was recommitted.—The House resolution to print the testimony before the Committee of Fifteen to send for persons or papers, 128 to 15.—The bill to extend suffrage in the District of Columbia was debated through the remainder of the session. The black population of the District is about 14,000, or about one-fourth the entire population of the District. The provision made by the bill is simply that there shall be no restriction to suffrage based on distinction of color. MR. JULIAN claimed that suffrage was the natural right of the negro. MR. RANDALL, of Kentucky, would go with his State in opposing negro suffrage. MR. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, declared to be a member of the Republican party, but thought that the negro question should come with emancipation.

January 17:

In the Senate, a remonstrance of MR. SUMNER against arming the militia of Alabama was referred to the Committee of Fifteen.—MR. HOWE'S resolution to provide Provisional Governors for the rebel States was taken up. MR. DAVIS addressed the Senate at length, claiming that President JOHNSON had in his policy of restoration simply followed in the footsteps of his predecessor. He supported the President's policy, and claimed that to insure the very Union for which we have been fighting we must have a rapid a restoration of all the States to their normal relations to Congress as is possible.

In the House, MR. Blaine presented the credentials of JOHN P. HALE, elected Senator from Arizona, who was qualified and took his seat.—The bill to incorporate the National Freedmen's Relief Association, the object of which is to encourage emigration to the South, was taken up. MR. STEVENS, Pennsylvania, opposed the bill as unnecessary, and purported to be a charitable institution. The bill contemplated the loan of arms, and embraced only a small number of persons who might convey lands without limitation. The bill was laid on the table, 90 to 59.—The negro Suffrage bill for the District of Columbia was taken up, MR. BLAINE, of Maine, MR. DARLING, of New York, favored qualified suffrage, the qualification to be one of education. MR. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, opposed negro suffrage in Districts. He moved a postponement of the bill to the first Monday in April. MR. HOLMAN contended a restriction of suffrage to all who could read the Constitution of the United States. MR. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, supported the bill on the ground of equal and impartial justice. MR. BANKS, of New York, opposed the fortress that this was exclusively a white man's Government.

January 18:

In the Senate, a bill was passed to distribute 500 copies of MR. MEDILL'S writings among the different State Legislatures and Governors, etc.—MR. WILSON, from the Committee on Territories, reported a bill for the admission of Colorado, until filling the State government with the negro question.—MR. NESMITH of Oregon spoke on MR. HOWE'S resolutions, supporting the President's policy. He said he would not say act of Congress necessary for the admission of the Southern States. This was a white man's Government, etc. MR. WADE followed in a reply to MR. DOOLITTLE'S speech of the 15th. He declared that we were not such to support a policy simply because MR. LINCOLN or MR. JOHNSON adopted it. MR. JOHNSON had not been more than MR. LINCOLN, and had compelled the Southern States to adopt the Thirteenth Amendment before their slaves were set free. MR. WADE wanted to go still further and place all men, white and black, on an equal footing. He thought it a bad faith, after trusting the negroes into the military service, to abandon them to their entire control. The bill was adjourned.—A bill was passed giving MRS. LINCOLN the franking privilege.

In the House, the bill for negro suffrage in the District of Columbia was taken up. MR. ARNOLD, of Illinois, opposing against it. MR. Boutwell, of Massachusetts, was opposed to postponement. He thought the negro suffrage should follow emancipation. He thought the negroes should have a claim in the Government that we were not

OLD FOLKS AT HOME AND YOUNG FOLKS ABROAD.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

INSIDE.

A CHRONICLE OF SECESSION.

IN TWENTY-FOUR CHAPTERS.

MRS. SOREL.

CHAPTER IV.

BROTHER BARKER was in the full tide of the most confident and convincing assertions upon the state of the country when he experienced a sudden and singular interruption. This was none other than the entrance of a somewhat tall and slim but very neat lady, who was hailed by Mrs. Juggins with a cordial,

"Why, if here ain't Mrs. Sorel now! Walk in, Mrs. Sorel; glad to see you; don't take that chair, this here is an easier one; take off your bonnet; come to spend the day, I do hope; how are all at home?"

There was nothing specially wonderful in the lady, at least to look at. You could see that her mass have been beautiful in her youth; the clear gray eye, regular features, and still graceful form, showed that plainly enough. Yet, being only a lady, clothed in some gray stuff, with a calico sun-bonnet, it was hard to account for the interruption caused by her simple entrance. The preacher stopped in his conversation, singularly abashed and confused. Even the old planter received her more like an overgrown boy caught by the owner thereof in the midst of a watermelon patch than the master of a household. And Mrs. Juggins, too, seemed embarrassed to hide something beneath the bustle of her welcome.

A close observer might have detected a peculiarly arch smile which passed over the face of the visitor at the sudden silence and evident embarrassment which attended her arrival, but it was gone in an instant as she saluted the company with quiet ease and took a seat beside Mrs. Juggins. It was evidently with an effort that conversation was resumed; and the burden thereof was thrown upon the visitor, who had herself to mention the facts in regard to the weather, which, in the section of which we are speaking, and probably all over the world besides, form the invariable introduction to conversation.

It is strange; yet if ever countenances expressed the sense of being caught at something wrong, the countenances of the persons thus interrupted expressed that guilty emotion. Certain it is, there was in the bosoms of the persons interrupted a sharp, sudden sense of guilt which surprised even themselves, but which their outward bearing was too true to their inward self not to manifest. Of all of them the preacher had the deepest, strongest sense of this; and a sense of it which, a moment after, he resented more than the others, being more violent and positive in his after-conversation from this very cause. Meanwhile, if any one could have known it from her composed and natural manner or eye Mrs. Sorel was saying to herself, as she took out her sewing—"Dear me, I wish I had known, but, as it is, I can not help it!"

With the rest, she felt that it was in vain to sit there five minutes and not get into the one, grand, only, all-absorbing, everlasting topic. That it should not, at least, be her fault, Mrs. Sorel immediately engaged Mrs. Juggins, who was her near neighbor, in conversation about the making of butter and the raising of chickens and turkeys. The energy of these was evidently leading into the topic of the war, so that it was necessary to avoid that theme also. The gentlemen had from her entrance ceased conversation; she preacher apparently engaged in reading the Advocate—the religious paper of the Church to which Colonel Juggins and himself belonged—and the Colonel engaged in smoking his cob pipe and solemnly thinking over Fort Donelson and Nashville.

Now there was no better soul in the world than Mrs. Juggins, but conversation formed no part of her excellences, so that it devolved upon Mrs. Sorel either to say something or to sit in silence. To avoid this and, at the same time, keep the thread of conversation in her own hands, Mrs. Sorel began in a lowered tone to tell her neighbor of her various devices in the economy of her household; how much a little alum had improved the candles she was making at home; how easy she found it at last to plat straw into hats for her household; how she had succeeded in making starch—a large sample of which she had brought over for Mrs. Juggins from wheat bran.

"Yes; and just as good as any I ever bought of the store—Yankee made," remarked Mrs. Juggins, as she examined the starch carefully.

"That is what I say," continued the old lady; "we can do without them, we don't want them here; we don't they just stay at home and—"

"But I must tell you how I managed about making shoes," interrupted her visitor; and she proceeded to tell how many wax-ends of shoe she had made the children collect from about the place; how she had soaked them well in water, and so made them again into shoes. Mrs. Sorel also informed her neighbor how keenly she had suffered under the dearth of bluing, then desolating all the wash-tubs of the country, and how she had found out that common blue ink, largely diluted, answered just as well.

Yes, and ink went right a great deal two bits to fifty cents a bottle, soon's you found it out," moaned Mrs. Juggins.

Much more did Mrs. Sorel have to tell her neighbor, talking rapidly and in her most cheerful manner. Not, if she could help it, should the conversation glide off into the war.

"By-the-by, when did you hear from Frank last?" asked the Colonel, suddenly, in the midst of a description his wife was giving Mrs. Sorel of a loom she was having made.

Colonel Juggins had no such intentions, but his sudden question ruined every thing. He was an ignorant man, somewhat dull too, yet he had that intuition of the unexpressed which would have been as well not to have asked the question. But it was too late. Even Mrs. Juggins saw that they were, as she afterward expressed it, "in for it now."

"Not for several weeks, Colonel," replied Mrs. Sorel.

"Your son is in Virginia, I believe, ma'am?" said the preacher, in his usual tone at the beginning of a discussion. Brother Barker always began his sermon in a low and scarcely audible voice: he got loud enough, however, long before he got through.

"With our Tom," said the Colonel, promptly. "And now, Brother Barker, suppose we take a look at that Memphis paper. I did you about; you circuit riders know a good animal when you see it if any body does: takes a Methodist preacher to judge horse-flesh."

"In a moment, Brother Juggins," said the preacher, who was not to be interrupted in that way either. "To continue my remarks," he continued he, "that you have a son to fight the battles of his country; it must be a great satisfaction to you."

Now, "Brother Barker was built for fight," had been a highly complimentary remark often made in regard to him by his friends. No knight ever went into tourney with greater zest than did this man into any theological controversy, whenever and wherever the lists were opened. But controversy upon the well-worn themes of Church Government, Election, Baptism, and the like, had ceased entirely, had utterly passed from the minds of men. The one great controversy of the day, raging not only upon battle-field but in every village, in every knot of talkers, in every separate heart and mind, this controversy had swallowed up every other. It was men gave all the zeal they had hitherto squandered in dozens of different directions: certainly with Brother Barker this was the case.

"You are perfectly aware, Mr. Barker, that Frank's course does not give me satisfaction," said Mrs. Sorel, calmly.

"Ah, is it so?" said the preacher, raising his brows in wonder. Like every man who stakes every thing on a cause, falsehood favorable to that cause was a totally different thing from the old, abstract, abominable falsehood.

"You must pardon me, Mr. Barker," said Mrs. Sorel; "but I have observed from the outset that equivocation, departure from strict truth, has been a leading feature of Secession. You know perfectly well what my sentiments are to-day and always have been. Frank would not have gone to the war if he could have staid at home. He no more wanted to go himself than I wanted to send him. He was taught to love his country from his cradle, and from his earliest recollection he was trained to regard Secession as the greatest of crimes."

"You must permit me, ma'am," began the preacher.

"Only let me finish, if you please," said Mrs. Sorel, in a manner as cool as it was decided. "At the opening of the war Frank never dreamed of volunteering, as I have said, under that flag, but his case became more unpleasant every day. Hardly a day but he would say when he came home, 'I feel like a thief; as much as you do, mother, but what can I do?' Not a day, not an hour of the day, but his old companions were after him to enlist. So many of them were gone that he began to feel as if left alone in the world. The hints, too, about his being tied to his mother's apron strings, about his being afraid to go, and a hundred things of the kind, were upon him till he could stand it no longer. One bitter, bitter day he enlisted! He did as tens of thousands of others have done—swept away against every prompting of reason, religion, and conscience—swept away in the wild tide that sweeps the land—and woe to the wicked men that set that tide going! I tell you, Mr. Barker, if to no others, to ourselves of Secession must these fearful words be answer for it—the war of God!"

If Mrs. Sorel had only spoken this in an excited manner and with raised voice it would have been a much easier thing for Mr. Barker to reply; but there was a calmness, a conviction, a sense of being unquestionably right, in her manner which embarrassed the preacher. Or, rather, there was a sense—struggle against it he might—of being wrong in the matter in the bosom of this individual which he could not overcome. Loudly as he talked, abundant as were his arguments from Scripture, fierce as were his denunciations of the Yankees—all the time there was under it all that sense of being in the wrong which the preacher could not get rid of to save his life. Perhaps it may be with other men, the really pious man has a sense of right and wrong in his bosom which nothing can quench—it is the unquenchable spark within him of an eternal life.

"I would think, Mrs. Sorel—you are a professor, I believe?" asked the preacher.

"Mr. Barker," said Mrs. Sorel, with a steady and surprised look at him, "why do you ask such a question? You know that I am."

"Then I would ask, ma'am, why you do not have faith in God to leave your son in his hands? You should not grieve over your son, as I am told you do. Thousands of us—Sister Juggins here, for instance—have sons in the war—"

"And that is just the difference in my case," said Mrs. Sorel, breaking quietly in upon the preacher. "I do not grieve over Frank because he is away from me, or because he may be lying at this moment in some crowded hospital without a mother's hand to tend him. No. Nor if Frank was dying there of some disease or some dreadful wound, would that be what would break my heart. For all that I could and would trust him in the hands of the Lord—it is the cause he is engaged in that cuts me to the soul."

"Really, Mrs. Sorel," said the preacher, greatly excited, "your views are very singular, and they may be such as may injure you."

"Such have always been my views, Sir," said the lady, quietly and gravely, "and always will be. If I speak at all on the subject I have none others to express. And what I now think and feel was, a year ago, the sentiment of every individual in our then happy land, with the exception of a few desperate politicians who were even then plotting our ruin. Then they were regarded as bad men; to-day they are the rulers of a deluded people."

If Mrs. Sorel had only got angry as she spoke! But she was so entirely calm, spoke with such force of moral conviction, in such a tone as if of burglars or murderers whose guilt no one could deny, that, in spite of himself, the preacher was confused. A mere politician would not have been; but Mr. Barker, on the other hand, had a conscience.

"Were you not born at the North?" he asked, at length.

"Mr. Barker," said the lady, after a grave pause, "why do you ask such a question? You know perfectly well that I am a South Carolinian. Mrs. Juggins has told you that repeatedly—so have I."

"You are a strange sort of South Carolinian," said the preacher, with a sarcastic smile.

"Perhaps so," said the lady, quietly. "My father was a plain, sensible planter, living in South Carolina, as his people and his wife's people had lived from the settlement of the country. In the days of Nullification he was a Union man—not without some influence—his unpretending influence of plain, sober, Christian sense—in his neighborhood. He was murdered by a Nullifier, a leading politician they said, and I never can forget the lesson I learned then—the calm, solid conviction of the one set of principles, and the loud and violence, the shouting, bullying, cursing, threatening spirit of the other. When I look over the country now I see the same difference between the two parties—only the noblest and best among us have, in many cases, been poisoned and borne away with the wicked spirit which was at one time confined to the bosoms of the desperate few."

"And it is possible, ma'am, that you, a Southern woman, can have any regard for Yankees?" said the preacher, with a strong emphasis, as of contempt, upon the first syllable of the word.

"Not for want of learning what a dreadful people they are," said Mrs. Sorel, with a smile. "Only last week Mrs. Juggins was telling me that marriage has been altogether abolished among them."

"Law me, yes!" broke in Mrs. Juggins; "so I'm told. Up there the women all wear pants like men, make speeches, vote, and, I do suppose, carry their revolvers, curse and swear, drink and gamble, just like the men! When any man and woman happen to meet any where and take a liken to each other they just consider themselves married—free love, they call it!"

"And you remember, Mrs. Juggins," said Mrs. Sorel, "what you told me about the Yankees having contracted with people to go through the South burning up people's houses by night, so much a house."

"And Mrs. Juggins could have told you, too," said the preacher, "that the North has apostatized into a universal infidelity."

"Mr. Barker," asked Mrs. Sorel, pausing from her work and looking steadily at the preacher, "do you believe yourself that the Christians of the North have thus apostatized?"

"I asked Lamum the last time I saw him," said the preacher; "he is a Northern man, too; he ought to know, and he said he didn't know that any one doubted it. Though, to put it to a preacher, with candor, "there may be—I say may be—some Lots in the midst of Sodom: for what I know there may be even some thousand there that have not bowed the knee to Baal."

"Don't mention that man Lamum, Brother Barker, if you please," broke in Sister Juggins. "Preferred cold light bread, he said, that night he staid with us—a Yankee, a regular Yankee. He has a cold, crequir, calculating kind of a way. Bein' born and raised North, for my part I don't see how he can help feelin' with his own people; it's nature he should. For all he says, take my word, he don't want the South to whip. He ought to be made to leave—put the other side of that wall!"

COLONEL JUGGINS READING THE "SOMERVILLE STAR" TO HIS WIFE.

"Sister Juggins," said the preacher, "you forget. Charity believeth all things, hopeth all things. But new,: mind about that. Please hand me that Bible again. Mrs. Sorel is an intelligent lady, a believer in plain Scripture, and when he was sleeping, off his tongue, for the last year. He adduced all the passages in the Bible which are considered as countenancing the institution of slavery, and which were as familiar to his finger and tongue now as the proof-texts in regard to election and baptism had once been in his less interesting controversies of old. Having established slavery as a biblical institution, he then summoned the infidelity of the North because hostile to that divine ordinance.

This position he confirmed by numerous references to the avowedly infidel writers and infidel practices of the North. Garrison, Theodore Parker, Gerrit Smith, Bertha Heighton, Wendell Phillips, John Brown, Lucy Stone, Antoinette Brown, Mormonism, Spiritualism, Millerism, Lovejoy, Lincoln, Lovejoy, Lincoln! The preacher rose with a fluency and a force amazing to hear. These were the things which, like the well-worn pebbles in the rivulet, the very sight of which we age warrior, Brother Barker made deafening noise with. It was astonishing what a mass of ammunition he had accumulated upon the subject. But Mrs. Sorel ceased to wonder when he began to refer to the Advocate, lying on the table beside him. It was a very large paper, and week after week it had come to Brother Barker, as to almost every family connected with the anti-slavery denomination in the State, full of nothing else.

As the preacher proceeded he waxed warmer and warmer, louder and louder. But when he came to the unnatural, unchristian, despotic, malignant, fiendish, diabolical, hellish conduct of the North in actually waging war upon the South, recounting deed after deed of atrocity which he had gathered from his favorite paper, he seemed to have forgotten Mrs. Sorel—who sat by quietly sewing—altogether; seemed, in fact, even to have forgotten himself. His whole manner was rather that of an intoxicated bully than of a minister of the Prince of Peace. His sallow cheek became livid with passion, his voice became shrill with the violence of his wrath. To Mrs. Sorel it was a painful spectacle, like the raging of a drunkard past unpleasantly from the merely unpleasant, in fact. Even the Colonel and his wife hung their heads, deeply conscious how little in accordance with the quiet spirit of religion was the temper and language of their pastor.

It took Brother Barker little time to get his feelings fully wrought up when he began, and then it took him a still longer time to get them down again. Only when he was exhausted did he draw to a close.

"And now, ma'am, knowing all this, is it possible you can desire to be associated longer with such a people? United! Bless me! It is impossible to describe the loathing with which the speaker pronounced the hated word.

"Mr. Barker," said Mrs. Sorel, very quietly, "I was told something the other day in regard to yourself. You have a number of sons. Is it true that I took for granted it was not so."

"What was it, ma'am?" asked the preacher, borne from his exertion, but not from his pride.

I was told that Dr. Peel made a speech in Somerville, in which he said that if he supposed the Yankees engaged in the war were fighting for, for his part he would prefer going to hell. And it was said that you clapped your hands, with others, applause. Will you permit me to ask you if that is so?"

"It is impossible for me, ma'am," replied the preacher, "to remember distinctly all I may say or do. If I did applaud such a sentiment, it was because I well know it is impossible for any one engaged in the murderous war upon the rights of the South to get to heaven!"

"I am free to say," observed Mrs. Sorel, after quite a pause, "that I am conscious of some things by what you have said."

"Ah! ma'am, I believed you were open to conviction—and what are those?"

"I think it is extremely probable," said Mrs. Sorel, gravely, "that those Northern soldiers in Missouri did look into the shrines and drink all the milk; because our soldiers have done the same to my dairy." And Mrs. Sorel looks up with a smile.

"I had hoped, ma'am"—began the preacher.

"Pardon me, Sir" continued Mrs. Sorel. "Your remarks have thoroughly convinced me of something more to the purpose than that I have myself, and you are yourself, a small worm of the fact as I am—that when one is entirely satisfied of the truth and of the moral and religious quality of a matter, in regard to that matter they are calm. It is to them a something as clear and settled as is the existence of God, and I can not imagine a person getting into a passion in asserting the existence of the Almighty, or any other thing in regard to which his mind is entirely made up. Now, if Secession be a thing so certainly right—a cause approved from Scripture, and for which the Almighty is so certainly pledged—why such feverish excitement on the subject? why such incessant argument and assertion and violence? Or that North is pursuing a course so horribly wicked why abuse them so? Why not let them, with little emotion save of pity, to the certain vengeance of God? And yet that paper you read in your hand is full, from week to week, of nothing else but inhuman, scoundrelly North! villainous, detestable Government! and the like. Before this thing began the editor of that paper, and all the pro-slavery writers—yes, and all Christians—would have shrunk with horror from using, in regard to any thing, language which, in the mouth of every apostle but even ministers in the pulpit, to say nothing of Christians in private life. Can this be a holy cause which inspires such language? And we, poor Union people, why are you so exercised in regard to us? We are quiet and silent; one would say, now you have a pity, a contempt even, for people so deluded! Why are you so uneasy about us? You see no opposition to your holy conviction. Can we help convictions which are as clear to us as any conviction can be? We don't interfere with your views—why can you not leave us in peace to our delusion?"

"Mrs. Sorel," said the minister, more excited by the calmness of the woman he would have been by her violence, "I tell you, as a friend, the Union people about Somerville had better look out. The feeling in the country are getting hotter and hotter every day. As sure as you live, every Union man, woman, and child will have to leave Somerville, or worse may befall them. You are not going to be trifled with, ma'am," and there was a dangerous fire in his eyes as he spoke, "I tell you as a friend. The people are hot priest," he added, with bitterness.

"And what has Mr. Arthur done?" asked the lady, with a smile.

"He voted, against Secession, ma'am, and," continued the preacher, "so far from being ashamed of it, he has been known to say that he will always rejoice that he did not stay away from the polls, as many of his neighbors did, but went and cast his vote, at least, against the measure."

"I always wished I could have seen him that mornin'," said Colonel Juggins. "I like Mr. Arthur, like his preachin—jist a word or two from me would have kept him out if he'd the Colonel resumed his pipe, greatly regretting he had let the magical words unspoken.

A close observer might have detected a slight motion at the corners of Mrs. Sorel's mouth, but she said nothing. The training in the art of holding the tongue, which Scott pronounces the South underwent during the revolution, was amazing. Also! the long and severe training, then, in all manner of forbearance, self-control, and dissimulation which many of them submitted to was one of the demoralizing influences of that most demoralizing institution.

"Never you mind," interposed Mrs. Juggins, with a wise look from over the sock she was darning—"I know all Mr. Arthur's views."

"And who is that?" asked the Colonel. "Neely isn't the man to work on a man like Mr. Arthur. As for Billy Brooks, he's worse Union than the parson himself. As to that redheaded Ferguson, somebody ought to get hold of that fellow's throat. Since Scott got him he hailed him as he was riding by to ask the news. Would you believe it? he stopped the horse, threw out the palm of his hand, and told me a long story of how Washington people was taken by Secession, and how Lincoln had been hung on a pole—flag-pole it was —on the dome of the Capitol; the Washington people hurrying round to look at him. And all his dying confessions, and such like. He told it all as solemn—you know how dry he is—never stirred a muscle! I'll be bound he'll be enough to believe it. Next time he saw me there in Somerville he came up to me, regretted every as you remember, and asked me if he was false! 'We hear so many things every day just as probable,' he said."

"Mrs. Sorel knows who I mean," said Mrs. Juggins, demurely. "Law me! it's no secret—Miss Ally Bowles. If she isn't sound nobody is, and if she don't make him toe the mark I'm mistaken."

"There is a true Southern woman for you!" broke in the preacher, as if forever his art his late antagonist. "You remember, Colonel, and you, Sister Juggins, that day she presented the flag to the Somerville Rifles—how womp it will remember. How straight she stood—as an Indian! Her hair down her shoulders, her cheeks as red as the flag! Her eyes flash. With her flag in her hand, and all, she reminded me of a picture of the Goddess of Liberty I saw somewhere once. I can't remember where."

"But they say Mr. Neely—" began Mrs. Sorel.

"A Yankee!" interrupted Mrs. Juggins, "Gingour!" may come very strong from the lips of an exasperated Southerner, but he could not express more unutterable disgust than "Yankee!" did from the lips which then spoke it.

"To like a Yankee!" continued Mrs. Juggins in the art which Satan himself might envy. "To run like a Yankee!' left the old similes of deer and greyhound far behind. "A Yankee!" I smiled by one boy on the play-ground at another was considered the quintessence of all insult and cursing. "A Yankee!" Mrs. Juggins rendered strong language, but "Yankee" was stronger still —it meant the abolitionist armed and equipped and in full operation.

"Yes no one is a more ardent Secessionist," said Mrs. Sorel, in her gentle manner.

"Fine looking fellow, too!" put in the Colonel.

"I don't care," persisted Mrs. Juggins. I don't think Miss Ally could stand a Yankee. I don't care how much they make-believe Secession. I hate them only that much more. Let 'em go back where they came from! Vengeance! and I let them let us alone; we don't want to go among them that I know of. However, Ally'd rather marry even a Yankee than a Union man any day. And if she did, there's Mrs. Juggins would kill her stone-dead!"

"Why, you are as pert as a tree-frog, old woman!" said her husband. "It's more than I feel after that Donelson news."

In a few moments Mr. Barker had left, carefully and cordially shaking hands with Colonel Juggins and his wife, and scarcely honoring Mrs. Sorel with a distant bow in passing out. The subject of the war being exhausted with his departure, Mrs. Juggins and her husband were to Mrs. Sorel for the two—for there the same plain, cordial friends as before Secession was dreamed of by them.

But it was not vain, a day or two after, that the Colonel read aloud to his wife every word of the Somerville Star. That Fort Donelson had fallen, and that Nashville was evacuated, was too evident. It is true the Colonel read several times over, with deep satisfaction, the important information with regard to the gentleman direct from England; yet even this news, new as it was and delightful as it was to the Colonel, produced but a momentary relief.

It was a satisfaction, however, to learn, as he did from the Somerville Star, that the recent disasters were due to the most unexpected and abject cowardice of the military leaders—an event which could by no possibility have taken place. Besides, the Star had ascertained that the Tennessee and Cumberland rivers were both falling so rapidly that the progress of the Federal gun-boats and transports was a certainty. The Star even gave an estimate of the amount of rainfall necessary to cause a rise which would thus fall into the hands of the Confederacy—it brought us to by the fiendish enemy just when most needed! It was wonderful!

Never had the Somerville Star shone more clearly than in the passing darkness of the hour. "Mark our words," said the Star, "all of our readers fall in with any one who entertains a doubt, or the shadow of a doubt, of our success in this struggle, and if we have a single dear, that doubter is a traitor; yes, a TRAITOR to his country, and should be dealt with as such!"

A NEW DISEASE.—DR. PROPHYLACTIC QUÆ MALBUS.

SAID Mr. Jonas Barcarole, looking about him at breakfast, "Has any body seen John Misling late, by?" Every body looked at Clara.

"He has not been here a month, Sir," answered the beautiful Clara, promptly.

"Hum!" said Mr. Barcarole; "ha! the young fellow may be ill. I hope he has somebody had better look after him;" and buttoning up his overcoat, for it was now well on in the chilly weather, the President of the Somerville Board of Health, with a due sense of his responsibilities, went to find and nurse her missing cousin.

Now John Misling was a wholly inappropriate, unfortunate, unnecessary, and ridiculous friend of Nolay when he should be silent, mum when he should talk; the round man in the square hole, the third person in the way when he was never to see the paper in which he was told to call somewhere and hear something to his advantage; to have in the smallest degree his own end in view as a genus man; to break his leg if your case depended on his evidence; while his mental and physical qualities, taken together, were of the kind of stuff that you might have supposed that Nature had compounded him out of the scraps and leavings of every body's constitution. Not that he was in the least near to the muscle of a young lady he had a proposterous itching for frays and adventures. He blushed and perspired in the presence of ladies, and was always dreadfully snubbed by them, and yet fancied himself a lover among them. He measured five feet two inches in height, with a huge nose and a red shining face, and yet was haunted by a notion of carrying off some girl in a romantic way. His squeaked, stammered, talked fast, and without any command, and insisted on trying to shine in society. He was the sort of man who sometimes writes acrostics than any one in the United States, and yet firmly believed in his own talents as a writer; and though without any serious intention in every one's eyes but his own, was madly in love with his beautiful cousin, Clara Barcarole, the daughter of the wealthy and respected Jonas Barcarole, and one of the most fascinating girls in New York.

During the month in which he had been missed from the Barcarole mansion he had written a book, and the polite publishers of the house of Sanscrit & Co. had promised it "their earliest attention." He had also given the "earliest attention" signified three weeks, and at the end of that time intended to demand an advance of five hundred dollars on the book. One of these he had intended to spend to buy a pair of new trousers, and in the trousers he would call on the beautiful Clara, and give her an opportunity of becoming Mrs. John Misling. Meantime—and there is not a more difficult operation in the world than living out "meantime"—Misling had only a balance of twenty-five cents in his pocket, and no prospect of money from any quarter. In the afternoon he picked up a little printed bill, reading as follows:

"J. CANTRELL, Dealer in all kinds of Ladies' and Gentlemen's cast-off Clothing, Bed-clothing, Boots, Shoes, old Metal, old Umbrellas, Musical Instruments, for all of which, the Subscriber will give the highest Prices. He hopes, as one who strictly attends to his business, to get all kinds of Rags, if required to buy, it will be purchased. J. C. returns his sincere thanks for the liberal Encouragement he has received, and hopes every Favour will be continued to him. J. C.

"N.B.—The Bill and the Goods will be called for in two hours.

"WASTE NOT, WANT NOT."

Misling had no old umbrellas or musical instruments to offer the accommodating Mr. Cantrell; but besides a gray mixture that he was just then wearing he owned a pair of linen trowsers. There would be a certain risk in the venture; for, between the cleanliness of the linen and the mixture of gray, there was nothing left for the "gray mix" but to be washed. While they were in the hands of Mrs. O'Flaherty, the washer-lady, the trowsers man; and it would be like his luck for the house to take advantage of his situation and burn down for some one else's profit; or Mrs. O'Flaherty might get drunk and forget him. But nothing ventured, nothing had. Misling sold the trowsers, and then ventured himself with crackers and cheese, and, with many injunctions, placed the "gray mix" in the hands of Mrs. O'Flaherty.

It was then, of all days in the year, that Clara Barcarole brought her violet-hat, her aunt, and her luncheon-basket to look after her unlucky cousin, and fluttering up the dingy steps of the dingier lodging-house, filled its onion-scented halls with the fresh air of Broadway, and the sweet breath of its landlady with profoundest astonishment.

Misling heard them coming, the shrill voice of the landlady scolding her out of the way, and with no waiting-room, the good woman had marshaled them up the damp stairs at once.

"This will never do," Clara cried—them steps at the top is broken. The third door on the left, ladies."

Misling heard and glanced wildly around him. There was the fire-place; but it was obstructed by a fire-board and a rusty stove, and, besides, he had never learned how to climb chimneys. The doors were none. He had no trunk, and might have betted about getting into it if he had. Impossible to get out of the window, for it was shut, and, in his fright, it never occurred to him to lock the door; and hearing the rustle of silk and patter of boot-heels in the hall, he dived under the bed, discovering himself up to the tip of his nose, just as Clara and Mrs. Douglass entered.

"Ah!" said Clara, looking about her compassionately. "Just as I thought. Now, Cousin John, you've had of your ill. Here's some lunch for you, and make me come all this way to find how you were!"

"You are an angel," answered Misling, vaguely, and tingling with pleasure and pain alike; for if it was so good of her to search him out, yet how dreadful to be revealed by an angel when a man's trowsers were in the wash!

"Have you been long ill?" asked Mrs. Douglass, kindly, her sympathies awakened strangely around by the dreary, chilly, bare, little room.

"Yes—no—that is—a day or so;" returned Misling, getting red.

"He has a fever," said Clara, growing more and more concerned. "Look at his face, Aunt Mirriam! Just think of his lying sick alone in this—"

She was going to say miserable den, and certainly the expression of her face implied it; there no more than justice; for there was no fire in the rusty stove—the carpet, in the wear and tear of years, had disappeared from the floor; the bed, the only bed available, adorned with bowl, ever, shaving utensils, crackers, cheese, and stationery, was of pine, as were the two hard chairs and the deal table.

"What medicines have you taken?" asked Mrs. Douglass, observing that Misling shrank from every notice of his surroundings. "I just have fever I would recommend—"

"I never take drugs," cut in Misling, hastily. "Perfect rest and a diet" cause he glanced at the crackers and cheese—"are the remedies to which I always resort."

"You are accustomed to it then. You are often ill in this way?" queried Clara.

"Yes; my attacks may be said to be periodical," said Misling, and without a secret relish of his own wit, dangerous as was his situation.

"Yes," observed Mrs. Douglass, a young lady, to whom the words conveyed a very dreadful idea indeed, and opening wide her handsome brown eyes, "and you do nothing for them at all, cousin John?"

"Well, no—not exactly. I—I—" stammering, and conscious that he was in a fearful mess, "I use hydropathic remedies. I have great faith in the virtues of water;" secret relish of his own wit again.

"You must have had a deal of washing for you pore you are going on in this heathenish way now, Sir, that you have fallen into better hands than your own," observed the landlady of the lost pair of gloves. "We do not mean to leave you till we have seen you more comfortable, do we, Aunt Mirriam?"

Misling burst out in a cold perspiration, and, for the first time in his life, wished his fair cousin at the antipodes.

"You must not think of such a thing! You are too good," he stammered. "I am well—that is, I shall be soon. You really give yourselves too much trouble."

"Nonsense," said Clara's conscience, beaconscale as ever, under the velvet basque; "he lives here, half frozen on bread and cheese, till he falls ill; and then he calls you an angel, and because for a time he approached you, 'too good,' because you take the trouble at last to ask whether he is alive or dead. Nonsense, indeed! I'll be bound if he dies whose fault will it—" Here the conscience was cut short by a tear from Clara, which she wiped away, not on the lace handkerchief, but on a plainer one taken from her pocket, saying:

"We are not too good at all; and we are not going to be put off in that way, are we Aunt Mirriam?"

"If John will tell us something of his symptoms," returned Mrs. Douglass, doubtfully. "What do you call your illness, John?"

"Yes, what is it, Cousin John? What is the matter?" asked Clara, turning her face, all alarm with compassionate interest, toward the unhappy Misling, who experienced to eagony of all ropses when they see detection approaching. Whatever he pleaded he was sure to be tripped on the symptoms, or exposed by the first doctor called in to attend him. If grew pale and red, hot and cold, by turns, as he ransacked his brains for some unheard-of disease, when suddenly he remembered, apropos of nothing, Shakespeare, Charles Bonnet, and that "Propria quæ maribus," and also that Clara not only knew no Latin but seldom opened a book.

"The disease is constitutional, in fact it may be called hereditary," said the little wretch, his mouth full—"quinsy." I remember to have often suffered from the same cause. There is nothing for it, as I said before, but time, quiet, and the watchful eye. It is called Propria quæ maribus."

"How strange!" exclaimed Clara, with evident horror. "It must be dreadful. Is it very painful? I never heard of such a thing; did you, mamma dear?" But Mrs. Douglass had walked hastily to the windowand stood there looking out, presenting to the enquiring lady a back view of her shoulders, which for some reason twitched unaccountably.

"Aunt Miriam!" exclaimed Clara, in surprise, and vaguely alarmed; "Cousin John! Why, Mia! what is it? Is it incurable? Is it any thing like fits?" edging around to peep under her aunt's bonnet, when, to her ingreatest astonishment and delight, that lady crimson, convulsive, and choking with suppressed laughter.

"I think we might go, Clara," said Mrs. Douglass, gurgling. "I do not believe that it is very dangerous. John will be likely to get on better without us," gasping hysterically.

"Aunt! Cousin John! what is it all about," said the astonished girl, turning toward Misling. Misling turned his answer. He was in a fury. Just at this juncture a heavy step shook the boards of the little house, and, without knocking, entered Mrs. O'Flaherty, the "gray mix" dangling under her arm.

"Ah! here's yer pants, Misther Misling," laying the articles in question on his bed, "though yes, bother not be aither pattin' thim on jist yet, I'm thinkin', you may be'r dirty jintly. I'll bring him to thim so." All the time staring hard at the blue hat and Aunt Miriam; and coming to a dim notion that she might have been indiscreet. Mrs. O'Flaherty drew a long breath, and mended the matter thus:

"An' shure and I'd have waited of I'd known yez had company—sorry I am to disturb yez—but I'll stand till I brung thim, and charged me so petiklar, ye knows."

Douglass rushed frantically out of the room, followed by Clara, and Misling heard them on the landing.

"Aunt, what is it, and what is Propria quæ maribus?"

"His trousers, child, his trousers! Is means, that which I gave for mine! Did you ever hear the story? Oh! oh! oh!" Suppressed giggles, rush and rustle of skirts on the stairs, and then the jar of the front door below. They were gone. Misling was a proper and a decorous little man, but he could not help saying, in strict confidence to the huckster "gray mix," still on the foot of his bed, "D—n it!"

Shortly after the President of the Primrose Bank gave Misling a new suit and a situation in his office, and a year; but we fear Misling could hardly have been sufficiently grateful, for he never gave the President's daughter in return that opportunity of becoming Mrs. John Misling.

WATCHING FOR THE NEXT THING.

THERE is reason to believe that some people never watch, so that their lives never contain any Next: their argument, and there is no use in it, is doubtful if such persons could understand Cato's soliloquy, or Hamlet's, if they have any feeling about death. Indeed, it must be that it is next—to nothing; but probably they have none. Such people, however, even if they ever read, can not be readers of any consequence; for the better part of the interest of reading lies in watching for the next thing. Even in books, have the curiosities of reading these good folks till—next time. Their constitutional peculiarity will prevent their feeling the slight. Take the man while we are on the subject, compassionate them; for theirs is in many ways a melancholy lot. They can never enter with zest into the higher mathematics. They can have no joy in thinking of the infinite divisibility of matter. They can take no proper interest in disovering why soda-water bottles explode. They could not possibly become absorbed in Fearne on Contingent Remainders, or astrology, or unfulfilled prophecy, or the Kabala, or the kaleidoscope, or anything that comes Next. They must stick to their Last; and, for my part, I would not stand in their shoes.

It is just among other things that the persons of whom we now speak could never, in childhood, have watched the fearful joy which you and I have had when we have authentically told a story and then die after It. This demands an acute apprehension of the Next—and they have none at all. They can appreciate no development founded upon a cause. They never enjoyed the spectacle of a file of soldiers coming round a corner, or a flight of birds coming up behind a gable, or a group of trees or flights of stairs in a proper manner. What could a man of this kind make of Jacob's ladder? or of the paying out of the Atlantic telegraph, for instance? It must surely have been a witness of this order who gave that ridiculous answer to the barrister's simple question, which way the stairs ran. "One way; they ran up, and the other way they ran down." To a properly constituted mind there are few objects of greater interest than a cork-screw, but the class of whom we speak could make nothing of such an instrument.

To some lukewarm person who had never quite approfounded the subject we are, doubtless, indebted for the popular proverb which informs us that the watched kettle never boils. Then, pray, what does it do? Are we to be told that a kettle is conscious, and has a will, and that the laws of matter are suspended? I will maintain, to my last cup of tea, that the singing of a kettle is unconscious, metaphorical; and that watching can communicates no disinclination to come on to 212° Fah. Watching is either a parable or a jeu d'esprit—take your choice. If a parable, the Kettle is the Universe; which, to human eyes, is ever on the boil, without doing it always growing, never full-grown. Or, again—and this will please people who like a good moral—the kettle is the work in which the man is whether he neglects some plain duty; and in that case the meaning is, leave your kettle to the fire unbothered with, and go and do the next thing that lies handy. But there is a nearness about this vice of the subject which throws a shadow upon the kind of author to whom the proverb should be attributed. Taken as a metaphysical jeu d'esprit, the meaning of the subject would be the sort of thing from the Brazen Head in the Middle Ages, you know. If you watch, the kettle never boils; it is either going to boil, or it has boiled. This is evidently the subject of a mind like that which said the stairs ran up one way and down the other; and, unless it be talk, it is a pure piece of unmistakable instance of humorn depravity. As a practical joke it may pass—it is like taking away a man's chair when he is wanting to sit down; but about it is the solidity of Consciousness. It is rubbing out the punctum stans, and destroying the Eternal Now. And what is the next thing?

The nearest practical approach to this view of the case of the watched kettle is that of sleep that is watched for. Many a night of woe have I had to bed counting the hours, and watching for unconsciousness. Now, this is manifestly absurd of us. We are as bad as the man who lies awake and sees in the glass how he looked with his eyes shut; or as the man who, keeping his pigtail between his finger and thumb, would see if it went. These errors are founded upon misconceptions of the eternal nature of things, which are as plain to the meanest capacity as that a pig's tail is not to be cake and eat it; and the melancholy fate of the two men is well known. The man with the pigtail never so distracted with the delight of the new gymration become unbearable, and he span to death: the Irishman tried so persistently to look into his eye that, reflected in the mirror before him, he fancied he had become a camera obscura, or a cataleptic cat-fish, I forget which, and alienated all his friends by charging to be let out.

Well, you and I may, and, let us hope, shall, escape the fate of these men; but we are quite as ridiculous when we watch for sleep. The way to know is that we are not asleep, and that we want it. It is impossible to know the fact, when the essence of being asleep is that you are not. We are awake. If Dr. Wigan were right—if the two hemispheres of the brain could carry on separate lives, and hold different opinions, and argue with each other, and convey different impulses to the motor nerves—there might be a chance of being asleep, and knowing it. But who would wish for a double action brain, unless, indeed, he contemplated making a fortune on the stage, playing Punch and Judy, and bubbling, upon his retirement, into becoming uniformity? Double consciousness might be agreeable at times, and would solve many complicated conditions, but it could never rank higher than throwing up two balls at a time for amusement. I would rejoice to see a man at the head of Protestant with half his head, and Romanist with the other half; nor would the policemen, to say nothing of the street-boys, be long in forming themselves, a man to stand at one spot all day long, with his right leg propelling him one way, and his left the other. Even then, I fear, conclusions were to be encouraged, what would become of Social Science? You would have double columns of everything, and double leaders, and double return upon you, in a fresh form, of the insoluble problem of the three bodies?

It is quite certain that the clown, who said all he wished for in the world was to sit upon a gate and eat fat bacon forever, made a mistake. In time he would have found himself watching for the next thing, and so on, in endless repetition, till he discovered, if any one interrupted him to himself, that he wanted both ends of the gate. Or, like Jacob Le Versât of Madame de Genlis there is a fairy, who, in the revenges of her jealousy, sentences her husband's successor to a life of unsatisfied and fruitless ailments. One of them, a very vivacious girl, she condemns to an apparently endless stay in a country mill on the borders of a river, where there is grass, smooth green sea, and cloudless sky bending over. Unless the poor creature had been rescued she would have gone mad, or watched for something to be next. There are situations in life when the absence of such a rescuer from the fairy's power is that has reached the sensitive note—it grazes the brink of the next, which seems as if it must come. Such a feeling is one of the worst of pains, and one less if there be much suspense. A rapid, seemingly endless ascension of nerves is capable of giving the same feeling, if the nerves are not used to the idea, of soothing it. Who does not know what it is to look over the side of a vessel and watch the swift-following waves, or the foaming bubbles which mark the foaming track with a feeling that, if the line were broken, if one single nerv were missed, it would be unendurable, and that the whole universe, if the world must at that moment end? I have done it myself till it seemed as if my heart would stop beating, and with it the world, and that God, which beats time for heaven and earth, if the pace of the current were broken. So, again, with a field of waving wheat, or blowing grass, or a mass of woodland bent by a great even wind. It has seemed to me as if no note of passion, no shriek of agony, or shout of joy—for either would do—could so strong enough to express sympathy with a meaning, but always too weak and relessed by the wind. If that should be the case with undulations of the golden flowers should wave—to more! A feeling as of drowning, as of sense half-submerged in a full volume deep through silent water, comes over me when—there is, already, a singing in my ears, and a mist before my eyes—the time is, in reality, only a part of a second, but it seems an eon till the next wave comes. But it has come—there move, they laugh, the golden billows—the pendulum of God has not stopped because it is not yet the day of endlessness and silence. It is at such a moment as this that the horizon strikes the eye afresh with a sense of infinity. The sea-gull flies, the wings like a wheel, for then would I flee away, and in the pulses of an endless flight there would be something to silence the leadings of the heart.

If there are readers who can remember nothing in their own moods, of which this is a very faint copy, then such have my pity—I think, but they will not be able to recall something like it in connection with music. Have you never felt as if the close of some exquisite piece of harmony must be followed by something, or that your heart must that moment cease to beat? No man can see God and live, says the old soul say: but what remains but that I should see Him and die? And then there is the beating sound in the ears, the half-moment of watching, overpowering fear, with a feeling as if some monstrous bird, blacker than a thousand midnights, were sweeping up, up, up from the underworld behind to darken all, and end all, if nothing comes. And nothing comes. But these

Fallings from us, vanishings,
Blank misgivings of a creature
Moving about in worlds not realized,

do not pass without being remembered; sometimes we can recall them at one bound of thought; and there—

Though inland far we be,
Our souls have sight of that immortal sea
Which brought us hither.
Can in a moment travel thither,
And see the children sport upon the shore,
And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.

We have all heard of the "rustic"—sentence expected—to be condemned to be watching till the river has run past him. But the human mind never feels exactly such a rustic. Wordsworth says, you recollect, "Lines on Epitaphs"), that "there never was a child who, standing by a stream, did not speculate where it came from, and where it would go to." If such a child there were, he would, of course, be father to the man (if such a man there really is), but I fear I have (and very much) who never watches for the next thing. But there are, in truth, perhaps few children, perhaps none, who have not felt what we may call the transient madness, the hysteric passion, of watching for the next thing. Some have felt it, as adults remarked that they were in the habit of looking at the dancing spangles of a chandelier; others in looking at a tree, the top of which just peeped over the gable of a house, or at the ever-coming moon. The tree seems as if it must grow higher that instant; and what then? what will not happen? The moon, as if she must climb gently up to a given mark, and then up to another, and another—and what will be the consequence? what will not be the consequence? A passage in a well-known poem of Wordsworth's, in which the dropping of the moon behind a cottage-roof is followed by a suggestion that the life of its Lucy, may help to redeem this kind of phantasy from contempt in the minds of mysterious, if any—who feel that it is too trivial to be worthy of a thought. Indeed, nearly all men, in highly-wrought moods, have sensations which are inexpressible. It was not a child, a weakling, or a fantastic person, into whose mouth the same poet put words such as these—he was only a man in love:

The clouds pass on; they from the heavens depart:
I look—the sky is empty space;
I know—I see
But when I cease to look, my hand is on my heart.

Then Egmotian, whose arch are proudly towers
Above the sea, and whose long hall the wash,
Thou one fair shrub, oh! shed thy flowers,
And still be found in spring!

For thus to see thou nodding in the air,
To see thy arch thus stretch and bend,
Thou fair shrub, oh! shed thy flowers,
Disturbs me till the sight is more than I can bear.

"The man," Wordsworth continues, "who makes this feverish complaint, is of giant stature, and stands down in the valley of the shadow of death." Le Versât of Madame de Genlis there is a fairy, who, in the revenges of her jealousy, sentences her husband's successor to a life of unsatisfied and fruitless ailments. One of them, a very vivacious girl, she condemns to an apparently endless stay in a country mill on the borders of a river, where there is grass, smooth green sea, and cloudless sky bending over. Unless the poor creature had been rescued she would have gone mad, or watched for something to be next. There are situations in life when the absence of such a rescuer from the fairy's power is that has reached the sensitive note—it grazes the brink of the next, which seems as if it must come. Such a feeling is one of the worst of pains, and one less if there be much suspense. A rapid, seemingly endless ascension of nerves is capable of giving the same feeling, if the nerves are not used to the idea, of soothing it. Who does not know what it is to look over the side of a vessel and watch the swift-following waves, or the foaming bubbles which mark the foaming track with a feeling that, if the line were broken, if one single nerv were missed, it would be unendurable, and that the whole universe, if the world must at that moment end? I have done it myself till it seemed as if my heart would stop beating, and with it the world, and that God, which beats time for heaven and earth, if the pace of the current were broken. So, again, with a field of waving wheat, or blowing grass, or a mass of woodland bent by a great even wind. It has seemed to me as if no note of passion, no shriek of agony, or shout of joy—for either would do—could so strong enough to express sympathy with a meaning, but always too weak and relessed by the wind. If that should be the case with undulations of the golden flowers should wave—to more! A feeling as of drowning, as of sense half-submerged in a full volume deep through silent water, comes over me when—there is, already, a singing in my ears, and a mist before my eyes—the time is, in reality, only a part of a second, but it seems an eon till the next wave comes. But it has come—there move, they laugh, the golden billows—the pendulum of God has not stopped because it is not yet the day of endlessness and silence. It is at such a moment as this that the horizon strikes the eye afresh with a sense of infinity. The sea-gull flies, the wings like a wheel, for then would I flee away, and in the pulses of an endless flight there would be something to silence the leadings of the heart.

If there are readers who can remember nothing in their own moods, of which this is a very faint copy, then such have my pity—I think, but they will not be able to recall something like it in connection with music. Have you never felt as if the close of some exquisite piece of harmony must be followed by something, or that your heart must that moment cease to beat? No man can see God and live, says the old soul say: but what remains but that I should see Him and die? And then there is the beating sound in the ears, the half-moment of watching, overpowering fear, with a feeling as if some monstrous bird, blacker than a thousand midnights, were sweeping up, up, up from the underworld behind to darken all, and end all, if nothing comes. And nothing comes. But these

Fallings from us, vanishings,
Blank misgivings of a creature
Moving about in worlds not realized,

do not pass without being remembered; sometimes we can recall them at one bound of thought; and there—

Though inland far we be,
Our souls have sight of that immortal sea
Which brought us hither.
Can in a moment travel thither,
And see the children sport upon the shore,
And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.

We have all heard of the "rustic"—sentence expected—to be condemned to be watching till the river has run past him. But the human mind never feels exactly such a rustic. Wordsworth says, you recollect, "Lines on Epitaphs"), that "there never was a child who, standing by a stream, did not speculate where it came from, and where it would go to." If such a child there were, he would, of course, be father to the man (if such a man there really is), but I fear I have (and very much) who never watches for the next thing. But there are, in truth, perhaps few children, perhaps none, who have not felt what we may call the transient madness, the hysteric passion, of watching for the next thing. Some have felt it, as adults remarked that they were in the habit of looking at the dancing spangles of a chandelier; others in looking at a tree, the top of which just peeped over the gable of a house, or at the ever-coming moon. The tree seems as if it must grow higher that instant; and what then? what will not happen? The moon, as if she must climb gently up to a given mark, and then up to another, and another—and what will be the consequence? what will not be the consequence? A passage in a well-known poem of Wordsworth's, in which the dropping of the moon behind a cottage-roof is followed by a suggestion that the life of its Lucy, may help to redeem this kind of phantasy from contempt in the minds of mysterious, if any—who feel that it is too trivial to be worthy of a thought. Indeed, nearly all men, in highly-wrought moods, have sensations which are inexpressible. It was not a child, a weakling, or a fantastic person, into whose mouth the same poet put words such as these—he was only a man in love:

The clouds pass on; they from the heavens depart:
I look—the sky is empty space;
I know—I see
But when I cease to look, my hand is on my heart.

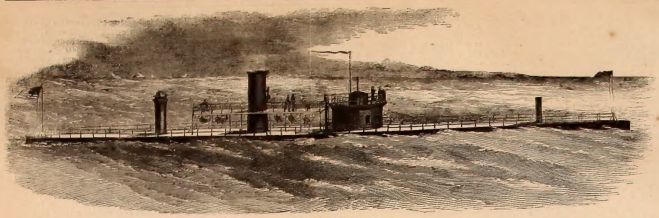
Then Egmotian, whose arch are proudly towers
Above the sea, and whose long hall the wash,
Thou one fair shrub, oh! shed thy flowers,
And still be found in spring!

For thus to see thou nodding in the air,
To see thy arch thus stretch and bend,
Thou fair shrub, oh! shed thy flowers,
Disturbs me till the sight is more than I can bear.

"The man," Wordsworth continues, "who makes this feverish complaint, is of giant stature, and stands down in the valley of the shadow of death." But what he has brought him to? Love, who "has been a villain since the days of Troy and Helen; who caused the fall of Troy, and many more things.

There are times when a quick succession of nerves would merely soothing; but they are times of reactionary languor, when there is not a little force enough to watch; when what we attend to is the rhythm only. Then, we find the ticking of a clock soothing—indeed, to mention this is overpraise. But what a dreadful effect may be produced upon the mind by the consciousness of the ticking of a clock, when once a certain experience has been gone through! Who that has counted the beatings of a pulse, or counted the fluttering of a breath, watching for the next, and the next, and the next, and coming at last to the one which has no next, can bear, without a shudder, to hear a watch or clock stop ticking, or to hear any rhythmical sound cease suddenly? Reader, one of the most horrible moments of my life occurred in which the rhythmical noise of a common saw, heard over the parapet of a bridge in London, stopped suddenly when I was listening to it. I thought the sound of misery was softened; it had a magh with it, which reminded me, not too painfully, of the sound of human speech; but when it stopped, I thought I should hear no more in this world, and longed to be that moment taken away. Of course the emotion of that moment was imputed from the consciousness of a moment of which it was the symbol; but I think the sudden cessation of any thing with a beat in it was always a terror to me.

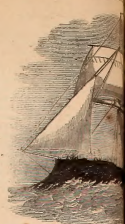
The fact is, there are some of us who have too much nettiness in our composition. Can you spend an infinitive hour?" said Oldridge to the clown.



"Yes, Sir," says the clown, "a cart-load of 'em!"

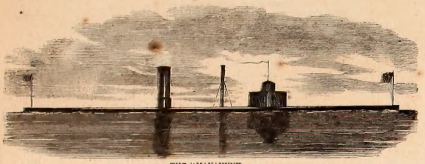
That is the way with you and me: we are too eager to draw our cart-load of inferences; and when we find the inferences will not be drawn we suffer. No man can live into the middle of next week. Respect the almanac. How can you possibly have a whole twelvemonth at once? There is this peculiarity about the Next Thing, remember—that it is sure to come, whether you watch or not. And what a blessing there is in certainty! What relief in the thought that something must happen! We know the difficulty, nemo curavit, of holding in check our troubled, habitual anxiety about now. Every second of time in our experience throws out a pertenet bridge to the next. We live by a clock that has two sets of hands on the same dial-plate: one is right, and the other is always too fast. Our twelve o'clock is twenty-and-something-short-of-one-o'clock. This depends upon constitutional peculiarities, of course—we can not wholly help it, and why should we try to? Still it is painful to have to confess, for example, that the beautiful new boy-board over made to a piano appears too short for us. It is so. Looking at a piano the other evening, in a dreamy mood, I was afresh struck with a sense of the truncated or arrested appearance of the series of black and white keys over which we step when they want. "It is a vice one, isn't it?" said the lovely mistress of the instrument, bending her hair back over the calmest of blue sounds. "Imperfect," said I, lazily. "Dear me, where, Mr. Browne?" she inquired. "The key-board," I replied. "It is not long enough." And why? she resumed, "it's full compass—they do not tell them larger—but what structure would you have?" How many? said I, "million." What! she said to the last, there ought to be one next to it; and one next to that." "Yes," I said to her lady, "it would be like the picture in the 'Vicar of Wakefield'—you could not get it into the room!" "No," said I, "it is already too-crowded for room." Music-stools are always made to turn on an axis, so it would be easy to play upon." "Oh, Mr. Browne!" said this bewitching lady, "what a thing—think how giddy I should be!" "Then," said I, "let it go straight on till it comes to a stop; let it shade off into space!" Upon which she struck the notes, verce. People talk about wanting room for this, that, and the other, when extension is unbounded! I lay it down as a principle that people never can be too well up on the wings of some huge, hovering bird, to such a sublime height looking down upon the billows of the ocean, dark-green curves fringed with white, chasing one another, on and on, in an everlasting round. But there is another circumstance, very feeling comes over me when I picture to myself the last wave seething up to the same spot again, like the imaginary ship in the problem of geography. It seems so foolish of it—as bad as a conuet, which has always appeared to me a stupid form of being. For coming feels quiet—does not a billow of any spirit watch his opportunity and go off into space, gradually changing the parabolic inflection of the stars into a straight line? That is my feeling. Hence, I love better to think of the sea as a great plain, on which the white coursers run an endless race. Rough are their manes in the blowing south, and on they go, multitudinous in remote. Now and then, we who stand on the shore, see one of them again. When this is gone, this in which dip the feet of the children, we shall see—the next. And always, and always, the next. How long shall we watch?

OUR IRON-CLAD NAVY.



WE give this week on pages 72 and 78 engravings illustrating the iron-clad vessels of every class in the United States Navy. All together the number of iron-clad vessels constructed since the beginning of the rebellion amounts to 62. A very few of these have been lost, but a sufficient number for this loss several formidable ranks, built by the rebels and captured by our forces, have become, with certain modifications, very valuable vessels to the United States Navy—sketches of three of which, the Stonewall, Atlanta, and Tennessee, are also given, in connection with those constructed by our Navy Department. Our iron-clad vessels are of the most various kinds, from the light-draught Monitor to the gigantic sea-going Dunderberg. All but six or seven of our iron-clads have the Ericsson screw. We have 13 double-turreted vessels. One—the Roanoke—has three turrets.

If we compare our navy with that of Great Britain two great points, one of which is very apparent. In the first place, our navy greatly outnumbers the British in iron-clad vessels. According to the published returns of the British navy in 1863 the whole number of armor-plated vessels of all kinds, even including floating-batteries, was 34. Then, again, the very powerful vessels which our iron-clads are built renders them, we think, vastly superior to even the most formidable armoured vessels in the Queen Majesty's navy. Instead of a large, unwieldy vessel of the Warrior type, exposing a large surface to the shot and shell of an adversary, we have the compact, light, and easily-handled Monitor. In the latter but a small surface is exposed, and that is rendered almost impregnable. As a ram the Dunderberg takes another specimen of our iron-clad fleet—is the most formidable vessel in the world. For simultaneous broadside vessels we own much to the admirable lithographs published by Messrs. Currier & Ives of



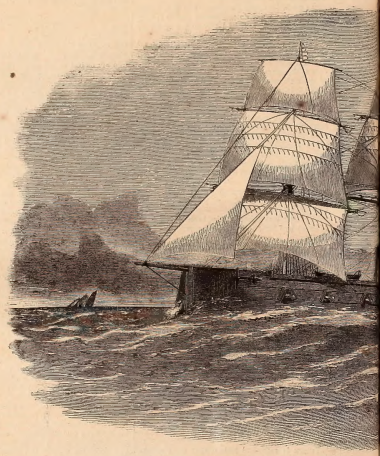
THE "DICTATOR."

Iron-clad Ram, 2 guns, 3033 tons, length 324 feet, breadth 50 feet, depth 23 feet. Built in New York by C. H. Delamater, from drawings and plans by John Ericsson. Launched December 26, 1863. Two vessels of this class—the "Dictator" and "Puritan"—both sea-going.

Steam Ram, a rebel cruiser, com... close of the war.—3 guns, 1300 ton...

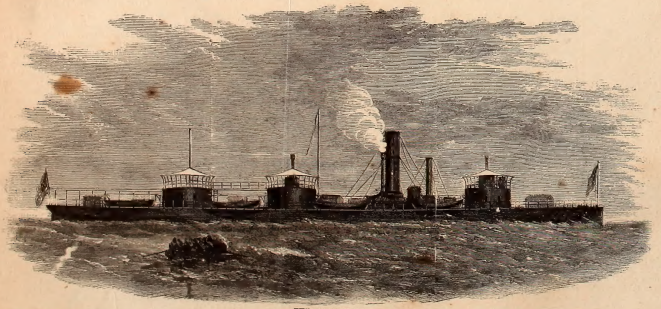
THE "MANAYUNK."

Iron-clad, 2 guns, 1034 tons, length 224 feet, breadth 43 feet. Built at Pittsburg by Snowdons & Mason. There are eight vessels of this class, of which the "Canonicus" is one. Designed for harbors and rivers.



THE "OZARK."

Iron-clad, 2 guns, 878 tons. Built at Mound City by George C. Bestor, 1863. Three vessels of this class—the "Ozark," "Neosho," and "Osage"—3 to 7 guns. Tonnage of the three, 1694.



THE "ONONDAGA."

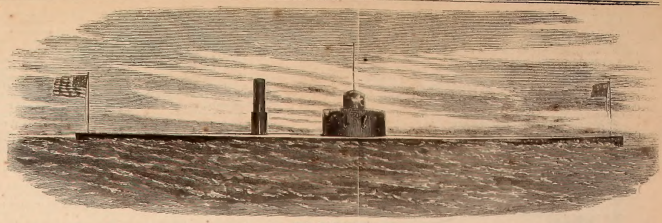
Iron-clad Battery, 4 guns, 1250 tons, length 229 feet, breadth 50 feet. Built by T. F. Rowland, Greenpoint, L. I. Launched July 29, 1863.

THE "NEW IRONSIDES."

Iron-clad, 20 guns, 3486 tons. Built by Merrick & Sons, at Philadelphia. Launched May 10, 1862. Sea...

THE "ROANOKE."

Iron-clad, 6 guns. The United States Frigate "Roanoke" cut down to her gun-deck, plated. Received three Ericsson turrets at Novelty Iron Works, New York, 1863. Length 265 feet, breadth 65½ feet. Sea-going.



INTERIOR O...

THE IRON-CLAD NAVY

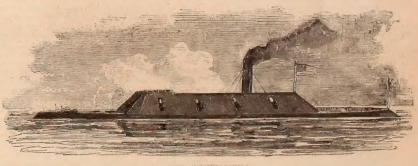
by the Spanish Government at the
and 6 inch forward.

THE "WEEHAWKEN."

Iron-clad, 2 guns, 844 tons. Built by Secor & Co., Jersey City, 1862. Sunk in Charleston harbor, December 6, 1863. Nine vessels of this class, of which the "Passaic" is one.

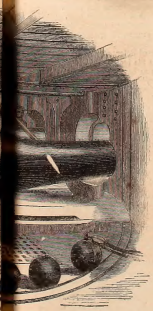
THE "ATLANTA."

Iron-clad Steamer, 4 guns, 1006 tons. Captured from the Rebels by the "Weehawken," June 17, 1863.



THE "YAZOO."

Iron-clad, 2 guns. Light draught. Built at Philadelphia. Twenty vessels of this class, carrying from one to two guns, 614 tons each.



battery, 4 guns, 1564 tons. Built at the Boston Navy-Yard. Length 230½ feet, breadth 53 feet. Launched 1864. Four vessels of this class. Sea-going.

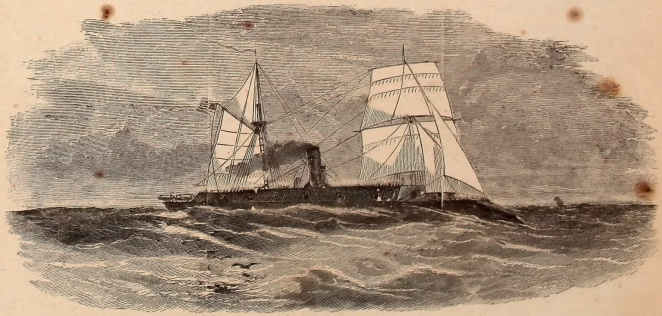
THE "MONADNOCK."



THE "TENNESSEE."

Iron-clad ram captured from the rebels by Admiral Farragut, August 5, 1864. Length 209 feet, breadth 48 feet.

TURRET.

THE "DUNDERBERG."

Iron-clad ram, 16 guns, 5000 tons. Length 380 feet, breadth 68 feet. Built by W. H. Webb, at New York City. Sea-going vessel without turrets. Launched July 25, 1865.

ED STATES.—[See Page 71.]

GRAFTED INTO THE ARMY.

In the list of wounded in the memorable battle of Antietam might have been found the name of Patrick Mahoney, private in the 147th Michigan, and a subsequent examination or inquiry at the Adjutant-General's Department would have disclosed the fact that the said Patrick Mahoney had been honorably discharged from the service, within a short time after his convalescence, on the ground that he no longer represented the legitimate allotment for powder. This action of the Government for powder. This action of the Government was due to the Surgeon's report, wherein it was stated, in ambiguous technicalities, that the said private Patrick Mahoney was the subsequent proprietor of three bullets, one of which he carried in his right arm, and the other two in his left leg. The report, moreover, stated that the ninefold aperture had been so skillfully lodged in the fleshy tabernacle of the Irish hero, that all attempts to dislodge them through the ordinary processes of probing, turning, cutting, gouging, and other atrocities usually perpetrated upon the living subject under such circumstances, had totally failed.

With his discharge from the service in his pocket, together with a certificate signifying that the Government would at some future time supply a little bill for services rendered, a pipe in his mouth, a thick stick (alias shillelah) under his arm, the ex-infantry man, while making down the main street of the town of K——, in the State of Michigan, tormented himself with perplexing speculations as to the means of getting back into the service again. That very morning he had called upon a celebrated physician of the place, in hopes of procuring a certificate of physical ability which would enable him to enlist again in his old regiment, but the doctor had assured him that it was quite impossible to do so, as, in the utterly disappointed, bewailed to himself the injustice with which he had been treated, and mentally anathematized the old physician, whose conduct appeared to the disappointed candidate to be prompted entirely by a spirit of personal malevolence.

"Shure it's a sin and a shame," soliloquized Pat, "that the old sawbones should say I wasn't fit for the service. I wonder where was the necessity of cheat a poor boy out of an honest living, and the chance of fighting for the dahl flag. I'll go dahl, now, be a nothing but a retrograde, and dhrive dhray ies horses. Sorra know I wouldn't trust him to physic a clothes-horse. He's swallowed a whole medical dictionary, and got the meanin' of every word foremost. And just because I've got three bullets in my arms and legs. Shure I could carry a ram-head of bullets—don't I feel them. And didn't I hear Captain Matchlock say that rest on the golden time a man had both his legs and arms in a scrimmage and fought it out on his stumps, like a mad old Irish gentleman as he was? And his name was Gyrald Fitzgerald, a relation of me own by me mother's side. Hillon! here's a pair of shoulder-straps coming down the street. By the powers, it's Captain Matchlock! Ah! isn't he the man intirely! He ought to have been born an Irishman, he takes to a shindy so aze."

The officer in question—a tall, dark-complexioned, handsome fellow—approached. As he drew near to Pat he was surprised to see the latter throw his cap into the air and dance an impromptu jig.

"Long life to ye, Captain!" shouted the Irishman; "and how's the old Hundred and Forty-seventh? and when did you leave the front of Petersburg? And how's Teddy Murphy, and Jemmy Molloy, and the old Billy Goat, and all the other boys? And sure ain't I glad to see you standing on your own pins, and not a scratch on your handsome face, my darlint, after that little scrimmage?" This little scrimmage referred to the battle of Gettysburg.

The officer, who seemed to be quite as much pleased at the meeting as did soldier of his regiment, shook hands with the private, and exclaimed:

"Why, Pat! from what part of the world did you spring?"

"Old Ireland!" answered Pat: "first flower of the earth and first gem of the say!"

"But how did you leave your regiment? You haven't deserted, I hope?"

"Deserted!" indignantly exclaimed Pat. "No; they discharged me."

"For what?" asked the Captain.

"For getting two bullets in my leg and one in my arm," said Pat, sorrowfully.

"They seem to trouble you much," said the Captain, laughing.

"Trouble!" returned the dejected Pat; "my heart's jaded with them."

"Why don't you get medical advice?"

"I'm just full of that same. The last surgeon I consulted wouldn't give me a certificate."

"What did he say?" asked the Captain.

"Oh," replied Pat, "he said a power of nonsense, and told as bad deranged idaies in his conceit."

"Nonsense!" said the Captain.

"Throe for you, Sir," replied the indignant Pat; "that's just what it was—the ignorant haythen! But, Captain, I want you to do me a favor."

"What is it?" said the Captain. "If I can help you, you have only to show me the way. I've not forgotten that lot for you I should have been left upon the field of Antietam."

"Ah!" said Pat, "that was the pleasantest scrimmage I ever got into; and, on my conscience, that bothering gentleman from Kentucky was the direct chiefery of the whole lot. Do you mind that old piece of a scythe he was laying about with? I've kept it ever since, and, by the power that played before Moses, I'm going to leave it to be handed down to my ancistors!"

"Yes," said the Captain. "I believe I should have become intimately acquainted with that interesting weapon if it had not been for your gallantry. But you haven't told me what I can do for you."

"Why then, Captain, darlint!" said Pat, "you are going back to the Potomac?"

"Certainly, Pat," replied the Captain. "The chances are that the army will advance."

"Then," said Pat, "I want you to take me along with you."

"Why, Pat, how can I take you?" said the Captain. "You know they won't allow civilians in the camp."

"Tear and ages!" cried Pat, with a howl, "I'm not a civilian. There's nothing civil about me! You know they allow you a servant; they'll see the buttons, and have no misgiving."

"I might smuggle you in in that way, to be sure," said the Captain.

"Of course you might," returned Pat; "and when it comes to the shindy—"

Pat said no more, but went through an expressive bit of gentleman with the cudgel, commencing with the sabre exercise, followed up with such accurate aim at a visionary general officer in a gray coat, and ending in a swelling an inch deep on the leveled shillelah.

"Very well," said the Captain, much amused at Pat's enthusiasm. "Since you have set your heart upon camp life I'll see what can be done for you."

"Hurrah!" exclaimed Pat, jumping up, and then executing a startling and rapid "pas seul" on the sidewalk. "Hurrah! I'm grafted into the army of the Potomac. Perhaps I'll get to be a general. Don't it read beautiful in the dispatches. On the 16th General Patrick Mahoney made a severe diversion, all alone by himself, in the midst of the enemy, and returned with the loss of one killed and seventeen wounded. Won't I get into the newspapers! Perhaps I'll be knighted, or have a leg, and they'll send me to Congress. Whew! Long life to the Mahoneys!" Here Pat executed another excited fragment of a jig or hornpipe.

"Now, Pat," said the Captain, as soon as the volatile Irishman had become a little subdued, "there is another difficulty to be met. How is it I can rely on your discretion."

"Of course you can," eagerly exclaimed Pat. "I don't know when I've had a chance to rely on it."

"Very well," said the Captain. "I want you to deliver a note to a young lady."

"I'll give you a steady hand, Pat," and you can send it through the post-office."

"Why, you stupid baste," said the Captain, "you want delivered it secretly."

"Well, 'rejoined Pat, "they won't break it open in the post-office without there's money in it; sure it's safe enough."

"No, no," said the Captain, impatiently. "I want it delivered to the young lady under her uncle and aunt won't know any thing about it."

"Of course," said Pat, confidently; "I don't know her uncle and aunt, and I'll give it to her safe enough."

"You must be careful," said the Captain, "and be sure you deliver it to the lady herself."

"Oh, I'll be careful, sure. Where does she live, the darlint?"

"Turn round," said the Captain. "Now do you see that large white house facing the end of this street on the top of the hill?"

"Murder! Captain, I can't go there," said Pat.

"Why? What's the reason?" asked the Captain, anxiously.

"I've been there before," said Pat.

"Well," said the Captain, impatiently, "that's no reason you shouldn't go there again, is it?"

"Isn't it, though," said Pat, scratching his head. "Perhaps you never had a kettle of boiling water emptied over your head, and a part of it into your stomach?"

"No, I certainly never did," said the Captain, laughing.

"Well, I have," growled Pat, "and the sensation is mighty disagreeable. I went there to see a cook girl who is the cook there, and the old woman, old Mrs. Safeguard, that's her name, she baptized me."

"Well," said the Captain, still laughing, "she didn't approve of your flame, perhaps."

"No," returned Pat, with a grin; "but she introduced me to something else, and that was boiling water. And the old gentleman, he's a nice old curmudgeon; he called me a 'thaving blackguard of a soldier,' and said I ought to be sent to the almshouse.

"That didn't suit your views, I presume," said the Captain.

"Faix! I don't know," replied Pat. "Perhaps I was thinking of the arms-house when I went to see Biddie."

"It's unfortunate," said the Captain, "that you are known there; but you must make an effort. Can't you disguise yourself?"

"I can do that same," said Pat, in the most confident manner. "I'll get some of my old mother's petticoats and shawl, and Biddie, and I'll do it."

"That might do," said the Captain, highly amused at the idea of such a transformation, "if you think you could manage it without fear of discovery."

"Of course I can," said the elated Pat. "Don't you remember when the boys used to dance jigs, on the barn floor we used to have Thanksgiving? I was always the old woman with the petticoat and the hoops I got off of a four barrel? Just you wait till you see me with the long flagrant bow on the little dudeen in my mouth, and you'll take your davy I'm my own mother entirely."

"Very well, Pat," said the Captain, "I must trust to you. Do the best you can. You'll find me at the K—— Hotel, after you have gone through your mission, which, I hope, you will carry out without going through boiling water a second time."

"Never fear me, Captain dear," cried Pat, rushing off. As he disappeared down the street the passers-by were electrified with an occasional line from the melodiously descriptive ballad of "Rory O'More."

The Captain looked after him as he disappeared, and then took his way to the hotel. On his way he reflected upon "the situation." His sole resources were the pay of a Captain in the army, rule health, indomitable will, and a buoyant and elastic disposition. He was in that singular abnormal condition of mind always the result of a dreadful fall. His was of unfathomable depth, into the abyss called love. In the face of the dangerities over which he had thrown himself he had seen a pair of blue eyes, lovingly gazing upward through a maze of golden hair, and the last object given to his view when he completely lost the sense of the stress, he found to his dismay that an obstinate abatis of dog-wood, in the shape of a miserly uncle, and wormwood, in the guise of a still more secretive aunt, completely barred the entrance to the Temple of Hymen.

Captain Matchlock knew that his brief leave of absence would not suffice. He had made a visit to obtain an interview with Mary Safeguard, for that was the name of his divinity, but had signally failed. The old curmudgeon had peremptorily opposed to the match, kept the young lady under watch and ward, and exercised such a vigilant surveillance that the accomplishment of any of the lovers for either a chance or a premeditated meeting. Letters had been intercepted, and every device that human ingenuity could invent had been resorted to to create a breach in the faith and constancy so perseveringly shown by the lovers. The Captain was at his wit's end. He had almost made up his mind to call for volunteers, storm and carry the place at the point of the bayonet, when Pat unexpectedly turned up and suggested a transformation unknown to Ovid—Mercury in petticoats!

"I wish," said the Captain, "that I had a better fortune to offer her than a Captain's pay, and a ticket in a lottery of bullets; but her guardians use her as unfeelingly as if she were my cousin, even the rude life of the camp, would be welcome to her. I have offered to take her away, by force if necessary; and I have a full conviction she would receive her; and when this war is over, and that will soon be, we would be married. I hope Pat will not fail. I must see her at once. Here we are at ease."

Here's the Times and Journal, morning edition —great news from the Army of the Potomac! Repeated attempts to cross the fords of pegtown under his arm, who now came tearing up the street in full cry.

"Here, boy!" exclaimed the Captain.

"Yes, Sir," said the boy, coming to a stop, and standing on one foot. "Here they are, Sir; morning paper—greatest fight! Capture of Richmond—all the particulars."

Never mind about the capture of Richmond," said the Captain. "I can't be interested by the newspapers so often that the army don't take much interest in it. Let me see," he continued, looking over the telegraphic column, which the boy unfolded on, starting the whole street with the news that Richmond was taken, and the war was over," said the Captain. "Hum!— Frightful murder!— 'Grand Cavalry Skirmish!' Felicitous juxtaposition that—grand cavalry skirmish! Ah! Dr. Department, of course; this correspondent was originally intended for Secretary of War. Here we have it, at last. 'Grand Cavalry Skirmish on the Army of the Potomac!' No probability of an Advance! There's something gratifying in the originality of that announcement. Some of these rebel-hearted patriots had small appetite for their breakfast this morning, I'm afraid. 'List of drafted men— Drafted men!' Ah! here it is. 'Drafted Men—Peter Safeguard!' Huzza! I have him now. I'll buy my wife. Why, this fellow must be in the last quarter of a century. He must be very reasonable to get a substitute. Mr. Peter Safeguard, in about one hour, I shall do myself the honor of calling upon you." So said, the Captain threw down the boy, which he had reached at the close of his cursory glance at the paper. Leaving him actively preparing to take the enemy's quarters, the reader may take the liberty of inspecting for himself the garrison of the white house on the top of the hill, now commanded by Peter Safeguard, vice Peter, retired for gross incapacity.

Peter Safeguard was a small pattern, about five feet four inches in height, very thoroughly bespecked and subdued, and with one trait of individuality which perhaps saved him from sinking into hopeless imbecility under the discipline of his wife's tongue. This salient point, which redeems Peter from being the most ordinary example in this sketch, was his grasping and covetous disposition. It was the only point upon which he contended with his wife. He had a shrewd notion, however, that it was expensive; and if the climate had permitted, in his cordial dislike of tallow and dress-makers, and their adjuncts, the crinoline shape of 1865, would have advocated the original fig-leaf costume as being strikingly appropriate, and, above all, economical. Mrs. Peter, in the European sense, at the age of seventy-three, becoming fascinated with the attractions of a little, pale, slender widow, married her by mistake for Peter, after he had left his wife, and brought her home to preside over his household, to the great wrath of his daughter. A great mistake this was out, and the widow found that the Amazonian daughter met with a most ignominious defeat from the fragile widow, who proved herself a very Bonaparte in arms. She not only succeeded in driving her enemy from the garrison, but beat the old diplomatist at his own weapons, by compelling him to settle every dollar of his property on her; and by dint of judicious nursing got rid of her supernumerated husband, who died in a year after their marria.e.

Mrs. Peter kept up the conflict in society; but the widow, from the experience with the daughter, retained the superiority, and spoke of her stepdaughter in so patronizing a manner to their mutual friends that the latter would have cheerfully consented to the introduction of the Celestial system of burning widows on the tomb of their defunct husbands.

This estimable lady is now seated in the drawing-room of her own house; and seated with her, in very despondent mood, the fair heroine of the story is compelled to listen to the advice, so unasked and administered, to receive the attentions of an old clothespeg whose only attractions consisted of gold spectacles, and other evidences of the great social evil, money.

"It is no use for you to talk, Mary," said Mrs. Safeguard, "what you may think of him—you are eligible parti. I am determined you shall marry him, and your uncle is determined you shall marry him; and you no doubt will make up your mind to submit."

"I think my uncle has little to do with the matter," said Mary.

"Indeed he has," replied the irascible Mrs. Peter, "and if he pleases to have a voice in the matter I'd very soon teach him that he had. His voice is mine, and whatever I am determined on is is determined on, and very determined too, or I'd know the reason why."

"But, aunt," said Mary, "you know I have given my promise to Captain Matchlock, and if you could only be induced to approve the engagement—"

"Engagement! You talk like a child; there is no engagement, and never shall be, and there's the end! I believe in the old saw, 'Marry a soldier and carry his wallet.' Besides, we have both set our hearts on your marrying Peter Safeguard."

"Why, aunt," said Mary, "he is seventy years old if he is a day!"

"Well, aunt Mrs. Peter, "that don't hurt him. If he is seventy years old he has twice seventy thousand dollars."

"And Peter rejoined Mary, "I suppose you consider equivalent to twice seventy thousand virtues."

"Nonsense, child," said Mrs. Peter, impatiently. "Since you want to talk nonsense, I recommend you your head is full of rubbish and romance. The Princes of Orange once went down on one knee and put my—your great-grandmother's ancestress on the court-ball. If it had been you, your head would have been completely tortured. It didn't spoil me, though. And I'll tell you what, Mr. Matchlock is a delightful young man, with weak eyes and light hair, with a great golden mustache, offered me his hand and heart, and I'll be bound, would have given me out his income was just six hundred dollars, not enough to pay my shoemaker's bill. I married Peter, a steady man, and a man of property—that is the consequences. He is a model of a husband, never quarrels, and we have every thing to make us comfortable. Depend upon it, there is nothing like money and the comforts it will bring."

"I would rather live on a crust for the remainder of my days," said Mary, "than marry a man I did not love."

"Stuff and nonsense!" rejoined Mrs. Peter, in the most positive manner. "I love in a cottage.' Bah! love in a pig-sty; and who is this Captain Matchlock? Nobody knows any thing about him."

"He is a brave soldier, aunt," said Mary, indignantly—"a brave soldier, who has fought for his country—a title that every man who loves his native land should be proud of."

Mrs. Peter was about to reply to this indignant burst on the part of her niece, with some reflection upon the patriotism that was based on money, when she was interrupted by the opening of the door and the appearance of the servant Peter, who came in with a newspaper in his hand, and was proceeded to walk up and down the drawing-room in a manner most remarkable, and indicated that it excited the wrath of his amiable wife.

"Mr. Safeguard," said she, "will you have the kindness to cease that most ridiculous habit of turning into my presence like a mad bull, and bounding about like a polar bear in a cage?"

"Matches!" exclaimed Peter, who was so completely taken up with his own troubles that he could not see the signs of the coming storm—"matches enough, I should think. Have you read the morning papers, Mrs. S.?"

"Yes," answered Mrs. Safeguard, in her most sarcastic manner, "I have read the morning papers; but I don't think it incumbent upon myself in consequence to behave like a lunatic, though the papers nowadays are aggravating enough to worry a saint."

"That's it," retorted Peter, with as near an approach to a sneer as his benignant countenance was capable of; "you have read the papers, and don't know the news."

"I should like to know," said the acidulous Mrs. Peter, "any sensible woman who does know the news after reading the morning paper, especially when she has read the largest portion of it the day previous."

"I have seen more than I care to see, at any rate," growled Peter.

"Mr. Safeguard," said his wife, with her most determined look, "do you intend to explain yourself, or shall I have to see force?"

"That depends," said Peter: "now do you understand?"

"The draft," said Mrs. Peter; "what draft? Do you mean to say you have got the rheumatism again?"

"The rheumatism be—blowed!" said Peter, checking himself on the utterance of an oath and substituting a milder term, "has something worse than that, or, rather, it has caught me."

A sudden light broke in upon the understanding of his wife. She stamped her foot impatiently. "You don't mean to tell me, Peter," she cried, "that you have been fool enough to get drafted!"

"Well, my dear," replied Peter, in a mildly-sarcastic manner, "as I had no particular choice in the matter, I don't see how I was going to prevent it."

"Prevent it!" retorted his wife, scornfully, "why didn't you get appointed on the Committee, and see that your name was left off the list?"

"I've had better ask," rejoined the exasperated

Peter, "why I didn't reduce myself to sixteen years of age, or become suddenly deaf and dumb."

"Peter," said Mrs. Safeguard, whose wrath had changed to contempt, "you are a fool!"

Thank you, my love," said the gratified Peter.

"Unfortunately the Government don't reject individuals of the intellectual status that you have established for me."

Mrs. Safeguard, wringing her hands à la Julia, exclaimed, like that unfortunate heroine in the Hunchback, "Whats to be done?"

Peter, misinterpreting the soliloquy for a call upon him for an opinion, proceeded to express it:

"Well," he exclaimed, "there are two horns to the dilemma: one is to shoulder a musket; and the other is to pay a thousand dollars, or more, for a substitute."

"The last is not to be thought of," said Mrs. Safeguard, reflectively.

And the first won't bear thinking of," added Peter, with a shiver.

"Oh," said Mrs. Peter, impatiently, "you are a coward!"

"The fact of my marrying you proves the contrary, my dear," said Peter, complacently.

"That's right!" retorted Mrs. Peter, "abuse your wife! But I advise you," she said, with sudden ferocity, "to save all your wrath for the enemy. You'll need it before you get through!"

At this moment, and before Peter could find a fitting retort to this last unexpected attack, a knock was heard at the door. "Come in!" said Mrs. Peter, the while it was one of the servants.

To her orde the door quietly opened, and there appeared a stalwart woman, dressed in a calico frock, which was so long that it trailed on the ground. Al nough the weather was warm she was bundled up in a large woolen shawl, while her head was ornamented with the most outrageous pattern of a straw-bonnet, dating back seemingly to the fabulous ages; a green veil almost concealed the face—what could be seen of it indicated a red, coarse, Irish countenance; while her voice, in its unmistakable brogue, proclaimed her race. This overgrown edition of Bridget, at the door and curtsied several times, until Mrs. Safeguard, irritated at the sight, cried out:

"What do you want here, old woman?"

Sure, ma'am, I'm in a dale of trouble," replied a voice so deep and hoarse that it effectually put to rout any fragrance already left by Mrs. Safeguard at her presence.

"What's that to me?" she cried. "Say what you want, and get about your business!"

"Yes, ma'am," said Pat—for it was he. "As you say, it is none of mine for the poor misery; and my boy, the only one living out of seventeen, has been grafted into the army."

"Serve him right!" ejaculated Mrs. Peter, who hated the Irish. "What business had he to come to this country?"

"Sure, ma'am, he didn't come here at all. He was born here, ma'am."—Here Pat, by some ingenious twisting around, contrived to show Mary the corner of a letter, by "poking it in the back," as he termed it, from underneath the shawl. Mary, whose perceptives had been sharpened under the surveillance to which she had been subjected, saw in this old woman an emissary of her lover, and by an almost imperceptible nod gave Pat to understand that she comprehended the plot.

"Sure, ma'am," said Pat, addressing himself to Mrs. Safeguard, "it wasn't the poor boy's fault that he was born here."

"Yes, it was," retorted Mrs. Peter. "He had no business to be born here! He's as big a fool as Peter here, who has gone and got himself drafted. But what do you want here?"

Pat, disregarding the question, grazed admiringly at Peter and exclaimed, "So they've grafted you into the army, Sir?"

"Yes, they have," said Peter, desponding as he thought of it. "The army is in luck."

"Of course," said Pat, "you are going to shoulder a musket and have a halo in the centre of your back."

"No!" replied Peter, reflectively, "I think, considering the imperfect knowledge I have of that weapon, I shall rather prefer some other here of soldiering it for me."

"Do you want a substitute?" asked Pat, eagerly.

"Well, I suppose I must have," said Peter, with a second-hand one cheap."

"I know where you can get one, Sir," said Pat.

"Where?" said Peter.

"Here," said Pat, striking himself on the chest. "I'm your man. I'll go cheap, just for the fun of the thing."

"You!" said Peter, looking contemptuously upon the blundering Irishman. "Do you think the Government will take an old woman in my place?"

"An old woman!" retorted Pat. "Begorra I he muttered to himself, "I quite forgot I was my own grandmother. Faix, Sir," he said, "I don't know why one old woman isn't as good as another old woman.

Here Mrs. Safeguard, who allowed no one to abuse her husband but herself, immediately struck in, most defiantly:

"How dare you," she cried, "call my husband an old woman, you impudent old wretch? It's my opinion you are intoxicated!"

"Sure," said Pat, "I'm fasting from all but sin this blessed moment; and you ought to be ashamed of yourself to insult a poor lone widder, without a chick or a child in the wide world—not one out of seventeen, barring my poor boy Jemmy, and they've grafted him into the army. Sure they've taken the heart entirely out of my have, oh! oh!" Here Pat began to sob violently. "I've got the draft somewhere. I feel bad. Oh! somebody give me a glass of water. Oh dear! oh dear!"

Peter, who was the soul of liberality when it came to a glass of water, told Mary to bring it, and, with Mrs. Safeguard's assistance, supported Pat into a chair, M and, in terror lest the old wretch, as she t , should Pat, should have a fit. Mary returned in a moment, bringing a glass of water. As she held it out to Pat that ingenious gentleman contrived, with two simultaneous movements, to tread heavily upon Peter's foot, and to give Mrs. Safeguard an unpleasant dig in the stomach with his elbow. While Mr. and Mrs. Peter were writhing under these inflictions Pat contrived to slip the letter into Mary's hand, who, on receiving it, turned her back and walked to the window.

"Oh, I feel so much better now," said Pat; "I feel so much relieved. Every time I hear of any body being grafted it gives me a pain in my waist."

Mrs. Peter, who had been dancing around in the extremity of pain, recovered herself in time at last sufficiently to order Peter to turn the old woman out of doors.

"I'd like to see him try it," said Pat; "I'd give him a disability in the army."

"Do you mean to say, you horrid old wretch, that you'll stay here in spite of us?" asked Mrs. Peters.

"Av course I do," said Pat, composedly. "Isn't Jemmy sleeping out on the cold ground, and you living here in luxury, you ungrateful old woman?"

"Peter," said his wife, "if you don't kick that old woman out of doors you shall go to the army as sure as my name is Safeguard."

Peter, thus urged, ordered, rolled up his cuffs and slowly advanced toward the old woman, thinking to intimidate her by the mere demonstration, but as he put out his hand to take her by the shoulder he was horrified at seeing a huge cudgel rise slowly and portentously from the folds of the woolen shawl. It shook ominously in the eyes of the startled Peter. He turned back his coat cuffs and backed away from the formidable encounter.

"No, I thank you, Mrs. S.," he cried. "I'll join the Army of the Potomac: I think it will be safer."

Mrs. Peter did not hear this refusal to obey her commands. She had suddenly become aware that her niece, with her back turned, was reading with a letter: approaching her cautiously, she caught the paper from her hands, and in a moment made herself acquainted with the contents.

"Very pretty, indeed, you minx," she cried. "A love-letter from that wretch of an officer. But I'll frustrate his plans. As for you, you graceless old woman, I'll teach you what you may expect if you ever put your foot in this house again."

So saying, she seized the only polished brass poker which stood as an ornament at the parlor fireplace, and threatening Pat with it, ordered him to leave the house, or she would turn him over to the police with her own hands.

"The police!" exclaimed Pat. "I'd like to catch one of the villains putting their hands on to a kine widder."

"Very well, ma'am, I'll see if this poker or your Irish head is the hardest," said Mrs. Peter. So saying she attacked the unfortunate Pat, and rained such a storm of blows on his back and shoulders that the terror of a hornet's nest was compelled to save himself by flight. He ran round the table, and Mrs. Peter pursued him with the fury of Achilles raging before the walls of Troy. Mary, in the while the flying foe broke down the bridges behind him in his flight by strewing chairs in the path of the infuriated Mrs. Peter, who stumbled and fell over Pat, finding himself encumbered by his long skirts, gathered them up, and consequently exposed the light blue of the infantry. Mrs. Peter, at this instant at the sight, for one moment, and then rushed from the room and shrieked for the police. Mary followed her, and Peter and Pat resumed the services of the skirmish. Pat immediately divested himself of his feminine garments, and stood in his shirt and pants, looking like blue-bird in a cage. Peter, amazed at the transformation, was unable to speak for a moment. At last, recovering from his stupor, he exclaimed:

"Who are you, you rascal?"

"Who am I?" retorted Pat, "why, don't you see, you unconscionable old haythen? I belong to the One Hundred and Forty-seventh Michigan."

"Then you mean to say," said Peter, that (pointing to the hoop-skirt) is the uniform of that regiment?"

Here Pat, looking down, discovered that he was encased in the hoops. He divested himself of that incongruous addition to his wardrobe; and standing erect, shillalah in hand, wicked pleasantly and genially upon his surviving companion.

"Now," said Peter, "I should like to know, just as a matter of curiosity, what the d—l brought you here?"

"It wasn't that gentleman at all," replied Pat "I got mine by myself."

"And," continued Peter, "you had the impudence to bring a letter clandestinely to my niece?"

"Yes, a bit," returned Pat; "I brought it in my pocket."

"Who was it from?" said Peter.

"From the gentleman who wrote it, sure," answered Pat.

"Now, mark me, my fine fellow," continued Peter, "you have laid yourself liable to severe punishment. You have entered my house surreptitiously."

"I never," replied Pat; "I entered through the door."

"And," continued Mr. Safeguard, "you are trying to escape the consequences of your misdeeds by an affected simplicity; now it's my opinion you are more knave than fool."

"Begorra," retorted Pat, "and that's more than I can say of you."

"Pat," said Peter, "you will give me the name of your employer or take the consequences."

"If it's all the same to you," said the imperturbable Pat, "I'd rather take a glass of whisky and water."

At this moment the door opened and Mrs. Safeguard appeared, followed by Captain Matchlock.

"There, Sir," said the old lady, with a double-distilled acidulous expression, "there's Mr. Safeguard, since you insist upon seeing him; but if you have any business with him, you'll find that his business is my business."

"I'm afraid you'll have to make an exception in this case, my dear Madam," said Captain Matchlock, "unless you feel disposed to join the army."

"Sir, if your business is to insult me," retorted Mrs. Peter, "I am inclined to think I may have to make an exception, although my husband does seem to be perfectly indifferent in the matter."

"You will, Mr. Safeguard, then?" said the Captain, turning to the stupefied Peter.

"The sum, Sir, as your service," replied Peter.

"Peter Safeguard," continued the Captain.

"I believe I am indebted to my godfathers for that appropriate name on the occasion of a long list of Peters," replied Peter, "but, I assure you, I had no choice in the matter," returned Mr. Safeguard.

"Then I have the pleasure of informing you that you have been drafted into the One Hundred and Forty-seventh Michigan."

"Sir," said the dauntless Peter, "the fact of my having been drafted was made disagreeably public in this morning's paper."

"Oh yes," said the Captain, "you will report yourself for examination within fourteen days from to-day, and I hope I shall soon have the gratification of shaking you by the face of the enemy."

"I assure you, Captain, that I should infinitely prefer seeing the back of the enemy in full flight," said Peter.

"That," returned the Captain, "will depend, in a measure, upon your own valor."

"That," said the dauntless Peter, "I think the chances of my witnessing that gratifying spectacle are very remote."

"Mr. Safeguard," broke in his wife, "if I were you I would not exhibit my cowardice to a stranger."

"My love," rejoined Peter, "as Iican not afford the luxury of a substitute, perhaps you will favor mind going in my place. The Government would certainly be a gainer, for I don't think there's a rebel regiment that would stand before you for a moment."

"Sir," he jabers," interposed Pat, "shd be equal to a whole battery of Parrott guns!"

"You can procure a substitute," suggested the Captain, "for a thousand dollars, or about that sum."

"I'm much obliged to you for the information," returned Peter, "but I really don't feel able to present the Government with that trifling amount of money. Now, Captain, you have seen a good deal of service. Look at me: do you think I could be of any use?"

Devil a bit!" exclaimed Pat. "Enlist the old woman."

"Do you think," persisted Peter, "the Government could get any thing out of me, physically?"

"I am afraid the Government will try the experiment," replied the Captain.

"Come," said Peter, imploringly, "find me a way out of this scrape, and I will be eternally indebted to you."

"That's two days longer than I'd let any man be indebted to me," said Pat, with a knowing shake of his head.

"I see no escape for you," said the Captain, "unless either go or pay the price of a substitute."

"Under some circumstances," said Peter, reflectively, "I think I could make great sacrifices for my country: but, unfortunately, those circumstances are not within my reach."

"Go in, old gentleman," said Pat, with an encouraging smile. "After the first battle you won't mind it."

"I have no doubt," said Peter, "that your prediction would be singularly verified; but, unfortunately, the fact is, I really can't go."

"Well, then, fight your second one first," retorted Pat, with the triumphant air of a man who had cleverly surrounded an apparently inextricable difficulty.

"You object to joining the ranks, then?" asked the Captain.

"Most decidedly," replied Peter.

"And you equally object to paying a thousand dollars?" continued the Captain.

"No," said Peter, reflectively, "I don't so much object to paying as to parting with the money."

"Well," said the Captain, "as I don't think you'll reflect much credit on the service, I'll furnish you with a substitute. Good-by."

"My dear Sir," said Peter, seizing the Captain by both hands and shaking them in a fervor of gratitude.

"On one condition," added the Captain.

"Oh!" said Peter, with a sudden abnegation of his countenance, and regarding the Captain's hands.

"I love your niece, and I have every reason to believe that she loves me," continued the Captain.

"With all my heart! Enter part of your assistance," exclaimed Mrs. Safeguard, with great superiority, "I can inform you, Sir, that you are very much mistaken."

"On one condition," added the Captain.

"Oh!" said Peter, with a sudden abnegation of his countenance, and regarding the Captain's hands.

"I love your niece, and I have every reason to believe that she loves me," continued the Captain.

"With all my heart! Enter part of your assistance," exclaimed Mrs. Safeguard, with great superiority, "I can inform you, Sir, that you are very much mistaken."

"Indeed, he is not, aunt!" exclaimed a voice, gently but decidedly; "and I think my opinion on that subject is worth some consideration."

This opinion conflicting so strongly with her aunt's was uttered by Mary, who now advanced and took the hand of the Captain.

"Now," said the Captain, holding Mary by the hand, "give your consent to our marriage and I will furnish the substitute. If you do not, I think we shall have to manage to do without it."

Peter, whose dread of the army, together with his love of money, combined to excite a rebellion against his better half, reflected a moment, and then, turning to the Captain, exclaimed:

"It's a bargain. Get me out of the scrape, and she is yours."

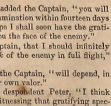
"I say," exclaimed the angry Mrs. Peter, "he shan't have her!"

"Dry up, old woman," interposed Pat, "or we'll have you grafted into the army."

"You have my uncle's consent, Charles," said Mary, "and it is quite needless to say you have mine."

Mrs. Safeguard looked from one to the other with amazement.

"Then I suppose," she said, sarcastically, "you have all made up your mind that I am nobody."



"Not a soul," said the irrepressible Pat. "You're neither use nor ornament. You and the old supernumerary can go on to the retired list until his turn comes round again." And then he added, "If he is a poor crather entirely," nodding to Peter, "I hope that it won't be him, but Patrick Mahoney —Wedding Cake?—that will be graded into the army."

HUMOR OF THE DAY.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The following communications are accepted:—"Twenty Greenbacks." "From Pudding Grove." "A Case of Sham-pain. By a Re-tale-er." "Will you take some Wedding Cake?"

DECLINED.—"Castor Oil and Catnip Tea." "A Night in the Rain." "Kicks, Slaps, and Thumps." "Good Advice."

THE GIRLS OF OUR PERIOD.

A gentleman was about completing the sale of a horse when he was asked to guarantee the sound wind and limb. "Guarantee!" cried the gentleman, in a little uncertain accent and innocently inquired, "Grandpa, which horse you gettin' to sell—that one you built a mile yesterday to make him draw?" The bargain was at an end.

"You like plenty of nice things, don't you, Jimmy? How many cakes did you have at the pastry-cook's yesterday?" "Five, four, a sponge-cake, then an almond-cake, then a currant-cake, then a sweet-cake, and then a lemon-cake!"

"Well, Mr. Tree, if you're about to leave I shall detain you further," exclaimed an incensed landlady to her lodger, who was slightly in arrears.

A clerk in a music-store was lately overpowered by a fastidious young lady who wanted to purchase "Mr. Howl's——some cliffhanger—gentlemen's under-garment!" The clerk is still alive.

A correspondent tells of a youngster who, on being admonished by his teacher not to take all the bank from the dish, because he should save some for manners, replied, after looking around the table, "Well, I don't see any manners here to save it in!"

The feast of imagination is described as follows: "When your stomach is empty and your pocket ditto sit down and read a cookery-book."

Good news for husbands—Ladies wear their dresses longer than they used.

A sharp grocer, when a customer who was buying a gallon of vinegar observed that a great deal was wasted in the measure after it was turned, remarked: "There was more in the measure before I drew your gallon."

Mrs. Partington says that lies, having become enameled of a stem of thistles, has led her to the mental altar. He didn't appear like least bit decomposed on the back of his wedding-cards except two little cubebs with wings.

A confirmed old bachelor used the following argument against matrimony: "Calico is a great promoter of latitude." Some married man, who was present at the moment, either with head or hand, they must keep clear of the institution altogether, as all events, from a pink waist, a swelling chest, a pressure of two delicate hands, and so on much to the same, a man as three times, the measles, a bargain-sized whooping-cough, a pair of lack-jaws, and an hydrophobia, and the rest's hell.

Different rounds travel with different degrees of velocity. A call to dinner will run over a ten-acre lot in a minute and a half, while a summons to work will take from five to ten minutes.

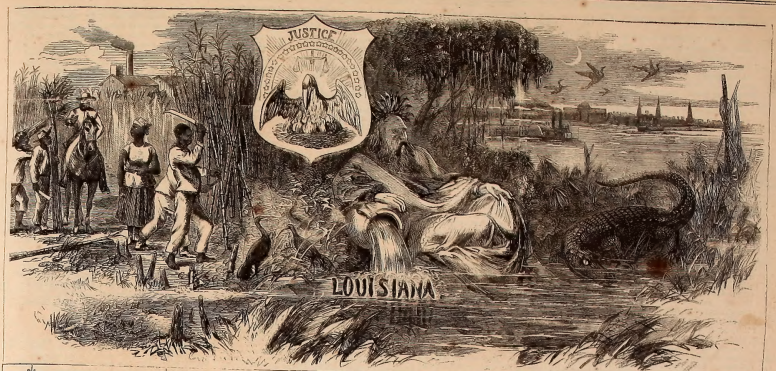
"My dear," said Mrs. Dogberry to her daughter, "you should not look at the people so high in the street as the street." "Then, ma," replied the maiden, "how shall I ever show the beauty of my new bonnet, unless I have almost ruined my eyesight to manufacture? I'm sure I don't care if the brute do look at me." Mrs. Dogberry spoke of "the sin of vanity and the beauty of decency," and walked off in high dudgeon.

"My dear," said a gentleman to a young lady whom he hoped to marry, "do you intend to make a fool of me?" "No," replied the lady, "Nature has saved me the trouble."

A county old bachelor says that Adam's wife was called Eve because when she appeared man's day of happiness was drawing to a close.

A country "chap," who recently visited the city for the first time, gives his views of the ladies in this way: "Some wear in every circumference and some wear in many strings clene 'em's alines a woman, I s'pose; but how much can the holler is that to me with men, when it comes to the genuine, the spectatin' don no. A feller marys a wife, and then, when it comes to the test, he finds her outside in his arms but regular anatomy. If men is pay deceaved, what is to be said of the female that deceive for a hundred and forty weight, but hasn't really so much fat on her as would grease a griddle? All the spiritual pleasures consisting of cotton and whalebone."

Do not ever rely on delicacy in the choice of his companion, when you marry by agreement of convenience. He once called a clergyman a fool, who, indeed, was little more. The latter, however, told the wedding party of this saga to the bishop. "Do," said the doctor, "and my lord bishop will make you a deacon."



EPIGRAM ON A DRUNKEN SMITH.

"I heard that Sump the smith, for ale and spice, Sold all his tools, and yet he kept his vice!"

It being reported that Lady Caroline Lamb had, in a moment of passion, knocked down one of her pages with a stool, the poet Moore, to whom the story was told by Lord Melbourne, observed, "I am sorry to learn such material for a literary lady than to double down a page." "I would rather," replied his lordship, "strike Lady Caroline to turn over a new leaf."

THE LOST FOUND.—[DRAWN BY A. R. WARD.]

MAP OF LOUISIANA

SCALE OF MILES

ARKANSAS

MISSISSIPPI

GULF OF MEXICO

LONGITUDE WEST FROM GREENWICH

LONGITUDE WEST FROM WASHINGTON

LOUISIANA.

LOUISIANA extends from the 29th to the 33d degree of north latitude, and lies between the 89th and 94th degrees of longitude west from Greenwich. Mean annual temperature varies from 73° to 64° Fahr. Area 41,255 square miles, of which, in 1860, 2,707,108 acres were in improved farms, and 6,001,468 in unimproved farms, together valued at $230,783,602; and the value of farming implements and machinery at the same period was $13,688,223.

Surface.—The Delta of the Mississippi occupies nearly one-fourth of the surface of this State. It is entirely composed of alluvium, and the elevation is not more than five metres above the surface of the Mississippi River, and much of it is annually inundated by the overflow of its waters. The Levee, an artificial embankment, commences a short distance below Baton Rouge on the east side, and extends nearly to the mouth of the Mississippi River; and on the west side it extends nearly the entire length of the course of the Mississippi in the State. The southwestern portion of the State consists of salt marsh near the Gulf shore; thence rising slightly inland, it forms extensive and fertile prairies. The region along the Mississippi River, and for 30 to 50 miles west, is annually inundated, and is of exceeding fertility; and so also are the lands bordering the Red River. The northern central portion of the State is slightly elevated, and so also is the ridge between the Red and Sabine rivers. The Mississippi, with its numerous affluents—the Red River, etc.—is the great channel of drainage; and in its lower courses diverges from it the Atchafalaya, La Fourche, and Iberville, all of which empty into the Gulf of Mexico. The only other rivers of note are the Pearl, from the State of Mississippi, which flows along a portion of the eastern border of Louisiana, and the Sabine, from Texas, which runs along about three-fourths of its western border. Several lakes occur, the most noted of which are Pontchartrain, Borne, Chemitlacbe, Calcasieu, etc. It has an entire sea-coast line of about 500 miles, which affords but few good harbors.

The population of the State in 1860 was 708,002, of which 357,629 were whites, 18,647 free colored, and 331,726 were slaves.

PARISHES.	Whites.	Slaves.		Free colored.	Aggregate.
		Blacks.	Mu-lattoes.
Ascension	3,940	7,163	6,598	107	17,808
Assumption	5,199	10,000	7,000	84	22,283
Avoyelles	5,903	7,4	6,061	574	19,967
Baton Rouge	4,707	7,0	7,303	1,307	21,417
B. Rouge, N.	1,309	113	4,300	45	5,767
Bienville	2,000	1,000	1,000	100	4,100
Bossier	3,343	7,257	603	11,048	40,928
Caddo	4,236	6,000	6,000	1,000	17,236
Calcasieu	4,467	2,0	1,200	2,0	9,0
Caldwell	1,859	1,0	1,0	100	4,159
Carroll	4,150	10,350	1,951	15,052	64,505
Catahoula	4,000	8,000	8,000	1,000	21,000
Claiborne	8,000	0	6,20	918	31,071
Concordia	4,247	12,000	12,000	906	29,153
De Soto	4,377	14,1	7,1	12,1	16,954
Feliciana	6,000	8,000	8,000	1,000	23,000
Iberville	6,903	287	4,068	176	11,834
Jefferson	4,000	2,000	2,000	1,000	9,000
Lafayette	4,000	2,000	2,000	1,000	9,000
Lafourche	7,203	14,0	4,78	1,0	14,044
Livingston	2,415	2,0	1,0	1,0	6,415
Madison	1,040	76	11,662	814	14,152
Morehouse	3,764	6,0	8,322	742	18,828
Natchitoch's	6,000	8,000	8,000	1,000	23,000
Orleans	146,000	10,000	10,000	9,500	25,500
Ouchita	1,887	2,0	2,0	0	4,737
Plaquemine	4,500	7,0	7,0	1,0	19,500
Pt. Coupee	4,0	12,0	11,162	1,7	28,947
Rapides	6,0	12,0	12,0	1,0	31,000
Sabine	1,0	1,0	1,0	1,0	4,0
St. Bernard	1,411	1,0	1,0	1,0	4,411
St. Charles	1,0	3,0	3,0	1,0	8,0
St. Landry	8,0	12,0	12,0	1,0	33,0
St. James	3,5	6,0	6,0	1,0	16,5
St. J. Bapt.	3,0	7,0	7,0	1,0	18,0
St. Landry	10,3	16,0	16,0	1,3	43,3
St. Martin's	3,0	6,0	6,0	1,0	16,0
St. Mary's	5,0	12,0	12,0	1,0	30,0
St. Tammany	3,0	1,0	1,0	1,0	6,0
Tensas	1,4	7,0	14,0	1,0	36,0
Terre Bonne	4,0	12,0	12,0	1,0	31,0
Union	6,0	8,0	8,0	1,0	23,0
Vermilion	4,0	1,0	1,0	1,0	7,0
Washington	2,0	2,0	1,4	1,0	6,0
Wilkinson	6,0	12,0	12,0	1,0	31,0
Total	357,629	18,647	331,726	46,0	708,002

The great staple product of Louisiana is sugar, of which in 1860 it produced 227,726 hogsheads of 1000 pounds each, and 13,439,123 gallons of molasses. The grain crops of the same period consisted of: wheat, 32,398 bushels produced; rye, 26,063; Indian corn, 5,953,743; oats, 59,371; barley, 1,000; buckwheat, 160; rice, 6,331,257 pounds; and there were produced of pease and beans, 431,148 bushels; Irish potatoes, 1,253,253; sweet-potatoes, 1,777,588 bales of ginned cotton of 400 pounds each; tobacco, 29,940 pounds; wool, 290,647; hay, 52,721 tons; and there were made at the same time, 1,444,742 pounds of butter; cheese, 6154; and 250,481 pounds of honey. Home-made manufactures were valued at $692,096. The live stock in 1860 consisted of, 78,703 horses; 91,762 asses and mules; 129,655 cows; 238,338 working oxen; and other cattle, 326,655; sheep, 181,534; swine, 634,295; valued, in the aggregate, at $24,346,940. Value of animals slaughtered, $3,000,000.

Manufactures, etc.—There were, in 1860, 1744 establishments of industry, with a capital invested in real and personal estate in the amount of $7,151,172. The value of raw materials consumed was valued at $6,738,466; hands employed, 7853 males and 916 females; articles valued at $13,688,223. The internal improvements in 1860 consisted of several lines of railroads, the aggregate length of which amounted to 334 miles, and cost $8,021,000; and there was canal and slack-water navigation amounting in the aggregate to 19 miles.

Education.—The free-school and seminary funds in 1860 amounted to $1,106,313. The superintendent of Public Education in 1865 reports: "Our system is very defective in nearly every essential particular, and before we can possibly realize the benefits which should flow from the large annual amount expended for the purpose of carrying it out, it is absolutely necessary that the same be entirely remodeled and placed upon a more practical foundation."

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

A NORTHERN teacher, who in the far South is now striving to teach "the young idea how to shoot," writes as follows:

"Our schools are three in number, and contain about 225 pupils. Many more could be gathered, but the room is full. I have a primary school for the children of both sexes, with intermediate schools for the larger boys and girls. The privileges of these schools for several years have been peculiar, and their tone of order are very creditable. Some of my brothers and sisters who have taught here thought it learned more at this school than he ever did before; that he could do all kinds of nothing but sit and chew tobacco and spit on the floor, adding that the teacher was a 'lady.'

"I noticed some of the little fellows chewing tobacco and spitting over the floor as I passed to and from recess, but said nothing about the former. I was somewhat surprised on coming to school one morning to find the following small epitome."

"Now, do not think that last-mentioned idea no very "crude." On the contrary, we are inclined to the opinion that these Southern children may be "reckoned" as being at least one day in advance of large class of grown-up New Yorkers, in regard to the subject of—we may as well use the vernacular—spitting. Nothing shocks the undisputed right of every man—and every woman, too, for that matter, "free and equal" right to all, in the popular doctrine nowadays—to spit upon his own particular carpet as much as he pleases, provided his wife and children are not thereby annoyed. This is their own property, or supposed to be, and he is entitled to ornament it according to his own taste. But this promiscuous spitting in public places is another matter altogether, and one of serious annoyance in our city cars. How often a man enters a car, and, with a nonchalant air, seats himself, little dreaming that he has taken two steps inside! Or, if it chance that he sits by an open window, it never occurs to him to use the street as a spittoon. No, he will spit upon his coat or upon his head, the floor is more convenient. This is not so much to be wondered at when it is considered that subsequently it is necessary for some individuals to experiment. We "found" it the other day. About midway in the car was—well, not a lady, but a woman, who was neatly dressed like a gentleman, earnestly engaged in conversation. He evidently was a "gentleman" by nature, "discharged" at pretty regular intervals of about thirty-three and a half seconds during a rule of nearly an hour, to the great annoyance of all who sat within the vicinity, and to the imminent danger of her dress.

"A vigorous application was set in the corner of a car the other day, chewing his cud, and enjoying the scenery through an open window. Every now and then, however, he complacently turned his head, and with one hand would his receiver apparently at the dress of a lady opposite, presumably his wife. The lady, finally, became somewhat disgusted, and drew her drapery away as far as possible. Presently the man slit his mark again, though he was too absorbed to notice the movement. Then, with a remark of 'Sir,' and the indignant lady, pointing emphatically to the offended silk dress, "I'll thank you to spit out of the window!"

Another incident of a similar nature came under our observation a week or two since. A lady, a friend of the Right Avenue car, accompanied by a little girl of some four years old, entered the forward car, and proceeded to pass their little pets. The seats being filled, the child stood near the door, apparently delighted with the motion of the car; meanwhile a gentleman, unobserved, entered from the further end, but just as he reached the door he "discharged" his contents, and the child received the whole broadside of the little girl. You might have lighted a match at the lady's eyes as, with an appearance of extreme disgust, she took the child in her arms, and left the car, not to be seen again.

If it were only the genuine article—the "pure juice of the cigar," as to speak—that came out of a man's mouth, one could not mind so much if accidents did happen, but such thing as tobacco is a luxurious. Many men won't linger on the subject, but beg some ingenious Yankee to invent a small, potent, pocket-spittoon, and put it on the market."

SOME time ago doubters in men had half-submerged in mud, while others were drowned in the overflowing of the night-multitude of men and horses, suggests that our city authorities be requested to construct a causeway by which pedestrians and equestrians could cross the streets they without peril to life and limb. She furthermore invites attention to the "Crossing Sweepers" who stand across Broadway from the terminus of the cars, at the Astor House, to the opposite corner, and then enable passengers to cross at only the utmost imaginable peril to ragbits?"

If such a plan were practicable it would certainly add greatly to the comfort and safety of the community in general; as well as lighten the labors of the attentive policemen, who are now compelled to give such aid as is possible to ladies in crossing the streets.

At the New England dinner which is annually given in New York, on the anniversary of the Pilgrim Fathers' Landing Day, the following toast was given: "Women—the strong staff and beautiful rod which sustained and comforted our fathers through the wilderness of the Pilgrim journey."

MR. THEODORE TILTON having invited to respond to this, some gentle spirit undertook to do the honors for him, two or three or which we quote for the benefit of our readers:

"There was good Mistress Bradford, whose fate were not unlike that of many a Pilgrim Mother. She died, in the season, came only near enough to see but not to enter the promised land. Her husband, the governor, survived her, and—and to this day the sea is her grave, and Cape Cod her monument. Then there was Priscilla Mullins, who married a perpetual June Engineer, to smelter and overturn those mountains of difficulty which lay in the way of his love. Those mountains were more than a Dagmore; it is a matter, to the astonished spectator, how they ever got out of the way. Then, after the first vessel, with three masters, there came the Mayflower, with the Pilgrim Fathers, leaving tracts drawn from the olden land by those white wheeled vehicles which are known as Conscience Carts. For instance, Governor Bradford, a tenacious widower, went to the Dutch, and, being rebuffed, went to the Indians, and love-letter over the wide ocean into the lap of Alice Southworth—and Priscilla Mullins was left out in the cold. She said, 'Yes, I will go.' And she went! And it is said that the Governor, in the course of time, married Priscilla Mullins. Which, according to the New Theology, furnishes the providential explanation of the whole Pilgrim Father overland!"

The reader stated that each of the Pilgrim Fathers as found good wives had doubtless their full share of matrimonial "scrapes." And among the early histories of Connecticut there was one which said: "No Gospel minister shall smite people in marriage; no civil magistrates shall smite people in marriage; as they may do it with less scandal and liberty."

In closing, the following advice was given; whether it had the effect to shorten or to lengthen the feast, is not recorded:

"The cottages of our forefathers had few pictures on the walls, but many needles hung in a row. King Charles the Twelve Good Rulers, the eleventh of which was, 'Make no long meals.' Now King Charles lost his head, and you will probably make a long meal. Then always, after your long meal, you go home to your wife, and what does she say to you? Scold? You will find my name—Woman—a beautiful rod? Now, my advice is, 'Kiss the rod!'"

A London Journal presents a somewhat lengthy commendation from a New York correspondent on the subject of dress, particularly that style of dress which ladies sometimes appear in or rather out of, and which is sometimes called the ragged girl dress. This writer, after remarking that, although fashionable New York ladies are not at all averse to displaying their charms in this and portion, yet they do shrink from appearing in full dress at places which are open to the public—refuse an incident with a story:

The lady referred to in the following story had some unpleasant experiences in attempting to disregard the fashionable requirements in regard to the unsuitableness of certain styles of apparel in public places.

"She became a widow in comfortable circ., and having married a South Carolina planter, effected no little sensation in the aristocratic circles of New England folk. She went at Newport one season, and having just returned from Europe, had a new gay wardrobe. One evening at the tea-table a gentleman with whom she had a very slight acquaintance asked her to accompany him, and the lady spoke for him happening to have no butter-knife by it, he used his own pen-knife, bright knife to take a bit of butter. He was a man of culture and social standing, but a Yankee, and his natural pretension she evidently detested. She seized the opportunity, and calling a waiter, said in an elaborately ruptured Southern accent, 'Take away that butter. That gentleman has had his knife in it.' He took up the offending article, looked at it over upon him and upon the ladyy, but by-and-by she stretched out her hand for another knife, and the man clapped dried beef, which stood between her and her victim. This was a second stroke, but she was fairly turned at once, and calling a waiter, said, only as if he were asking for more tea, 'Pshaw—take that dried beef, this hot tea had her fingers in it.' In this encounter, such as it was, he was brought to bay, but he rallied, and she did not forgive or forget. So a few days afterward, they being at dinner, she, complying with the fashion of the adopted since her tour to Europe, and which was so very 'chic' that it would have excited unfavorable comment if omitted, took one from a dish of fresh figs before her, and putting it up to plate, began to eat it with a manner of much pleasure, but saying in a tone of unmistakable significance, which was heard all around her, 'I beg of you, Sir.' He accepted it gratefully, and taking in his turn a brief time to enjoy it, said, in a tone of a tutor with 'A fig for you, Madam.' She fled the table, and took her room, and the unfortunate victim left the house. It was generally agreed that he had done what a gentleman would, although he had not been in the conversation as much that he was holding utilities of offence, and applauded for his wit; and nobody except perhaps a few of her slavefolding friends, pitied her.

The other day a respectably-dressed individual called at an undertaker's in this city, and, nearly choked with sobs, and with a most pathetic countenance enquired in weighing the tears from his eyes, informed the lady in attendance that he had lost a very dear friend, and that he desired to see the coffin in the store. She showed him a number, and at length, when his grief had somewhat subsided, he selected one and requested that it should be directed to be sent to a certain number in Hamy Street. He took out a well-filled pocket-book, and handed the lady a $100 bill. Not suspecting that a man who was laboring under such a misfortune could be a rogue, she changed the bill, giving him fifty, fifty other bills and the change. It was soon discovered that the $100 bill was counterfeit, and that a coffin was not at present required at the house designated by the Inspector.

An extraordinary marriage recently took place in Philadelphia, the bridegroom being rather below middle stature, and the bride rather above standard and fine proportions, while the bride weighed five hundred and eighty-five pounds.

The English language fairly deserves some such criticism as the Frenchman made, who, in attempting to study our grammar, complained bitterly of the irregular verbs. "Policeman, stop!" he cried, "I've got. Did you ever see one such verb?" And with the utmost gravity he read from a sheet of paper, "I go, I shall go, departure, the cloak out, we cut stick, ye or you nakes trucks, they absquatulate. Now then! man, form!" What dismissar verbs you have in your English language!

A French chemist has invented, for summer use, a fuel of its description: Ground charcoal, four parts; starch, one part; tannin, one part; nitrate of potash, one part. Solidified, they will burn without flame or smoke a long time with intense heat. A four-ounce cake will boil one pint of water in 15 minutes.

A good story with a good moral is never amiss, especially if every one practices upon the lesson inculcated:

"A young man, on his way home one evening, occasionally called at his house for a supply of milk. One morning he came with the pitcher, as usual. He found his good wife rose to wash upon him, but the demon said, "I will fill and go." She did so, and meantime the demon made some inquiries of the milk-woman, and discovered that the husband was a drunkard. While the demon waited him to go out to the barn with the pitcher, he entered, "Thank you, Sir," the demon, pointing to one of the cows, exclaimed, 'Thank you, Sir,' and the 'Wonder' looked. The man thanked him heartily for the cow, and started. He then looked around, and saw the sweet face of the attitude of deep thought until the man had gone some rods. He then looked at the pitcher, and said, 'Where's the cow?' The man looked around, and the demon added, 'Let that cow remain with you, and you will be rich.' He did so, and when he came back into the yard again, the demon had gone. The man went into the house, and told his wife what had occurred. She replied with a sigh, 'I have a story to tell you, too.' She then related the story of the visit of the demon. Coming upon the group so suddenly that they were unable to escape, he had taken—a cow. The divine looked on a while, and then, raising his hat, invited the gentlemen present to attend church the next day and invite him privately to the house. The next day Beneficy found Judge and lawyers seated in the "Amen corner." The sermon was one of the most unpremeditated:

"Friends, the citizens of this town have built a fine church; there is still fifteen hundred dollars due. We propose to take up a collection to-day, and finish paying the Judge! I go one hundred dollars; who goes before?" The Judge, following the example, slowly responded, "I see your hundred." "Thank you, brother," says the divine, "will any one raise it?" looking at the same time at lawyer No. 1. The lawyer saw he was in for it, and quietly responded, "I go a hundred bills," and so on through the list. The divine raised down the bar and when the money was counted over by a thrifty, skilful waiter announcing, "I see the ten hundred and 'still you?'"

Our readers will appreciate the astonishment of the congregation. We venture, however, that those lawyers will not soon have the divine to witness a "social game of whist" where stands "see" such other, "go it blind," and call the hand.

One of the most marked features of the present fashion is the omnipresence of rufling. Embroidery and even lace have both been swept away before it as chaff before a whirlwind. Every lady garnishes her clothing now with rufling, for the plainest and least expensive rufling is considered more elegant than the most extraordinary embroidery. In view of this enormous demand for rufling, the MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY learn the same relation to the female toilet that the steam engine does to the traveling world. For in the old days when rufling was laid little progress was made, and even spent all the moments they could glean from necessary duties in the never-ending and fearfully tedious toil of hemming. Now rufling is the very fruit and mean the hand-made rufling is when compared with the brilliant and perfect article fabricated by the MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY, which, in their perfect evenness and unbaired beauty, seem rather a work of art than one of domestic manufacture. Those garments which are not bordered with magic rufling nowadays may be said to be only "half made up" and "not to be worn in a mass" fame and imported conclusion."—New York Leader.

Office of the Company No. 95 Chambers Street.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE.

A SURE& application renders the hair,no matter how stiff or unruly, soft and pliable for all day. It is conceded by all who have used it to be the best and cheapest hair-dressing. Prepared by Joseph Burnett & Co., Boston, and for sale every where.

WHY IS IT?—Why do people so crowd the rooms of the CORNER DENTAL ASSOCIATION? Six reasons. First. Because they originated the use of the gas, and know how to make and administer it in the best manner. Second. Because they have additional sets in 9-10 positions without the first failure or accident, and therefore have other thousand operations. Third. Because they do nothing but extract teeth, and constant experience enables them to do it in the best manner. Fourth. Because nearly all the best dentists in the city recommend their patients to them. Fifth. Because they make a specialty of it from every day. Sixth. Because they agree to make no charge if they cannot extract with pain.

Their office is at 19 and 20 Cooper Institute, New York.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

STORY OF THE GRAND MARCH.

BEADLE'S CITIZENS' DIME EDITION OF

REPORTS OF

Major-Gen. W. T. SHERMAN.

OFFICIAL COPY, COMPLETE.

Embracing:

I. CAMPAIGN AGAINST ATLANTA.
II. CAMPAIGN AGAINST SAVANNAH.
III. CAMPAIGN THROUGH THE CAROLINAS.
IV. JOHNSTON'S TRUCE AND SURRENDER.

Together with the GRAND MARCH THROUGH GEORGIA.

Uniform in style with the Dime edition of Grant's Report, by T. B. MAGRUDER, and will be published at the same price.

Sold by all Newsdealers; or sent, POST PAID, on receipt of the price—TEN CENTS. Address

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers,
118 Williamsgk., New York.

AGENTS WANTED TO SELL

GRANT

AND HIS CAMPAIGNS.

By HENRY COPPEE, A.M.,

Editor of The United States Service Magazine.

With splendid Steel Portrait of

Lieut.-Gen. U. S. GRANT, Major-Gen. SHERMAN,
Major-Gen. MEADE, Major-Gen. SHERIDAN,
Major-Gen. GEORGE H. THOMAS, Major-Gen. SHERMAN,
Major-Gen. CANBY, and MAPS, PLANS, &c.

1 volume, 8vo, 900 pages, $3 50.

This splendid work is published

UNDER GENERAL GRANT'S SANCTION,

and is the only authentic and official record of his extraordinary campaigns. It is a book that every person will want, and one that every one can command readily.

SOLD ONLY BY SUBSCRIPTION.

Agents wanted. Send for circulars, containing full description, and liberal inducements offered. Address

C. B. RICHARDSON, Publisher,
No. 560 Broadway, N. Y.

GOLDEN PALM OIL SOAP.

For the Bath and Toilet.
FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
LINDLEY M. ELKINTON, MANUFACTURER,
118 Market St., Philadelphia.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make SIX Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine an invention different from any other. Send a sample and free by mail for 50c. that retails easily for $6, by B. L. WOLCOTT, 161 Nassau street, New York.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

CHEAPEST AND BEST. Price of Presses, $10, $16, $23, and $30. Price of an Office, with Press, $175, $23, and $30. Send for a circular. Address the LOWE PRESS COMPANY, 23 Water Street, Boston.

VIOLINS and BOWS

Sent to any part of the U. S. on receipt of following prices: GERMAN, $5, $8, $10, $12, $15, $20, $25, $30, $40.
DOUBLE BASS, $8, $7, $9, $11, $12, $7, $12.
FRENCH, Violins and Bows, $8, $10, $12, $15, $20.
ITALIAN, $6, $10, $15, $18, $16, $18, $25, $30, $35.
OLD VIOLINS, $20, $25, $30, $40, $50, $60.
MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of every description at lowest prices. Send stamp for price list.
Especial attention given to this department.
FREDERICK BLUME, 305 Bowery.

"Camphor-Ice with Glycerin."

A certain and speedy cure for Chapped Hands and lips. Price 25 cents, or sent by mail for 35 cents. Made only by W. E. HPPERSON, S. E. Corner of Broad and Parish Streets, Philadelphia.

LADIES' LETTER.

Five Anatomical Engravings, with Explanations.
By an Experienced Nurse and Female Physician.
Sent in a sealed envelope for Fifteen Cents.
Address Mrs. DR. KEWLON, P. O. Box 70, N. Y.

Holiday Presents.

100,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.,

Worth $500,000!

TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,

AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR UNTIL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	Each.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$115 00
100 Gold Watches	75 00
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	40 00
400 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	18 00
30 @ Revolving Castors	$15 00 to 18 00
200 Drinking Cups	7 00 to 10 00
300 Oval and Chased Gold Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00
300 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 00 to 10 00
300 Ladies' California Diamond Rings	3 00 to 8 00
400 Magic Spring and Snap Lockets	3 00 to 10 00
1000 Gold Pens, Silver-Mounted Holders	2 00 to 5 00
300 @ Gold Lever, Fully Enlived Russian Cases	6 00 to 8 00
500 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00
300 Tea, Dessert, & Table Spoons, per doz.	10 00 to 15 00
300 Dessert and Table Forks, per doz.	14 00 to 24 00
400 Butter Knives, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
300 Napkin Rings, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
2,000 Other Articles	1 00 to 5 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can be had for, are first put into envelopes, sealed up and mixed, and, when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail on receipt of twenty cents; five (5) sheets for $1; 90 for $5; 65 for $10; and 100 for $15.

Agents wanted everywhere. Great inducements to ladies and gents to act as such. Full set to send for circular, which gives special terms, full list, and description.

Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

ESTABLISHED 1850.

[From the Rev. J. W. Poland's Autobiography.]

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

It was early in the spring of 1855 that this Compound was originally given to a member of my family who suffered with an irritation of the throat, attended with a disagreeable cough. I had noticed for some months a want for some preparation, having for its basis the inside bark of white pine, which we can compendiate as to be very useful in the case of the throat and lungs. To test the value of it in diseases alluded to, we expended a small quantity of the Medicine that I had been planning, and gave it in teaspoonful doses. The result was surprisingly gratifying. Within two days the irritation of the throat was removed, the cough exhibited but little effort, and within a few days after this I sent some to a lady in Londonderry, N. H., who had been suffering for some months with a bad cough, considered by a sudden cold, and had raised mucus streaked with blood. In one week's time I received a letter from her, stating that ten ounces of it, and got well. In November, 1855, I advertised it for sale under the name of WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

As a remedy for kidney complaints the White Pine Compound stands unrivaled.—Boston Journal.

This great Vegetable Remedy is now offered to the afflicted, having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where it must have been known so well known. It cures sore throat, coughs, diphtheria, bronchitis, spitting of blood, and pulmonary affections generally. It is a remedy for diabetes, bleeding from the kidneys and bladder, and gravel, for piles and internal dropsy it will be found valuable. Sold by druggists and dealers in medicines generally.

GEO. W. SWETT, M.D., PROPRIETOR.

Boston, Mass.

SUNHAMS & VAN SCHAAK, Chicago, Ill.,
JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio,
GENERAL AGENTS FOR THE WEST.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

American Pocket TIME-KEEPER.

FIFTY CENTS EACH.

The most novel and useful invention of the age. Constructed on the most approved scientific principles, and warranted to indicate solar time with greater accuracy than the most expensive gold or silver repeater, while the low price set before the public places it within the reach of every one. It is emphatically the timepiece for the million. Neat, cheap, and durable; perfectly accurate; not liable to get out of order. No one should be without it. Price, 50 cents each; sent by mail, postage paid, or silver gilt, 60 cts. Sent by mail postpaid to any part of the world. CAUTION.—This invention is fully protected by patents in the principal manufacturing Company, and all parties are cautioned against buying or offering for sale any IMITATION, under no name but what Attention of Name. Address AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Albany, N. Y.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

501 BROADWAY (Cor. Nicholas Block),

Photographic Materials, Stereoscopic Goods,

WAR VIEWS,

SCENERY, ALBUMS, &c.

Photograph Albums, great assortment, Cartes de Visite of Natural Persons, &c., &c.

French Enamels, and American Novelties.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief, and effects a permanent cure. Sent directly It is warranted to cure.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

DR. STRICKLAND'S MEDICATED LIQUID COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

$1500 PER YEAR! We want agents every where to sell our IMPROVED $20 Sewing Machines. Under hook. Under feed. Fully Warranted five years. Above salary or large commission paid. The only machine sold in the United States for less than $40 which are fully licensed by Howe, Wheeler & Wilson, Grover & Baker, Singer & Co., and all other sewing machines Infringements. Circulars Free. Address or call upon Shaw & Clark, Biddeford, Maine.

"THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER," a rare and sparkling paper, sent three months on trial for 10 cents. Address "BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H.

Superfluous Hair Removed

From all parts of the body in five minutes, without injury to the skin, by Upham's DEPILATORY POWDER. Mailed to any address for $1 25, by R. T. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. Sold by all druggists.

THE DAYS OF BRASS JEWELRY Are Over.

THE COSMOPOLITAN

JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,

Capital, $2,500,000.

Great One-Price Gold Sale.

Sell no Brass or so-called Plated JEWELRY.

WARRANT ALL JEWELRY GOLD, OR NO SALE.

Let it be distinctly understood that this is emphatically a GOLD SALE, by an association of manufacturers, on a one-price average system, and that not a single article of brass or plated jewelry is included in the whole immense stock.

250,000

Pieces, Gold and Silver Watches, Diamond Rings, Sets of 14th Silverware, Fine Gold Jewelry, Photograph Albums, &c.,

Worth $2,500,000,

All to be sold for two dollars each, an average price of one-fifth the usual cost, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.

INSURING THE DOLLAR WORTH FOR $2.

☞ THE PROOF.—We guarantee to send any customer, in exchange for the least article that they may get for $2, a splendid richly chased Lady's or Gent's Silver Butter-Dish or Castor, fine plate, warrant of $10, or a beautiful 50-picture morocco Photograph Album, valued at $6; and you have a possibility of getting a

Fine Gold Watch or Piano.

Send 25 cents for the Golden Envelope, containing valuable receipts and songs; and one of the sealed Certificates, which are with us by the million, and a copy of our list will be sent, which will inform you what you can get for $2, from a Bogle-Dish or Castor, worth $10, to a Watch or Grand Piano, worth $1000. Also will be sent our circular, containing list of articles and full particulars; also terms to agents, to whom great inducements are offered.

Two for 50 cents, with a beautiful Photograph; 5 for $1, with a Silver Napkin Ring, worth $2; 11 for $2, with a Silver Napkin Ring, worth $2; 17 for $3, with a Silver Fruit Knife, worth $3; 30 for $5, with a Gold Pen, Extension, worth $5; 46 for $6, with a Gold Double Lock Locket, worth $12; 100 for $15, with a fine Silver Watch, worth $15; 190 for $30, with a Silver Hunting Watch, worth $40.

In all cases, upon receipt of the money, the premiums as above will be sent with the envelopes.

Address CALKINS & CO., Managers,
Broadway, New York.

FIRST PREMIUM
IMPROVED
$5 SEWING $5
MACHINE.

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originally patented May 15, 1863; Improvement patented June 9, 1865. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with automatic tension, a most valuable and elegantly-constructed NOVELTY, IS NOISELESS in operation, uses the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, and sews Backwards, Forwards with DOUBLE OR SINGLE THREAD OF ALL SIZES. Makes the most perfect and regular lock stitch on both sides alike, has the REVERSIBLE FEED motion by which the fabric is moved forward or backward with equal facility, MAKING SHORT SEWING to each end of the work. Will GATHER, HEM, RUFFLE, SHIRR, TUCK, SEW UP BRAIDING, &c., &c. Strength, durability, and beauty unsurpassed. Warranted to get out of order in 3 years. It has taken the PREMIUM at STATE FAIRS, and supplies a want long felt by the plodding journals and of those who have used it. It is the ONLY LOW-PRICED machine that has REVERSIBLE FEED motion that is PATENTED. ALL OTHER sewing machines at the same price are INFRINGEMENTS.

"For the dressmaker it is invaluable; for the household it supplies a severe desideratum."—Godey's Lady's Book.

"With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common motion, makes the most elegant and lastly like hand-sewing."—New York Tribune.

Single machines, all complete, to any part of the country per express, packed in box, with printed instructions, on receipt of price, $5. Circulars and terms to agents. Agents wanted every where. Circular, containing liberal inducements, sent free. Address all orders to the sole FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,

Office 102 Nassau Street, New York.

DUMB-WAITERS.

JAMES MURTAUGH'S celebrated DUMB-WAITERS are kept on hand by the No. 1535 Broadway, New York, where a model can be seen.

GREAT DISCOVERY.—DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC PAIN EXTRACTOR will instantly relieve Toothache, Neuralgia, Colic, piles, and all sores and pains, in from 1 to 2 days. Sold by all druggists, and by THOMAS BARNES & CO., New York. Depot, Philadelphia.

Pimples on the Face

REMOVED AT ONCE BY THE USE OF "UPHAM'S PIMPLE BANISHER." MAILED TO ANY ADDRESS FOR 75 CENTS, by S. C. UPHAM, No. 25 SOUTH EIGHTH ST., PHILADELPHIA. Sold by all druggists.

HOW TO MAKE CIDER WITHOUT APPLES or other fruit. The Hunter's Secret compleat. Including a splendid Receipt for making Champagne, other things worth knowing, will be found in the "BOOK OF WONDERS." For copies send 25 cents to Box 5067, New York.

PARLOR ORGANS.

THE HOBBEY PREMIUM, a SPECIAL GOLD MEDAL, was awarded to us by the late great Fair of the AMERICAN INSTITUTE over all competitors for the best instruments.

A Gold Medal was awarded to CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO. for the best Instruments at a competition which has just terminated.—WATSON'S Art Journal.

"I took special care to put them in the highest terms."—O. W. MORGAN.

"The finest instruments of the class I ever saw."—GEO. F. BRISTOW.

"The best instruments of their class."—WM. A. KING.

"The tones incomparable—far in advance of any other Instruments."—C. C. CLARKE.—CHARLES FRADEL.

Illustrated Catalogues sent by mail.

CARHART, NEEDHAM, & CO.,
No. 97 East Twenty-third St., New York.

A Household Necessity exists for the Use of DURNO'S CATARRH SNUFF,

Which, in the first stages of a cold, will save you like magic. Headache, Hoarseness, Diphtheria, and Bronchitis, Sore Eyes, Deafness, Bad Taste and Smell—being the result of Catarrh—this Snuff removes and prevents all these, and insures a healthy head. Its effects are pleasant and safe, even for children to snuff. Sore Scuffles.

It has the highest professional testimonials. Sold by all Druggists, or sent by Mail to all parts of the United States, for 50 cents and $1 per box, or $1 for Four Boxes.

Address JAS. DURNO, P. O. Box 5376, New York.
Wholesale by DEMAS BARNES & CO., Park Row, N. Y.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.

ONE DOLLAR EACH

PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 29, 1865.

AN EXACT and RELIABLE POCKET TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen, constructed on the most approved SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES, and WARRANTED to DENOTE SOLAR TIME with absolute correctness, and the utmost precision. It never can be wrong. It requires no KEY or winding up; never needs setting, and can neither be too fast or too slow. It is a most remarkable article. Approved by the first men and, as a matter of course, has introduced into this country from Europe, where it is created by ROY. AL LETTERS PATENT. Price for a single one, with plain or fancy white dial, in gold or silver gilt case, only $1. Sent, postage paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Sale delivery guaranteed. Beware of IMPOSTORS, who imitate this invention, and attempt to swindle the public, by offering a various article (with a slight alteration in name) purporting to be the same as the Timekeeper. All orders must be addressed to J. W. DELAMERE & CO., SOLE PROPRIETORS, 304-306 Broadway, New York.

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish a neat, useful, cheapish, and expeditionsly. Circular sent free. Sheets of Type, Outs, &c., 10 cts. ADAMS PRESS COMPANY, 52 Ann St., New York.

Brandreth's Pills.

COSTIVENESS, DIARRHŒA.

They are taken up by the absorbents, and carried into the circulation, through which medium they are conveyed to every part of the body.

If the pain affects the joints, a single dose produces remarkable benefit. And the same rule applies to costiveness, dysentery, diarrhœa, &c. Persons who will be influenced they may be required night and morning for some days before decided relief is obtained. In attentions of the brain, throat, lungs, liver, kidneys, the relief is certain; the excretory organs throw off with ease the phlegm, and the breathing becomes free. Spasmodic asthma is often cured by a single dose.

GOOD NEWS!

Humbugs exploded: Send—for $1 per mail I will send to any address a recipe, with full instructions, procurement to cure in a few weeks the worst cases of catarrh in the human system. It has cured my wife, and she may yours. Call the advertised humbugs, and save your money. Don't be gulled, it is easily procured, and is no Humbug. Address T. P. SYMMES, No. 1619 Fulton Street, New York.

Agua de Magnolia.

A toilet delight! The ladies' treasure and gentlemen's boon! The "everlasting" flower of youth and beauty, manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia. Used for bathing the feet and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to prevent eruptions, to perfume clothing, &c.

It overcomes the unpleasant odor of perspiration.

It removes redness, tan, sallowness, &c.

It cures nervous headache and allays inflammation.

It cools, refreshes, and invigorates the skin.

It yields a sublimed and lasting perfume.

It cures mosquito bites and stings of insects.

It counteracts the effects injurious to the skin.

Patronized by actresses and opera-singers. It is what every lady should have in her room every where. Try the Magnolia Water once, and you will use no other Cologne, Perfumery, or Toilet Water afterward.

DEMAS BARNES & CO.,
Prop. Exclusive Agents, N. Y.

Chapped Hands and Face,

SORE LIPS, CHILBLAINS, &c.—HEGEMAN & CO'S CAMPHOR JELLY WITH GLYCERINE cures chapped hands, &c., immediately, and will keep the skin soft and smooth in the coldest weather. Sold by Druggists. Price 25 cents. Sent by mail for 30 cents. HEGEMAN & CO., Chemists and Druggists, New York.

BUSINESS AT HOME.—For Man, Woman, Boy, or Girl.—Now!—Easy!—Highly Beautiful!—Extremely Profitable!—Any person can make from $5 to $10 per day. Costs will start it.—Steely Demand every where.—Variety Casket, a splendid Illustrated Paper, immediately sent. Full instructions sent for 30 cents! Direct to MRS. G. JONES, care of Box 1464, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE NEW BOOKS OF THE SEASON

PUBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

☞ Sent by Mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

SOCIAL LIFE OF THE CHINESE: With some Account of their Religious, Governmental, Educational, and Business Customs and Opinions. With special but not exclusive reference to Fuhchau. By Rev. JOHNNY DOOLITTLE, Fourteen Years Member of the American Board. With over 150 Illustrations. In Two Volumes, 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $5 00.

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY. By ALBERA B. EDWARDS. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

RICHARD CORDEN, the Friend of American and Apostle of Free Trade: His Political Career and Public Services. A Biography. By JOHN MORTIMER. With Illustrations. 16mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $1 50.

WIVES AND DAUGHTERS. By MRS. GASKELL. 8vo, Cloth, $3 00; Paper, $1 50. (Next Week.)

NOTES FROM PLYMOUTH PULPIT: A Collection of Memorable Passages from the Discourses of HENRY WARD BEECHER. With a Sketch of Mr. Beecher and the Lecture-Room. By AUGUSTUS MOORE. A New Edition, Revised and greatly enlarged. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

GUY DEVERELL. By J. S. LE FANU, Author of "Uncle Silas," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents. (Next Week.)

PRISON LIFE IN THE SOUTH: at Richmond, Macon, Savannah, Charleston, Columbia, Charlotte, Raleigh, Goldsborough, and Andersonville during the Years 1864 and 1865. By A. O. AYDELOTT, late Lieutenant 1st New York Dragoons. Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $1 00.

THE BELTON ESTATE. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE, Author of "Doctor Thorne," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE STORY OF THE GREAT MARCH: Diary of General Sherman's Campaign through Georgia and the Carolinas. By his Aide-de-Camp Colonel Orrin Ward Nichols, Aid-de-Camp to General Sherman. With a Colored Map and numerous Illustrations, and an Appendix, containing Rebel Official Documents, Sherman's Special Campaign, and Quartermasters and Commissary Reports. 8vo, Tweed-Sarah Edition. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

DICKENS'S NEW CHRISTMAS STORY: DR. MARIGOLD'S PRESCRIPTIONS. 8vo, Paper, 10 Cents.

CARLYLE'S FREDERICK THE GREAT. History of Frederick II., called Frederick the Great. By THOMAS CARLYLE. Library Edition. 8 Vols. 8vo, Cloth, $12 00. Portrait, "Oliver Cromwell," &c. With Portraits and Maps. Crown 8vo, Cloth, 12 Vols. Tinted, $21 00. (The Sixth and concluding Vol. will be ready shortly.)

BRACKETT'S UNITED STATES CAVALRY. History of the United States Cavalry from the Formation of the Federal Government to the 1st of June, 1863. To which is added a Sketch of the Cavalry Regiments, with the Names of their Commanders, which have been in the United States Service since the breaking out of the Rebellion. By ALBERT G. BRACKETT, Brevet Colonel United States Army. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

DRAPER'S AMERICAN CIVIL POLICY. Thoughts on the Future Civil Policy of America. By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D., Author of a "Treatise on Human Physiology," and a "History of the Intellectual Development of Europe." Crown 8vo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 50.

PHARAOH'S SERPENTS.

Tiger of Hackensack Swamps, Lion of Wall, Prince Ignited, will evolve in a few seconds a harmless Serpent, several feet in length. Ten of the ops mailed to any place for 50 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia. The Trade supplied.

Youth and Beauty Restored

To the gray-headed by the use of

Webster's Vegetable Hair Invigorator.

DEMAS BARNES & CO., N. Y., General Agents.

HARPER'S

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

FOR FEBRUARY, 1866.

TERMS.

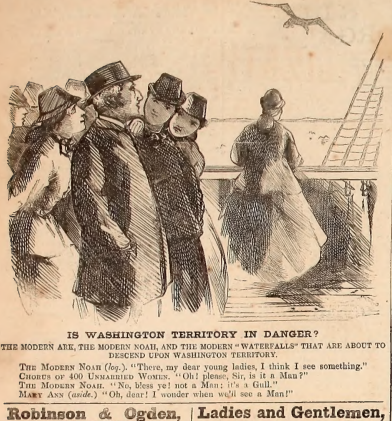
One Copy for one Year $4 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $6 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements for their Magazine, at the following low rates: one quarter of a page, each number, $25; one half, $125; whole page, $250. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is much larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 100,000.

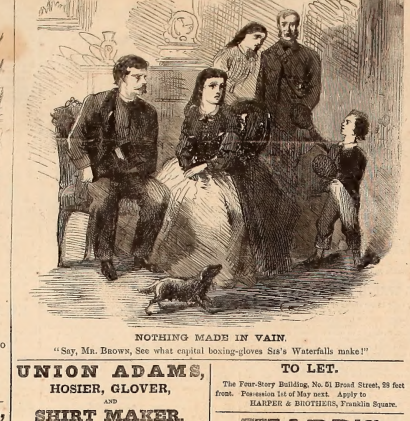


HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $4 00
One Copy for Six Months 1 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Postage is invariably in advance.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—One Dollar and Fifty Cents per line for each insertion. Liberal terms for quarterly Advertisements, each insertion.



HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

IS WASHINGTON TERRITORY IN DANGER?

THE MODERN ARE, THE MODERN NOAH, AND THE MODERN "WATERFALLS" THAT ARE ABOUT TO DESCEND UPON WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

THE MODERN NOAH (loq.). "There, my dear young ladies, I think I see something."
CHORUS OF 400 UNMARRIED WOMEN. "Oh! please, Sir, is it a Man?"
THE MODERN NOAH. "No, bless ye! not a Man; it's a Gull."
MARY ANN (aside.) "Oh, dear! I wonder when we'll see a Man!"

NOTHING MADE IN VAIN.

"Say, Mr. BROWN, See what capital boxing-gloves Sis's Waterfalls make!"

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad St., New York,
(Two Doors from Wall.)

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks, Bonds, and Gold will receive our PERSONAL attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

MOTHERS!
Children die by thousands—Worms the cause—whose lives might have been spared, had they used VAN DEUSEN'S WHITE CONFECTIONER. Children are as fond of them as they are of Candy. Sold by Merchants. 25 Cts. a Box. Sent by mail on receipt of the price. VAN DEUSEN BROTHERS, Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.

JAMES'S CELEBRATED LINIMENT
For NEURALGIA, RHEUMATISM, and SCIATICA. WARRANTED. 8 Astor Place. Price One Dollar.

H. A. M. D.
FOR THE MOUTH.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 69 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $30 each.

TO CURE
Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL, and disorders arising from excesses, use
Smolander's Extract Bucku.
Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York, and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

MARRIED OR NOT,
A Story of love, hate, and war, in the title of a brilliant original novelette, published complete in the American Fireside, a magazine of complete stories. The same number contains other choice original stories, besides selected ones from the best foreign and domestic magazines; also short miscellaneous articles suited to all classes of readers. Single copies, 20 cents. Sold by all periodical dealers.

THE STATE YOU LIVE IN. Pocket Maps of all the United States and Territories, showing correctly the counties, principal towns, railroads, &c. Sent by mail. For catalogues, address G. W. & C. B. COLTON & CO., 172 William street, New York.

Holloway's Ointment—The loss of beauty is regarded by London as a heavier affliction than death, and consequently Dr. Holloway restores many absent charms to the countenance of the fair sex. For all blotches and pimples which disfigure the face, arms, and neck, the Ointment is a certain specific, and restores the purity and brilliancy of the complexion.

WANTED—every man in the United States who has lost either an Arm or Leg—to engage in a profitable business. Send 3 cent-stamp for Circular. Address A. F. BELCHER, Box 45, Philadelphia, Pa.

MERCHANTS, BANKERS,
And others should send to all parts of the United States by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, 68 Broadway.

Ladies and Gentlemen,
Send for our MEASURING CARD, and
Take your own measure, and we will send a
PERFECT FIT.
575 Broadway, N. Y., E. A. BROOKS, AGENT.
Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, and Slippers, of every description, for ladies, gents, boys, misses, and children.
N. B.—LARGEST ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY.

Eggs of Pharaoh's Serpents.
ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS A BOX.
We will supply, either at wholesale or retail, these curious and wonderful articles, which are creating such a sensation in this country and Europe. Sent by mail, postpaid. ADAMS & CO., 21 Bromfield St., Boston.

MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP with
B. T. BABBITT'S POTASH IN TIN CANS.
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
Pure Concentrated Potash, or Ready Soap Maker. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 4 pounds, and 12 pounds, with full directions, in English and German, for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 16 gallons of Soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market. B. T. BABBITT, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington Street, New York.

B. T. BABBITT'S, SALERATUS
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
If you want healthy bread, use B. T. Babbitt's best medicinal Saleratus. "Made from Common Salt." Brand made with this Saleratus contains, when baked, nothing but common salt, water, and flour. B. T. BABBITT, Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., New York.

B. T. BABBITT'S STAR YEAST POWDERS
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
Will make Light Biscuit in Fifteen Minutes.

VALENTINES! VALENTINES!
NEW STYLES, NEW DESIGNS, NEW MOTTOES,
NEW STOCK.
$10, $20, $30, $40, and $50 lots always on hand.
Send by your orders at once to the VALENTINE DEPOT of T. W. STRONG, 38 Spring Street, New York.

OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY.
To be found on each bar and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 95 Chambers Street, New York.

PINE APPLE CIDER
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
A certain cure for Cholera, Dysentery, Heart Disease, Bilious Fevers, and cessation for old people, as it quickens the circulation of the Blood.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

"American Union Company,"
Manufacturers of the NEW ORGAN-TONED PIANO, EQUAL, if not SUPERIOR, to any. Warranted in every particular. Warerooms and "Agency," 467 Broome St.

Marvin's Patent
ALUM AND DRY PLASTER, FIRE AND BURGLAR
SAFES
Never lose their fire-proof qualities, corrode the iron, or moisten their contents.
Sideboard and parlor safes for silverware.
MARVIN & CO.,
265 Broadway, New York.
721 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

CURIOUS FASTENERS for Ladies and Gents. Sent for 25 cents. W. C. WEMYSS, 825 Broadway, N. Y.

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR
The Cheapest Collar Ever Invented,
Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides. Made in white, fancy and printed stitch.

SNOW'S PATENT
SCARF HOLDER
PATENTED FEB. 14, 1865
Is made of the best Spring Steel Wire, and is just the thing to wear with Paper Collars, being far superior to elastic cord for holding "Butterflies," "Uniques," "Bows," &c., in place on the shirt button.

PATENT EXPANDED STAR COLLAR
This Collar, showing a space for the cravat, excels all others by its superior shape and weight, and the exquisite finish and whiteness of the paper.
MARCH BROS., PIERCE & CO., AGENTS,
Winthrop Square, Boston.
Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf Supporters at the lowest Boston prices, by—
BOWEN BROTHERS.....Chicago, Illinois.
J. LOWMAN & SON.....Cincinnati, Ohio.
MAYER & HAHCH.....Cleveland, Ohio.
CLARKSON & SON.....Louisville, Kentucky.
G. CARPENTER.....365 Broadway, New York.
WM. A. SHEPHERD.....7 Bank St., Philadelphia, Pa.
A. BURNHAM & CO.....Detroit, Michigan.

WARD'S, PERFECT FITTING SHIRTS.
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars, sent free every where.
THE CASH CAN BE PAID TO EXPRESS COMPANY.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
S. W. H. WARD, No. 387 Broadway, New York.

TO LET.
The Four-Story Building, No. 51 Broad Street, 28 feet front. Possession 1st of May next. Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, Franklin Square.

WARD'S PAPER COLLARS AND CUFFS FOR LADIES & GENTLEMEN.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
387 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Ladies' Victoria Turn-over Paper Collar.

Ladies' Empress Turn-over Paper Collar.

Ladies' English Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies' American Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies' French Paper Cuffs.

Ladies' English Paper Cuffs.

Gentlemen's Piccadilly Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Standing Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Turnover Paper Collar.

Gents. Reversible Paper Cuffs.

Gents. English Paper Cuffs.

Ladies' Collars from 75 cents to $3 per 100.
Gentlemen's Collars from $2 50 to $4 per 100.
CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—These are the only paper collars and cuffs that are made from pure linen stock.
NOTICE TO THE TRADE.—Wholesale Price-List sent by mail. Also, one collar for sample.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. X.—No. 476.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1866. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1866, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE PRINCESS OF WALES WITH THE INFANT PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR.—[SEE NEXT PAGE.]

THE PRINCESS OF WALES AND HER INFANT.

A YOUNG mother, holding a baby or two years, is one of the loveliest and holiest objects that can be seen on earth, whether she be a Princess and future Queen or the wife of a poor laboring man. In either case we must look upon this attitude of womanhood grouped with childhood as an embodiment of the most sacred affections and capabilities of human nature, and the ideal of maternity, which the mystic piety of the Middle Ages was inclined to worship, under the noblest artistic forms, as of necessary to divine revelation, still remains all but the highest conceivable type of moral harmony and grace. There is no woman who bears a child, in the humblest home as well as in the palaces of Royalty, who does not, while she cherishes the young life derived from her own, exhibit a living picture of the adorable ideal, more truthful and more impressive than any which RAPHAEL or MURILLO has drawn.

We are happy to be able to present our readers this week with an illustration representing ALEXANDRA, the Princess of Wales, with her first-born infant, the little Prince VICTOR, whose second birthday occurred January 8 of the present year. Prince VICTOR EDWARD is in the direct line of regal succession, and, if he lives long enough, will one day be the King of England. The picture we have to give is from an excellent photograph by MESSRS. WINDOW & BRIDGE, Regent Street, London.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1866.

THE PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

WE have a very high respect for the admirable services of Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS, and for the earnestness with which he holds opinions in which we do not always agree; but Mr. STEVENS lacks some important qualifications as a parliamentary leader. He is too fond of snap judgments at a time when the utmost deliberation is required. He does not understand the intention of the motion for the previous question. Its object is not to stifle discussion, but to save time when debate is clearly exhausted. Yet when the Reconstruction Committee reported a constitutional amendment of the utmost gravity, and before the House could have a chance of deliberation, or the country of declaring itself, he threatened the call of the previous question. Had he persisted a very serious mischief would have been done. As it is, the House will be wary hereafter.

The amendment reported is substantially that of Mr. BLAINE. It proposes, in addition to apportion representation in the whole number of the population, excepting those who may be disfranchised by reason of race or color. In effect, it is a bribe of increased political power offered to the late Slave States to induce them to give political equality to their colored population. It is one of the innumerable indirect methods suggested to reach a result which is now gradually seen to be virtually indispensable to the successful reorganization of the late rebel States. But which, we think, will at last be attained by simpler and directer means.

Mr. JENCKES, of Rhode Island, and Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, have indicated very distinctly and forcibly the objections to the adoption of the amendment. It admits, by implication, that States may disfranchise because of race or color, and that a supposition of which Congress should not be guilty. Then it enables a State to exclude large masses of its population of all colors by a property qualification, thus establishing an oligarchy where Congress is bound to secure a republican form of government. By merely omitting the word "white" in their present laws defining the electoral qualification, many of the States could still enjoy their present superiority of representation. In South Carolina, for instance, more than three of the population are colored. But the colored population are not property-holders. Nothing is easier than for the State to retain its law of a property qualification, by which more than half of the population would be excluded from the polls while they would be counted in the basis of representation. Yet if the amendment which authorizes or requires such legislation should pass, Congress would have virtually decided that such an exclusion is republican. There is still another objection, which is this—that while the object of the amendment is to protect colored citizens by giving them the vote, the feeling of caste in the unorganized States is so strong that they would probably be willing to submit to the lessened representation as the price of obtaining the complete control of the freedmen—a result which is to be resisted to the last by every honorable American.

The amendment, as it stands, will probably not pass—at least, we sincerely hope it may not. We do not know, indeed, what further suggestions the Committee may propose which will modify and control this. But we presume that the debate will have shown to the Committee the feeling of the House and of the country, and induce them to consider a very simple and obvious solution of the difficulty—an amendment defining the qualifications of all adult male citizens of the United States in national elections. Should some educational test be required of future voters, it would still be impossible to trust the education of their colored population to the unorganized States. They would keep them disfranchised by ignorance. Even ignorance is a very bad thing; but loyal ignorance is better than disloyal, and the Union would be much more secure if the one had been allowed to neutralize the other in the votes, as Mr. STEVENS has asked with emphasis, than educational test were imposed and the decision of its adequate fulfillment were left to white judges in the Slave States. And for every "conciliation," will have an opportunity of learning wisdom from events. The duties of no Congress can bind upon them those of the present, and it has thus far shown a sagacity which we have no reason to fear will desert it.

SENATOR TRUMBULL'S BILL.

THE passage, in the Senate, of Mr. TRUMBULL'S bill for continuing and enlarging the operations of the Freedmen's Bureau will be followed, we trust, by its swift passage in the House. The debate was ample, and it is only the truth to say that every argument urged against it was utterly refuted. The ability and the tone of the speeches in its favor were contrasted with those against it as humanity and justice and enlightenment are always contrasted with injustice and meanness. It is a fine thing that Mr. GARRETT DAVIS should make a wretched spectacle of himself, and offer a motion upon the final passage of the bill which the President of the Senate would not entertain, for the unfortunate Senator from Kentucky is distinguished only, with Senator SAULSBURY of Delaware, by terms of impotent and ridiculous rage. Almost over any proposition is made toward justice to the race whose long unjust treatment by us brought the war upon our homes and hearts. It was fitting also, in every way, that a Senator from the Northwest, a friend of President LINCOLN'S and from his State, should have presented the bill which will do so much toward finishing his work.

Land and education are to be the grounds of security for the liberty of the whole Southern population. If they are not made secure, it, every step, taken for the elevation of the freedmen is an immense gain for the Southern States and for the country. Whatever developing their self-respect and stimulates them in industry and thrift brings us all nearer to permanent peace. Governor ORR, of South Carolina, complains of the Freedmen's Bureau as opposing and perplexing the President's policy, and of its confirming the tenure of the Sea Island district to the freedmen for three years as an injustice. He should remember that the prospect of a homestead makes the freedmen unwilling to conclude contracts.

Nothing is more probable. If Governor ORR were homeless, ignorant, and penniless; if he were in the midst of a community which despised and hated him; if he knew that his most sacred rights, his most precious relations, were at the mercy of those who regarded him as a bad man and treat him as an ox or a dog; if he knew that the power which had given him his freedom, and which alone could now maintain it, intended to secure him against the consequences of the cruel hostility which surrounded him by giving him land and defending his rights upon it, we are inclined to think that Governor ORR—unless he were the dull brute which the colored man is represented to be by the political and social theory of Governor ORR—but which his conduct disproves—would do exactly what the freedmen are doing: he would wait the action of his friends before confiding himself to his enemies.

Governor ORR and the opponents of the Freedmen's Bureau do not appear to understand that it is just as important to the white population of the South to have the law for the freedmen as it was for the Catholics of three centuries ago to be just to the Protestants. How absolutely and entirely the fine gentlemen at the South misunderstand the colored race and the conditions of progressive civilization let our long war show. Nobody would be so mad as to insist that if the colored race had been always fairly treated in the South there would have been any serious alienation ending so tragically. And in view of their ghastly failure in dealing with the question, modesty might prompt these gentlemen to be slow and distrustful in offering their advice to those who have become the guardians of the colored race.

It is true that it is a question of peculiar moment to the Southern States, because the freedmen are native in that section, and will inevitably remain there. But it is no less true that experience has proved the Southern white policy upon the subject to be intolerable to the peace of the country. That policy was based upon a spirit of caste which is inconsistent with our whole system; and every sign in the Southern legislatures and conventions and papers and speeches and correspondence and conversation, and indeed in every form by which opinion is expressed, shows that the same policy will be continued if the States were left to the same old authority. There is a universal tendency in the unreconstructed section toward black codes, black laws, and an absolute class distinction. But since the white race which is utterly abhorrent to the American principle has failed, why not try a policy founded upon that principle? Shame inspires many of us in the war, why not try justice as a means of keeping the peace? Since we have resolved that the late slaves are men, why not treat them as men?

It is the object of the Freedmen's Bureau to secure that treatment. The result can not be reached without vexatious delays and perplexities. There will be complaints, often well founded, of the officers and agents employed. There will be friction and disappointment of many kinds in the working of the system. But they will be the friction of constantly working out toward justice and the equal rights of men, upon which foundation only can future prosperity and union be erected.

FENIANISM.

WHILE General SWEENY declares that, if supported, he will conquer a spot of British territory before Easter, Mr. ROBERTS indulges in the dangerous delight of prophesying that within ninety days the green flag will be flying over the largest city in Ireland. In other words, the British courts are sentencing Fenian prisoners to long years of penal servitude, and the Head Centre, SARSFIELD, is fighting upon the Continent. At the same time, also, Irishmen are every where asking themselves whether the prospects of the Fenian movement to emancipate Ireland from England by the Irish Republic are so promising that they can hopefully run the risk of ruining themselves and their families.

Indeed, the late Fenian performance in the city of New York must be lamentably farcical that the whole movement seems to have died quietly in ridicule here, as it ends more tragically across the sea. It is a symptom both of the discontent of Irishmen and of the utter incapacity of the leaders who have sought to direct that discontent to practical political ends. Yet that discontent must be allowed, is greatly traditional and sentimental. Probably few Irishmen who are established in this country would care to return to their native land, and still fewer would wish to give their lives and the comfort of their families to place that land under the rule of no higher wisdom than has been displayed by the Fenian movement. The British government of Ireland is not a noble or humane story. No honorable Englishman can contemplate it without sorrow and shame. And if the people have been ungenerous as it may be now, it is undoubtedly preferable to the government of such leaders as have appeared in the Fenian ranks.

And even were it not so, every sensible Irishman, and from such only will actual danger menace England, sees that the British Government is not to be overthrown, and does not hesitate to take the most decisive measures, and that a revolution in Ireland would be for every British subject a question of the very safety and honor of the British empire. Indeed, this revolution is baffled before it fairly begins. And what kind of a revolution could that be which a veteran leader vociferously three thousand miles away in a foreign country, and explodes in a ludicrous wrangle of would-be leaders? Meanwhile, however, we suppose that the collection in Ireland of the money that many a hard working man and woman is giving the money which should buy comfort for their families to a scoundrel who is known only in itself to an Irishman, shows not the least chance of practical success.

There is truly no nobler sacrifice than that of life and of every effort for the salvation of an oppressed country. There is no more splendid spectacle in history than the revolution of our fathers in '76. But grand and ennobling as that struggle was, it would have been a criminal folly if they had obeyed a mere vague sentiment, and had not literally counted the cost and scrupulously weighed the chances of success.

IS THERE TOO MUCH OF ONE SUBJECT?

IF any body thinks that both in Congress and in general conversation an undue prominence is given to the subject of the colored population, he ought to remember that precisely that subject was the root of our late war, and that it must necessarily be for the most prominent topic in all considerations of settlement. But, says some one, why not discuss questions of trade and methods of conciliation, because, after all, it must be by commercial intercourse and social ties that the alienated sections are to be knit together again?

The reason is obvious. Trade and commercial relations depend upon the stability of the industrial system; and the question of the industrial system at the South is that of the colored population. Spite of ourselves, there fore, spite of our weariness of the topic, spite of the monotony of the discussion, it must turn first upon the colored people. Not until the industry of the Southern section begins again, there can be no resumption of commercial relations; and until there is some final settlement of the industrial system there will be no capital invested and no risks taken, and consequently the land will remain comparatively unproductive.

But still further, as in this country there is no serious impediment any where to the acquisition of political power by every man, an equal share of political power has come to be the security of the fruits of industry. The most ignorant of foreigners, after a short probation, may be naturalized and share political power equally with the most intelligent native. If, therefore, any considerable number of the population should be arbitrarily excluded from political equality, and under circumstances which threatened to make this exclusion permanent, they would be dissatisfied and restless, their claims would be supported by an immense party, a great agitation would ensue, and the industrial relations of the region in which that population lived would be radically disturbed and unsatisfactory.

In our present situation, therefore, the political relations of the freedmen must be clearly defined and established upon the justice which all the sets of the general government have ourselves unanimously to take a single forward step safely and immediately. This explains the prominence of the question in Congress and in public mind. The important point is to determine in what way the political equality of the population in question may be most wisely secured. That is the end and intention of the amendments to the Constitution which are debated in Congress. That is the natural and serious interest of the people of the United States. It is with no wish to withdraw exclusive and undivided attention to any question that this is so constantly considered, but only because this is the key of the situation, and because it is already settled all other questions are less difficult.

THE NEW HAVEN RAILROAD CASE.

LAME as Justice is said to be, she travels steadily and surely—at all events in some cases. It lacks but a few months of twelve years since the financial community was paralyzed by the news that the President of New Haven Railroad Company had been flooding Wall Street with spurious certificates of stock, and had run away to hide his guilt and his shame in foreign lands. So vast was the extent of the fraud, and so high had stood the character of the criminal, that people at first refused to believe the story. The culprit was not only a member of the church and a scion of our "hereditary nobility," he was a man personally well known in Wall Street, universally esteemed and respected, a king among railway men, a potentate among financiers. Yet this SCHUYLER, as it was soon proved, had issued thousands upon thousands of certificates of the New and New Haven Railway Company to an amount exceeding two millions of dollars, had foisted them on his friends and acquaintances, the bankers, brokers, and money-lenders of Wall Street, and had run away leaving no trace behind.

After the first shock Wall Street turned its attention to the practical consequences of the development. There was $1,000,000 of genuine stock of the New Haven Road, and $2,000,000 more of stock fraudulently issued by SCHUYLER. The stock had been active, and on the morning when the fraud came to light there was hardly a broker or banker in New York who did not hold directly or indirectly some shares. How could the so-called spurious stock be distinguished from the genuine? The brokers examined the certificates, and finding that all the certificates were alike, all duly signed and registered, and all to outward appearance equally valid, could that no distinction could be made between them, and that the Company—being bound for the acts of its officer—must be equally responsible for all. This was the sense of the New York Stock Exchange, and of the bankers and brokers throughout the country. They therefore summoned the New Haven Railroad Company to recognize all the certificates whatever their origin, and to transfer them on their books.

The Company refused. Its counsel took the ground that though the Company was responsible for all acts of its officer performed within the scope of his official duties, it was not responsible for acts committed beyond that scope, much less for acts committed by him, as some of the subordinate clerks of the Company undertook, by a process never clearly explained, to separate the so-called spurious stock from the genuine, and to pronounce two-thirds of the floating certificates of New Haven stock absolute waste paper.

Naturally indignant at this proceeding, the brokers clubbed together and instituted legal proceedings against the Company to compel them to recognize the so-called spurious stock. More than half the leading lawyers of the city were retained on their behalf. The Company accepted the issue, retained able counsel on its side, and prepared for a long fight. The stock was struck from the list of the Stock Exchange, and has never since been bought or sold at the Board.

The suit began in the fall of 1854. It took many shapes, and came up in various ways. There is not a leading lawyer at the bar who has not been engaged in it at some time or other, either for or against the Company. As a rule the pros and public sentiment were throughout in favor of the brokers. People generally took the common-sense view of the case, and decided that as a loss must fall upon somebody, it was more equitable that it should fall on the Company, which had erred in the choice of an officer, than upon innocent holders of stock who had been guilty of no negligence, and could not, by any possibility, have protected themselves against the event. But the Company stood unmoved. It had a long purse, an obstinate Board of Directors, and ingenious party of lawyers. Year after year dragged on, and but little progress was made. Every technical difficulty was urged by the Company; every side-issue was elaborately discussed; every possible motion was made; every point of law raised; and thus, as we said, year after year passed; the law costs of the injured brokers were steadily on the increase, and they seemed to be no nearer judgment and redress. Last, some six years after the commencement of the suit, a judgment was obtained in one of the cases. It was substantially in favor of the Company.

This was discouraging to the litigants that many of them, worn out by long waiting, loss of time, and heavy law costs, concluded to accept a compromise which was judiciously offered by the Company. On condition of their withdrawing their suits and giving no further trouble, they received one share of real stock for every two shares of so-called spurious stock. Thus at least one half of the claims were adjusted at the cost of all the net earnings of the Company for several years.

But there is one man among the prosecutors of the Company who was not discouraged. This was CORNELIUS VANDERBILT. He had lent money to the Company on the doubtful securities stock. He had examined the stock before he lent his money, and had proved the certificates correct. He was not now willing to admit that they were otherwise. The adverse judgment did not dismay him. If the Company had patience, so had he. If they had a long purse, so had he. If they could be able lawyers, so were the Company's counsel. And to have received no less than $100,000 for work in this single case, so could he. He rejected the offered compromise with disdain, and bade his lawyers appeal, and prosecute the appeal with vigor. Encouraged by his example, other victims of the fraud declined to accept the compromise, and appealed their cases likewise.

Then followed more tedious years of postponements, argument on side issues, motions and counter-motions, and all the legal manœuvres which are so profitable to lawyers and so heartsickening to needy seekers after justice. There is a fact that the Company has built its hopes in great part upon the probable death of Commodore VANDERBILT. If he died, there was every reason to believe they might succeed in wearing out the other suitors, and either inducing them to accept the proposed compromise or defeating them altogether. And he was old now, and very severely, with heart disease (so 'twas said), with a fondness for fast horses, and a habit of being dashed out of his wagon from time to time. The New Haven Directors sent up many carefully worded bills of deaths under the letter V, and mutely prayed for the release of their relentless prosecutor.

Their prayers were not heard. The Commodore did not die. On the contrary, in spite of heart-disease, fast horses, and upsets, he seemed to grow most pertinacious at the very time other men's advice would work for him—at the very moment the Company expected a session of repose he was upon them more furiously than ever, with new motions and arguments and fresh indictments of lawyers. And so, at last, after over eleven years of waiting, he fought the suit to judgment in the Court of Appeals, it—obtaining a decision against the Company for the whole amount claimed, with eleven years' interest and costs.

There is something quite refreshing in the statement published by the Board of Directors in which, after reiterating their opinion that the judgment is unjust, they offer for sale $2,000,000 of new stock in order to meet the claims of the Commodore and his faithful adherents. No reliable statement has been published of the amount of money paid—directly or in the shape of stock—to the parties who accepted the compromise three or four years ago. But we judge that the Company would have saved not much less than a million dollars in one way and another had it pursued an honest course at the start, and acknowledged itself responsible for the frauds of its agent.

A healthy public sentiment has thanked Mr. A. T. STEWART for having promptly preferred a complaint against a newspaper which had seemed to charge him with improper conduct in private life. And a like reason is due to Commodore VANDERBILT for having had the patience and constancy to pursue this railway Company through the mazes of a lawless civil lawsuit. It would be well if we had more such men. As for the Company, we trust we shall never again hear of a wealthy corporation directed by responsible men trying to shift to innocent shoulders the burden of the crimes of its own officials.

ANOTHER PRESIDENTIAL VETO.

WHILE Spain is apparently threatening Chili, she suddenly finds herself forced to look at home. General PRIM, the officer who withdrew from the Mexican invasion during our late war, and who thereby made his name pleasant in our ears, after passing privately through Europe for several months, and evidently proposing a movement, returned to Madrid, lived quietly in his own house under the eyes of Marshal O'DONNELL his rival, and one day, when the Marshal sent some soldiers to arrest him, General PRIM's servants replied that he was not at home; that he had gone out shooting; grinned and bowed; and the next day PRIM appeared in arms at the head of part of the army.

Of course it is impossible to know much of the probable success of a Spanish revolution. Political chaos is permanent in that country, and the rest of the world can only hopefully await the event of any movement. But the defection of any popular military chief is as alarming as it was in Rome. Every Spaniard is convinced that the throne stands upon volcanic soil. The royal family has not now the popular heart; and it may be said that a skilful leader of an insurrection has a fair chance of success. It may end in a compromise. The Queen may offer him a port-folio if he will sheathe his sword. But that merely makes the ground more visible for the mine. Or PRIM and some leader who declines the port-folio appears the Queen may lose her crown.

The collective disputes denounced as soon as the rebellion began that it was all over. The royal troops held all the mountain passes. Three columns were bearing down upon the insurgents; a reward was offered for PRIM, dead or alive, and the insurgents were straggling away toward Portugal. Official bulletins, however, express official desires rather than facts. Later accounts speak of the wildest excitement and of the disturbed condition of Catalonia and Aragon. It is the old story, and certainly nothing can be more unfavorable to the chronic political situation of Spain, for which she has to thank the Holy Alliance of forty years ago. But there is hope that every new revolution destroys the power who will truly help their wretched country.

EDUCATION OF THE FREEDMEN.

"THE Freedmen," said our martyr President, "are the Wards of the Nation." "Yes," replied Mr. STANTON, "Wards in Chancery." What is our duty to them as their guardians? Clearly, to educate them as they are asked; to teach them if they are ignorant; to nurse them if they are sick; and to adopt them if they are homeless and motherless. They have votes, war made them freedmen, and peace must make them freemen. They must be shielded from unjust laws and unkindly people-taught, nursed, and instructed in the principles of social order and democratic government; they must be prepared to take their place by-and-by in the ranks of the nation, and thereby filled up the ranks in the great army of fighters. The superstitions, the vices, the unthriftiness, the lowering and indolent habits which are the inheritance of all men of blacks alike, who were cursed by its presence in their midst, must be dispelled and supplanted by all the traits and virtues of a truly Christian civilization.

The North, that liberated the slave, has not been remiss in its duty to the freedman. The common school has kept step to the music of the advancing army. Wilson's Readers have followed GRANT's soldiers every where. Many of the colored troops are learning with pleasure the first leaves and primers in their pockets. They were namesakes, but not of the same family. Chatterton had not been captured upon them a week before the spelling-book for freemen and poor whites were opened there. It is proposed now to educate all the negroes and poor whites in the South—as a political necessity; in order that henceforth there may be no other insurrections, the result of ignorance, either on the part of the late slave or the late slaveholder. Ignorance must not too readily be suffered to disturb us again. In free countries it is not the intelligent but the ignorant who rebel. Ambitious men could never induce an enlightened people to overthrow a free Government. It was because there were over 600,000 white adults in the slave States, and 4,000,000 of slaves who could neither read nor write, that DAVIS and TOOMBS and SLIDELL had power to raise armies against the nation. Let us prevent all social upheavals in the future by educating all men now.

The Freedmen's Bureau Relief Association of New York—of which FRANCIS GEORGE SHAW is President and JOSEPH B. COLLINS Treasurer —has been the most active of the agencies in relieving the wants and diffusing the ignorance of the freedman. It has expended during the last four years three quarters of a million of dollars in feeding the naked; in establishing the freedmen on farms; in supplying them with tools; in founding orphan homes; in distributing school-books and establishing schools. They have over two hundred teachers in the South at this time. They support orphan homes in Florida and South Carolina. They teach ten thousand children, and large numbers of adults. They have instituted industrial schools to educate the negro women to be thrifty housewives. They are continually laboring, in the face of the negroes self-reliant and self-supporting. They appeal for additional aid. There are but a thousand teachers for freedmen in all the Southern States; whereas twenty thousand could find immediate employment. The National Relief Association could find pupils for 5000. It has but 200. And this work is a good and great one, and as the officers of this Society are eminent citizens of New York, we heartily commend their appeal to the generosity of our readers.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CHESS TOURNAMENT.

In a late number of the Weekly we presented our readers with the first game occurring in a match incidental to the tournament of the Chess Club, between the well-known amateurs Mr. C. H. STANLEY and Captain H. REMEE. This contest has subsequently been brought to a close, having been won by Captain MCREEZE, in the subjoined game as follows, viz.: MCREEZE wins 3 games, STANLEY, 1, drawn games 2. Mr. STANLEY'S old friends and admirers, however, are not prepared to accept this result as altogether conclusive of his inferiority—attributing it mainly to his great want of practice; and it is quite probable that when the series of other matches still progressing in the tournament are completed, the tables may be arranged. Meanwhile we print below the final game of the late contest:

SICILIAN OPENING.

Black (Mr. S.)	White (Capt. M'K.)
1. P to Q B 4	1. P to Q B 4
2. K Kt to B 3	2. Q Kt to B 3
3. P to K 3	3. P to K 3
4. Kt takes P	4. K Kt to B 3
5. Q Kt to B 3	5. P to K 3
6. Kt takes Kt	6. K P takes Kt
7. B to Q 3	7. P to Q 4
8. B to Q 2	8. P to Q 4
9. Castles	9. P to Q B 3

A very excellent move, the utility of which will be more apparent as the game advances.

10. P takes P	10. B P takes P
11. P to Q R 3.	11. B to Q 3
12. Q to B 2	12. Q to Q B 2
13. P to K R 3	13. B to Q Kt 5
14. P to K Kt 4

A very ill-considered move, by which the loss of Rook for Bishop will follow. 14. Q to Q or B would probably be the correct play, when we should be inclined to give Black's position the preference.

14.	D to K 4
15. Q to K

Far better to make up his mind to a loss which is unavoidable, and play Kt to R 4 at once.

15.	B to Q B
16. Kt to Q R 4	16. B takes R
17. Q takes B	17. Castles
18. Kt to Q B 5	18. Q to Q B 3
19. B to Q B 3	19. Kt to K 2
20. Q to K	20. R to B 2
21. Q to Q 2	21. B to B
22. Q to K 2	22. P to K B 3
23. P to K 4	23. P to K 4
24. P to K 5	24. P to K Kt 3

Black appears to have been demoralized by his first error on the 14th move; and, in consequence, his disasters accumulate.

25. P to Q Kt 5	25. P to K 4
26. P to Q B 5	26. Q to Q 2
27. P to Q Kt 6	27. Q takes P
28. R to Q B 4	28. Q to Q 2
29. B to K 3	29. R takes Kt

And Mr. STANLEY resigns the game and match.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The interest connected with the reorganization of the Southern States is chiefly concentered on the action of Congress. Mr. HARLAN, Secretary of the Interior, recently made a report, which has been somewhat misunderstood in its tenor. The importance which would attach to this speech at coming from a member of the Cabinet is considerably diminished by the fact that the Secretary has determined to leave his office and enter the State Senate. President Johnson, it is announced, has in private interviews expressed his entire approval of the views expressed by Messrs. Stevens, Sumner, and Howe. He holds, it is said, that the Southern States are in a peculiar political predicament than they ever had before, and are entitled to representation.

CONGRESS.

January 25:

In the Senate, Mr. Sumner proposed an amendment to the bill for the admission of Colorado, providing that the act should not be construed to confer upon the inhabitants that there shall be no restriction of suffrage on the basis of color.—Mr. Howe, of Wisconsin, introduced a bill to enlarge the powers of the Freedmen's Bureau. Mr. Buckalew, of Pennsylvania, opposed the bill as a gross outrage, an expensive burden to the country and an unwarrantable exercise of power, particularly in its application to States which had not been in rebellion. Mr. Fessenden, of Maine, favored the bill, and at the conclusion of his speech declared that there was no collision between the President and the Union party.—Mr. Saulsbury, of Maryland, thought the bill unconstitutional.

In the House, the discussion was mostly taken up in debate on the Amendment to the Constitution proposed by the Committee of Fifteen. Mr. Stevens was for pushing the thing through without debate, but was not sustained by his own colleagues. The debate which followed is not noteworthy.

January 24:

In the Senate, Mr. Wilson proposed an amendment to the Constitution to prevent any future discrimination for emancipated slaves, which was referred to the Judiciary Committee.—The bill to enlarge the Freedmen's Bureau was taken up. An amendment to strike out the section giving the negroes three years' possession of the late Island land was rejected, yeas 10, nays 37.

In the House, the proposed amendment to the Constitution was again debated. The debate covered minor points and has not been particularly interesting in the bill.

January 25:

In the Senate, the bill to enlarge the Freedmen's Bureau was passed, 37 to 10. The bill provides: 1st. That the freedmen's Bureau shall be maintained, with its present power to divide the section of country included within the provisions of the bill into districts (sec. 2). That the Commissioner may divide the districts into sub-districts, and may employ for the same, the salary of each not to exceed $1500 (sec. 3). That the Secretary of War may issue supplies, without charge, to destitute freedmen for the relief of freedmen and refugees: 4th. That the President shall make report of the freedmen receiving public lands in Florida, Mississippi, and Arkansas, not exceeding three millions of acres of good land, the occupants to pay a certain rental with the privilege of purchase; 5th. That the occupants of the lands under General Sherman's special order shall be permitted to remain for three years; 6th. That school and asylum lands shall be held for the freedmen at the expense of Government; 7th. That in any district where the civil rights of whites alone are denied or forbidden, the freedmen thus discriminated against shall be protected by the Bureau (sec. 7 and 8). That any person, where there is such discrimination against the freedmen, who shall under cover of any local law subject freedmen to the deprivation of any civil right or to any punishment other than such as is inflicted upon the whites for a like offence, shall be liable to imprisonment for one year or to a fine not exceeding the $1000, or both, and that the Bureau shall have power to try and adjudicate cases of this nature.

In the House, the debate on the Constitutional Amendment was continued.

January 26:

In the Senate, the House bill, extending the time for the withdrawal of bonded goods from the warehouses, was passed.—Mr. Howe's resolution for the appointment of Commissioners to confer with the States was debated.—Mr. Howe replied to the speeches made by Messrs. Doolittle and Johnson.

In the House, the debate on the Constitutional Amendment was continued without result.

January 27:

The Senate was not in session.

In the House, Mr. Smith, Mr. Baker, and Mr. Broomall spoke in favorable of the Whole on the subject of reconstruction. Mr. Smith, of Kentucky, wanted nothing from the South to take the test-oath. Mr. Baker wanted prominent rebels directly excluded from any participation in the Government. Mr. Broomall insisted upon it that the Southern people had been conquered, and therefore had no rights except what we chose to yield.

January 29:

In the Senate, Mr. Trumbull spoke at length on the bill extending the powers of civil rights.

In the House, Mr. Raymond spoke for two hours on reconstruction. Mr. Boutwell followed. Mr. Raymond, by the adoption of a Constitutional Amendment to regulate the question will secure representation to the negroes. He did not think it necessary to meddle with the so-called law of the country. He thought that it was not the desired certain guarantees of the South, but the Southern States themselves that had been conquered, and were lost. We had gained no new rights over them by our victory, but had only forced them into the occupation of a new government. The South had not been subjugated. We could not hold them as a conquered people. Mr. Raymond was in favor of accepting the status of the Southern States as having resumed their functions of self-government in the Union; of admitting Southern Representatives, including many Whigs as well as Democrats, and thereby of excluding from the Federal offices the leading actors in the rebellion; of repealing such amendments of the Constitution as may seem wise to Congress and to the States, acting without reference to the question whether supplementary measures as would prevent the overthrow of a republican form of government may be any thing. Mr. Raymond thus concluded: "I beg you to bear in mind this fact—that we of the North are the party in power, and responsible. The gigantic contest is at an end. The dead of the contending hosts sleep on the battle-field the rest of one common country under their common flag. Their hostilities are hushed, and their acts the deed of the nation they represent. The victor may well exult in the victory he has achieved. Let to be our boast, as it is our duty, to show that victory was the vanquished and their posterity to the latest generation rejoice in the end."

NEWS ITEMS.

The Twenty-first Illinois Infantry, the regiment which General Grant commanded at the beginning of the war, has lately returned from New Orleans. This veteran regiment now numbers four hundred and seventy-one men and twenty-one officers, among whom are only fifty men and two officers who started out with the regiment four years ago. One of the originals is the commanding officer of the regiment, Colonel Jamison.

Mrs. Stephen A. Douglas was married on the evening of January 23, to Brevet Brigadier-General Julius White, U.S.A., at her residence, corner of New Jersey Avenue and Delaware Street, Washington. The ceremony was performed by Father Lynch, of the Roman Catholic Church, in the presence of a small and select circle of friends of both parties.

There is much excitement in the Pennsylvania Oil Regions caused by the existence of incendiaries. Lynch-law is being resorted to, to effect a remedy.

January 23, the New Jersey Senate ratified the Constitutional Amendment abolishing slavery. The next day the ratification was signed by Governor Ward.

On the 23d January, United States Marshal Murray seized the propeller Arrow, Mr. Folsom, an attaché of the Spanish Legation, having charged that the vessel was to be fitted out as a Chilean cruiser.

In Brooklyn, Patrick Fallon has been convicted of the murder of Otero, and sentenced to be hanged at an early day.

New York City contributes one-fifth of the entire internal revenue of the country.

THE CHARITY BALL IN NEW YORK.

On the evening of January 29 the crême de la crême of the New York City aristocracy exhibited their finest costumes and their most refined taste in charity. The Nursery and Child's Hospital were in need of funds, and the bon ton was eager for excitement, and so the Charity Ball was devised at once and the same time, it was determined to give a grand ball, the proceeds of which should be devoted to the aforesaid institution.

The grand ball came off with great éclat at the Academy of Music, and every thing was arranged in accordance with a decided success. The occasion will be long remembered in the annals of Terpsichore. The ball was most elaborately arranged, and was attended by a splendid patient company. In the centre were two beautiful fountains; at the end were two Cupids holding candelabres. The house was tastefully decorated with drapery and flowers, and the lobbies handsomely carpeted. There were two bands of music, and the beauty and splendor of the whole scene, including the dancers, baffle description. We can only refer our readers to the illustration given by our artist on page 88.

SIGNOR ETHARDO ON THE SPIRAL PLANK.

ONE of the most attractive features of the entertainments at the Crystal Palace in London is the performance of Signor Ethardo. This wonderful gymnast, who is a native of Italy, ascends a long spiral platform by propelling up the narrow path a large ball on which he stands, and on which he immediately descends by the same difficult and narrow road—a feat which seems to be by far the more difficult. The spiral platform, in the shape of a cork-screw, is built on the platform in front of the great orchestra, and in full view of the many thousands of spectators. Signor Ethardo has been favored with royal patronage; for, at the Dante Festival at Florence, he appeared in the presence of King Victor Emanuel, who expressed his high approval, while his Majesty's subjects burst into a frantic fit of enthusiasm, which, it appears, baffled all powers of description. Italian sensitiveness was also carried to such a height that the music was stopped, for fear the vibration should cause the gymnast to make a false step. Certainly the large Christmas assemblages at the Crystal Palace displayed no particular anxiety for the performer's safety, though they were not backward in applauding him as he arrived at various stages of his tortuous and narrow pathway, as he reached the small circular platform at the summit, and as he finally descended in safety. The globe on which this extraordinary performer works his way up and down is 20 inches in diameter and 90 inches in circumference. The width of the winding platform is 12 inches, and flat, with no groove or protection of any sort to assist the ascent or descent; and the height of the spiral column is 50 feet. The incline winding from the base to the capital of the column is upward of 140 feet in length. The globe is constructed of wood and iron, without any India rubber, gutta-percha, or other adhesive material to assist the Signor in his difficult task.

SIGNOR ETHARDO ON THE SPIRAL PLANK AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, LONDON.

THE WADSWORTH MONUMENT.

THE adjoining engraving is a good representation of the monument erected at Geneseo, New York, last autumn, to the memory of General JAMES S. WADSWORTH. The monument stands in the burial-ground of the WADSWORTH family on Temple Hill. It is built of granite, about eight feet long and five feet wide at the base, and about two feet wide and five feet long at the top. It is about ten feet high, and is surmounted with a flag-draped urn made of bronze. On the four corners are four miniature cannon. On the west side of the monument is the inscription in bronze letters:

BRIGADIER-GENERAL JAMES S. WADSWORTH,
DIED MAY 8, 1864,
FROM A WOUND RECEIVED IN THE BATTLE OF THE WILDERNESS.
AGED 56 YEARS.

Above this inscription is an emblematic design in bronze, composed of a sheaf of wheat, a cluster of fruit, scythe, sickle, and a reaper's knife. On the east side is another design, of a sword, epaulets, and laurel wreath. Under this are the names:

Manassas, Chancellorsville,
Fredericksburg, Gettysburg,
The Wilderness.

THE NEW STEAMSHIP "RISING STAR."

THE new steamship Rising Star, of which we give an illustration on page 93, is one of the largest and finest ever built in this country. She is thirty-two hundred tons burden, three hundred and fifteen feet in length, forty-four feet breadth of beam, thirty-one feet six inches depth of hold, and three thousand horse-power. For handsome fitting up, convenience for passengers, and capacity for cargo, according to tonnage, this vessel is the peer of any thing before sailing from this port. She combines all that is necessary to a perfect steamer, with the comforts and luxuries of the most sumptuous hotel. She has a beam-engine of 100-inch cylinder and twelve feet stroke, with surface condensers, auxiliary engines, etc. She seems to be a model for speed, and in her build a tower of strength. The Rising Star has accommodations for two hundred and twenty first-class passengers. The crew of the vessel numbers eighty-five men.

Captain HORATIO NELSON, of the Rising Star, was born in 1826, in New York city. He is a son of Captain WILLIAM NELSON, so well known to the mercantile community. Captain NELSON graduated at Columbia College of this city in 1843. Immediately afterward, although his education fitted him to enter any of the learned professions, he went to sea on a sailing vessel bound to Australia. He soon rose to the rank of Captain, and has for a score of years been a well-known ship-master in connection with the New Orleans trade. Before he became Captain of the Rising Star he held a similar relation to the Morning Star, of the same line.

While in this position Captain NELSON, last February, was the means of rescuing the officers and crew of the United States gun-boat Merrimac, off the Florida coast. When he first discovered the vessel there was some doubt as to the character of the latter. She might be a Government vessel or she might be a rebel cruiser. At any rate the Captain soon discovered that the vessel, whatever her character, was lying in a position in which no ship-master would place her, and he determined to leave her to her fate. Upon doing so he found that she was the gun-boat Merrimac, that she was foundered, and that her fires were out. Much to his own embarrassment, and at a great cost to the Company, he took the crew and soldiers, numbering in all 140 men, on board his vessel and landed them at Port Royal. Strange as it may seem, after going so much out of his way, and having consumed nearly all his coal, he found it impossible to obtain, even by purchase, a fresh supply either from the Government yard at Port Royal or at Norfolk. Never has the Government in any shape testified to Captain NELSON its approval of his generous action. On this NELSON is one of the most careful and accomplished ship-masters of this country. He has carefully kept all the observations which he has ever made at sea, and his discipline on board ship is perfect and a great source of confidence to his passengers. Generous to a fault, he is a gentleman of culture, of the most refined manners, and we can wish no sea-faring happier fortune than to travel under his care. The Rising Star, of which Mr. NELSON is Captain, cost nearly $800,000.

HENRY HARTU, LORD NORTHCOTE, 1866.—(SEE PAGE 91.)

THE WADSWORTH MONUMENT AT GENESEO, NEW YORK.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY WM. A. CRAMP.]

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

INSIDE.

A CHRONICLE OF SECESSION.

IN TWENTY-FOUR CHAPTERS.

AT THE KNOW NOTHING CEREMONY.

CHAPTER V.

ONCE in his life the Rev. Edward Arthur had a misfortune befall him which was really one among the most fortunate circumstances he ever experienced. If it will make this seeming paradox any plainer, let us say instead, the gentleman in question stumbled over an obstacle at the outset of his ministerial path, but so stumbled as from that moment to walk that path, when it had become a thousand times more difficult and dangerous, with a step firm and sure where multitudes fell never again to rise.

This most fortunate misfortune, this most beneficial blunder, happened on this wise:

Some four or five years before Secession was ever regarded as a possibility outside the Pinelines of South Carolina, a great political movement took place throughout the United States—a movement as sudden, as unexpected, and, it may be added, as much underground, too, as an earthquake. At first there floated a vague rumor, eddying about the street corners of Somerville, of something new and remarkable in the political world. To the people of Somerville it was, however, a something as little understood, and so very far away, that no one felt or expressed much interest in the matter.

The matter, however, which at first was only hinted at in the papers with a scornful item here and there, began to be more fully and frequently and respectfully alluded to. Each successive paper contained news of sudden and amazing victories obtained by the new party at city elections here and there. The excitement rose rapidly. Overwhelming majorities for the new organization swept away whole States at once. The Whig and Democratic leaders ceased from their mutual strife in amazement; not more astounded were the white-haired old generals of Europe when the youthful Napoleon rushed with victorious hosts over their obsolete tactics and old-fashioned battalions. The one thought with these leaders was how to take possession of the new party, so as therewith to defeat each his ancient enemy. But while Whig and Democrat thus schemed and planned the new movement swept them, for the time, both aside from its onward course.

Somerville was very far from being at the first of things; but even Somerville became finally and deeply interested in this new thing under the sun. In vain, at the outset of the matter, did it look to the Somerville Star for light and guidance. For a time Lamum held both his tongue and his pen. Lamum was taken completely unaware, and was waiting to see. Weeks rolled by, friends and enemies alike were waiting for the Delphic syllable from the lips of the renowned editor—friends waiting, afraid to step save after him who had so often led them on to victory, doubly afraid to place themselves in possible antagonism to that trenchant pen—enemies waiting for fear of committing themselves to an organization until Lamum was pledged against it; then, and not till then, could they be certain the organization was a thing right and good.

At last Lamum spoke. A thunder-peal was not more distinct, a lightning flash not more direct and destructive. The new movement was wrong, unprincipled, detestable in every point. Those who had gone into it were deluded fools or designing knaves. From that moment Lamum turned his artillery steadily and terribly upon the new party. It was enough. In a few days his followers had all abandoned and denounced it, his enemies had to a man united themselves to, and henceforth defended, it.

Lamum never hinted an explanation of his course in those days, but it was readily understood afterward. From his earliest political life the dissolution of the Union had been to him what it is said the conquest of Constantinople is to the Russian Government—the great end, object and end of existence. If Lamum paused when the new party first rose into notice, it was only to ascertain whether that party could in any way hasten the destruction of the Union; could by any possibility be so wrought by main force as to be a new and effective engine to that glorious end. Had Lamum only been satisfied on this point he would have gone into it with all his—we will not say soul, the word does not apply to his gentleman—let us say intellect.

It was soon sufficiently clear to him that the new party was not available to this end; nay, it might even switch off the public mind into a new track! Lamum was down upon it. Shrewd politician, men said afterward. Lamum had opposed and denounced Know Nothingism in the very moment it seemed certainly victorious over all opposition. In sudden and universal unanimity left Lamum amazingly in the secondrut. His influence was increased beyond computation. Yet all the interests of the man, all the force, influence, success of Lamum rose solely from his having given himself up wholly to one idea. "The destruction of this accursed Union"—that was the thought, the passion, the end and aim of his life. He had cherished it years before he had dared whisper it even to his most intimate friend. He had attended years ago the Nashville Convention to plan toward this end, when almost universal contempt attended the step. Patiently, hopefully, unwearyingly had he toiled inwards one direction. What amazing force it gives a man, the abandoning one's self to one purpose in life!

Had Europe known, had this continent known, how completely the destruction of the Union had been for long years the one fixed purpose in life of a few able men at the South, pledged heart and mind to this thing, Europe and this continent would have been less amazed at the attempt when it was made.

"Be at my office—can you?—this afternoon at four," said Guy Brooks one morning to Mr. Arthur on the rise of the great Know Nothing movement of which we have spoken. As he said this the lawyer—for Guy Brooks was a lawyer—had an aspect of meaning and mystery in his expression thereof did not suit him either. A face franker and more open you might have searched every street in Somerville to find.

"I can be at your office then," replied his pastor; "but what for?" Not that Mr. Arthur needed to be informed of the spread it out upon the table before his friend, and leaned back in his chair with a "There! what do you think of that?"

As the minister read the flaming capitals the lawyer studied his countenance. It was the countenance of a poet as well as a preacher—coal brown eyes, clustering brown hair, quiet face, almost too full to be so firm; an expression of thought, suffering, patience, and that altogether indescribable spiritedness of the man from active mixed which characterizes the countenance of him who habitually looks within himself and above himself.

There was a marked dissimilarity and as marked a similarity between these two friends. The lawyer was of an unusually large frame—the singular characteristic of Kentucky—stature fit for those who man that outpost and bulwark of freedom, while the minister was but of medium size. The lawyer was angular, and somewhat awkward and cumbrous, while his friend was the exact reverse. The brown face of the lawyer would have been homely were it not for the frank and good-humored expression which pervaded it, while peace and thought came to the face of the minister that which elevated and refined a countenance already prepossessing.

Even had the two men not been drawn together as minister and officer of a young and struggling church, in a new community having but little sympathy with religion, they would have been drawn together by an instinctive affinity. Genuine piety and heart-felt sincerity in both, the dependence of the lawyer upon the minister as his spiritual guide, and of the minister upon the lawyer as his counselor in matters of this world, these ties bound the two closely together. The lawyer found singular freshness and artlessness and elevation of sentiment in his friend in comparison with the rough and practical world in which he was struggling; and the minister turned with pleasure from his books and his own abstractions to the healthful, matter-of-fact, free-spoken lawyer. Not in vain, thought he, may, side by side, learned and unlearned labor during the raging of Know Nothingism, and of all that followed upon its heels.

"Yes, but what do you think of it?" asked the lawyer, as his companion read the poster through, then, without a word, folded it up and returned it to the lawyer.

"Nothing at all. But where did you get it?" was the reply.

"Tore it down from beside the door of the Post-office," said the Kentuckian, with emphasis.

"It was hardly worth your while," said his companion, "to have surely attach no importance to any effort of the sort."

"You are mistaken, Sir; terribly mistaken, Sir!" said the lawyer!" continued the lawyer, and he opened the poster as he stood, and read it in a powerful and earnest voice.

"FREEMEN OR SLAVES!

"The die is cast. The unprincipled Abolitionists of the North have accomplished their diabolical purpose. Beyond a doubt Abraham Lincoln has been elected President. And you proposed to submit to the iron yoke of an Abolitionist! Your freedom as a sacrificed! Freemen, will you submit strike for our liberty now, or be forever SLAVES! All those in favor of calling an immediate Convention of the people of this Sovereign State will meet that distinguished at the Court-house at 3 o'clock. Come one, come all!

"'Strike for your altars and your fire,
Strike for the green graves of your sires!
God and your native land!'"

"Well, and what of all that?" asked the minister, perfectly cool beside the excitement of his companion.

"What of all that?" replied his companion. "Is it possible you do not know what is to follow? Is it possible you know that South Carolina has already seceded? That Mississippi has probably followed? That the storm is just rising which is to overspread all the Southern States? What of that? It means that our State, too, is to be hurled into the movement."

"By whom?" The minister patient with his mistaken friend.

"By the leaders of this meeting this afternoon."

"And who are they? Look at it, man. Lamum, first and foremost; Colonel Roberts. Judge Lamum receives his late election from Lamum; Colonel Juggins will ride; Dick Sim from the country; Dr. Ginnis; Alf Pike; Dick Simmons; Bob Williams; and the like. There may be others, but only as spectators, like yourself, Mr. Ellis, and Ferguson."

"You seem to take it for granted that I am not going into the thing," said the lawyer, composing his face.

"May I be forbid!" ejaculated the minister, fervently, and somewhat anxiously.

"He has forbidden, he does forbid! But you do not estimate the thing right. Perhaps only a dozen or two of the professional politicians will meet there really determined to act. Lamum will be called to the Chair. Brother Barker, by previous arrangement, will open the meeting with prayer."

"Never!" interrupted the minister, eagerly.

"It shows how little you know, shut up here among your books. Brother Barker will open with a long and fervent prayer. His whole denomination at the South will identify itself, has identified itself with the movement. The strongest kind of resolutions have been written out by Lamum weeks ago, and will be introduced and passed. Not a hundredth part of Somerville will sympathize in the thing—the community as a community will heartily disapprove of the thing—Joe Lamum will publish a blazing account in his paper, and represent the proceedings as the unanimous and enthusiastic expression of the whole county. Meanwhile, by letters and visits to all parts of the State, made weeks ago, months ago, similar meetings will be got up by similar politicians over the whole State; an enthusiasm will be kindled, will rage with fury over the State. Then a Convention will be held, Secession will be consummated, and then—God only knows what!"

"But the Governor—" began the minister.

"By—by nothing at all!" burst out the lawyer, deeply excited. "What a splendid opportunity for immortal fame that man has! Oh, if I could but be in his place to-day!"

"And what would you do, could you do?"

"Do? I would run up the flag of my country, rally around it by proclamation every true friend of the State, and put down the Disunion and all his infernal work! I tell you, Sir, three-fourths of the voters of the State would rally to the flag. The politicians and the clique over the entire South—the politicians—are utterly distinct from the people in this great matter. The politicians by a long-cherished hatred against the North burning in their bosoms; they want plunder and power. The people are busy with their crops and their families; they want only their rights and peace. Yet in one month—in two weeks from this hour, the people will have passed helpless into the hands of the politicians. And while this golden, glorious moment is in their hands—while the governor there they sit at the capital of the State, the Governor and the heads of departments, bowling and disorganized, and paralyzed by the awful ruin they have at least sense enough to know is coming upon the State. Unwilling to shed blood! Unwilling! Ashamed! Afraid! And all if the cause of Right and Liberty and Law, and all we hold dear as American freemen, is not in the one scale, and the life of a man in the for Shame! Shame! Shame! As if that should paralyze us in this last moment. Only run up the flag of our country, rally around it, and the honest men of the State, arrest every traitor; only a firm front and a bold hand for this next golden month, and the State is safe, and with the State, Kentucky will be!" And the lawyer walked the floor in excess of impatience.

"But the Governor?" insisted the minister.

"Understands the whole evil as well as any man; would do what is right; but—but—"

"Is too old," supplied the minister, in sorrowful tones.

The lawyer's head sunk against Christian his breast.

"You draw a terrible picture," said the young minister, after a long silence; "yet I am compelled at all times to feel certain faith in any human arm or brain. But I do feel a full and quiet faith in God. Trust Him, and all will be well at last. You know perfectly well that he orders all hearts, all minds, all events in infinite wisdom and love. This new, this terrible question, has been founded as such. Ever since its peculiarly religious foundation was laid in prayer and sown by the blessed Saviour while on earth, it has been a nation trained to piety. Think of the numerous and powerful denominations of the people, the numerous associations for the advancement of Christianity at home and abroad, and of their millions of income. Why, Sir, it is a Christian nation. I can not for a moment believe it is to be given up to distruption and ruin. I would as soon expect the sun to—to—"

"Go out?" asked the lawyer. "Well, and the sun shall be turned into sackcloth—I don't remember the rest of the passage—the moon into blood."

"Oh, that refers to the latter days," said his companion, with a smile of superior theological information.

"I myself can't think, can not bring myself to believe in the raging of evil and the [illegible] nation—this nation. It seems preposterous, said the lawyer, as if reasoning with himself.

The minister kept silence. He could not dream you were ever troubled with such morbid notions, Mr. Brooks. Really Lamum frightens you altogether too much. I don't think that such men as Lamum, and the class whom he represents, are to be compared with the vast body of quiet, sensible, Christian people who make up this great country. Or, if that is not strong enough, I add the minister, with a pitying smile, "do you imagine that a million of Americans are too powerful for the Almighty? For my part, I cannot think of it the more composed I feel. Wo! Nonsense!"

"God often uses bad men to accomplish his greatest purposes," said the lawyer, "but I, as our Christianity, we may turn out to be not so Christian a people as we have fancied ourselves to be. Perhaps it is to be added, looking at his friend in a way which both puzzled and awoke vague pain in his bosom, "but that the Almighty has a special controversy with the people—a special controversy? If He has, you depend on it no amount of Christianity, nor of Christianity, will save us. Come, come, I must rest His hand until that one matter be settled. We will see very soon. No matter about that now. I have thought the matter all over, the pain of the good men just now! I declare it does look like the hand of the Almighty, though, Heaven knows, it is the work of human hands, and by the rash hands of the South itself, that I fear. However, I am glad to find we think and feel alike in this matter. Now, my patient South, and by the rash hands of the South itself, that I fear. However, I am glad to find we think and feel alike in this matter. Now, my patient South, Time for me to go to my office. Good-morning." And the visitor was gone only to look back again the next moment.

"I am afraid I know somebody with whom you will not be able to agree in regard to Secession," he said, significantly.

"And who may that be?" asked the minister, feeling his face suddenly burn as he spoke.

"Not the man sent to inform you," said the lawyer with a smile, and closing the door after him.

THE WARRANTEE DEED.

AIR—"Villikins and his Dinah."

A LAWYER there was, whom I'll call Mr. Clay,
He had but few clients, and those didn't pay;
At length, of starvation he grew so afraid,
That he married an heiress to keep off the maid.
Chorus.—Ri ti ral li, to ral li, to ral li, day.

At the wedding this lawyer made one great mistake;
'Twas not in omitting the name of the cake;
The ring was well chosen, the parson well fed,
But the groom signed a warrantee deed.
Chorus, breathing this out mistake.—Ri ti, etc.

One night, in their chamber, the lady arose,
And began to prepare to retire to repose;
She let down her hair, as she sat by a chair
Which it gave him much pleasure to clasp in his arms.
Bespattered flattery, appropriate to the feelings of the joyous bridegroom.—Ri ti, etc.

She went to the wash-stand to bathe her fair face,
But the process deserved all it possibly can claim;
The rest on her cheek, whether ruddy or faint,
When displayed on the towel was nothing but paint!
Amazed Chorus, on witnessing the materials of the lady's countenance displayed upon the towel.—Ri ti, etc.

She went to the mirror, to take down her hair,
But when she had done so, her cranium was bare!
Said she, "Don't be frightened to see my poor head,
I shall put on another when I get into bed."
Chorus; to be sung as smooth as the lady's hand.—Ri ti, etc.

Her husband next saw, with amazement and grief,
A curious performance of hers with her teeth;
She took them all out with her fingers and thumb,
Said she, "I've forgotten to step in my gums."
Toothless Chorus; to be sung by Dr. Colton's Patent Advertising Tooth.—Ri ti, etc.

Then she loosened the robes which enveloped her waist,
And took something out which within them was placed;
Said she, "When I'm dead, let it not be forgotten,
You can put me in pickle with this new article."
Chorus; exhibiting the sudden change in the features of the unknown, produced by receiving the price of the cotton.—Ri ti, etc.

The groom had been sitting in stupid surprise
To see such strange doings before his own eyes;
But now he burst out, rushed out at the door,
And poor Mrs. Clay never saw him more!
Slam bang! Bloodcurdling chorus from the departing husband shut the door after him.—Ri ta, etc.

Young man, when you go to agree for a wife,
'Tis the gravest matter you'll ever make in your life;
Don't trust to good looks—of my counsel take heed;
But be sure and insist on a warrantee deed.
Grand final Chorus; by twenty-four resolute young men, each determined to exact a warrantee deed.—Ri ti, etc.

PHILIP FALKLAND'S STORY.

WHEN my mother was left a widow, and it had been discovered that the money which was supposed to be lying in the Crampton Bank had been invested in the consolidated Bubble and Smash Company, and that the mysterious summer dinner-guest with it; when the old Portman mansion was sold and the furniture sold with it, and all our earthly possessions were packed away in trunks and distinctly reared under in the hall for the morrow's flitting, while Mrs. Falkland sat weeping on the throne of us, all boys, sitting sadly over the fire, and sighed out:

"Well, I'm glad there are no girls among you; men can make their way in the world, give them half a chance. Maybe it will be the Lord's will that I should go too; and how could I leave young Jane's children? Not half a dozen never—and learning every day; and Samuel with good prospects before him—if the inconsequency isn't quite to what we have been used to, and Phil"—there she stopped and reddened, and said, quickly—"Phil's but young yet, and has elder brothers."

I knew what she meant right well—why her face flushed and her lip quivered. And when Eben had taken his light and gone up stairs to bed, and Samuel had gone to study, and we have given the servants had followed him, I took my crutches and came out of the corner where I had been sitting, and sat down by mother's feet.

"You've been fretting about me, mother," I said.

She looked at me with another flush, and said, "It's a great deal to fret about just now, you know, my dear."

"I can't hear, mother," I said. "But I know this also—when you are not thinking before the fire just now—often since our troubles came upon us you have said this to yourself."

"Then will the doctor in good practice some day. Samuel will succeed and make friends and fortune. But what can Phil do but drag his brothers down by living on their bounty?"

My mother put her hand over my mouth. "I never thought that of you, Phil," she said. "Elder brothers should always help the younger."

"And how much younger am I than they?" I said. "Eben is nineteen and nearly one-and-twenty; I am full nineteen. Mother, you have been anxious on my score. You are still."

"Well, Phil," she answered, "I won't deny it; we have tried—your poor father and I—to make life easy for you, and it seems so terrible for you now. I wish spirit enough to be glad to work for you, that I could carry you about and cuddle you up in my arms more than ever. Ever since you were about I've liked you best, Phil! the others were manage, and I'm an old woman; but what will you do without money?"

"As well as rest, dear mother," I said.

"No, Phil," said mother. "They can walk and run. They hardly used the carriage when we had it, and you always rode, either in that or on horseback. They can eat common dishes with appetite, and you need things that cost money to tempt you. And soft cushions and carpets and cozy seats you must have, and I've seen the others choose to spend all day in their work-shop or the tan-yard. I love all my boys the same, but I'm right, I don't feel for the others as I do for you."

"Never fret again, mother," I said; "I've got into lazy habits, and am stronger than you think. And the riding was all pride. You see I took better any where than on my feet. And as for treadwinning, I can do something in that way too. I have hands, if I haven't feet, that are worth much to me."

"The boy never means to turn tailor or shoemaker?" cried mother, with a gasp.

"I'll do that before I'll be idle," I said; "but I was thinking of something else. Do you know I believe Nature made me an artist?"

"Goodness!" cried mother. "Why, what makes you think so?"

"Because I've always loved to paint and draw," I said. "Because I've done more than you know in that way, and because—to the truth to my own mother—I feel certain I don't daub. My pictures are not what they ought to be. I have every thing to learn, but I feel what I can do, and I'm certain some day to do something."

Mother looked at me as though I were a pet child who had proposed some absurd attempt, and said, in a humoring voice,

"Yes, dear, of course you can. It will amuse you nicely."

"Wait here," I said. "Only wait here a while."

And I went from the room and along a little passage to my pretty bedchamber and brought out my port-folio.

Mother put on her glasses and prepared to look indulgently. But in a little while, as she turned the pieces of millboard over, her eyes began to sparkle. And at last she almost screamed,

"They're fit to frame and put in an exhibition, They are, Phil! I always went to one in the spring with poor dear Mr. Falkland, and ought to know. Oh, to think that I, nobody but, I should have such a genius for a son. A boy who paints pictures fit to hang in exhibitions! Phil, Phil, I didn't think it of you. Oh, Phil!"

She put both arms about my neck and cried outright as she spoke; and I could have cried for joy to see her so glad. I knew better than she how far my work was from that of an experienced artist. That this or that, and that could, and the other a little out of drawing. But it would have been pure cruelty to point out these defects to her who sat gloating over the sketches with her eyes dewy and her lips a-tremble.

After a bit, when she was half at rest, I slowly gathered them up, and said,

"So you like them, mother?"

"Like them! Oh, Phil!" sobbed mother. "And to think how good God is all the while. So often I've watched boys at their games and wished my lame-halted Phil could be among them; and, perhaps, if you had not been lame you would never have painted at all. And to be such a genius in letter Sun on the evening else in this world. Money! Surely, Phil, I need not fret now. I've heard of great artists being paid small fortunes for one picture. And you'll be a great one, Phil. Phil, I could almost kiss that little girl! I have almost (not quite) forgiven her."

"Forgive her entirely," I said, "for she was never to blame."

And as I plodded wearily into my chamber I could not help thinking of the picture I had turned upon. I could not help sighing a little heavily to think, after all, how glad I should be to be strong and active like Eben and Sam.

I had not always been lame. It was not until I was fourteen that, as I sat sketching the vessels on the Bideton river one afternoon, I spied a little girl, a mere child, on the railroad track between the bank I sat on and the river. She was picking up some flowers she had dropped, and knew nothing of the great iron monster screaming up the track toward her, or of her danger. I called to her, but she did not hear me, and then I saw as well as heard. In spite that I had nearly reached the spot when— No matter—you have guessed the whole already, and I saved the child. She had, they said, no scratch or bruise upon her.

I was so glad of that, when I was able to talk of it, that I forgot for the little moment my own pain. And then, for the first time, I knew that mother, with her heart full of sorrow for me, had spoken very bitterly of the other Falklands. For I also had come weeping to ask after me and thank me, and had forbidden her to come near the house again. They were rough boys, and had their own share since that time, and so we lost all trace of them.

I can now mother the sweet memory of the child; but I always felt tender toward her—something as a mother may to the child who owes its life to her preservation.

While I tied up my port-folio I gave a few moments to these remembrances, and then called "Goodnight" down the hall. Mother's voice answered almost cheerily.

"Good-night, Phil!" And soon I heard her in her own room, and Eben coming in last night in our dear old home, fell to sleep and dreamed of pleasant things until the day broke.

Then, with the ringing of the breakfast-bell, we were up and doing. There were good-bys to be said to a few neighbors; two faithful servants to part from. And mother had to visit some favorite spot alone, and each dreaded the last moment for the others. But it passed better than we expected with all of us. Mother hid her face in her handkerchief—Eben sched, and Sam's voice was husky; but that was all. After we were in the cars I felt my hand and that of my mother and my heart beating fearfully from the excitement I had hardly been aware of; but I had given no sign of what I felt to the others, and when the train began to start, as I watched the roof of our old home fade into the distance, and saw at last even the steeple, in whose shadow my father lay asleep, turn into a cold dream and vanish.

Four days later we had found some rooms in one of the plainest streets of New York, and were fairly started upon our new, strange life.

Even I was busy, for the sketches had been shown to my brothers. Eben had said:

"I'm no critic, but I think he's got it in him, mother."

And Sam had cried, "You may turn it to profit somehow, Phil."

All the cabinet council decided that the best room was to be my study, and that the front door should be garnished with a plate bearing the words —PHILIP FAIRLEIGH, Artist. So the plate was up; and my sketches were upon the walls, and a new easel and pallet and mahlstick ready; and while Ellen divided his time between the cheerful shop and hard study, and Sam, as clerk in an iron foundry, earned his small salary well, I painted and waited for purchasers and sitters.

They were slow in coming; but daguerreotypes were not in all hands then, and some people were glad to find a new artist who would paint cheaply. My first patron was a coachman, who wanted a likeness to present to his sweet-heart; my second a little dressmaker from over the way. After that I had double been smitten by brother Eben, and fancied him the artist; and my third was a gentleman who longed for a portrait of his dead wife, and whose name was Hargrave.

I paint it her as she lay, a beautiful piece of marble, on her pillow, and my fancy helped me to the life-like glow on the cheek and the radiance of the smile.

The husband told me his daughter's eyes were like her mother's, and the young lady was to sit to me while I painted them.

One morning I waited in my studio for her coming, and heard a little knock on the door. When I cried, "Come in!" it opened, and a girl of seventeen, dressed in deep mourning, entered. It was no surprise to me when she said, "I am Mr. Hargrave's daughter Jessie, Mr. Fairlight." For I expected her; yet something startled me as I placed a chair for her. As I uttered the few commonplaces which usually come to the lips of strangers who meet for the first time, I was aware of a strange feeling that I had known this girl before, and tried to remember when it could have been.

Afterward, as I tried to transfer those strange, solemn, long-lashed eyes to canvas, I began to know that I had always fervently expected to paint just such eyes. That since I could dream at all I had dreamed of this face. That this girl, yet a stranger, would be more to me than any other living mortal. Somehow she was interwoven with my destiny. Somehow she was to be good or ill to me.

Thinking this I painted on, and the daughter's eyes shone from the mother's pictured face. I had never painted so well before. I had never so waited for more time over my work. When the evening shadows began to creep over the sky I laid my brush aside with a sigh, and said:

"If you are as weary as sitters usually are, you will be glad to hear that I have done for to day, Miss Hargrave."

She answered: "I am not tired in the least;" and came around my easel to look at the picture.

"It is like mamma," she said. "I could love you, who never knew her, paint so good a likeness?"

The eyes, too, though hers, were handsomer than mine will ever be. I love pups will increase.

It came into my mind to tell her that no eyes could be more beautiful than hers; but I held my peace, and only thanked her by a bow for the praise of my work. And then, as she was going, saw her to the door, not knowing that we should ever meet again. In fact, that we should not meet most likely; for Mr. Hargrave had spoken of returning to England—his native place—and of taking his daughter with him. The picture was already paid for, and was to be sent for on the morrow, and I had no excuse for intruding upon the privacy of either father or daughter.

Yet, again and again the haunting memory of those eyes seemed to warn me that we were not to part thus. And when a month afterward my door opened and Mr. Hargrave entered with his daughter on his arm, I felt no surprise at their appearance.

It was my task, this time, to paint a portrait of Miss Jessie Hargrave—a small one, which her father could take with him on his journey. "For I have changed my plan," he said. "I shall travel until I feel that the old house yonder may be lived in again, and then will keep it home-like for me. She does not wish to leave it."

"I had rather live there than in any other place," said Jessie. "I can remember poor mamma better, I think, with things she has touched about me; but the doctors say papa must go. And as says I should be a child to stay him."

The beautiful eyes filled with tears that I longed to kiss away. And she turned hastily to a portfolio which lay open on the table. While my mother and Mr. Hargrave conversed I made my way across the room and stood beside her. And we looked over the pictures together, and I answered her questions and turned the sketches over for her.

At last we came to a child's drawing-book. A common thing, much dog-eared, and old, and picked up.

"I wish you would not look at that," I said. "It is a schoolboy's handiwork. Nothing more."

"Yours?" she said.

"Mine, years ago," I answered.

She smiled. "An artist's first attempts," she said; "I should value it, were I you." And she furled the leaves.

There were caricatures of the schoolmaster. A picture of our house-dog on his mat. No end of wagons, steam-engines, and ships. Two or three copies of Hogarth's prints, at last, a sketch from nature. The one I had been at work on when I saw the child by the rails. It was half-finished, and a blur was across it, for it had lain face downward on the grass, but Miss Hargrave looked at it eagerly.

"Ah," she cried, "that is a place I know! Is it not it ——, on the Hudson."

"Yes, that is my native place, Miss Hargrave," I said. She gave a little sigh.

"Papa," she said, "look, you remember?" and the father came and gazed on the paper earnestly.

"My poor wife loved that place, she said. "Ah yes, yes, I remember!"

"And why did you not finish the sketch?" asked Jessie. "You can't value it as I do. May, I have it?"

"Take the book," I said, "if you will so far honor it." But I did not tell her why the sketch was not finished.

The little book was in a pretty reticule she carried when she left me. And the next day she came to fit for me. Again I looked at will into the depths of those glorious eyes. Again I marked the delicate outline, the flower-like coloring, the billowy waves of dark-brown hair. She was, to my fancy, the loveliest thing on earth. And soon I knew I loved her. Much as one might love the dweller of some sphere above him—for I had no hope of a thought from that quarter. Jessie was far too rarely and truly. A glove that she had worn, a flower she had touched, were precious to me as relics to a devotee. And when, though I strove to banish them, thoughts of what might have been, had I been handsome and happy like Eben, a stalwart as my brother Samuel, would fill my mind, and make me sit idly before my easel in a waking dream.

I said to myself, "When the picture is done I shall see her no more;" but though I knew this would be best for me, my heart gave a great leap of joy when I heard that she had taken a fancy to drawing-lessons, and that I had been chosen for her teacher.

"If you will do me the favor of taking a pupil," said the courtly father, never guessing that the request had given me the keenest pang of pain,—

"Could she learn something in a year? You think so? Then for a year you shall try to make an artist of my little girl, though I doubt her talent."

So matters stood when he went away; and so gained the months of Mr. Hargrave's absence. I gave her lessons. Twice a week I had the privilege of sitting beside her for an hour and guiding her pencil. I grew to believe that her progress was owing to me. I was then alone with her. But we saw each other often at other times. A grim old aunt presided over her home, but made office came to mother for advice or comfort. She grew intimate with Ellen and Samuel, with Sam and Eben and laughed with merry Sam, and saw every sketch I made at its beginning.

Whether I dared to tell my love, or whether it sometimes was revealed by look or tone, I could not tell; but one thing troubled me. Sometimes, when she thought I did not see her, I found her looking at me in the strangest way. The look she might have given one she had injured—a remorseful look. Sad, and nothing else.

By-and-by I began to fancy I had fathomed it.

My handsome brother Eben was often at her side. Always ready to wait upon her and her little cousin Madge, who had come to live with her. Never tired of hearing them sit and sing. And persistently "remembering ever" with a rose, a new flower, or on some excuse or other. So plainly a mere subterfuge that he blushed very red when he uttered it.

Eben liked Jessie—loved her, and she had found it out—found out also that I adored her, and feared in her gentleness to tell me.

She pitied me so, you see; knew that, and it was hard to be pitied only, where I longed for love. She knew I could not endure that love in any woman's heart; and because of that was kind to me.

Often, when we walked out together, she would leave the rose in her boy's hair or button; and many a time I have seen tokens of her remembrance that I was different from the others in her sisterly watchfulness for my comfort. Yes, she loved Eben, and both were keeping the secret for my sake.

When I once felt sure of this, I said to myself, "Do not be selfish, Phil. Be glad that she owes to the kind brother and the sweet friend that you can be happy in their happiness: and I set to work to conquer my own heart. I was prompt! The love I strove to smother was too strong.

But at least I could mask it; and rather than be a blight upon their joy, I would endure in dark and look I played a part; pretended to be surly; refused to join their walks; shut myself in my studio when they were in the house, and, in the evening, and hoped at least to make the handsome pair less tender of me. And I prayed earnestly. Heaven knows, that I might not be a curse to the two I loved best in my heart; quiet Eben, who would have cut his right hand off rather than do me harm.

Yet sadly insane I must have been, and once, when the spring days were growing bright, they had planned a quiet little picnic. Only mother, Madge, and Jessie, and my brother Eben, who was to provide people the girls knew, and were full of merry talk about it, while I, refusing to join their arrangements, kept my own counsel ever since I had given a crusty answer to, her coaxing invitation. The others had begun to let me have my own way, and Jessie alone left me to my sulks.

"If you don't like the place," she said, "or if it is too far for you, we will go somewhere else. Do come, Phil!"

And as she spoke her little hand touched my arm, and that pink cheek drooped near my shoulder. The touch thrilled me through. I trembled and grew pale; but I only answered:

"No; I had better stay all day. Don't stop to think of me. Good-by!"

And I went to my easel and pretended to be at work. Glad I was when they were gone, and when they had gone out into the sweet spring sunshine I flung brush and pallet aside, and, lying prone upon my little bed, remembered how, by her love and wept—wept as a girl might, sobbing and moaning—for once, for the first and last time, giving vent to the emotions so long pent up within my breast.

The passionate storm was over at last, and I looked up to see Jessie standing in the door-way of my studio looking at me. Her hands were clasped, her face very pale.

When she saw me she advanced and knelt down beside the lounge. Of their own accord her little pearly hands took mine and held them.

"What is the matter, Philip?" she said. "Have we offended you? We have been so different of late to what we were that I have feared so."

I looked at her ashamed and troubled.

"Since you have seen me blubbering like a baby you might as well know the full extent of my childishness," I said. "It never happened before. It never shall again. But, for once, I longed to walk away beside you, as Eben and Sam can. The sweet air did it, or the sunshine. It's over now; and you have always been only too thoughtful of me. Go—they are waiting for you, Jessie."

"I am not waiting," she said. "And so it is that; and you suffer so in secret. Oh, Philip!"

She seemed to turn faint, and sat down on the floor near me and rested and leaned against it heavily.

"How you must hate the girl!" she said—"the child you saved upon the road. Better for me that she had never been born! Better for her to have died than this! Ah, you did not think I knew of her! Your mother told me."

I arose and crossed the room. Even when I bent over her I could not see her face, but she trembled like an aspen leaf.

"Jessie," I said, "my thoughts of that innocent child are the happiest of my life. Has he——my good, kind mother told you that I love the child? I love her, rather, because I have suffered to do her some little good. I think of her sometimes as the woman she will grow to be by this time, and think of her young beauty still unmarred—her young life full of joy, as I pray it may be, and say, 'God protect that child and bless her.' Often since I knew you I have thought she may be like you—I have wished it could have been you— Jessie!—Jessie!!!"

For she had started up and stood before me with clasped hands.

"I was afraid of this, Philip," she said. "I have not guessed its truth, yet I must speak as you do to spare me. You know I—I, Jessie Hargrave—was the child you saved from death at such a cost. Better that I had died! Better for you! Better any thing than the purchase of life and strength at such a price. Look at me as you must feel—shew me your sorrow—your hatred—your pain—let me forgive. Have I marred your life—I—I—I!"

She was so pale, so lovely, and I drew nearer and put my hand upon her shoulder.

"For God's sake, Jessie," I said, "don't speak so, lest you kill me with your pain. Hate you! Oh, Jessie, I never guessed that you had been the child lost from my heart I say, 'Thank Heaven for it!' At least I have given you some little good, my darling my— Leave me, Jessie—for Eben's sake, leave me!"

"For Eben's sake?" she cried. "Leave you for Eben's sake—what can you mean?"

"Foolish words," I said. "Dear friend—dear sister, forget what I said!"

She turned her wet eyes full upon my face. Her fingers touched my arm and clung to it.

"Say it again, Philip," she said. "Tell me you never hated this wretched child—that you do not hate her now! I have striven so long to keep the secret here locked. I have said, 'While he does not guess who I am he may like me a little still.' I have wept so much for the harm I have done my friend. Tell me, Philip. Is it possible that you have not hated my memory?"

"It is true that I love you better than my soul!" I cried. "Can you give me all my world and half my heaven! Go, now; go—best, sweetest, dearest Jessie, and let me forget that Eben's brother ever spoke those words to you. Whatever happens, the memory of those moments passed beside you will be the sweetest of my life. Some day I'll can say 'sister' from my heart, for God will help me."

Her clinging fingers never left my arm.

"Then you love me, Philip?" nearly you do not think we love each other? He is betrothed to Madge. Did you not guess that?"

A great load seemed to have passed from the face of my sun. The world was bright again. At least no other claimed her. At least I had done no wrong in loving her. I bent and kissed her eyes. I felt the touch of her hand. I breathed her very breath—sweet as new-mown hay!

"Jessie!" I cried. "I scarcely dare to ask you for your love, and claim you for my very own. Oh wert I strong and able to cherish and protect you! Oh, that I were a man not; I have not what it would be madness to hope for!"

Still, her fingers never stirred. Her eyes never left mine; and then her sweet lips fell these sweet words:

"If you dare not ask for my heart, Phil, how dare I, a woman, tell you how long it has been yours without great shame?"

I caught her in my arms. but paused even then.

"Is this a sufficient payment of a debt?" I asked. "Do you sacrifice nothing in giving yourself to a cripple who has only his love to give you?"

And she answered: "It is not pity—it is not gratitude. It is pure love, and love is all it asks."

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

LITERARY INTELLIGENCE.—The person who made the "welkin ring" is now engaged in the trade in surgery for "the twelfth finger of the left hand but one."

Buttoning on a collar is cruel work for the nails when the linen is thick and sternly starched, and the button is large and closely sewn. But if you will give me some string I will tell you how to meet the difficulty. Dip the button-hole for ten seconds into water.

THE LANGUAGE OF FLOWERS.

How he has language if a flower is dear!" remarked A. "Contrive a meadow to talk!"

"Why, it's easy," said Q, "what a flower would say To discover—a meadow from its o'talk."

HOW TO KEEP A GOOD SERVANT.—Keep on discharging the bad ones till you meet with one that suits you.

HOW TO DISCOURAGE THE PERSEVERE STRIVE.—Never stand still and look on.

What is the difference between a boxer-room and a hen-coop?—One is a great cell, and the other a lot of little cells.

MISER'S UTTERER.

SAWS BY OUR OWN SAWYER.

Empty tubs by the noise of their drum may tell their states,
Empty heads by their wordy, dogmatical prate;
Empty jars are prepared any ware to receive,
Empty minds any folly or tale to believe;
Corn grows up best and best when the empty ear pride,
And conceit makes the idle pragmatic and vain;
Empty boxes are places for vermin to breed in,
Empty brains for suggestions of Satan to seed in;
Empty rooms are so cold that they give us a chills,
Empty hearts are so selfish they sympathy kills;
Empty purses can not long stiff and upright remain,
Nor long undeserving their credit maintain.

SUFFERINGS KNOWLEDGE.—Ascertaining the cost of a fellow-creature.

When does a man sit down to a melancholy dessert?—When he sits down to wine and pine.

When a man and woman are made one by a clergyman, the question is, which is the one. Sometimes there is a long struggle between them before this matter is finally settled.

The man who, on account of the high price of sugar, determined to sweeten his coffee with the white article, has concluded to fall back on the "granulated juice of the cane."

Wrong! Of course you are, stupid! Egypt is not a Nile-land, but part of a continent.

ART OF LOVE.—A lady told her husband she read the "Art of Love" and he gave her permission to be agreeable to him. "I would rather have love without art," replied he.

A boy, who displayed a long, dangling watch-chain, was asked,

"What's the time of day, Jim?"

He laid down his watch very ceremoniously, and after examining it for a while referred to another boy, and asked,

"Is the the figure nine or the figure seven?"

The boy said that it was the figure seven.

"Well, then," said the genius, "it lacks just about half an inch of eight."

I BELIEVE YOU, MY BOMBA!—It is stated that Cleopatra ate a pearl worth £8,000 in the tea-time. If so, the fashionable guest must be a remarkably fine specimen of their High-ness.

SNUFF-TAKING.

What a moment, what a doubt!
Ah my nose is full out,
All my thrilling, tickling canstic,
Pyramid rhinoceratic,
Wants to sneeze and can not do it!
How it pines me, chills me, grieves me,
How with rapturous torment file me!
Now, now—Sneeze, you gracious—get through it!
Shoe—shoe—Oh, this most delchi—
Handkerchief gullah!
Heugh it, I shall sneeze till spring!).
Ah, it's over—false thing.

THE BETTER CUT.—How annoying it must be to a historian to have a hotsie-mose!

IMPROMPTU.

I met a friend the other day,
We both went our separate way,
When told, no wonder, you will my—
His pocket was picked of MY.

A story is told of an inveterate drinker, who, after a great deal of solicitation, signed the temperance pledge, but soon after was noticed to imbibe as frequently as ever. To his friends, who remonstrated with him, he replied that the document he had signed was illegal, and of no binding force, because it had upon it no internal revenue stamp.

What notes compose the most favorite tunes?—and how many tunes do they compose?—Bank-notes—they make for cash.

WE observe a magazine article with the inviting title, "Under the Lash, by One who has been Flogged." Pleasant reading, if the announcement is to be read literally. We suppose it will be followed by "Coffee Cooled, by One who has been Hanged."

CABINET CONUNDRUMS.

Why is a crazy old speechifier like the Secretary of the Navy?—He is giddy on wake.

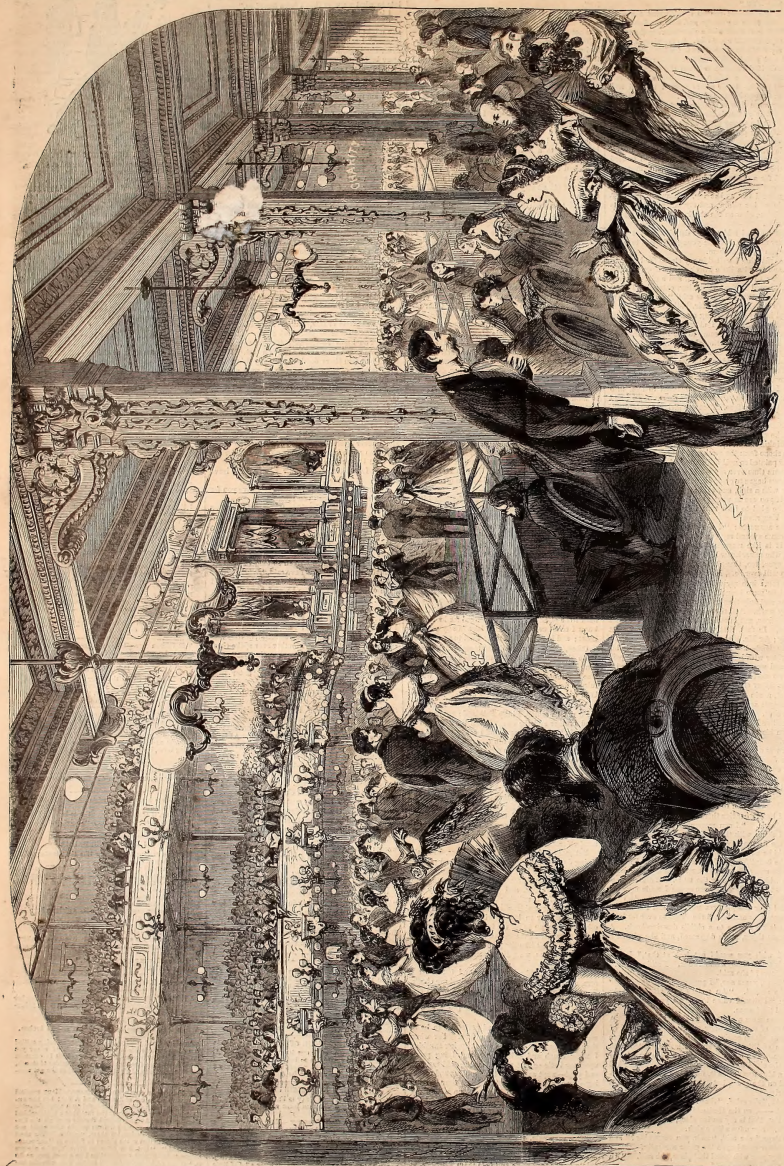
Why is the postal-card-writer hearing the White House like an outward-bound steamer?—He is going Seward.

Why is a fast-walking like the Secretary of War?—He regulates the canoes.

Why is the Secretary of the Treasury like a weaver?—He can't do without a Spinner.

Why is the Postmaster-General like a girl at a boarding-school?—He looks after the mails.

Said the lovely Julia to the bewitching Fanny:
"My dear, why is a new-born baby like a new's-bell?"
"I don't know. You know I never can guess a conundrum."
"Because it was never seen before."
Fanny fainted.



A CAPITAL R.—The clown's "Here we are?"

A lady wrote upon a window some verses, intimating her fondness of never marrying. A gentleman wrote the following lines underneath:

The lady must receive these words betoken,
Wrote them on glass to show that it may be broken.

An elderly and good-natured clergyman, called upon to bless a newly-married couple, "Good Lord," he prayed, "as here have been, because I have always kept in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Society since 1800, and have preached to more converts than any other man in the connection, I do not see why I should not be rewarded for my labors. Therefore, I pray Thee, bless this couple, and make them as happy as I am with my wife."

A NOTE THAT COULD NOT BE HEARD.—Many musical composers make use of a sharp and a flat; but the author of the "Marseillaise" introduced an A under the circumstances. Which calls our attention to the fact that a philosophical member of the Anthropological Society says that the European races are descended from people who could not speak, or, as he designates them, "Mutes." We shall consider the author of the theory in future as "our mutes." Which is—But, I say, reader, suppose, when always listens to instructive conversation like a good boy, as he is, he first speech were all mutes, who were the undertakers, and who did they bury?

THE GRAND CHARITY BALL AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, NEW YORK, JANUARY 29, 1866.—SKETCHED BY ARTHUR LUMLEY.—[SEE PAGE 83.]

LEAVING THE MATINEE.

DADDY DODD.

JOHN BEADLE was an honest man, with a large family and a small shop. It was not a hopeful circumstance in John's position that, while his family kept on enlarging, the shop obstinately maintained its contracted dimensions; that, while there seemed to be no bounds to the race of Beadle, the business which maintained them was strictly limited. John's shop was situated in one of the many by-streets, with no main thoroughfare among them, which constitute Somers Town; and it was devoted to the sale of coals and vegetables. As a householder, John, though in a small way of business, was a person of some importance, inasmuch as he was the sole lessee of an entire tenement. It was something to boast of in that neighborhood, but not much; for the roof which John called his own was a low-backed roof, and contained only one floor besides the basement, which formed the emporium. The tenement seemed to be fast sinking into the earth. The impression of the beholder was that one story had already sunk, and that the others were rapidly following it; so that it seemed probable in a few years there would be nothing visible but the broken-backed roof lying flat on the spot, a monument of departed commerce in coals. Meantime, by the agency of two upright beams and one transverse one, the broken-backed roof was kept over the heads of John and his family.

John's family consisted of his wife Martha, seven children, and Martha's old father. All these, including the old man, who was past work, and utterly without any means of his own, were dependent upon the exertions of John, aided, when urgent family exigencies might permit, by his wife. John's exertions were divided between chopping fire-wood, taking out baskets (more frequently half-baskets) of coals in a truck, and "serving." The occupation of "serving" may be described as going to houses about quarter-day, wrestling with chests of drawers, bedsteads, and bedsteads' appendages, articles of furniture, and getting very little money, but a good deal of bear. If John had been a peliean of this world, he might have maintained his family upon beer for a week after a moving; but he was only a man, and could do little more than find them in bread, beer with the single drop of which was generally all his reward in available currency.

The door and the window of the shop being always open, the nature and extent of John's stock in trade were obvious to the world. It consisted of about a ton of coals—which generally in small heaped up in a corner, a little pile of fire-wood, a few strings of onions, a few bunches of carrots, a basket or two of potatoes, a box of red herrings, a bottle of peppermint-stick, alluringly displayed with some sweetmen nuts and winkles, and a bill on a board outside the window, and a bed-wrench. This last instrument was a wonderful auxiliary to John's other trade. While the two upright beams and the single transverse beam were the support of the emporium architecturally, the bedwrench was the support of the emporium commercially. It was a thing not to be bought, but borrowed; and the charge for the loan of that bed-wrench was twopence. A Somers Street woman was very borrowing, and it seemed to be a street which did not lie easy in its bed, for it was always taking its bed down and putting it up again. The result was, of course, that John's bed-wrench was in constant and urgent demand. Such has been the eagerness to secure the instrument, that two rival applicants have been known actually to wrench each other in the effort to possess it.

One half of John's shop was occupied by the stock, the other half formed the ordinary sitting-room. This latter room had a fire-place, surmounted by a mantel-shelf, on which stood various articles of art in china; and its furniture consisted of two or three Windsor chairs, and a small round table. Little active domesticity was ever witnessed in this department except at the close of the day, when the family, entering from the coals, and the potatoes, and the fire-wood, made a rush at the little round table, and scrambled for herrings and thick bread-and-butter and tea. At such times the little room, Martha's superannuated father, was to be seen sitting in an arm-chair by the side of the fire, his bald head enriched by a glory of onions, and his coat hiding on his right like a distant mountain range, put in as a back-ground to the picture. Those family banquets were short and short. All the necessary conveniences of luxury, such as knives and forks, slop-basins and the like, were dispensed with. Tea had to be finished hot enough to be turned round and threw the dregs upon the heap of coals, and, when he had finished picking his herring, nothing was left for any one but Daddy Dodd to dine on. Daddy Dodd was a gentleman who had finished picking his herring, and who threw away and forgot the fish as soon as he had got into the fire. After the meal, Mr. Beadle was accustomed to sit down opposite old Daddy, while Martha drew up between them, and composed herself to the mending of the family linen; but, as the number of shirts was limited, the younger branches of the family usually relieved the classic fashion, among the coals, from contact with which they issued in a sweetliness of complexion which caused them to be known in the neighborhood as the "black Beadles." John and Martha loved their offspring dearly, and would not have had any thing happen to one of them for the world; but they began to find that they were increasing both in numbers and in appetite in a way altogether disproportionate to the development of the trade in coals and vegetables, notwithstanding that the rolling stock had been increased by a new truck and a second bed-wrench. John's ambition had often taken a run at a horse and cart; but it had never been able to vault so high, and always fell back upon the truck and hurt itself in the region of its dignity. A truck is not a glorious kind of vehicle—especially a coal-truck. It is a vehicle that takes the pavement rather than the middle of the road, for choice, and although the thunder which it makes at it traverses the cost of which the pavement is considerable, it is not a source of profit to its owner. Besides, it does not warrant the assumption of that sceptre of authority, a whip; and it is usually propelled by one of the human species. Well, it would never do if we all had the same ambition. While some persons aspire to rule their fellow-men, there are others who prefer to exercise authority over the brutes, in driving a horse and cart. This was John's case. He saw visions of a thriving and extending increase of business, and a drive down the road to the Jolly Butchers on Sunday afternoon, with the missus in all her best, and the children in a row, with their faces washed behind, like a pen of clean little pigs —this had been the dream of John's life; but it was a dream that had not yet come true. Indeed, so far from this, John's prospects were becoming darker than brighter every day.

"What was to be done?

This question, which had long suggested itself both to John and Martha, found audible expression one night, after the family had accompanied away to their holes for the night. Old Daddy Dodd was sitting dozing in his chair by the side of the fire, and John and Martha were sitting opposite.

It was John who propounded the question:

"What was to be done?

Martha made no audible reply; but, after a pause, raised her eyes to John's face, and then looked from significantly at Daddy.

John shook his head, and covered his face with his hand.

"I know no right to ask you to do it any longer, John," Martha said. "I had no right ever to expect you to do it."

"Don't it was my duty and my pleasure to do it, Martha," John replied. "He's your father, and I couldn't see the poor old man starve!"

"But he shouldn't starve, neither, John," Martha said; and her lips trembled as she said the words.

"I know what you mean," John returned; "but I can't bear the thoughts of it. It's not what ought to be, when he's had a house of his own, and drove his own chay, and paid rates and taxes, and every comfort."

"Well, it is hard, when you think of it," Martha replied, softly; "and the drawing-room that we had, too, and the silver spoons, and the real china cups and saucers!" And at the thought of the china cups and saucers Martha's tears fell fast.

"Yes, it is hard," John returned; "and that's why I have stood between him and it as long as I could."

"But you can't stand between him and it any longer, John, and I mustn't ask you to; it's not fair to you, John, and you shan't be burdened with any longer."

Poor old Daddy was sitting dozing in a chair, blissfully unconscious of the deliberations, of which he was the subject. In his time Daddy had been in a good, though small way of business, in the carpentering line, commencing the trade undertaking (which he undertook in his overtime, to use the fashionable phrase) to bring up families of age began to creep upon the old man, and he was no longer able to work with his own hands, he disposed of his business as an alternative to being reduced to live on his means. His means were small, but his remaining years were few; and, proceeding on his philosophical principle, Daddy lived upon the principal instead of the interest (which he could not have lived upon at all), and lived longer than he calculated. Daddy Dodd's disposal of his business, and let the carpenter's shop, he still continued to occupy the dwelling-house of which it formed a part, and like all the world, knew that the old carpenter was pretty well off. His daughter Martha shared in this impression, and was rather disposed to look upon the old gentleman, her father, and cherish expectations of an inheritance.

One day, about two years after Martha had been married to John Beadle, and shortly after she had prodigally presented John with the second pledge of her affection, old Daddy Dodd, at the emporium, suffused with smiles. Martha thought he was going to present John with the silver spoons. When the old man had settled himself in his arm-chair, and received his breath, he said, with a pleasant chuckle,

"I've got something to tell you, Martha."

"What is it, father?"

"Well, Martha, I've been looking in the toy drawer, and—and—"

"Yes, father, yes," said Martha, eagerly, making quite sure now that baby was to have the spoons.

"I've been looking in the toy drawer," the old man repeated, and—and—"

"The spoons," Martha suggested, as dutifully helping her poor old father in a difficulty.

"No, not the spoons, Martha," he said—"the money."

"What about the money, father?"

"It's all gone, Martha."

"All gone! The money you've got to live upon, father!" cried Martha, hysterically—"all gone?"

"Every farden," said the old man.

Martha could not believe it. She gave baby to a neighbor to mind, and insisted upon her father going back with her to his lodging immediately. He gave her the key, and she tore open the top drawer in a frantic way. She seized the canvas bag in which the old man kept his money (for he had an unconquerable distrust of banks), and plunged her hand into it. She could feel nothing like coin. She turned the bag inside out and shook it—nothing fell out of it. She rummaged among the useless odds and ends in the drawer, and not a farthing could she find. Suddenly she paused, and said:

"You've been robbed, father. Somebody's been at the drawer."

"No, no, my dear, you mustn't say that; nobody's been at the drawer but me. I've spent it all. There wasn't much of it—only eighty pounds altogether, and it wouldn't last forever. It's me that's lived too long, Martha;" and the old man sat down in a chair, and began to whimper and weep.

Martha could only sit down and weep too. She was overwhelmed by the thought of her father's destitution, and the prospect which lay before him, in his weak old age. His money was all gone, and his few sticks of furniture, with the shop upon which were the only portion of his plate which remained, would scarcely realize enough to bury him.

This was sad news to tell John when he came in (from a moving job) to his dinner. Martha, by way of breaking it gently to him, hysterically shrieked out the tidings at the top of her voice, as John was coming in at the door.

"Oh, John, father's all gone!" she cried.

Seeing that Martha was in a dreadful state of excitement about the matter, John, with a proper appreciation of artistic contrast, took the unwelcome announcement coolly.

"Well," he said, "in that case we must keep him. He has nobody else to look to."

And so one day John went over to Daddy's house, sent for a broker, disposed of all the things except the old man's bed, which he dispatched by the truck to the emporium. That done, he locked the door, sent the key to the landlord, and taking the old man by the hand, led him from the house which he had rented for the last seventy years, and which, looking after them, seemed to breach her tears. It was barely a quarter of a mile to the new home, but it was a long journey for Daddy, who was getting very frail now. He dropped his stick very often, and John had to stoop and pick it for him, and when a dustman's cart happened to pass, where it was necessary for John to signal to drivers of vehicles to draw up and slacken speed while the old man got safely across to the other side of the road. Poor old Daddy, going to the work-house, was highly honored that day. The passage of the traffic made its current and diverted its course to let him pass. It could not have done more for the Lord Mayor. At length John, leading his venerable charge by the hand, arrived in front of the work-house gates. At the sight of the gloomy portal and the high black wall, which shuts in the last hope, his resolution began to fail him. He stopped and hesitated.

"Grandfather," he said, "it's about time for your glass of ale, isn't it?"

"Well, yes, John, I think it's getting on that way," said the old man, in a cheery tone.

"Will you step in here?" said John, and he added, "Is this the Nag's Head?" the old man inquired.

"The Nag's Head was the house which he had "used" for forty years.

"No, grandfather," John said; "this is not the Nag's Head; but they keep a good glass of ale here."

Well, just as you like," Daddy assented.

So John led the old man in by his own hand. While Daddy was sipping his ale John tossed off a couple of glasses of spirits; he was trying to screw up his failing courage to the point. When the old man had finished his glass John took him once more by the hand, and hurriedly led him across the road. He was at the gate, hesitating with a full heart, looking through a mist of tears at the handle of the work-house bell, inviting only the clutch of despair, when the old man looked up in his face and said:

"John!"

"Yes, grandfather."

"Ain't this the work-house?"

Daddy's face, with its intimation that he knew where he was, the thought that he suspected his design, struck John to the heart; and he hurried the old man away from the gate.

"The work-house, grandfather, no, no!" John said; "what made you think of that? Come, come away: we're going to my home, going home, grandfather, going home as fast as we can."

John was so anxious to drag Daddy away from the spot that he nearly lifted him off his feet and carried him across the road. In his excitement and haste he quite forgot Daddy's feebleness, and hurried him along at such a rate that he was hot his breath, and was nearly failing. It was not until a street had been put between them and the work-house that John relaxed his pace and allowed Daddy to recover himself. After that he led him gently back to the emporium, took him in, and seated him in his old chair by the fire.

"I couldn't do it, Martha," he said; "my hand was on the bell, when he looked up at me and spoke to me; and his face, and what he said, struck me to the heart. I couldn't do it. I felt as if I was going to murder the poor old man. It's worse than murder, Martha, to put a fellow-creature in your der; it's burying him alive!"

"But, John—"

"I say I shall never be done by me, Martha," John interposed, sternly. "We must do the best we can for him, and strive to the last to save him and support him that degrading."

An interchange of looks sealed the compact between them—Daddy was to have a home with them while they had a roof to call their own, and a loaf of bread to share with him.

Old Daddy had not only been a considerable expense to John and Martha, but during the latter months he had been much in the way. He was always getting about in the shop, which being also the sitting-room, did not afford much room for business and domesticity combined. But now the fine days were coming, and Daddy would be able to spend a good deal of his time out of doors. So, when the fine days came, little Benjy, John's youngest but two, who was not old enough to be of any assistance in the business, was appointed to the sole and undivided duty of minding grandfather, and taking him for walks. Benjy was commonly sent with him out of the way. Little Benjy, a little, large-headed, wise-looking boy of six years, was Daddy's

When breakfast was over, John said to the old man, in as cheerful a tone as he could command,

"Grandfather, I'm going to take you for a walk."

"That's kind of you, John," said the old man, very kind.

"Well, come along, grandfather; here's your hat and stick."

"I'm ready, John, quite ready. Eh? bless me, what's the matter now, my dear?"

Martha had thrown her arms round his neck, kissing him.

"Good-by, father," she said, through her sobs, "Good-by."

She had resolved not to say it, but she could not help it.

"But, tut, my dear," said the old man; "we are not going far, are we, John?"

"No, grandfather, not very far."

"And we'll come back soon, my dear?"

"Oh yes, grandfather," said Martha; and the words almost choked him.

Martha whispered to the children to go and shake hands with their grandfather; and wondering what this unusual ceremony meant, they did as they were told, quietly and silently.

The old man was as much puzzled as the children, and wanted to know if it was a birthday. John could not answer him; his heart was full and his utterance choked. Without a word more he took the old man by the hand, and led him from the emporium. Martha stood in the doorway, surrounded by the children, looking after them, and wiping her tears. It was barely a quarter of a mile to the work-house, but it was a long journey for Daddy, who was getting very frail now. He dropped his stick very often, and John had to stoop and pick it for him, and when a dustman's cart happened to pass, where it was necessary for John to signal to drivers of vehicles to draw up and slacken speed while the old man got safely across to the other side of the road. Poor old Daddy, going to the work-house, was highly honored that day. The passage of the traffic made its current and diverted its course to let him pass. It could not have done more for the Lord Mayor. At length John, leading his venerable charge by the hand, arrived in front of the work-house gates. At the sight of the gloomy portal and the high black wall, which shuts in the last hope, his resolution began to fail him. He stopped and hesitated.

"Grandfather," he said, "it's about time for your glass of ale, isn't it?"

"Well, yes, John, I think it's getting on that way," said the old man, in a cheery tone.

"Will you step in here?" said John, and he added, "Is this the Nag's Head?" the old man inquired.

"The Nag's Head was the house which he had "used" for forty years.

"No, grandfather," John said; "this is not the Nag's Head; but they keep a good glass of ale here."

"Well, just as you like," Daddy assented.

So John led the old man in by his own hand. While Daddy was sipping his ale John tossed off a couple of glasses of spirits; he was trying to screw up his failing courage to the point. When the old man had finished his glass John took him once more by the hand, and hurriedly led him across the road. He was at the gate, hesitating, with a full heart, looking through a mist of tears at the handle of the work-house bell, inviting only the clutch of despair, when the old man looked up in his face and said:

"John!"

"Yes, grandfather."

"Ain't this the work-house?"

Daddy's face, with its intimation that he knew where he was, the thought that he suspected his design, struck John to the heart; and he hurried the old man away from the gate.

"The work-house, grandfather, no, no!" John said; "what made you think of that? Come, come away: we're going to my home, going home, grandfather, going home as fast as we can."

John was so anxious to drag Daddy away from the spot that he nearly lifted him off his feet and carried him across the road. In his excitement and haste he quite forgot Daddy's feebleness, and hurried him along at such a rate that he was hot his breath, and was nearly failing. It was not until a street had been put between them and the work-house that John relaxed his pace and allowed Daddy to recover himself. After that he led him gently back to the emporium, took him in, and seated him in his old chair by the fire.

"I couldn't do it, Martha," he said; "my hand was on the bell, when he looked up at me and spoke to me; and his face, and what he said, struck me to the heart. I couldn't do it. I felt as if I was going to murder the poor old man. It's worse than murder, Martha, to put a fellow-creature in your der; it's burying him alive!"

"But, John—"

"I say I shall never be done by me, Martha," John interposed, sternly. "We must do the best we can for him, and strive to the last to save him and support him that degrading."

An interchange of looks sealed the compact between them—Daddy was to have a home with them while they had a roof to call their own, and a loaf of bread to share with him.

Old Daddy had not only been a considerable expense to John and Martha, but during the latter months he had been much in the way. He was always getting about in the shop, which being also the sitting-room, did not afford much room for business and domesticity combined. But now the fine days were coming, and Daddy would be able to spend a good deal of his time out of doors. So, when the fine days came, little Benjy, John's youngest but two, who was not old enough to be of any assistance in the business, was appointed to the sole and undivided duty of minding grandfather, and taking him for walks. Benjy was commonly sent with him out of the way. Little Benjy, a little, large-headed, wise-looking boy of six years, was Daddy's especial pet and favorite; or, perhaps, it might have been said, so much more responsible a person was Benjy, that Daddy was his pet and favorite. Be that as it would, they loved each other, and on fine days, when the sun shone, it was their delight to wander hand in hand among the neighboring streets, prattling together like two children, and gazing in, with child-like wonder, at the pretty things in the shop windows. The people round about called them the Babes in the Wood, and old Daddy was certainly as much a babe as Benjy. Little took the same interest in the contents of the toy-shops, and sighed as deeply as Benjy sighed to think that his youthful grandson could not become the possessor of a small-sized, wooden, top-gun (with a stock) which went off with a spiral spring. In their wanderings, day by day, the Babes saw many strange things, and added the wonders of Common Town with the deepest interest. It was their special delight to stand before any open door or window which afforded them a view of a process of manufacture. They stood on gratings and listened to the rattle of sawing machines that went by steam. Benjy informed his charge and pupil, who was not very well up in the modern arts and sciences; they gazed at little men in shirt-sleeves and flat caps, who turned a miniature coffee-mill under a glass case at the grocer's—such industrious little men, who were busy on grinding coffee while their master was in the shop or not, and never seemed to go home to their meals. They superintended the lowering of barrels into public cellars, and, watching the mysteries of the inclined plane, and speculating as to whether the barrels contained the particular kind of ale which grandfather liked, they watched the making of tea-chests and the turning of wood, and were sometimes observed to be much absorbed in the history of sheep, a pursuit which had a deep abstract interest for Benjy, while it set Daddy babbling about the delightful days now purely visionary, of a boiled leg of mutton and caper sauce.

In these wanderings Benjy was careful not to release his hold of Daddy's hand, for he was particularly enjoined never to leave him for a moment, and whatever he was to let him tumble down. One muddy day Benjy did let Daddy tumble, and a sad state of mind he was in for fear his mother should find it out. He had to be beat with his Sunday pocket-handkerchief to efface all traces of mud from Daddy's trousers; but he was afraid lest the old man might "tell upon him." Not that there was any want of loyalty between them, but Daddy was getting so garrulous that he sometimes, quite unintentionally, let things slip which got Benjy into trouble; so, when any thing happened, Benjy was obliged to remind grandfather that he was not to tell.

"You won't tell mother that I let you fall in the mud, will you, grandfather?" he would say, as they beat their umbrellas forward.

"Oh no, Benjy," the old man protested. "I—I shan't say a word about it."

At first, this complete confidence had been established between them, Benjy sought on one occasion to purchase his grandfather's silence with a penny (which did not at that moment possess the but expected to have some day), but he had come to know now that the bond of love between them was strong enough to sustain their mutual affection, except when it was occasionally loosened by an inadvertence, or a lapse of memory, which, in Daddy's case, was beyond the power of either love or money to control. Going home in the summer evenings, after their rambles, Daddy and Benjy had deeply interesting tales to tell the family of the wonders of the great world of Somers Town.

Alas, that those relations should so often have fallen upon inattentive ears! But, dear Aunt Martha were becoming sullen and moody, a pew both of them to the deepest anxiety. The family was still increasing, but the business connected with its still efforts in the direction of development. John was getting into debt at the coal wharf, and matters potato were rotting. The times were bad, and were coming on harder with the approach of winter. Coals were at eighteen-pence a hundred, potatoes at a penny a pound. The poor people couldn't pay the price. Poor women came for a few pounds of coal and took them away in their aprons. There was scarcely a sale for the truck. When coals were so dear and fires so small, Chaldron Street was a good deal given to warm itself in bed. The which that became a permanent institution. The consequence to John was that his bed-wrench rusted in idleness. In view of the evil which accumulated upon it, this apparatus might have been engaged in the disastrous occupation of eating its head off. Expenses of the emporium were not in very low ebb; John and Martha could scarcely provide bare food for the family. The block Bed, borrowing for victuals, and not finding satisfaction at the little round table, passed like a cloud of locusts over the stock in the shop, and making short work of the carrots, and even over the cabbage-leaves and the turnip-tops. John and Martha were denying themselves day after day, that the rest might have a bit of something rich and nourishing. But things were coming to a crisis now. The coal-merchant, the potato-merchant, and the landlord, all three threatening voices, and John was in hourly expectation of an execution. All his strivings had been of no avail. Darkness Was coming from that direction. It must come now. Nothing could avert it.

One afternoon John was sitting on a stool, on the side of the mountain of coal, which had been removed to the last shovelful of dust (and, alas! the capitalist at the wharf had not the faith to replace it), utterly dejected and dispirited. It was a terrible trial for a strong man with a stout heart and a vigorous will to be thus beaten down and trampled under the feet of a cruel and relentless Fortune, whom he had wooed with all his art, and wrestled with all his strength. Poor John! he was a-tired: it was very false that the spirit was almost crushed out of Him. When he looked up and saw a stranger man darkening the door he felt that the last blow was about to be struck.

"Come in," he said; "don't stand upon any ceremony, I beg; I'm quite prepared for you."

"Are you?" said the man, curiously.

"Yes, I am," John replied. "I know your errand as well as you do yourself."

"Do you?" said the man, in the same tone.

"Do you come here to mock me?" cried John, angrily, rising and facing the intruder; "to mock me as well as ruin me?"

"Mock you?" said the man.

"Yes, mock me," John repeated, in the same angry tone.

"I did not come here to mock you; far from it," the man returned. "In fact, my business is not with you at all. I came to see Mr. Dodd, who was an old neighbor of mine."

"I beg your pardon, Sir," said John. "You'll excuse me, I hope; but we are in great distress, and I expected nothing but bad news."

"If I am not mistaken," said the stranger, "it is good news I bring you. You are Mr. Dodd's son-in-law, are you not?"

"I am, Sir, and I was I were a richer son-in-law for his sake," John replied.

"Perhaps there will be no need for that, for his sake," the stranger returned.

"What do you mean?" John asked.

"Well, just this," said the stranger. "A few days ago I published an advertisement in the paper addressed to Daniel Dodd, informing him that, if he applied to Mr. Johnson, solicitor, in Bedford Row, he would hear something to his advantage. Now, thinking that the Daniel Dodd wanted might be my old neighbor, and knowing Mr. Johnson, of Bedford Row, to be a respectable man, I inquired and learned that the person wanted is Daniel Dodd, my old neighbor, and that under the will of his brother uncle, who died once a year ago, he has a little fortune to—"

"Hush! hush, Sir," said John, grasping the stranger by the arm, and staring at him with fixed eyes. "You're not having a lark, a cruel lark with us, are you?"

"God forbid," said the stranger, gravely.

"And answer me another thing, Sir," John continued, in the same excited way. "You're not out of your mind, are you?"

"Certainly not," returned the man.

"Very well, Sir," said John, "you may go on."

"I was going to say," the stranger continued, "that under the will of his deceased brother George, who died in India, Daniel Dodd is entitled to five thousand pounds."

"Martha!" cried John to his wife, who was on the stairs cleaning the room.

"Yes, John. What is it?"

"Father's money's come back again! Father's money's come back again!" Father's money's come back again!" And he shouted it over and over again up the stairs, and stopped the bolusters every time to get his breath.

"Are you gone mad, John?" was Martha's reply, when she was allowed to speak.

"No, my dear, I'm not gone mad," said he; "but I'm not gone mad, I'm not gone mad," he added about his brother George who went to India; but I thought he had been dead long ago."

At that moment Daddy came in from one of his walks with Benjy, and was told of his fortune.

"Dear me," he said, sinking into his chair, "brother George! Dear, dear, dear, poor boy!"

The poor boy had died at the good old age of threescore and ten, but Daddy still thought of him as the lad in the blue jacket from whom he had parted at Wapping when they were boys.

Not without considerable delay, and considerable cost, Daddy's claim to the five thousand pounds was established. John gave all his time—utterly neglecting the emporium—to the prosecution of the matter, and, oddly enough, in wooing Fortune in this most audacious and presumptuous manner, he proved himself worthy of her favors, for when he had humbled himself in the dirt to implore her for a single smile, she had contemptuously passed on—well, bespattered him with one of her chariot-wheels. And one day John, knowing Daddy's weakness, brought home the five thousand pounds all in gold, and he and Daddy and Benjy had been the old man's bank in the days when he was well to do.

"Now, father," said Martha, "putting the bag in his hand. And now what will you do with it?"

"What will I do with it?" said the old man. "I'll—I'll keep my promise to Benjy, and that I'll do."

"But there's more than that, father," said the man.

"Oh yes, father, a heap more."

"Then," said Daddy, "I'll give the rest to John to buy a horse and cart."

"But there's more, even than that, father; ever so much more."

"Oh, well, you just keep that for yourself, Martha, for taking care of your old father."

And Daddy, with an elaborate design, but with the simple innocence of a child, which is sometimes wise than the acutest cunning of law, saved the dangerous formalities of will-making and the charges for legacy duty, by handing to his daughter Martha the long-coveted five thousand.

Before John even thought of his horse and cart—though that was lurking in a corner of his mind—he regained the tenancy of the old house, and established it with as many of the old sticks as he could recover from the brokers' shops, with many splendid new ones besides for the drawing-room, and when all was done, led Daddy back to his old quarters, and joined him there with Martha and all the family.

But dotage had been coming upon poor old Daddy, and he could scarcely be made to understand the change which had taken place in his position. He was always in fancy the poor old man, and sitting by the fireside of an evening, and recognizing his old room peopled with the faces of John and Martha and their children, he would tell his daughter to wake him up by-and-by.

And so he went on dreaming, until one winter's night he woke up in a land where there was no more going to sleep.

And the days of John and Martha are likely to be long and prosperous, for they honored their old father in his age, and sued, and the bread which they cast upon the waters has come back to them with a blessing.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

GENTLE reader, if a fit of the "blues" comes over you some day, and you think God and the world have been hardly with you, take a trip to the New York Institution for the Deaf and Dumb. It will quicken your sympathies for your kind.

Step into the Eighth Avenue cars, and ride up as far as they go—to Manhattanville. Do not be impatient if you have to wait a little here. Take a seat in the shelter car; or, if it is cold, there is a neat room near by where you are welcome to warm your toes while you watch for the omnibus from Harlem. It soon comes, a dingy little coach closely resembling your mind, here is half a seat vacant, and there will not be much room for the cold to enter.

A drive through Carmansville would undoubtedly be delightful in summer as the street is lined with many trees, whose bare branches at this season stretch themselves shiveringly toward the sky. And while you are striving to imagine the change June will bring, the coach stops at the entrance gate of the asylum of the Institution, and Washington Heights, and a short walk brings you to the building itself.

It happened to be on a Monday when we visited the Institution; but every nook and corner was as scrupulously neat and clean as on the substantial cleaning day of any thoroughout Christendom. We peered into some of the class-rooms: intelligence looking hats and mittens were adding sagacious air to withstand to the blandest. The teachers, a gentleman and a lady, were both master; but it was wonderful to see how well they could make themselves understood these and the readiness with which their pupils received them.

In one room we saw a class of older pupils, under the instruction of Mr. Peet, the gentlemanly superintendent. They were busily engaged in writing down from the Bible, that been written by them on the blackboards. One young man had written the tests in French, and was said to be able also to read them.

One exercise was of a very novel and interesting character. We have often seen it stated that the deaf and dumb were afflicted what it could serve in such an institution. At a sign from their teacher several pupils turned to the Blackboard, and began to write what they could see in it. He asked us to mention some word; and then he slowly spelled them on the fingers of his hands on the dress, using the same symbols for each letter as are used by the operators on the electric telegraph. Though the pupils heard not, they evidently understood the whole information, and they wrote each letter as it was indicated by the dress. Similar exercises were performed in other rooms, and seemed the more strange since the experiment was tried for the first time only five days before.

The pupils are taught to articulate to the class, some of the young ladies wrote a graceful welcome, showing at once their knowledge and appreciation of kindness.

About four hundred gathered at the dinner-table—from six years old upward. What a confusion of sounds, did we say? Not a sound. Nothing but the busy knife and fork, only an earnest turning of eye ya to the superintendent, while, in the expressive language of signs, he indicated his wishes. Then a clatter of knives and plates, they unconscious making more noise than would four hundred people of a manner by gay and talkative, and evidently well prepared.

We take our leave marveling at the intelligence and kindness—the patience, the invention and motion—the cleverfulness and happiness which characterize these deaf mutes, who, though unfortunate, are yet fortunate in the education they receive in that institution.

The opening of a new hotel in the Central Park will be a matter of much interest to many who seek summer air in that vicinity. It has long been the design of the Commissioners to erect a spacious hotel within the limits of the Park. Accordingly, they have appointed a site, and modeled a cluster of buildings opposite One Hundredth street and Fifth avenue, to be called Mount Pleasant, and known as "St. Vincent's." The older parts of this series of buildings are full of historic interest. It stood before the Revolution and was used as the McGown's House. It was occupied by the British officers when they held possession of the city, and was also the British encampment. Gen. General Washington made that house his headquarters. The hotel is tastefully fitted up, and offers extraordinary facilities for comfort in the shape of lodgings are to be furnished or allowed in the building. Early breakfasts, with the fruits of the season, with dinners and late suppers and refreshments at all hours are to be provided. An elegant parlor for the reception of ladies is prepared, and other conveniences have omitted nothing that taste and talent can devise to secure the comfort of visitors. The house is under the charge of Messrs. Stetson and Post, who have also the same interest in the Astor House. Early risers and early riders, as well as others, will find a warm welcome and satisfying viands at the Mt. Vincent.

The following hints fix the restoration of frozen limbs are given on medical authority:

Do not beat the frost-bitten limb; do not put it into warm water. The water used should be cold, and not about the temperature of thirty-two degrees. Some persons use ice water. Rub the limb with the frozen or benumbed flesh with snow. The danger is that this will be too cold. Let cool at all events, but not ice, if it is not excessively cold, or in a room in which the temperature is moderate.

The old proverb, "He who would thrive must rise at five," is considered applicable to the sons of more wealthy suppers. There seems, however, to be more rhyme than reason in the saying.

He who would thrive must rise at five,
It must follow, naturally,
He who'd thrive more must rise at four;
and it will more surely follow that
He who'd still more thriving be
Must leave his bed at three o'clock; and so this latter would outdo
Will rouse him at the stroke of two.
And, by way of climax to it all, it should be said good that
He who'd never be outdone
Must ever rise as soon as one.
But the best illustration would be—
He who'd thrive must rise at five,
Should never go to bed at all.

The following advertisement cut from a popular London gossip will be interesting to a question often asked nowadays, "Where do all the waterfalls come from?"

CHIGNONS! CHIGNONS! CHIGNONS!! For Sale, by Order of Government, several cart, of HAIR from the HEADS of FEMALE CONVICTS in conformity with the Regulations established in His Majesty's Jails throughout the United Kingdom.—In LOT, a very description of color. The attention of PERFUMERS, PERFUMERS, and others is invited to this opportunity of securing a exquisite Supply of Material for the manufacture of CHIGNONS of every Shade and Hue. A liberal Allowance will be made to PURCHASERS on taking a QUANTITY.—N.B. The HAIR of these UNFORTUNATE CREATURES, the Property of the United Kingdom, has been carefully subjected to a DISINFECTING PROCESS under a Temperature of 212° Fahrenheit.

The authenticity of this advertisement may be questioned, we mention that the gazette in which it appears is one of the most reliable in London, and is published at "Punch Office, 85 Fleet Street," where further inquiry can be made if desired.

At this season of the year a good many novelties in the way of fabrics are brought from London and Paris, and the new styles of materials for dresses it is said that black and gold colored silk will be very generally worn during the winter months, for ordinary walking dress, for evening, for full-dress, or rather gala orange stripe, being narrow, crosswise satin stripes, with the intervening spaces of gauze are trimmed with black silk and with narrow silk braid, and sometimes the gold stripe, even on half an inch from the edge of the black silk braid. The velvet for the front of the bodice are made with the black silk and narrow braid, a band of the same is placed over the waistcoat and cuff of the coat-shaped sleeve, and a waistband is likewise formed with the same materials. As a fact worth knowing, it should be observed that these new materials are going out of fashion, and that, besides being made considerably narrower, they are to be featured at the left side of the waist with a rosette, but without ends.

As collars are worn large and pointed in front, and decorated with a deep embroidery, and as the fine, silky young ladies are wearing loose and long streamers of narrow ribbon at the back of their dresses, the fine ladies are stitched to the top of the bodice in the centre of the back, the loops being downward, and the streamers, attached merely, are a yard and a half long. Ribbons, consequently fall far below the waist. The ribbon should match either the dress or the trimming, and those of black-and-gold striped dresses it would be either black velvet, or silk with gold-colored silk edges.

Bodice with a deep, round, or very much square at present with creamy undone tollets, and likewise with evening bodies. They are generally short in the back, and the richest are made of velvet. Imagine three square cuts, longer at the back than the front, studded with either jet or diamonds, and finished off with a deep fringe. Sometimes, made in either black or rich-colored velvet, enlarging only on evening dress with the addition of a few ruches. These wide scales are now always fastened on to a small velvet corselet studded with beads to match, under each of which are two beaded ends, and are finished off at the points with gold tassels, beads, or fringe.

Many very handsome and useful mantles of the evening wear have lately made their appearance; they are trimmed with loops and ends of ribbon, arranged much in the same style as those worn on the skirts and of dress, only broader, and the cuadet of white muslin embroidered with gold.

The official recognition at the Tuileries on the first days of the new year were conducted with the usual magnificence; the court mourning being partially laid aside. There were some striking dresses. A young Russian lady, who was presented, wore a train of white crape lisse puffed all over, and the same hollow between every puff was black velvet chrysanthemum. The train was fastened on a corps lisse dress, cut in the Princesse form, and trimmed all down the centre of the front with chrysanthemums, themselves instead of with large buttons, as is usual with that style of dress. The head-dress was composed of a bandeau of chrysanthemums, and of a pearl and amethyst comb. The toilet was considered to be in most exquisite taste. A white faille lady, who is one of the Austrian Countess, was studded all over with bees represented in velvet velvet and gold, and was fastened on the shoulders with gold cord and violet chenille tassels. Other trains were ornamented with wide sashes having three or four bees, and these sashes had a straight fringe, and they adorned the centre of the train.

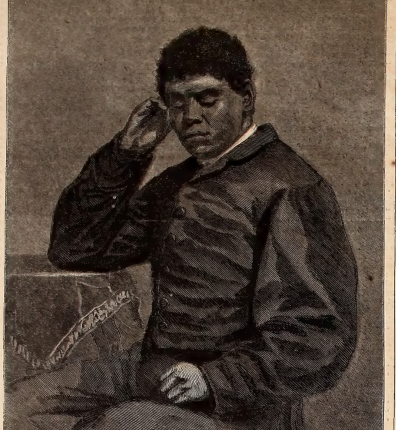
At a Carlsbad concert, at which was given at the Tuileries, and to which only the most intimate among the Court circle were invited, the Empress wore a most charming dress. The skirt was composed of a number of falling nets made of different shades of green velvet ornamented with white, and studded with white pearls and gold. The head-dress was formed with a coronet of white sarcelet, and round the throat her Majesty wore a magnificent pearl necklet. The Princess Mathilde's dress was white, with a satin dress, with a tulle tunic, and over the tulle a cascade of lace, made of the finest point d'Alençon, and a large gauge binding the lace. A diamond and emerald comb in the hair, and a diamond necklace round the throat.

A curious custom is kept up among the Saxon peasantry in some parts of Germany. On the morning of every marriage the bride sends her betrothed a shirt of her own making. The whole of the household is accordingly enumerated in the form of the carnation and the rose: also cars of corn are represented; the ruffles, too, are composed of a delicate sort of lace. This garment is worn on the whole life long—it is worn at the first marriage festival, and again and again when death comes to summon the old grayheaded man to be wedded to eternity."

DR. BARTH, THE AFRICAN TRAVELER.

DR. HEINRICH BARTH, the great and successful explorer of Northern and Central Africa, is so well known by the public to the whole civilized world that we can not pass in silence over his premature death, which occurred in Berlin on the 25th of November last. His great work, although so large as not to have been read as extensively as one a third as large would have been, is the best account of his character; showing alike his modesty, good sense, courage, coolness, and learning. Germany can rest on none of the best, if not the best, equipped travelers of modern times. It would be hard to find banner which in this respect can stand before Heinrich Barth. Of course, Humboldt, Leichhardt, Rüppell, Hemboldt, Zoeller, Leichhardt, and Barth. Among these the last-named is admirable par inter fratres; and although snatched away without warning at the age of only forty-five yrs, he has lived long enough to see his name among the foremost of living geographers, as well as to have completed two great categories—the scientific examination of the whole of Northern and Northern Central Africa, doing in both cases a work which had been accomplished by no predecessor.

His first great work is much less familiarly known among us than the second, and for this reason I may allude more fully to it, as, after all, it was the natural goal of all his earlier years. BARTH'S career may be divided into two sections, one of which was completed, the other of which was left incomplete. The goal of his youth was to examine the Mediterranean Basin, the geographical mother, as he thought, of all civilization. The goal of his later years was to prepare a grammar of the North African languages, a work for which his philological attainments eminently fitted him. This work has been left incomplete, and I know not who can walk in his footsteps and bring it to a conclusion.



The son of a prosperous Hamburg merchant, BARTH enjoyed the advantages of peculiarly independence his whole life long. While at school in his native city he was remarkable for the same qualities which characterized him as a man—modesty, reserve, boldness, zeal, industry, and talents. He entered Berlin University in 1839, and studied philology and geography mainly, his instructors being the eminent BÖECH, CURTIUS, GRIMM, and RITTER. His desire to see something even then of the Mediterranean Basin led him to Italy and Sicily, where he spent four months, and where he conceived the plan, to be executed at the close of his academical career, of following the whole course of Phœnician colonization on the shores of the Mediterranean. This goal he kept steadily in sight. In 1845 he went to England, acquired the Arabic language, took letters to the English consuls of the Levant, and then set out on his first great tour. He passed rapidly through France, over the Pyrenees, and spent four weeks at Madrid. Thence he journeyed on to Cadiz and Tarik, where his true tour commenced. Here, at the pillars of Hercules, he was at an outpost of European travel. My brief space will only allow my giving the slightest abstract of his course. He touched the African coast at Tangier, passed on to Tunis and Tripoli, explored the ruins of Carthage and Utica, Cyrene and Barca. Arriving on the Egyptian frontier, he was attacked by Bedouins, wounded, and robbed of every thing valuable, including what he most prized—his note-book filled with observations on the way. The work which he wrote and published after his return shows the excellence of his memory; and happily he had been in constant intercourse with his brother, Captain SCHUMACHER of Dresden, and the letters to him proved of unexpected value after the loss of the original notes.

He passed up the Nile to the second Cataract, then through Arabia Petræa, Palestine, and Asia Minor, and so back to Berlin, where he became a lecturer at the University, and prepared the first volume of his travels. The cost of the whole expedition was $11,000 gold. It was worth all it cost to him, however, as a preparation for the next expedition, which was the great work of the next few years.

It is impossible for me, knowing Dr. BARTH as well as I did, to condense the matter which would be interesting to American readers into the brief space at my command. His own volumes contain, however, a full transcript of his later African life. That work was written in English as well as German by BARTH, who spoke and wrote our language perfectly. During the last five years he has been Professor in Berlin University. At the time of his death (which was caused by a mistake of his physician, who gave him six grains of tartar emetic to relieve a slight attack of dyspepsia) he was lecturing on the Mediterranean Basin, and preparing his work on the languages of Northern Africa. It aggravates his loss immeasurably to think that he was murdered, but it is too late to save him. I had a long conversation with him less than a week before his death. He was then in perfect health. His bronzed face still bore the impress of African travel, as well as of the journey through Albania, which he made this last summer. He called himself perfectly well; and he who was spared while both his companions, RICHARDSON and OVERWEG, succumbed to the African climate, lived to fall by the carelessness, not of an apothecary's clerk, but of an educated physician.

The portrait of BARTH, on page 84, is from a very accurate photograph taken a few years before his death. He was of medium height, thickly and strongly built, with a noble brow, deep though not large eyes, a reticent manner, and great modesty in speaking of his own achievements. He used to be a great admirer of England and the English, but within the last few years his admiration had much subsided, but he continued the friend of America and Americans. He went seldom into society, and it is worthy of record that the last time when he appeared in a social gathering was just one week before his death, at a soirée of Americans at Governor WRIGHT'S. Dr. BARTH was never married; but his life was not without its romantic side, a disappointment in love having been the impelling cause of his joining the African expedition. The same mighty passion which made KÖRNER a soldier made BARTH an explorer.

BERLIN, Jan. 6, 1866. W. L. GAGE.

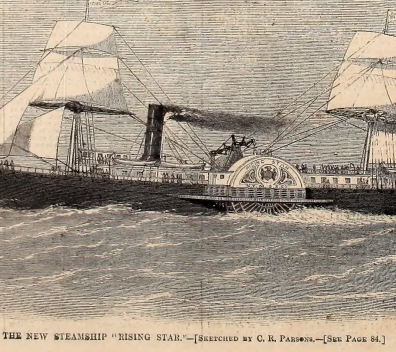
"BLIND TOM"—THE CELEBRATED NEGRO PIANIST.—[PHOT. BY BENDANN BROTHERS, BALTIMORE.]

TOM, THE BLIND NEGRO PIANIST.

THIS extraordinary boy, who has for several months astonished and delighted the thousands who have had the good fortune to witness the astounding demonstrations of his wonderful genius, was born near the city of Columbus, in the State of Georgia, about the 25th of May, 1849. Shut out from all knowledge of the external world but such as could be acquired by hearing and by touch, his whole being seemed to be open to and occupied by touch and sound. No matter what its character; the moan of pain, the cry of anger, the harsh grating of the corn-sheller, the roar of the thunder, and the soft breathings of the flute, all were music to him.

Before he was two years of age BLIND TOM sang every thing he heard. When the young ladies of the family, upon their return from school, sat upon the steps and sang, TOM came and sang with them; and such were the facility and correctness with which he took up the air, that they were impressed with the belief that he did not have to learn the tune, but that upon hearing the first note he knew intuitively the balance. Soon without knowing, but from the promptings of nature, that there was any such thing, he began to sing seconds.

At about four years of age he heard the sound of a piano for the first time. Upon the arrival of the instrument he was amusing himself as usual in the yard. The first touch of the keys brought him into the parlor, he was permitted to run his fingers over the keys simply to gratify his curiosity, and to indulge his propensity to make a noise; this luxury he enjoyed occasionally only, as he could chance to find the parlor empty and the piano open. Very soon, however, between midnight and day, he found his way into the parlor, the piano having been left open, and the young ladies were awakened by the sound of the instrument. To their astonishment they heard TOM playing one of their pieces; and the coming of morning found him still at the piano. After this he was allowed to play occasionally, and his powers were so rapidly and so astonishingly developed that in a little time he was permitted to go to the piano at his pleasure. From that day he has played every thing he has heard. He is still developing new and startling powers, the existence of which has been heretofore unknown to the musical world, and the possession of which seems to have been vouchsafed by the power of God to TOM alone.



Seventeen teachers of music in Philadelphia spontaneously testify over their own signatures as follows:

"The undersigned find it impossible to account for these illumined results upon any hypothesis growing out of the known laws of art and science. In the numerous tests to which TOM was subjected in our presence, or by us, he invariably came off triumphant. Whether in deciding the pitch or component parts of Chords the most difficult and dissonant, whether in repeating with correctness and precision any pieces, written or impromptu, played to him for the first and only time, whether in his improvisations or performances of compositions by THALBERG, GOTTSCHALK, BEYER, VERDI, and others—in fact, under every form of musical examination (and the experiments are too numerous to enumerate), he showed a power and capacity ranking him among the most wonderful phenomena recorded in musical history."

BLIND TOM plays with wonderful effect some pieces of his own composition. One of these he composed when he was not yet five years old. It was immediately after a storm, and he called it, "What the wind, the thunder, and the rain said to him." Another he composed after hearing the various excited accounts of the first Bull Run battle. The imitation of the setting out and approach of both armies, the skirmishing, the fight, the whistle announcing the approach of KIRBY SMITH'S reinforcements, and the terrible retreat, is wonderful, and brings tears to the eyes of his audience. He plays a variety of the most difficult music of the great authors, with a delicacy of touch and a power of expression such as is rarely heard. BLIND TOM, we are informed, goes to Europe in Spring.

SKATING IN CHICAGO.

OTHER cities besides New York have their skating-ponds, though they do not rival in size our Central Park lakes. We give on page 93 a representation of the interior of the "Great Skating Rink" at Chicago. This is the largest institution of the kind in this country, covering 18,100 square feet of surface. Here are daily and nightly congregated the élite of the City of the Lakes, and the scene represented by our artist when the waltzers are in motion and the fancy skaters are showing their skill, all under a flood of light from reflectors above, is brilliant in the extreme.

THE NEW STEAMSHIP "RISING STAR."—[SKETCHED BY C. R. PARSONS.—SEE PAGE 84.]

THE GREAT SKATING "RINK" AT CHICAGO.—[See Page 92.]

THE DEAD LETTER.

A NEW AMERICAN NOVEL.

CHAPTER I.

THE LETTER.

I PAUSED suddenly in my work. Over a year's experience in the Dead Letter office had given a mechanical facility to my movements in opening, sorting, and classifying the contents of the bundles before me; and, so far from there being any "ring cracking to the audacity of" interesting to the mind in the employment, it was of the most monotonous character.

The letter which I held in my paralyzed fingers when they so abruptly ceased their dexterous movements was contained in a small, unsealed envelope, inflamed by time, and directed in a peculiar hand to "John Owen, Peekskill, New York," and the date on the stamp was "October 18, 1857"—making the letter two years old. I know not what suggestion passed from it, putting me, as the spectacular say, on "mesmeric" watch; but I took not yet the paper, and the only thing I could do upon as the cause of my arrest, this was that at the date indicated on the envelope I had been a resident of Blankville, twenty miles from Peekskill—and something about that date!

Yet this was no avenue for my agitation; I was not of an inquisitive disposition; nor did "John Owen" belong to the circle of my acquaintance. I sat there with outstretched hand, my face not one of my fellows, branching and, evidently, jestingly.

"What is it, Redfield? A clock for a hundred thousand?"

"I'm sure I don't know; I haven't opened it," I answered at random; and with this I cut the wrapper, laying the paper carefully defined, irresistible interest to read the time-stained sheet inclosed. It ran in this wise:

"DEAR SIR,—It's too bad to disappoint you. Could not execute your order, as every body concerned will discover. What a shindy!—good for hanging a dozen. That old friend I introduced you to won't toll tales, and you had best look to your yourself to visit him. The last time you find yourself in his area don't feel in his left-hand pocket for a broken tooth-pick which I lost him. It is welcome to it. If you're at the place of payment I think's the time, you having fulfilled the order, and having given up my castigation project, such age not my will, so govern yourself accordingly. Sorry your prospects are so poor, and believe me, with the greatest possible esteem,

"Your friend

"ROGERS."

To explain why this brief epistle, neither lucid nor interesting in itself, should affect me as it did, I must go back to the time at which it was written.

CHAPTER II.

EVENTS OF A NIGHT.

It was late in the afternoon of a cloudy, windy autumn day, that I left the office of John Argyll, Esq., in his county-jo, with the paper the writing of which I had seen was a law-student in the office, and was favored with more than an ordinary share of confidence on account of a case which had existed between him and my deceased father. This being statutory, I was expected to go home with him and stay several days, if I liked.

We quickened our steps as a few large drops were sprinkled over us from the darkening clouds.

Entering the parlors, we found no one but James, a nephew of Mr. Argyll, a young man of about my own age, hanging upon the bell-rope.

"Where are the girls?"

"They haven't descended from the heavenly regions yet, sir."

Dressing themselves to death, I expect: It's Saturday evening. I reasoned, mailed the indignant father, preparing on into the library.

I sat down by the wet window, and looked out at the coming storm. I was like James Argyll much, for he was so stout, as much as we three thrown together, are inferior and unmixed, combined. On this occasion, however, he seemed in excellent spirits, persisting in talking on all kinds of indifferent subjects despite of my brief replies. I was wondering when Eleanor would make her appearance.

At last she came. I had heard her silk dress rustle down the stairs, and my eyes were upon her when she entered the room. She was dressed with unusual care, and her face wore a brilliant, expectant smile. The smile was for neither of us. Perhaps James thought of it; I am sure I did, with something of pain—with a sharp pang, for I was ashamed of, and fought inwardly to conquer.

Presently she stood at the window, and as she stood by my side a burst of grey streamed through the fast-closing clouds, enveloping her in a golden atmosphere, tinting her black hair with blue, flashing her clear eyes, and the pearls about her throat. The fragrance of the rose she wore on her breast mingled with the light. For a moment I was thrilled and overpowered; but the dark-blue eyes were not looking at me. They were sparkling with wonder.

"How provoking that it should rain to-night!" she said; and as the slight cloud of vexation swept over her face the luminous light closed over the golden ray, and was so suddenly that we could hardly discern each other.

"The rain will not keep Moreland away," I answered.

"If comes to-night, but I don't want him to; we intending up from the depôts, and Billy has put up the carriage in view of the storm."

At that moment a wild gust of wind smote the house so that it shook, and the rain came down with a roar that was deafening. Eleanor sprang for lights.

For the next half hour the rain came down in wide sheets, dripping against the windows as we could hear it hither and thither. James continued at the Piano, and Eleanor moved restlessly about, stealing glances now and then at her watch.

All at once there occurred one of those pauses which precede the loudest thunderings of a storm. In the midst of my sudden lull, James Argyll paused in his playing. Just then the sound of the locomotive pierced the silence with more than usual power, as the train was about to start from the centre of the hill not a quarter of a mile away, and the next moment the depôt in the lower part of the village.

Eleanor, with maiden artifice, took up a book, and composed herself to pretend to read; she would not have her lover to know that she had been so restless while awaiting his coming. Only Mary fluttered about like a hummingbird, diving into the sweets of things, the music, the flowers, whatever had honey in it, and tasting me in the intervals.

I have said that I loved Eleanor. I did, secretly, in silence and darkness, against my judgment and will, and because I could not help it. I was quite certain that James loved her also, and I felt sorry for him; for I knew what he fought me by my own sufferings, though I had never felt attracted toward his character. He seemed to me to be rather sullen in temper, as well as selfish; and then again I reproached myself for unchartableness; it might have been his circumstances which rendered him morose—he was dependent upon his uncle—and his subjugation which made him appear unamiable.

I loved, without a particle of hope. Eleanor was engaged to a young gentleman in point of many worthy of fine demeanor, high social position, and unblemished moral character. As much as her many admirers may be worthy of Moreland, I believed him to be worthy of her. To see the young couple together was to feel that theirs was to be one of those "marriages made in heaven." All age, character, worldly circumstances, beauty, and cultivation there was a rare correspondence.

Mr. Moreland was engaged with his father in a banking business in the city of New York. They owned a summer villa in Blankville, and had been there for the weeks of summer idleness here that he had made the acquaintance of Eleanor Argyll.

I was a student of the law his business kept him in the city; but he was in the habit of coming out every Saturday afternoon and spending Sunday. It was during one of these Sabbath days that the marriage which was to terminate a betrothal of nearly two years being now set very far away. On her acknowledging this, which came in Blankville, Eleanor was to be married.

Despite the watching and waiting, young Moreland did not arrive that night. Eleanor endeavored to conceal her disappointment under a pretence of gayety, and we passed the time, as if in a happy evening, until the hour we retired. I never heard it rain as it did that night; the water sound like waves, and the wind every moment that it would shook the strong mansion as if it were a child.

While we were at breakfast the following morning, the servant brought in a message for me. It was at the door, who wanted to see Mr. Argyll in haste—who was somewhat surprised to receive a request to be ushered into the next into the hall, and two minutes later I also was summoned. The news which awaited me was this: Henry Moreland was dead. His body had been found on the road shortly after daybreak, and had been taken into the house by the nearest depôt.

"They want you to come down to the inquest," said the messenger; "they think it's a fit; there's no more to be found out."

Mr. Argyll and I looked at each other. Our first thought was of Eleanor. He gave the direction to the servant, and, as the man left the room, said, strict orders to admit no one until our return, nor permit any one to approach Miss Argyll and not to breathe a word of the news to any one in the house.

Hastening to the hotel, already surrounded by many people, we found the direction's message too true. Upon a lounge, in a private sitting-room, by the body of Henry Moreland. The coroner and a number of physicians had already arrived. It was to—— [illegible] had found a pocket-book and there he——"he kept a residence of violence to be seen. The face was—— mat as in slumber; we could hardly believe him dead—— it touched the hand, it looked, and not going—he not!

The kisses; the light, gentle touches of his hands and forehead, and the cheeks with the same warmth of life she could not withhold; the instant look which continually watched him as if expecting an answer, the miserable suspense, the hope, the new thing of fear—all were wasted on those who saw them through many a future slumber.

Was the echo of her own last word recalled her wandering reason.

"My husband!" she exclaimed, suddenly rising to her full height, and gazing at me; "he do you say poor did it?"

Her cousin was standing near; her eyes fell upon him as she asked the question. The look, the manner, were too much for his already overwrought sensibility; he sank upon a chair, and his sunk down insensible. I did not wonder. We all of us felt as if we could endure no more.

The arrival of the relatives was the last scene in the tragedy of that day. Unable to bear more of it, I went out into the storm, and walked for hours in the rain. It was hot; the cool air felt grateful to me; I leaned long upon the trunk of a tree, and watched the storm-cloud starlight from about me; thought was busy with recent events. Who was the murderer? The question revolved in my mind, seeking vainly to work from conclusion to certainty as the turning of a wheel brings a certain point to the eye at every revolution. The image of a stalwart fellow leaped my mind to fix upon every slightest circumstance which could lead to any conclusion.

As I stood there in silence and darkness, pondering the matter, I heard a light rustle of the dry leaves upon the ground close by me. I turned, with a figure just then might have thought it one of the servants, were it not for the faint odor of cigar smoke which came to my nostrils. In the shadow of the trees were lies thick, I detected a person stealing toward the house." As she paced before a lighted window for a moment, the woman saw the suspicious conduct at the gate had attracted my attention. With considerable caution, and under the west side of the premises, and touched down under one of the windows from which a light was streaming. Here she remained for a time. She remained more than an hour, I watching her, and perplexing myself with vain conjectures. I could not help connecting her movements in any or with the murder. At last she arose, lingered, went away, passing near me again in the same manner as before, and left the village, where she went down a side street, and disappeared in a basement house, the entrance-hall of which was open. As I came up the walk on my return, I met James Argyll in the grounds, near the front portico.

"Oh, is it you?" he exclaimed, after I had spoken to him. "I—I——" stammering, and with a hollow voice. "The fact is, you frightened me. Where have you been at this hour, Richard?"

Walking in the wet air. The house smothered me."

"Ah!—indeed. I've just come out to get a breath of air. Do you know that it is midnight?"

CHAPTER IV.

MORELAND VILLA.

SEVERAL minor circumstances prevented my going in search of the woman who had excited my suspicions on the previous day until about nine o'clock of the morning, when I engaged an officer, and we two went quietly, without communicating our plans to any one else, to the tenement house before spoken of.

Arrayed in Blankville was not a large village, there was in it, as in nearly every town blessed with a railroad depôt, a sunday, quarter where the meaner portion of the working people lived. The house stood in this quarter.

It is not necessary to give the thousand questions and answers between us and our Irish friends, by which we gained all the information at present available. In one thing we were disappointed. The bird had flown. But we learned her name—Lucy Sullivan. Her aunt occupied a room in the second story of the building, and supposing we came to employ her neice to do some sewing in the family, she gave us the information we desired. Lucy had formerly served in the village; had worked for the Moreland's when they were at their villa in the summer. About a year since her health had failed; she was threatened with consumption; and having a small sum of money in her good, she had gone to the city, and got a place to do fine work in a fancy store. Once in a while she came home Saturday, and went back on Monday. She had done so this last Saturday, and had returned to New York by the train of which morning. Thought, dear Lucy, she was—she'll fit to sit the step, for the gals awful wet comin' up with the depôt that mornin'; another week o' the warmer next day had upset her entirely; she'd fainted dead away when she heard it. And no wonder; for the Morelands—the young one was dead—and John Owen, the old, and good pay," adding, "and have they heard any thing of the murderer?"

We responded that nothing had been learned, and descending to the street, it was arranged, as we walked along, that the officer should go to New York, and put some detective there on the track of Lucy Sullivan. I intended my conjecture of the discovery of the murder as final arrival in town and her appearance at her aunt's, before the woman had purposely deceived us, or her case had not gone beyond the usual range of affairs in Blankville. I went with him to the depôt, where we made a brief inquiry, and learned that the train of that day arrived on Saturday morning, but set an hour or two in lady's cars, and then started back empty up town.

There was sufficient to justify our looking further. I took from my own pocket means to defray the expenses of the officer, as well as to interest him in the discovery, adding that liberal rewards were about to be offered, and went until I could hear from him again.

When he left me, led by some "spirit in my feet," I turned toward Moreland Villa, which lay about a mile out of the village on the Peekskill road. It was almost was a long and vigorous walk, and the day I stood in need of it. The pace had never looked more beautiful to me than it did on my return. I walked in the house by the garden. I came nearly upon the portico which extended across the front of the house, when I found that he was occupied. Sitting on its outer edge, with one arm and rough around a column, I beheld Mary Argyll, the girl after whom I had dispatched an officer to New York. She did not perceive me, and I had an opportunity of studying the face of the woman I had failed to make my conjecture.

It was a face made to express passion. And, although the only passion expressed now was that of despair, so intense that it grew like apathy, I could easily see how the passions of love and hate might be called into mood. The forehead was rather low, but full, conserving with the rest of the cheek and chin; the nose was small and rather heavy. I remembered the wild black eyes which I had seen the previous day, and could guess at their hidden fires.

It seemed to me that if I could see those eyes before she was conscious of my presence, I could read in them the story, as light, or only sorrow in her heart; therefore I remained quiet, waiting. But I had mistaken my powers, or the power of the woman. What she thought was, as I steamer came pulling around the base of the mountain on the dark river. She was in the river at a time when solitary enclosures arise, where I stood not ten feet from her; I saw only black, unfathomable depths, pointing out a route to eternity. Her eyes gave no indication beneath their power.

I had stood upon observing me, which, as I thought, a guilty person, harder in self-accusing reveries, would have done—it seemed only slowly to penetrate her consciousness that I was standing near her. When I raised my eyes, which had sunk beneath the intensity of hers, she was moving rapidly away toward the eastern gate.

"Miss Sullivan, you have forgotten your bonnet."

With a woman's instinct she put up her hand to assure her disordered head-dress was slowly from the hole but which I extended toward her, without speaking. I arose, and followed her as she left the portico, to address her—she was here, in my grasp, and I ought to satisfy myself, as far as possible, about the circumstances when I had conceived. Yet for the life of me I could not detain her. She had reached the gate and gone forth into the road while I was trying to decide what I ought best to do. She did not return toward the village; as if conscious of impending danger, she fled away, with a rapid step over the hills.

Within two minutes the gardener's wife came up the road to the gate, and I left the premises to the kind corps of her young master; her eyes were red with weeping, and she was in deep trouble. Her woman, it appeared, had sufficient faith to confide to her the visit of the sewing-girl to the premises, telling her if that person came to the house again to inform her of the fact at once.

When I reached the office, on my homeward route, I went in. Mr. Argyll was there, and I found him leaning on the bench, in his accustomed seat, with his brow reclined in deep thought. As soon as I came in he sprung up, closed the outer door, and said to me in a low voice:

"Richard, another strange thing has occurred."

I stared at him, afraid to ask what.

"I have been robbed of two thousand dollars."

"When and how, sir?"

"That is what I do not know. Four days ago I drew that amount in bills from the Park Bank. I placed it, in bed, just as received it, in a drawer of my bureau. I locked the desk, and have carried the key in my pocket. The desk has been in my bed-room constantly since I have gone to it. How long the money has been gone I cannot say; I never looked after it from the time I drew it there, until an hour ago. I wanted some cash for expenses this afternoon, and, going for it, the rob was gone."

"Could you identify the money?"

"Not all of it. I only remember that there was one hundred-dollar bill, a fresh issue of the Park Bank, of which, possibly, they may have the number."

"Have you said any thing to Eleanor about your loss?"

"Not yet. You may tell him when you see him; and do what you can, Richard, for I feel helpless as a child."

I saw that he was really ill, and promised to do all in my power. As I expected to go that afternoon to the city with the funeral cortege. I resolved to take the opportunity of putting the police on the watch for the money.

For a continuation of this remarkable story see BEADLE'S MONTHLY for February, now ready and for sale by all book sellers and by the publishers; or will be sent, on receipt of the price, TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. BEADLE & CO., Publishers, 118 William Street, New York.—ADVERTISEMENT.

BURNETT'S FLORIMEL is an exquisite handkerchief perfume.

Whatever Dr. BERNETT makes is the best of its kind. His famous Cocoaine for the hair and his flavoring extracts sustain that reputation. For sale by druggists, grocers, and country dealers.

JOSEPH BURNETT & CO., Boston, Proprietors.

DESIRABLE DISPENSATION.—DR. CARNOCHAN, one of our most distinguished surgeons, in a letter indorsing the nitrous oxide gas as an anæsthetic for surgical operations, greatly preferring it to ether or chloroform, says, "Dr. COLTON is due the credit of reviving the use of this important agent in the practice of dentistry." Dr. COLTON, whose office is at No. 15 Cooper Institute, has extracted teeth for over nine thousand persons (our forman among them), each of whom have signed a scroll in his office, certifying that they have been done entirely without pain!—a fact which we take pleasure in making known to the public.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

FIRST PREMIUM
IMPROVED
$5 SEWING $5
MACHINE.

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originally patented May 15, 1861; Improvement patented June 6, 1865, and manufactured FAMILIE GROVER & BAKER MACHINE, with OVER-AND-OVER attachment, a most wonderful and elegant piece of mechanism, which is now ready for competition, sews the STRAIGHT SEEDER, and SEWS horizontal, sews with more or less than TWO THREADS of cotton, makes the SEWING-STITCH more perfect and regular than by hand, and with extraordinary rapidity, making many STRIKING STITCHES to each evolution of the Wheel. Will GATHER, RUN, HEM, HEMMING, TUCK, SEW BY MACHINE, &c., &c. Strongest machine manufactured. Warranted not to get out of order for 3 years. It has taken FIRST PREMIUM at PARIS, and received the approval of all the principal journals and of thousands who have used it. It is the only low-priced sewing machine that has received a PREMIUM, or that is pronounced by its users sewing machine. All the same price are INFRINGEMENTS.

"FOR the price it is invaluable; for the household it supplies a vacant place."—Godey's Ladies' Book.

"With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly like hand-sewing."—New York Tribune.

Single machines, ALL COMPLETE, sent to any part of the country on approval, packed in box, with printed instruction, on receipt of the price, $5. Self-delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted every where. Circular, containing liberal inducements, sent free. Address all orders,

FAMILIE SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
Office 102 Nassau Street, New York.

PileRemedy

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Piles and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief, and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

Cough's

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

$27.60 PER DAY. AGENTS WANTED. Let the ambitious and Gentlemen in every County in the United States, to call for the Ink Powders of which we can ink Company. The Powder sells for forty cents per package, and will make the energy to fill fifty bottles of the size usually retailed at ten cents per bottle. A smart agent can get a good day a day, and clear $27. The best ink can be made from the powder in three minutes in common rain water. It is a perfect black ink, the best in the world. It flows easily, does not corrode the pen a particle, never mold, is not injured by freezing, and is color will last forever. Every family in America will buy it, as it is cheaper and not a bottle per year, and ink can be made in small quantities, as wanted. With each gross we send a thousand circulars, with testimonials from clergymen, lawyers, doctors, merchants, commercial colleges, editors, &c., and the agent's name on the bills. Only one gross will be made up for an agent for a trial. The one first sending $20 for a gross of the powder will receive it by return express. Any one with one thousand circulars, and the right to sell in the county he or she desires. If others have read for the same county, the agent will be returned to them free of expense. To make sure, one can't better do than to send several copies either of which he or she will take. Send for trade-list and circulars if you desire the rule of selling, or send five cents for a gross. Letters addressed to the Mayor, Postmaster, Chamber of the Banks, or the Express Agents of this city, will show that the business is honorably and squarely conducted. The Powder will be sent by mail to any address, free of charge, on the receipt of forty cents. Address, writing your name, town, county and state plainly,

AMERICAN INK COMPANY,
Manchester, N. H.
THOMAS W. LANE,
Clerk for the Company, and Special Agent.

Brandreths's Pills.

INFLUENZA, DIPHTHERIA.

In inflammatory affections, when no bleeding is permitted, a free use of these Pills soon modifies the alarming symptoms, and perseverance, according to the directions, usually quickly cures; and certainly nothing is risked in using Brandreth's Pills. For cold, influenza, inflammation of the head, dizziness, and apoplexy, no medicine can be compared to them. In erysipelas, fever and ague, small-pox, and in all the diseases of childhood, their use insures a speedy recovery of health. They produce these results simply by taking from the blood its impurities, leaving to aid a weak "faculty" to recover its proper and necessary "status" or health.

THIS VITAL FLUID FREE

BRANDRETH'S PILLS HAVE AFFINITY FOR THE SUBJECT-MATTER OF DISEASE, AND CAUSE ITS
CERTAIN EXPULSION FROM THE BODY.

THE DAYS OF BRASS JEWELRY
Are Over.

THE COSMOPOLITAN
JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,
Capital, $2,500,000.

Great One-Price Gold Sale.

Sell no Brass or so-called Plated Jewelry.

WARRANT ALL JEWELRY GOLD,
OR NO SALE.

Let it be distinctly understood that this is emphatically a GOLD SALE, by an association of manufacturers, on a one-price exchange system, and that not a single article of brass or plated jewelry is included in the whole immense stock.

250,000
Pieces, Gold and Silver Watches, Diamond Rings, Sets of rich Silverware, Fine Gold Jewelry,
Photograph Albums, &c.,
Worth $2,500,000.

All to be sold for two dollars each, an average price of one-fifth the usual cost, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.

INSURING THE DOLLAR WORTH FOR $2.

☞ THE PROOF—We guarantee to send any customer, in exchange for the least article they may get for $2, a Gandid reality chased and engraved Silver Hunter Watch, or Castor, fine plate, valued at $10, or a beautiful 50-pic-ture morocco Photograph Album, valued at $6; and you have a possibility of getting a

Fine Gold Watch or Piano.

Send 25 cents for the Golden Envelope, containing valuable receipts and songs; and one of the sealed Certificates, which are well mixed and freely circulated, and from which you will see, which will inform you what you can get for $2, from a Butter-Dish or Castor, worth $10, to a Watch or Grand Piano, worth $1000. Also with it sent our circular, containing list of articles and full particulars; also terms to agents, to whom great inducements are offered.

Two for 50 cents, with a beautiful Photograph; 5 for $1, with a Silver Not-Pick, worth $1; 11 for $2, with a Silver Napkin Ring, worth $2; 17 for $3, with a Silver Fruit Knife, worth $3; 30 for $5, with a Gold Pen, fastener-case, worth $5; 65 for $10, with a Gold Double Lockets, worth $12; 100 for $15, with a fine Silver Watch, worth $18; 160 for $30, with a Silver Hunting Watch, worth $40.

In all cases, upon receipt of the money, the premiums as above will be sent with the envelope.

Address CALKINS & CO., Managers,
No. 37 Park Row, New York.

MUJAVIRO

Is the most delicious and lasting of all perfumes. The odor is like a mingling of the breath of the rose, jasmine, and heliotrope. What can be more fragrant?

For sale by all druggists and at all fancy stores.

Cholera! Cholera!

Do not die with the Cholera. Save your life. Dr. CHARLES'S EUROPEAN CHOLERA REMEDY has cured the worst cases of Cholera. Every body should send at once, and receive it by return of mail; for we know not what day we may be attacked.

Sent by mail postpaid for $1 50, or six for $7. Address all orders to Dr. Agent.

CHARLES L. BRIGGS, AGENT,
144 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois.

FUN, FUN FOR FIVE. The Pocket Piccolo, turn gallery. The most laughable thing on earth. Causes more hearty laughter than any humor, and makes transformations. Price only fifty cents. I will send by mail postpaid a beautiful PHOTOGRAPH of the assorted portraits of our Union Generals, for 50 cents, or $5 per dozen to agents. Address as above.

C. BRIGGS, 144 D. Dearborn St. Chicago, Illinois.

SIAMESE TWINS.

Two men grown together. A life photograph. Sent by mail for 25 cents Address C. BRIGGS,
144 Dearborn St.
Chicago, Ill.

THE CONFESSION
OF
Martha Grinder, the Poisoner.

8vo, Paper, 25 Cents.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

JOHN P. HUNT & CO., Publishers,
19 Fifth St., Monic Hall, Pittsburg, Pa.
For sale by HILTON & CO. and AUGUST BRANTANO, New York, and by dealers generally.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine an invention urgently needed by every body. Or a sample sent for fifty cents, or five for one dollar, by mail, by E. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York.

VIOLINS and BOWS

Sent to any part of the U. S. on receipt of following prices:
GERMAN, Red or brown, $2 50, $3, $4, $5, $6, $8.
DOUBLE LINED, $5, $7, $9, $11, $13, $15, $17, $19.
FRENCH, Blocked and lined, $8, $10, $17, $25, $30.
ITALIAN, $5, $10, $12, $14, $16, $18, $20, $25, $35.
OLD MASTER, Very fine tone, $50, $75, $100.
MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of every description at lowest New York prices. Send stamp for circular.
Address C. BRUNO, 543 Broadway.

THE DUPLEX ELLIPTIC
SPRING.

The best Spring in use. Every pair warranted. Sold by all dealers in the trade. Manufactured only by the DUPLEX ELLIPTIC SPRING COMPANY, 65 Fulton Street, New York.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
Nos. 31 & 33 Vesey Street, New York.

P. O. Box 5643.

Importers and Dealers in Teas.

Have for sale the Choicest Teas in the market, which they offer at prices from 25 to 40 per cent. less than any other house in the trade.

Their Teas are all of the growth of 1865, and are selected with great care by their own tasters in China, and are imported direct by the Company.

Their Teas are unsurpassed in Quality, Strength, and Flavor.

Their Teas are put up in packages of 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 10, 20, 30, 40, and 50 lbs. each, and are sent by express to all parts of the country.

Their Teas are warranted to give entire satisfaction in every case, or the money will be refunded.

Their Teas are the best that can be imported, and are sold at the lowest possible prices.

Their Teas are the best that can be purchased for the money.

Their Teas are the best that can be purchased for the money.

Their Teas are the best that can be purchased for the money

THE HONEYMOON.

MR. JONES. "Glad to see you Feed so Beautiful, my Sweetest!"
MRS. JONES. "Thank yer, my Dear, I'm doin' Lovely!"

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad St., New York,
(Two Doors from Wall.)

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks, Bonds, and Gold will receive our personal attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

MOTHERS!
Children die by thousands—Worms the cause—when Dean mistook for Cholera, had they used VAN DEUSEN'S WHITE CONFECTIONS. Children are as fond of them as they are of Candy. Sold by Merchants. 25 Cts. a Box. Sent by mail on receipt of the price. VAN DEUSEN BROTHERS, Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.

CURIOUS FASTENERS for Ladies and Gents. Sent for 25 cents. W. C. WEMYSS, 575 Broadway, N. Y.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

FOLLAK & SON Manufacturers of Meerschaum Goods, 699 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $50 each.

TO CURE
Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL, and disorders arising from excesses, use
Smolander's Extract Buchu.
Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York, and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER.

This new celebrated Revolver excels all others for compactness, effectiveness, durability, power, and safety in carrying. Weight (14 oz.), small only 7 in.), with larger movable wad-proof cartridge ($5.00 ball) than any revolver made of same size or weight. Send for circular. GEO. A. HUGKOUN, 94 Cliff street, New York.

TRADE MARK OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 99 Chambers Street, New York.

MERCHANTS, BANKERS,
And others should send to all parts of the United States by ADAMS'S EXPRESS, 59 Broadway.

Ladies and Gentlemen,
Send for our MEASURING CARD, and
Take your own measure, and we will send a
PERFECT FIT.
575 Broadway, N. Y., E. A. BROOKS, AGENT.
Boots, Shoes, Gaiters, and Slippers, of every description, for ladies, gents, boys, misses, and children.
N. B.—LARGEST ASSORTMENT IN THE CITY.

MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP with
B.T. BABBITT'S POTASH IN TIN CANS
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
Pure Concentrated Potash, or Ready Soap Maker. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 3 pounds, 5 pounds, 8 pounds, and 12 pounds, with full directions, in English and German, for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 10 pounds of Soft Soap. Notice is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market. B. T. BABBITT, 64, 66, 68, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., New York.

B.T. BABBITT'S, SALERATUS
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
If you want healthy bread, use B. T. Babbitt's best saleratus or Cooking Saleratus. "Cream Salt." Bread made with this Saleratus contains, when baked, nothing but common salt, water, and flour. B. T. BABBITT, Nos. 64, 66, 68, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., New York.

B.T. BABBITT'S,
STAR YEAST POWDERS
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
Will make Light Biscuit in Fifteen Minutes.

Old Eyes Made New,
Without Spectacles, Doctor, or Medicine. Pamphlet mailed free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

GROUP.
How it may be easily Prevented without Medicine; also its Cause and Cure. Sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

COMFORT AND CURE FOR THE RUPTURED.—Sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE, 400 pages, 100 Illustrations, $1 50. Sent by mail every where, postage prepaid. Contents table sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.
Fever, Inflammations, and Stiff Joints will find a speedy cure in these medicines. Perseverance in their use will be rewarded by restoration to health, vigor, and health. The Pills are an admirable auxiliary to the Ointment. They improve and invigorate the whole system. Sold every where.

METENDAVAL
FOR THE MOUTH.
E. Y. M. C.

THE STATE YOU LIVE IN. Pocket Maps of all the States and Territories, showing correctly the counties, principal towns, railroads, &c. Sent by mail. For catalogue, address G. W. & C. B. COLTON & CO., 172 William street, New York.

ROGERS' FRAGRANT
ODONTOLINE
FOR THE TEETH.
For Sale by Druggists, Fancy Goods Dealers and Perfumers.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

Marvin's Patent
ALUM AND DRY PLASTER, FIRE AND BURGLAR
SAFES
Never lose their fire-proof qualities, corrode the iron, or mould their contents.
Richest and purest safes for silverware.
MARVIN & CO.,
265 Broadway, New York.
721 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

"American Union Company,"
Manufacturers of the NEW ORGAN-TONED PIANO, EQUAL, if not SUPERIOR, to any. Warranted in every particular. Warerooms and Agency, 467 Broome St.

CHINA AND GLASSWARE:
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway New York,
Four Doors below Broome Street,
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

TO LET.
The Four-Story Building, No. 51 Broad Street, 2d feet front. Possession 1st of May next. Apply to
HARPER & BROTHERS, Franklin Square.

HEALTH OF AMERICAN WOMEN.
One trial will prove that MARSHALL'S UTERINE CATHOLICON will cure "female weakness" and "uterine complaints of women;" together with nervousness, pains and indigestion connected with that cause. See that the seal of the Graefenberg Company is on every bottle. PRICE $1 50. Sold every where.
THE GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS.
The best pill for all liver complaints, biliousness, and indigestion. They never gripe, and do not leave the bowels constipated. PRICE 25 CENTS. SOLD BY DEALERS EVERY WHERE.

PINE APPLE CIDER
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
A certain cure for Cholera, Dysentery, Heart Disease, Fainting Spells, and excellent for old people, as it quickens the circulation of the Blood.

SCHILBERG'S GERMAN OINTMENT.
Warranted a certain cure, without the slightest danger, for piles, old wounds, scrofula, salt rheum, all bone and skin diseases, &c. 99 Bowery, New York.

"N.B." VALENTINES. 1866.
STRONGEST AND GOOD ASSORTMENT,
Or, $10, $20, $30, $40, and $50 Lots expressed to any address on receipt of cash. Send at once.
I. W. STRONG, Valentine Manufacturer,
98 Nassau Street, New York.

PATENT REVERSIBLE
PAPER COLLAR
The Cheapest Collar Ever Invented,
Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides. Made in white, linen, and printed cloth.

SNOW'S PATENT
SCARF HOLDER.
PATENTED FEB. 14, 1865.
Is made of the best Spring Steel Wire, and is just the thing to wear with Paper Collars, being far superior to elastic cord for holding Butterflies, "Cutlaws," "Bows," &c., in place on the shirt button.

PATENT EXPANDED
STAR COLLAR
This Collar, showing a space for the cravat, excels all others by its superior shape and weight, and the exquisite finish and whiteness of the goods.
MARCH BROS., PIERCE & CO., AGENTS,
Winthrop Square, Boston.
Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf Supporters at the lowest Boston prices, by—,
SAYRE & SHUTTER . . . . Chicago, Illinois.
J. LOWMAN & BRO. . . . Cincinnati, Ohio.
MAYER & HARRIS . . . . Cleveland, Ohio.
CARPENTER & CO. . . . Louisville, Kentucky.
U. CAPRON . . . . 262 Broadway, New York.
WM. A. SHUTTER . . . . 7 Bank St., Philadelphia, Pa.
A. BURNHAM & CO. . . . Detroit, Michigan.

DEAFNESS.
DISCHARGES FROM THE EAR, and NOISES IN THE HEAD, RADICALLY CURED.
By the use of the recently-discovered Vegetable Extract
OTTITINE.
Price $2 00 a bottle. For sale by all Druggists.
GEO. C. GOODWIN, 18 Hanover Street, Boston, Wholesale Agent.

WARD'S
PERFECT FITTING
SHIRTS.
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars, sent free every where.
THE CASH CAN BE PAID TO EXPRESS COMPANY.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
S. W. WARD, 88 1/2 Broadway, New York.

THE NEW BOOKS OF THE SEASON
PUBLISHED BY
HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

☞ Sent by Mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

GUY DEVERELL. By J. S. LE FANU, Author of "Uncle Silas," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents. (Next Week.)

SOCIAL LIFE OF THE CHINESE: With some Account of their Religious, Governmental, Educational, and Business Customs and Opinions. With special but not exclusive Reference to Fuhchau. By Rev. JUSTUS DOOLITTLE, Fourteen Years Member of the American Board. With over 150 Illustrations. In Two Volumes, 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $5 00.

HALF A MILLION OF MONEY. By AMELIA B. EDWARDS. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

RICHARD CORDEN, the Friend of America and Apostle of Free Trade: His Political Career and Public Services. A Biography. By JOHN MORLEMORE. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $1 50.

NOTES FROM PLYMOUTH PULPIT: A Collection of Memorable Passages from the Discourses of HENRY WARD BEECHER. With a Sketch of Mr. Beecher and the Lecture-Room. By AUGUSTUS MORRIS. A New Edition, revised and greatly enlarged. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

PRISON LIFE IN THE SOUTH: at Richmond, Macon, Savannah, Charleston, Columbia, Charlotte, Raleigh, Goldsborough, and Andersonville, during the Years 1864 and 1865. By A. O. AUGUSTE, late Lieutenant 24 New York Dragoons. Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $1 50.

THE BELTON ESTATE. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE, Author of "Doctor Thorne," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE STORY OF THE GREAT MARCH: Diary of General Sherman's Campaign through Georgia and the Carolinas. By Brevet Major General WILLIAM HOWARD, Aid-de-Camp to General Sherman. With a Colored Map and numerous Illustrations, and an Appendix, containing Major-General SHERMAN'S Official Report of his Campaign, and Quartermaster and Commissary Reports, &c. Twenty-fourth Edition. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

CAN YOU FORGIVE HER? By ANTHONY TROLLOPE. Illustrated by HABLOT K. BROWNE. 8vo, Paper, $1 00; Cloth, $2 00.

WANTED—every man in the United States, who has not lost either an Arm or Leg—to engage in a profitable business. Address, Twenty-five Cents, Stamps, to A. F. BELDING, Box 88, Philadelphia, Pa.

JAMES'S CELEBRATED LINIMENT.
For NEURALGIA, RHEUMATISM, and SCIATICA; WARRANTED. 8 Astor Place. Price One Dollar.

WARD'S
PAPER COLLARS
AND CUFFS FOR LADIES
& GENTLEMEN.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
387 BROADWAY, N.Y.

ladies' Victoria Turn-over Paper Collar.

Ladies' Empress Turn-over Paper Collar.

Ladies' English Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies' American Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies French Paper Cuffs.

Ladies' English Paper Cuffs.

Gentlemen's Piccadilly Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Standing Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Turnover Paper Collar.

Gents. Reversible Paper Cuffs.

Gents. English Paper Cuffs.

Ladies' Collars from 75 cents to $2 per 1/0.
Gentlemen's Collars from $2 50 to $4 per 1/0.
CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—These are the only papers collars and cuffs that are made from pure linen, ready-made. NOTICE TO THE TRADE.—Wholesale Price List sent by mail. Also, our Circular Pamphlet.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. X.—No. 477.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1866. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1866, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

CENTRAL CITY, COLORADO.—[SKETCHED BY T. R. DAVIS.]

A GAMBLING SCENE IN DENVER CITY, COLORADO.—SKETCHED BY T. R. DAVIS.—[SEE PAGE 103.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1866.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

THE Amendment to the Constitution, of which we spoke last week, has been passed by a triumphant majority in the House. Of course our view of its adequacy to obtain unbridled the special result sought is undiminished by the votes of a series of measures designed to secure certain indispensable ends — which is probably the truer light in which to regard it — it may yet appear to be wise. If, for instance, as Mr. STEVENS urges, this is all that the country will now bear, while the discussions and delays consequent upon its passage will enlighten the public mind to further essential measures, the objections to it as an independent proposition will disappear.

But last any one should be inclined to think this sole amendment enough, let us look at its probable operation. Mr. STEVENS says that the ambition of political power is the strongest feeling of the white people in the Southern States, and that this will induce them, under the pressure of the amendment, to enfranchise the colored population. Now it is perfectly clear that this feeling, which undoubtedly exists, is controlled by another just as powerful, and that is the feeling of caste. That the proposed amendment is intended to work in the interest of the white inhabitants of every State to overcome this feeling we do not deny, and that it may ultimately do so is very possible. But we have a very plain duty to the living generation of the colored population, and we have no right to sacrifice them to an ulterior advantage. And as we see, that would be the probable operation of this sole amendment.

In the State of South Carolina the population is about equally divided between the white and colored citizens. Let us assume that it has now three representatives, and would lose one of them if the colored basis were excluded, and would gain three if it were counted. If there are no people who know better than the whites of South Carolina that the colored men are not born fools. Their instincts are as good as other men's, and their knowledge, if not of reading and writing kind, was quite sufficient to inform them who were their friends in the late war. With every advantage apparently on the master's side, the colored population were against him. Despite the liberal lying, the unblushing and consistent story that the Yankees were coming to sell them to Cuba, that they would be left to starve and freeze; despite the insane orders of HALLECK and M'CLELLAN, which were the most convincing possible proof of the truth of such representations, the colored population believed in the Yankees with an unshaken faith; the name of "LINCOLN" was as sweet to their hearts as that of liberty, and the whites could not coax or drive the blacks to fight for them.

The war ended, and for ten months the same whites have shown the bitterest hostility to the blacks, and both sides know it. On what ground of reason or experience is it supposed that, if the blacks were enfranchised, whether by the State or the Nation, they would vote with the late masters? Nobody knows better than the whites that they would not. Why, then, should the white population wish to neutralize the three representatives whom they now elect and control? Rather than do it they would infinitely prefer to lose one that they might still have two. That is human nature, and especially Southern human nature, as much as the desire of political power. Indeed that is what the whites would do if they wished the white political power. For they know that the three supposed representatives upon the colored basis would act with the liberal party of the country, while the three of the white basis would ally themselves to the Democratic or Tory party. As against men, therefore, they would prefer to have no voices for their own purposes rather than no voice at all. And how could we excuse ourselves for having delivered the freedmen into the hands of the whites upon the plea that we thought we had devised a method of inducing the latter to be just? Mr. BECKER deprecates rigor in the treatment of the Southern States; but, unless the amendment misrepresents him, he said in his Philadelphia speech, at the Freedmen's Anniversary Meeting, that the one point upon which he could not trust the white Southern brethren was their treatment of the colored population.

Other objections to the amendment as an independent proposition might be easily stated. But its intention is right, and it will doubtless be followed by other suggestions from the Committee. The object of the amendment is to punish arbitrary deprivation of political power, based upon race or color, by reduced representation, and no object could be more laudable. Thus the State of New York politically discriminates against a part of her population, not on account of ignorance or incapacity, but of color; a discrimination as outrageously unfair as if it were based upon bodily height or weight. The amendment will exclude that part of the population from being reckoned in the basis of representation. It may, indeed, be so distributed in the various districts as not to affect the whole number of representatives, but any national act imposing a penalty upon the indulgence in so unmanly and demoralizing a prejudice will hasten a reform. Moreover, if the colored voter in the State will not be deprived of his vote, and he will be very sure to cast that vote for the men and measures which will best promote the organic law of the State conform to common-sense and equal rights.

A PREPOSTEROUS BALANCE.

THE balance in the Sub-Treasury, on the evening of January 31, was about $105,000,000, of which over half was gold and silver coin. This is a larger balance than could be shown by any other civilized government in the world. It is considerably more than our whole annual national expenditure used to be before the war. It is nearly one-third of our whole annual national expenditure now. The question arises, how comes this extraordinary accumulation of money in the Treasury at a time when the excess are so extraordinarily great? How is it that Government, which finds it necessary to levy fifteen separate taxes on the manufacture of a book, can contrive to accumulate several pounds of legal-tender money, and ONE HUNDRED AND FIVE TONS OF GOLD COIN in its vaults?

We have heard of no considerable amount of suspended requisitions. We know that the Generals and the contractors have all been or are being paid off. Nothing is heard now about the delays of Government, which used to be such a standard topic of denunciation a year or so since. Congress is "shutting down" pretty firmly on private claims for damages arising out of the war. The whole appropriation for revenue being in fact in excess of the expenditure, what does the Treasury do with a balance of $105,000,000?

If we examine in detail the accounts of the Treasury Department we shall find that on the day on which this extraordinary balance was shown the Government held $100,000,000 of money belonging to individuals, and deposited in the Treasury on call after ten days at 4, 5, and 6 per cent. interest. A very insignificant proportion of this amount was held at 4 and 5 per cent.; the great bulk was drawing 6 per cent. interest. Assuming that the whole amount drew 5½ per cent., Government was paying $5,479,000 per annum for its use, or $15,000 a day—and was not using it. On what theory can such extravagance be justified?

If a Funding Bill be passed on the market in this month of February, and the deposit certificates are to be received in payment for the bonds at par and interest, one might perhaps understand the squandering of $100,000 a week for a few weeks in the payment of interest on money that is not wanted, and lies idle in the Treasury. Then because there is no excuse for such mismanagement; and before Congress commits to Mr. M'CULLOCH the exorbitant powers granted by the Funding and Means Bill, it may be well for some member to ascertain why this $100,000 a week has been wasted? The country is not in a condition to waste any money. The whole people, with their old whole-souled obedience to law, are paying taxes steadily just as they are exacted of them, there is none the less a feeling among all classes that Government is drawing at least as much money as it ought from individual pockets, and it is an outrage to throw any of it away through carelessness.

Another point. Of the Treasury balance shown on 1st February about $52,000,000 were in coin. What did the Government want with all this gold in the Treasury except what was to be made to resume specie payments? For over a week gold has been so scarce in this city that ½ @ ¾ per cent. has been paid for its use for a single day. This scarcity has not been occasioned by any export of coin —for exchange has ruled steadily below the point at which coin can be profitably shipped—it has been wholly due to the withdrawal from general circulation of over fifty million dollars by the Government deposits. And it may also be explained that coin once received at the United States Sub-Treasuries is practically lost to commerce until it is disbursed. So long as it remains in the Treasury it is loaned over or used in any way that is required. Once in the Sub-Treasury it might just as well be at the bottom of the Gulf of Mexico, so far as any benefit to trade is concerned. During the year 1865 Government sold its surplus gold as fast as it accumulated in the Treasury vaults. But this was necessary, for in no other way could no one could be sure that Government was selling until the deliveries were made; and thus the operations of the Sub-Treasurer were the basis of much speculation. But bad as this practice was, it was infinitely better than hoarding the gold idly in the Treasury vaults.

We pretend to no knowledge of the reasons of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is questionable whether he has any set purpose beyond the general one of resuming specie payments as soon as he can. It may be his scheme to accumulate gold enough in the Sub-Treasury to resume specie payments suddenly, in which case the national banks and most of the mercantile community would break. In fact he has not disavowed his desire for a gradual resumption. In this event, it is difficult to see why he should fill the Treasury with gold of the country in the Sub-Treasuries, and thus renders it easy for speculators for the rise to keep up the price.

For many months the course of the Treasury Department has led financiers to suspect that it was "adrift." No great mistakes have been made. But there has been an obvious absence of direct policy in many matters. Even General GRANT and President JOHNSON have kept down the price of gold, and the cotton growers of the South have settled the balance of trade. It is possible that matters have been as well managed thus as they would have been if Secretary M'CULLOCH had interfered at every juncture and attempted to control the spheres. But there is surely a limit to "masterly inactivity." It is surely not masterly to pay 6 or 5 per cent. per annum for money that is not wanted, or to create a scarcity of gold by piling up a hundred tons of coin in the Sub-Treasury before resumption is contemplated.

THE COTTON CROP.

WHEN the war ended the cotton dealers and Southern planters assured us that there was no cotton worth mentioning at the South, and that under the best of circumstances none would be raised for years. After the lapse of a few weeks, however, a certain number of bales began to come forward, and the authorities in the trade became reluctantly convinced that there might be 1,250,000 bales on hand. We have already received more than this, and the best informed cotton men now assert that not less than 2,500,000 bales will come forward before 1st September — worth, at present prices, 50 per cent. more than the largest crop ever raised in this country.

Again, until within a few weeks, the partisans of the defunct institution of Slavery were positive that the crop would not be even in a state of freedom, and that many many years would elapse before even so small a crop as a million bales was raised at the South. For some weeks this theory has been practically and it has begun to be admitted that the crop of 1866 will be 1,500,000 bales. A fortnight since, the best-informed authorities, after a careful examination of the area of land that was likely to be planted, and of the amount of labor that could be relied on, came to the conclusion that, under favorable circumstances, the crop might reach 2,500,000 bales. And now the trade seem agreed that, if no accident happens, we may have a crop exceeding 2,000,000 bales.

Two results will follow. In the first place the price of cotton must fall, and with it the price of cotton goods which have been selling at exorbitant prices. And, secondly, our friends in Europe will find it much more difficult to pay us for the cotton we shall send them, and with which they can not dispense, than we shall to pay them for the goods we are importing.

THE REVENUE COMMISSION REPORT.

THE Report of the Internal Revenue Commission is a most interesting document. It is both practical and philosophical, and is in itself an admirable illustration of one of its own observations—the advantage, namely, of putting the right men in the right places. If all other commissions for all other purposes in this country were filled with men who were peculiarly fitted for the work, if all the degrees and varieties of talent in the Government Departments were occupied by men trained for their duties, the economy and efficiency of the Government would be incalculably increased. Fortunately, the choice for the peculiarly arduous undertaking of investigating the confusion of the present Revenue system, and of recommending a remedy, could be at once the most extensive, simple, and effective, fell upon those who were signally competent.

The Report is clear in the plainest and most intelligible style, and without a single weakening touch of rhetoric. It finds fault with the extreme diffuseness of the present system, producing a bewildering multiplication of taxes, and consequent high prices. As a most striking illustration it presents the very case of the book manufacture, which we have earnestly exposed in these columns, and freed of unbrellas; and it recommends a repeal of all excise duties upon printed publications.

But this is not all. Starting with the principle which the Report considers should be fundamental in a wise revenue system—an entire exemption of all manufacturing industry from all direct taxation, excepting distilled and fermented liquors, tobacco, and a few other articles, for the reason that such taxes check the industrial development of the country, and reduce national wealth. The Report proposes, therefore, to draw the revenue from a few sources; and after an exhaustive and unexaggerated survey of those sources, it estimates an aggregate revenue for the year ending June 30, 1867, of $367,000,000, about two-thirds of which are to be derived from customs, distilled spirits, fermented liquors, tobacco and its manufactures, cotton, coal oil, and spirits of turpentine and resin. The other third will be derived from incomes, licenses, salaries, legacies, stamps, gross receipts, sales, legacies, and successions, with miscellaneous receipts. Adding to this sum the amount derived in 1865 from taxation on industry, the gross revenue possible under the present rates, with the proposed amendments, would be $435,000,000. The estimate of $416,000,000 as the income of the Secretary of the Treasury for the year ending June 30, 1867, which will make $300,000,000 for meeting semi-annual coupons, and the reduction of the principal of the national debt, there will remain a surplus, assuming the estimates to be correct, of $85,000,000 for the reduction of taxation.

The recommendations of the Report for immediate action relate exclusively to the reduction of the present excessive duplication of taxes, which would not seriously impair the revenue. The adoption of further reduction should depend upon the experiment of another year; and indeed the Commissioners recommends that the change from the old to the new system should be made only so fast as experience shows that it can be safely done.

The reasoning of the Report is conclusive upon the great principle involved: its recommendations seem to us generally most judicious, and the confidence of the people of the country to sustain its burden are a singular confirmation of the substantial correctness and value of the little pamphlet, "Our Burden and our Strength," which was prepared during the war by Commissioner DAVID A. WELLS, and which gave to our foreign friends, like JOHN STUART MILL, and RICHARD COBDEN, and JOHN BRIGHT, a new and surprising ground of faith in our success. The present Report is of so universal and vital an interest, and so simply stated, that every man in the country should ponder it.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

MR. A. T. STEWART has been doing a very disagreeable but a very necessary public service in endeavoring the law to punish the editors and correspondents that they can not publish the defamatory rumors concerning conspicuous men, which are always circulating in a great city, without being held to the strictest responsibility. A libel suit is always so unpleasant that most men are content to "take no notice of it," and let it die out. But the circulation of many of the letters written from New York to newspapers in various parts of the country is personal gossip; and the temptation to seize a chance to hang and cut and draw and quarter with "spicy" scandal is found to be very irresistible. The habit has been growing into an intolerable nuisance which Mr. STEWART's decided action will tend radically to abate.

But this fondness of gossip about noted persons is not confined to Yankees. Foreign critics are very apt to accuse Americans of orders of unpardonable personalities in their descriptions, and THACKERAY sharply satirizes the Yankee tourist for this offense in "Roundabout Paper." But the sins of gossip and foreigners are white as snow compared with those of the foreigners, often well recommended and really gentlemanly and accomplished men, who come to see us and then go home to write about us. Their "trivial fond records" show that there is, especially perhaps in France, another standard of true gentlemanly conduct than in the United States.

The personal memoirs and diaries of sagacious persons who are thrown into intimacy with society are always agreeable and valuable; but the kind of literature known as personal gossip is as respectable as the tittle-tattle of the kitchen or of the tea-room, and is one of the purity tastes that look no further for enjoyment. There are certain proprieties which are as sacred in the case of every public man, whatever may be his distinction, as they are in that of the most private individual; and it is just as impertinent a folly to tell us how often General GRANT changes his collar, or how much some interesting revelation about an unimportant private soldier. There is a kind of strictly personal detail which should be reserved for biography.

No arbitrary rules can be laid down to regulate contemporary personal descriptions in literature, but every gentleman instinctively feels when they are violated, and the inevitable effect of their violation is to close the doors of those whose society would naturally be sought with curiosity by foreigners as well as natives. Besides, it concerns the honor of the literary guild that every man who holds a pen shall not by the frequent misuse of the pen come to be considered a bravo who may whip out his weapon at any moment and transfix you before the world.

The public are not entitled to more of the time of any man, however famous, than his duties demand or his inclination allows. Yet how many persons, because they delight in a poet's poetry, for instance, do not hesitate to consume his time in tyrannical visits of curiosity, from which it is not always easy for him to extricate himself. He is forced to seem churlish when he is merely asserting that his house is his castle. Of course he will not seem so to those who speak to offer the homage of sympathy and respect, even if he does seclude himself. They will understand that if he would do his work he can not always be the host of strangers, however kindly may be the mutual feeling.

But that American travelers have a peculiar relish for curiosity or disregard for consideration for that our descriptions peculiarly transcend the fair bounds of such literature, we can not believe. Cousins Johnny Bull and Chapeau are even more curious than a gossip than we. A fine observer who is a gentleman will paint portraits in his travels with the most delicate hand, as EMERSON does in describing LANDOR and CARLYLE. But a traveler with the spirit of an admiring barber will confound fair and unfair details in a huge swash of gossip.

And how they might be paid off in their own coin! An indignant gentleman was speaking of a really cultivated and eminent foreigner who had the most valuable introductions in this country; and when he returned wrote about our most conspicuous men. "He said with my friend X," said the indignant gentleman, "and in his book he spoke of his personal habits. I should like to speak of his personal habits, and I would inform the world that this prodigious orator always himself one shirt a week. On Sunday morning it was clean. Then his waistcoat and coat were thrown fully open. On Monday the waistcoat was closed a little. On Tuesday a little more. On Wednesday it was buttoned to the throat over suffers of repeat over the bosom. On Thursday they quite overspread it. On Friday the waistcoat closed quite easily. On Saturday there was nothing but cravat to be seen. On Sunday there was the full effulgence of the clean shirt again, coat and waistcoat generously thrown open, and an impercevable cravat.

No man can defend himself against the ingenious ridicule of an author, or from his own meaning after print. But when the criticism or description descends to the most odious and unclean charges, if he refuses to endure it and invoke the law, he puts every lover of public decency under obligation.

MR. STEVENS'S RHETORIC.

In the first reports of MR. STEVENS's speech before the vote was taken upon the Reconstruction there were several allusions to the President which were the grossest insults. The speaker was said by the papers to have called the President "the pundit at the other end of the avenue," and "the man at the other end of the avenue;" and every decent reader was disgusted. But in the later reports it appears that the expression was "high authority at the other end of the avenue introduced through an unusual confuse"—the latter word being evidently misheard by the reporters.

Yet while this correction is made the foolish sarcasm is still plain enough. "We shall not trouble President JOHNSON by sending him the Amendment; it should be passed upon by Congress, because it is not necessary to submit it to him for his approval." And again: "We do not ask him to come and ask his opinion of it, and therefore it was all the more kind in him to send us his opinion without being asked for it. The folly of such talk under the circumstances is plain. There may be a case when sarcasm is wise; but if MR. STEVENS is of opinion that this is the time when sarcasm directed against the President is most effective, speeches of the President's party in Congress, it is but another proof of his singular incapacity as a leader.

MR. STEVENS would justify his remarks by repeating what he said in his speech, that the reported conversation of the President with a Senator was an attempt to coerce Congress, and that although conduct in other times would have cost a king his head. MR. STEVENS is ardent and rhetorical; but as the members of Congress are constantly going to the White House and talking with the President, who freely states his views, we can not see the enormity of his conduct in expressing his private opinion upon the subject in which his opinion was asked. If, however, the matter be a grave one, and then under discussion in Congress, we may regret that peculiar publicity should be given to the conversation. But it is surely unnecessary to give the worst interpretation to the incident. The President must be a much duller man than even the Republican journals and orators declare him to be, if he does not know that the infallible way of insuring the passage of a measure which he disapproves is the mere appearance of an attempt to coerce Congress. That would be the most unpardonable insult which could be offered to the people of the United States; and the assumption of such an attempt, except upon the plainest grounds, would be an equal insult to the President. He may think, as he has argued to say, that legislation upon suffrage in the DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA is untimely and unwise; but as he knows that Congress is the supreme and only Legislature of the District, it by no means follows that he would think it a timely or wise act to veto an overwhelming expression of its will.

The course of MR. STEVENS invites a quarrel between those whom time and mature deliberation might readily harmonize, and must therefore be deprecated by all thoughtful men. Let us be patient," he said to MR. SUMNER, in asking him to yield a favorite plan. Certainly, let us be practical. Let us also be firm and clear-sighted. Let us not betray any interest confided to us, and not be hood-winked or seduced. But let us also understand that honest men may honestly differ, and that the height of folly is to insist upon the ultimatum of those whose union is essential to success.

MAGNANIMITY AND CONCILIATION.

In his late speech MR. RAYMOND said that he "would exclude from Federal office the leading actors in the conspiracy which led to the rebellion in every State;" and then added: "In the courage and sincerity of each side, which made it [the contest] so terrible and so long, no longer owe a divided duty, but have become the common property of the American people, the priceless possession of the American Republic through all time to come. The dead of the contending hosts sleep beneath the soil of a land common to both, and made dear to all by its common fog. Their bostilities are hushed, and they are the dead of the nation for evermore."

But surely if the rebel dead, who died, so to speak, in their sins, are worthy of this tender national regard, it would be very hard in the same generous spirit to withhold from the rebel living who may truly repent. For instance: WISE of Virginia, KEITT of South Carolina, COBB of Georgia, and BARNWELL of Mississippi, were "leading actors in the conspiracy which led to the rebellion." They all took up arms. KEITT and BARNWELL were killed; COBB and WISE were not. If KEITT and BARNWELL are to be considered "the dead of the nation," why, in the name of fair play, are WISE and COBB to be dishonored and disfranchised by the nation? WISE has been engage in a criminal undertaking, and one is killed in the act and the other escapes, how can a nation be considered sincere in repenting the "courage and devotion" of the fallen if it stigmatizes the survivor? The sincerity and bravery of many of the Colonial Tories who fought against their fellow-countrymen in the Revolution were unquestionable; but we are not aware that they were ever considered the "priceless possessions" of the country. The distinction in our opinion is not essential to magnanimity, nor stultification to conciliation.

THE CATTLE PLAGUE.

THE coincidence of the appearance of the cholera and of the cattle plague is remarkable, and it is striking that no effectual preventive has yet been discovered for either. The loss of cattle in Great Britain already is great. The most earnest attention is given to the subject, and while Commissions are investigating and advising, the whole history of the matter is faithfully recorded.

It appears that the cattle plague, from Pharaoh's "grievous murrain" down to our time, has been constantly recurring. During the ninth century it was especially severe. The armies of Charlemagne with their necessary supplies, strewing whole countries with dead carcasses, were largely responsible for the pestilence at that time, as armies are responsible for some other of the fearful scourges of humanity. The London Medical Review for 1757 has an interesting paper upon the subject, says that the wars of the eighteenth century, and especially the cattle plague, settled in also, generated the cattle plague, and that in the three years from 1711 to 1714, 1,500,000 cattle died of it in Western Europe. It lasted seven years in Italy, and Holland, in ten years, lost more than 200,000 cattle. In eight years after the death of Charles VI. three millions of cattle died of the plague in Central and Western Europe. Between 1745 and 1758 at least 16 reports were published in the several States of Britain; and the Review says that no method of cure tried in 1865 was not tried in 1745 and found wanting. It is computed that during the eighteenth century, from 1711 to 1795, more than 200,000,000 of horned cattle were swept away by the plague in Western Europe.

The result of investigation in Russia is, that the pest proceeds from the steppes of European Russia. The lower part of the Dnieper is bordered by Russian provinces in which there were 8,000,000 cattle, among which the plague always prevails. The stock sent from these steppes to Polish and Austrian markets introduce the disease, which then penetrates Europe. The neighboring countries struggle to keep out these herds. Prussia destroys even birds and dogs that might convey the plague; but cattle is smuggled in at the frontier wherever it appears. Austria is not so rigorous or so successful. It is supposed that 100,000 infected cattle pass yearly into Hungary and Galicia, and in the former country it is now destroying sheep as well as horned beasts. The Hungarian cattle known as Dutch beasts are often seen in the London markets, and they are supposed to have brought the present plague into England.

The disease is apparently very contagious. Dogs, sheep, pigeons, hens which have picked among the affected cattle; the attendants on the sick beasts; ponds and streams into which the diseased animals have been driven drinking; high winds and public roads along which the herds have been driven—all retain and convey the deadly virus. The disease appears in five or seven days after the poison is taken into the system; and although upon the steppes inoculation has checked the disease, it fails to arrest it elsewhere unless it be performed through the ear of eight beasts; and it is remarked that the pestilence increases in intensity and fatality as it spreads northward.

The British Commission appointed to investigate the subject have decided that the only way to arrest the spread of the disease is to prohibit the movement of cattle, thus confining the ravages to one district. It is in accordance with this conclusion that MR. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, introduced his bill into Congress forbidding the prize-fighting of cattle. The latest accounts from England make the loss at the present time, in consequence of the plague, about 10,000 cattle a week. Prevent and cure—the act of prohibition of import during the rage of the pestilence would doubtless save our own stock from its ravages, and it is the interest of the whole country that such an act should be stringently enforced.

THE CITY HEALTH BILL.

SENATOR WHITE, of the Onondaga District in this State, was one of the Committee appointed last year by the Senate to investigate our municipal affairs; and the curious and interesting knowledge he then acquired has lately made effective in a remarkable speech in the Senate upon the Health Bill. In the course of his researches he found that an enormous number of subordinate officers now employed in that Department under its present partisan auspices. He read the names of some of these officers, and said: "It seemed to be a kind of requisite to such an appointment that every man should be a liquor dealer by profession and a bullyman by decent. Without ignorance, he said, was amazing. All the officers brought before the Committee—and it will be remembered that these are the persons to whom the care of the public health is by new confidence—were asked if they understood Hygienics. Some were of opinion that they had it had in some quarters; some thought it did not prevail much; but one officer told the Committee that Hygienics was the bad smell that arose from stagnant water! It is matter of devout public gratitude that we have not the guardians of the municipal health. I know that stagnant water does not smell sweetly.

Senator WHITE did not claim that his own party would manage the Health Department altogether better than that which is now responsible for it, although he might have safely urged that they could not manage it worse. But he is reported to have said that very much of the shameless swindle of the present Health system was due to its partisan character, and the most flagrant instance making the one proposed a party machine. The opponents of the bill, as reported, claim that it is merely an extension of the power of the Police Commission, and through that of a certain political faction. But it is pretty clear that the objection comes from those who would not oppose the bill if it gave their own friends the ascendency. And meanwhile we shall be glad if so imperatively necessary a measure as the reported bill should become a law before these words are printed.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

January 30:

In the Senate, a joint resolution was adopted, authorizing the payment of $10,000 to defray the expenses of the Committee of Fifteen.—Mr. Doolittle offered a resolution which was adopted, calling upon the President for a copy of the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the States within his department in his recent visit thereto.—Mr. Trumbull, from the Judiciary Committee, reported that John C. Stockton, of New Jersey, had duly presented himself and was entitled to a seat from the 4th of March, 1865.—There was a long debate on the Civil Rights bill.

In the House, the Constitutional Amendment on representation and the Rebel States was referred to the Committee of Fifteen without instruction.—A resolution was agreed to instructing the Committee on Ways and Means to report a bill referred to them for examination by citizens of any of the States lately in rebellion.—Adjourned over Monday.

January 31:

In the Senate, a joint resolution of Thanks to Admiral Farragut and his men was adopted.

In the House, a new rule was adopted forbidding the use of the Hall of Representatives for any other than legislative purposes.—Mr. Stevens, from the Committee of Fifteen, reported back the Constitutional Amendment relating to representation. As thus reported, the amendment has no allusion to taxation. It reads as follows: Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each state, excluding Indians not taxed, provided whenever the elective franchise shall be denied or abridged in any State on account of race or color, all persons therein of such race or color shall be excluded from the basis of representation." In addition to this amendment to the status was adopted, by 120 to 68, Messrs. Hale, Davis, Raymond, Eliot, Sedgwick, Hendricks, and other Union members voted in the negative, not because opposed to the principle, but because they objected to its present shape, and to the power exercised by the Committee of Fifteen.

February 1:

In the Senate, Mr. Trumbull's amendment to the bill of Civil Rights was adopted, 33 to 19. The amendment declares all persons born in the United States not subject to foreign Powers, except Indians not taxed, to be citizens of the United States without distinction on account of color.

In the House, the bill was passed providing that no duty originally registered as an American vessel, and which, having been sold to a citizen of a foreign flag, shall be deemed or registered as an American vessel, or to the benefits of the American flag.—Mr. Stevens, from the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, $40,000 was appropriated to pay the expenses of bringing and returning the witnesses in the case of Jefferson Davis.—Mr. Ashley, of Ohio, introduced a bill to prohibit the transportation in the bond or the carrying trade on the coasting trade.

February 2:

In the Senate, Mr. Saulsbury offered an amendment to the bill for Civil Rights, making the right to vote an exception. The amendment was rejected by a vote of 29 to 12. The bill was then passed, 33 to 12. The bill is very similar in its provisions to some of the sections in the bill for enlarging the Freedmen's Bureau.

In the House, nearly the whole session was occupied in the discussion of the question of reconsidering the vote allowing Mr. Brooks's evidence in the case of the election contested between him and Mr. Dodge to be taken before the Committee. The motion to reconsider was withdrawn.

February 3:

The Senate was not in session.

In the House, a resolution called elucidation took place to the bill for the enlargement of the President's Bureau.

February 5:

In the Senate, the Constitutional Amendment in regard to representation came up. Mr. Sumner occupied nearly the whole session in a speech in favor of the bill and for the Amendment, the provisions of the constitution being that in the body constituting the right to vote for the Legislature, supremacy, state, or municipality, invested with peculiar privileges, and that no State shall deny to any individual of rights, civil or political, on account of color or race; but all persons shall be equal before the law, and subject to the same form or at the latest two; and the debate, made in pursuance of the resolution, that the question be taken for or the land, any thing in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding. Mr. Johnson objected to the proposed amendment as a compromise of human rights, and as inflicting heavy penalties of inferiority, where there was no representation. He thought that there was a way to make the South right, and as much equal before the law. He pedicted the horrors of San Domingo at the hands of the blacks should the policy of Jefferson to the negro.

In the House, several amendments to the Constitution were offered and referred to the Judiciary Committee. There was some debate on the Freedmen's Bureau bill, but no action was taken.

NEWS ITEMS.

We have received letters from General Lumsden, the Hayden General, dated at St. Thomas, from which it appears that he was bound to a very different destination by the English authorities. We have no reason, however, to argue for this conduct. The letter is interesting as showing the action of Jamaica on a cannon.

The steamer Memphis arrived from Memphis for Arkansas River, when six miles above the mouth of the Arkansas, January 29, struck a sunken log and sank. Some cotton and fifty barrels were lost, including the cloth. The boat was a portion of Company A, Thirty-third United States Cavalry.

The steamer Missouri exploded January 30, opposite Robertson's saw-mill, half a mile below the mouth of Green River. About 100 lives were lost.

Lieutenant-General Grant has contributed the sum of $5000 to aid in the erection of the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal Church in Washington.

The report of Mr. Crawley, Engineer of the Croton Aqueduct Board, that the present aqueduct is inadequate, and Chief Engineer Roland on Resolved, It be ordered more immediate attention to the subject of a new aqueduct, although they anticipated somewhat the character of the Aqueduct. There is no thought on the part of the report is a serious blow to the underground project, but the commission has found to overcome it.

Herschell V. Johnson was, on January 30, elected United States Senator from Georgia by the Legislature of that State, Mr. A. H. Stevens not allowing his name to be used.

Commissioner Conley, of the Indian Bureau, recommended a delegation from the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, Seminole, and Osage Indians to come to the President's mandate February 1, whether they were for the purpose of having an interview with the Indian Department were favorable to peace. The Cherokees were opposed to the Confederate cause and fought for it. The latter expressed no gratification at being able to communicate with the President.

FOREIGN NEWS.

FENIANISM is not dead yet in Ireland. The city and county of Limerick were proclaimed on the 29th, and the city of Waterford have been proclaimed under martial law. The Fenian organization has, however, punishable by two years' imprisonment, with or without hard labor. Any person in carry or in custody in his dwelling-house, arms or ammunition of any description by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The Limerick Chronicle says that London is no safer than Dublin. "The late great fire in Kilmainham Jail is generally believed to be the work of an incendiary, and common rumor now asserts that the political prisoner was rescued up in the word Fenian. A rejection of the catastrophe in the London Times and the appointment of Lord Lieutenant House is demanded by the authorities, and extra licenses to carry arms are generally seen to be patrol sentinels by night."

The Paris Presse of January 19 announces that Baron Salland left Paris on the 16th for the purpose of making accompany arrangements with the Emperor Maximilian for the return of the French troops from Mexico at the earliest possible day. The Emperor is to leave Mexico on the 25th, and there was much speculation as to the person to be left behind as the Imperial representative on the proclamation.

General Prim says Spanish insurrection does not appear to be formidable and very unintelligible plans are put. It was also said that Prim was endeavoring to form a party still asserted that the Government have confiscated the entire property of the Archbishop of Toledo Church in Madrid. By progeny of the Government, dated December 26, 1865, and published on January 19, the bodies of the Royal palaces, promulgated on January 19, the bodies of the Royal palaces, the royal chapel, stocks, claims, and all the property belonging to the national establishments, other belongings have been seized and appropriated by the Crown.

The English steamship London, for Melbourne, recently from the Thames with one hundred and twenty-five souls on board as soon as she came into the Atlantic Ocean, encountered the ever and three passengers overboard. The ship could not be saved, but the boats were lost. The ships supplied with English coast number between three and four hundred. Among the passengers was Admiral Fitzroy, who, in 1860, which became a work December 26, midway between New York and London. Her passengers were also saved by the English ship Faraway.

The American quadroon inventor, Abdiel Goldborough Jones, has received orders to leave for Madagascar and proceed to Lisbon. Reason not stated.

The steamer Hibernian has arrived at Liverpool, detained by the severe weather. Her voyage occupied fifteen days. The ship was driven to the Irish coast, and was saved by the pilot. The ship was driven to the Irish coast, and was saved by the pilot. The ship was driven to the Irish coast, and was saved by the pilot

GEORGE BANCROFT.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

GEORGE BANCROFT.

THE eminent historian of the United States, whose portrait accompanies the present sketch, is a remarkable instance of the intellectual culture and development which may be attained under the influence of American society and institutions. A cosmopolitan by education, habits, and tastes, in spirit and character he is an American of the Americans. Nurtured in the traditional literary discipline and choicest scholastic learning of New England, at an early age he sought the more liberal and profound methods of European education. Absence from his native country only quickened his attachment to freedom. With the study of ancient philosophy he drank in the love of human progress, and with an instinctive foresight of his future career, conceived the purpose of embodying the spirit of Plato in the democracy of America. Like Dante and the patriots of the Middle Ages, like Milton and the champions of English liberty, his political aspirations were inspired and ennobled by ideal visions of the destiny of humanity. This is the key to his opinions and aims, the secret of his literary and official life. Hence his public course as a statesman, a historian, an essayist, and a popular orator exhibits a pervading unity which is rarely witnessed in the career of our most prominent men.

Mr. BANCROFT was born about the commencement of the present century in Worcester, Massachusetts, where his father was for many years the pastor of the First Congregational Church. By birth and early surroundings he belonged to the order of New England Brahmins, whom WENDELL HOLMES so quaintly celebrates, as predestined to a life of studious culture and lettered fame. At Harvard College, which he entered when a mere boy, he was considered a prodigy. Cambridge tradition still preserves the memory of his slight figure, his ruffled shirt-collar falling over his shoulders, and his voice of childish treble, in marked contrast to the facility and grace of his utterance and the mellow ripeness of his classical and philosophical attainments. His oration on graduating, when only seventeen years old, was on a profound theme, and is said to have been a master-piece of thought and eloquence. The brilliancy of his powers and the vivacity of his manners made him a universal favorite. His precocious genius, tempered with a wisdom beyond his years, was the admiration and pride of friends, and called forth the most sanguine prophecies of his future renown.

Upon leaving Cambridge he sailed for Europe, where he passed five years in travel and in study at the principal German universities. His instructors were among the most celebrated men of the day. His course of study was more extensive and profound than at that time had been pursued by any American. He evinced a rare capacity for labor, and a strenuous diligence that was unimpaired by any vicious indulgences. His course in history, philosophy, and classical learning embraced the whole development of ancient and modern thought. In each department he showed an aptitude, as if that had been his favorite specialty. His youthful zeal awakened a deep interest in the mind of his teachers, whose pride was gratified by his reports of the progress of their fame in the Western World. At the same time he formed the acquaintance of many eminent men in different branches of literature and science, with several of whom his intimacy soon ripened into a warm and permanent friendship.

On returning to this country in 1822 he received a year at Cambridge as Greek tutor in Harvard College, and introduced several valuable reforms in the course of classical study, although the conservative spirit which was cherished among the ingenuous youth of that place was too strong to accept any innovations. [illegible]er useful, without a struggle. His enthusiasm for learning, stimulated as it had been by his long residence at the highest seats in Germany, and his fresh and ardent faith in intellectual life and progress, came into violent collision with a mass of prejudice, ignorance, and stupidity on the part of youngsters who had scarcely ceased to be school-boys. His dreams of improvement amidst the shady retreats of Harvard were rudely disturbed; and he soon found a more congenial field of effort in the celebrated Round Hill school at Northampton, which, in conjunction with Mr. COGSWELL, he established in 1823. This institution was a decided novelty among the modes of education in the United States. All its appointments were on a scale of prodigal liberality before unheard of. The ablest teachers, native and European, were employed in its service. The routine of study was varied by long and attractive excursions in the pleasant season. A certain splendor was thrown around the administration of learning which was scarcely in accordance with American tastes. Pupils, however, flocked to the place, and a wide and generous impulse was given to the cause of classical education.

At this period Mr. BANCROFT commenced his preparations for the "History of the United States," the plan of which he had conceived at an early stage of his historical studies. This magnificent work forms one of the proudest monuments of American literature. The composition of it has extended over a series of more than thirty years, each successive volume enhancing the value of the work and the reputation of the author. Profound and accurate in research, rich in illustrations from the whole field of contemporary events, ingenious and brilliant in its general views, every where alive with the spirit of humanity, founded on the soundest philosophical conceptions, and written in a style of remarkable terseness and picturesque glow, it fulfills all the conditions of a great historical production. Considered not only as a faithful record of a most important period in the development of modern civilization, but as a highly-wrought specimen of literary art, it may be said to take the lead in merit, as well as in date, of the admirable works in its kind which have so signally illustrated our youthful literature.

Mr. BANCROFT's career as a statesman, if somewhat eclipsed by the splendor of his literary success, presents a highly honorable record. His discharge of the office of Secretary of the Navy, and of Minister to London, during the administration of Mr. POLK, was marked by sagacity, earnestness, and the love of salutary improvements. As a political leader, in which capacity he has been prominent in his native State as well as at the national capital, he has been distinguished for his reliance on ideas, for his ardent faith in the democratic principle, regarded as at the highest expression of the spirit of humanity, and for his uniform advocacy of liberal and progressive measures. Mr. BANCROFT is a powerful and effective public speaker. He has the eloquence which proceeds from lucid thought and strong emotion. Always in earnest, often vehement, he appeals to the imagination by his impressive and poetic and graphic illustrations, while he masters the intellect by his power of transparent exposition and cogent argument. Not the least honorable distinction which crowns his name is the decision with which he sided with the friends of the Union during the most terrible conflict, in opposition to the claims of party associates and political antecedents.

[Entered according to Act, of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

INSIDE.

A CHRONICLE OF SECESSION.

By George P. Harrington.

IN TWENTY-FOUR CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER VI.

It may tend to lower the Rev. Edward Arthur in the eyes of the readers of these pages; but none the less must it be stated that, although a minister, he was none the less also a man. Not an ethereal being, not an ideal of all excellence, but, from head to foot, a human being like the rest of us. Perhaps the intensest human part about him was his heart. His capacity for loving, his proclivity for loving, his unwearidness in loving from his earliest recollection upward was wonderful.

Of course it is painful to make the statement, yet it must be said that, from the day when just three years old, he was detected in the act of kissing behind a door Miss Lucinda Harry, a young lady-visitor of some six months or so less experience of life, upward he had never ceased to love. His own relatives, of course; but, in addition to these, all the little flaxen-haired companions of his childhood were always being for the day some special queen of his heart in virtue of hair specially flaxen, eyes particularly black or blue, cheeks uncommonly rosy, and fair, and dimpled, dress remarkably beautiful, or, what was even more to the purpose, the being specially associated with him for the time of the little Cleopatra of the hour. Up to the very day of leaving for college he had not learned to master such nonsense.

With the development of lungs and brains and all the rest the heart had persisted in growing also. Not that, when he called away, just sixteen years old, in the stage from his father's door, he had as yet met exactly with his ideal. None the less did he bear away with him the image in his heart, the lock of her hair being in his Bible in his trunk, of the last, the quite last successor of the queens of his childhood; not so much because he loved her, as from the pleasure it was to him, the absolute necessity it was to him to love somebody.

His four years' course in college was a sudden and total interruption of all this. Minerva set aside Venus with perfect success during those four college years. Heart had to content itself with merely keeping up the circulation while the brain was being developed. Vastly better would it have been could the two have shared the man more equally between them—not so well had the would those four years been. Languages, philosophy, mathematics; mathematics, philosophy, languages all in succession through. The impulse thereof bore him, like a locomotive over a break in the track, over the gap of each vacation with a by no scarce perceptible jar. That day Edward Arthur graduated he could have laid his hand upon the folds of the silk gown which covered his bosom, and have truthfully declared his heart to have been, during the previous four years, wholly free from thought of woman. And as he descended the steps of the platform after Commencement, he could have safely declared that, leaving more sacred things aside dearer to him than his entire sex, from Eve down, was the honor he had obtained from Alma Mater, most deserved and beloved of all her sons.

Altogether too short was the period which followed to think upon any thing but the immediate Past and the immediate Future. Bright and early that September morning following his graduation did he present himself in the chapel of the Theological Seminary to be enumerated: no man more free from every thing else in the world to devote himself to his studies for the ministry. Into it went Church History; Theology polemic, didactic, patristic, exegetic; the preparation and delivery of sermons; Hebrew; Chaldaic; Syriac; German. Grudgingly was the morning and evening walk granted to the muscles; only because it was a necessary instance was the latter complied with the regulation food at the regulation hours in the regulation refectory—it was the brain must be exercised, the brain must be fed. No wonder if, like the right arm of the blacksmith, it was developed beyond the rest of the body, out of proportion to the rest of the body. True, the heart was allowed free play in regard to things spiritual and divine, even stimulated and evermore prompted to this.

And, perhaps, it was well that such things should thus by years preoccupy the heart; obtain from long habit, the time-seated, uniform custom of the heart, before its doors were opened to all the world. Yet, if the heart, after all, else could only be kept duly subordinate, the very exercising the heart in the love of all human things would be the very best preparatory loving of things superior to these; even as the eye and the hand, quick to see and prompt to gather every little flower-cup by the way-side, is but trained thereby for the prizing and the gathering the more eagerly of all diamonds and precious stones, too, which may happen along the road-side of life. Is it altogether fanciful to remember here that, though the heart beat in the breast with but one name for its idol within itself two separate and distinct sets of organs, an auricle and ventricle on the left side thereof, and an auricle and ventricle on the right side thereof? Thou shalt love God, and thou shalt love men, is the divine command. Only as we love either perfectly do we love both perfectly. Only as we love both as we should, do we, as we should, love either; only when both sides of the heart are whole, and keep equally time to each other, does the entire heart throb aright: "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also."

One thing is perfectly certain, if ever there was a man prepared to love, prepared to love any thing and every thing which could be loved, that man was the Rev. Edward Arthur when he found himself, college and seminary passed through, pastor of the church in Somerville. Neglected, forgotten, the heart of the man was to assert itself—was to make up for the long-endured tyranny of the brain.

Let me pause a moment here. I have something to say which may greatly weaken the reader's estimation of the Rev. Edward Arthur. Shall I say it exactly as it occurred? Shall I not rather soften the fact, so that the young minister may be but much the greater and stronger individual in the eyes of those who read these pages? Hesitate as I may to say it, ashamed as I may be to announce the fact, deeply conscious, as of course I am, of the damage it will do our hero from this instant to the end of his history, I must none the less say, because I would possibly avoid it and be at all coherent in my narrative, that the Rev. Edward Arthur during the very first day of his arrival in Somerville fell in love! Pardon him, dear reader, he could not possibly help it; at least he did not help it. Pardon him, indulgent reader, for it was a love which, however hastily kindled, never ceased to burn thereafter with but stronger and brighter and purer flame.

AND ARTHUR WAS IN LOVE.

The way of it was this: When Guy Brooks, Esq., years before Secession, had written to the young theologian to come to Somerville and organize a church in that now but promising town, and had received a promise of doing so in reply, he forthwith began, in a terrible hurry, to look around among the families of Somerville for some suitable home for the new minister. It ought to be among the members of the contemplated church, to begin with. Next, in which of these families should it be?

He himself was then a widower and boarded at the time at the hotel, and the hotel was no place for a preacher; half an hour in the bar-room or any where else about the house was sufficient to dishearten one of his calling through all the avenues of smelling, tasting, seeing, and hearing. Mr. Ferguson, the Scotchman, offered to shore his bachelor home with the new-comer, especially as he was to be also a member of the church to be organized. Guy Brooks thanked him but declined. A most substantially and inflexibly good man was Ferguson, like all Scotchmen who are not utter reprobates; but like every other Scotchman, reprobate or not, Ferguson was set in his way, notionate to the last degree. And even too; no tropical thunder-gust more suddenly, unexpectedly, and violently so. Upon Mr. Ferguson Guy Brooks counted confidently as upon a very cakes' beam in the proposed church organization, but, as a host of the pastor thereof? No. The lawyer did not entertain the idea one instant. Suppose the guest should derange, should injure, should lose a Number from Mr. Ferguson's collection? The very possibility was a catastrophe, with all its disruptive effects upon the proposed church, was sufficient to settle the matter. No one can dislike to pause more than the writer. The selection of Mr. Ferguson has been unintentionally alluded to. But now that it has been mentioned, it must be explained before we can proceed.

In Mr. Ferguson's mind existed the instinct of collection. It is an instinct. Look at the magpie. We all know what a passion it has for stealing and secreting bits of rag, cotton shag, and rags, fragments of pottery, articles of jewelry, and the like. There is a story afloat in works on Natural History of another kind—a species of hawk—which has its nest in the centre of a thorny tree, and which impales upon those thorns all manner of grasshoppers, worms, insects of all sorts, as well as the smaller birds. Toward the decline of its days this winged virtuoso has collected a perfect museum of natural curiosities, and lives and dies in its overshadowed nest, in the centre thereof, in scientific and serene content. However true this may be, we are certain of the instinct in the case of the magpie. And it is the same instinct which is seen in the collector of autographs, peculiar pamphlets, fantastic pipes, singular walking-sticks, rare editions of old books, and the like. Very strong was the instinct in the case of Mr. Ferguson. A Scotchman should have been more sensible; but in an old bachelor the object of his collection was preposterous—he had collected into a tolly every treatise on the subject of Infant Baptism he had ever heard or read of. It may have begun by making the collection, quietly and innocently enough, but it had grown into a passion—a mania.

The walls of a certain room in his house were devoted exclusively to these treatises. Books in folio, quarto, octavo, duodecimo, were there; single books and thin books, and in every possible style of binding. Pamphlets, too, of all shapes, sizes, and ages upon the subject. Piles of old newspapers also as contained articles upon the subject, and the whole collection patched, pasted, annotated, in every stage of wear and deterioration. Then there were bound volumes of letters he had evoked from reverend and irreverent sources, in all degrees of angry pro and contravinting cos. A bulky scrap-book or two contained every flying anecdote, paragraph, item, cut right and left, from every page of which he had ever come upon bearing upon the one theme. One stood amazed to behold how much had been said upon the subject in the world, and turned away aghast at the remembrance that, even yet, the question remained as unsettled as ever. The plain facts, Mr. Ferguson took hardly the slightest interest in the subject dissected itself—it was in his collection upon the subject that his interest lay.

"No, and it would sicken him, yes, for life of the whole subject" laughed Guy Brooks to himself, as, after declining Mr. Ferguson's offer of a room in his house, the expected minister, he walked back to his office.

"If she saw one of my collection none the less, surely no room in Somerville could be appropriate for a minister as just that room," said Mr. Ferguson, as he parted from the lawyer. In something of a huff, too; only he knew that no amount of huff on his part could provoke any thing but amusement and good-nature on the part of the frank and open-hearted lawyer.

There was Dr. Warner, also. He, too, was to to a member of the church. There was not a pleasanter house in Somerville than his nor a better spread table.

"He can have my office in the front-yard," said Dr. Warner, after having previously received his wife's views upon the subject.

A nice office it was, too, as Gay Brooks knew, for it was therein, in retreat from his wife, that he Doctor entertained his gentlemen friends. On the shelves therein were the Doctor's row of bottles and boxes of herbs. For there was also his mahogany case of surgical instruments. The wooden apparatus, too, was in the corner, with its complicated straps, in which Bob and Nia had more than once imprisoned Amos when suffering, in imagination, with the fracture of a limb, or his body in consequence of a fall from the top of the stable. In the book-case were the Doctor's medical books, especially the large and intensely-colored Surgical Atlas, of the inside of which he was so careful Bob should know nothing, and yet whose every plate had been pored and most thoroughly studied by Bob in the absences of his father, assisted by Amos, with his carefully locked-out. Therein, also, was the good Doctor's collection, in glass jars and alcohol, of such tumors, bits of lungs and brains, amputated fingers and toes, embryos, and the like delicacies, as had come in his way in the course of his profession. And there, also, was a full-length skeleton in his corner.

"The first thing he will see in the morning, the last he sees will close upon at night—have an impressive influence upon his manhood," said the Doctor, in commending the room for the expected arrival.

But no. There is a certain smell about that room, considered the lawyer with himself. Besides—and the idea struck the lawyer with considerable force—deprive the Doctor of that retreat from his wife? It would be a base imposition on his easy good-nature. And then, her tongue! Phew!—bah!

There was Colonel Roberts also. Fine, commodious house; Mrs. Roberts an excellent woman, and member of the church. And who knows but he might be able to influence even Roberts? Burn his lawyer, charitably speaking as he was, shook his head even as he said it. The squat figure of the Colonel stood before his imagination—the insect—and those bulging, those splendid black eyes, that full face, so much like that of a bull-dog, and yet so handsome! "What an unequaled bully and blackguard that man is!" said the lawyer to himself, as the image rose before his mind—forgetting all about the minister. "Another, bullied, drubbed, down scene to the last degree; unmatched and unmatchable in profanity; base to dishonesty in the payment of his debts and in all his business transactions; avowedly a scoffer at the truth of religion and the virtue of women. With all this, when it comes to so, what dignity, what power, what eloquence, what polished wit, what equitable courtesy! That it should be possible to combine such a devil and such an angel!" murmured the lawyer to himself.

Colonel Bet Roberts! Nothing could be more familiar to the public ear and mind in the public tongue than that. He had been a bold young lawyer; then an indefatigable stump-speaker throughout the State—copious in anecdote, fearless in statement, vehement in invective; next an Elector of a successful candidate for the Presidency; then, for six months, Chargé at one of the minor European courts; after that Governor of the State. When Gay Brooks was debating whether or no to make him the host of the expected minister, he was drinking, gambling, playing at once the Roman and the bully in the United States Senate at Washington. All the State knew pretty well the kind of man Colonel Bet Roberts was—could easily be disguised nothing of himself from any one. Yet all over the State religious, grave, and sober men applauded the Colonel's speeches, and pretended gladly pigs, turkeys, and beeves toward barbecues in his honor; introduced him, with pride at the opportunity of doing so, to their wives and daughters, and voted him into whatever office he demanded rather than asked at their hands.

"As you say, my house is too far out of Somerville for the purpose; or, there being only Bobby and myself here, I would be pleased to have Mr. Arthur with me," Mrs. Sorel observed, when Gay Brooks, throwing his cheeries into the matter, talked out to every one but the one subject. There is Mrs. Bowles, thought Mrs. Sorel to herself, and she knitted and thought over the matter, as we have related, but not on the subject, before she spoke out. It was not altogether so clear.

"I have thought of the hotel, of Ferguson, of Dr. Warner, even of Colonel Bet Roberts, besides every other place possible," said Gay Brooks, after a somewhat despondent silence. "It ought to be in the family of a member of the church, if possible."

"How old did you say he was? or did you say any thing at all on the subject?" asked Mrs. Sorel, at length.

"I do not know, somewhere under thirty, I suppose. I can remember I never saw him," said the lawyer. "Warner, Warner, Ellis, and—I will write to the boss of the Theological Seminary to recommend some one to us for the purpose of organizing a church there."

Arthur was warmly urged upon the way recommended with him, he says he will come? that is all we know of him."

"Have you thought of Mrs. Bowles?" inquired Mrs. Sorel, at length.

"The very person!" exclaimed the lawyer, rising t. his feet. "Strange I never once thought of her. That is, if she will consent. You know what a delicate, retiring lady she is. Besides, it would be an assistance to her, his boarding with her. Yes," added the lawyer, with enthusiasm, "and there is the office Roberts Bowles occupied before he went to college in the corner of the yard. The very thing! She is a member of the proposed church, too. I do not think she would consent to the arrangement except on that ground. I will see her right away." And the lawyer took his hat to go.

"There might be one objection," said Mrs. Sorel, accompanying her visitor to the door.

"What, what can it be?" inquired he, turning suddenly. Mrs. Sorel smiled demurely and continued knitting.

"Oh, nonsense!" said the lawyer, looking at her first, inquiringly, and then with a smile breaking over his wholesome face: "Beg your pardon, I didn't mean to use such language, Mrs. Sorel. But you never fear. We men, especially in such a new place as Somerville, with every thing before us to do, have no time to think about such things. You ladies flatter yourselves; really, I beg pardon again," said the frank lawyer, laughing at himself.

"Do we, Mr. Brooks? Well, perhaps we do," said quiet Mrs. Sorel, not at all cast down by quite confident reply.

"You would not really advise against Mrs. Bowles on that account?" asked the lawyer, seriously, pausing for the final upon his front step.

"By no means, or I should not have mentioned it. Yes, see her, and see what you can do. Don't let me detain you. Good-evening!" But the wise, placid smile was still on her face as she said it.

"Stuff, nonsense. It is to be hoped he will find too much to do to attend to such things." Oh these women, they think men never think of any thing else; sensible lady like Mrs. Sorel, too! Got up, Colonel Bet Roberts, a conspicuary out of his whip the Kentuckian cantered back into Somerville.

Mrs. Bowles came into the arrangement the moment the lawyer mentioned it, which he did with characteristic promptitude that same evening.

But it was after having most clearly and distinctly ascertained from the lawyer that the expected minister was a Virginian, Mrs. Bowles from Virginia, born, raised, educated there. Good! If any spot on the globe could be said to stand next to Kentucky, Virginia, in Mrs. Bowles's estimation, it was Virginia. "Though I have a great admiration for Kentucky also," Mrs. Bowles said, with the dignified condescension of the daughter of a hundred Earls to a newly-knighted Baronet.

"If he will consent to live plainly there will be no inconvenience to us at all," she said to him immediately thereafter. "I have been so long without seeing a minister of my own church that it will be a treat to me to have him. There is Rutledge Bowles's office. We can put a bed in there for him, you know. It will do for his study, too. If I do not like the arrangement afterward, you know, we can make a change. But I am sure we shall like it. I am quite sure of it!" and excellent Mrs. Bowles was almost enthusiastic upon the subject, greatly to the delight of Gay Brooks.

The truth is, Mrs. Bowles was enthusiastic in every thing. In the liked any thing or person she liked enthusiastically she could not, would not hear or believe any thing to the contrary. And, indeed, Mrs. Bowles was almost as much liked as sincerely and vehemently as her piety would permit. It so happened that Mrs. Sorel and herself were born and bred in the same town in South Carolina, had been school-girls together. Yet it was singular that the same soil could produce two persons so unlike as Mrs. Sorel tall, dignified, grave, self-possessed; Mrs. Bowles rather petite and spirituel in face and figure, uncontained, full of lively humor, sparkling, quick-spoken. Both were thoroughly ladies in the highest sense of the term—strongly attached to each other from remembrance of their childhood, still more from contrast of character; for while Mrs. Sorel could not but love the ardent and warm-spoken widow of her youth, and in every thought and feeling, Mrs. Bowles could not but feel a warm affection for one in whose judgment, strong sense, sober opinion she had learned to have the deepest confidence. She had long been in the habit of consulting Mrs. Sorel in every thing of importance, and more so since the death of her husband, the Major.

I wish our story could pause long enough to permit us to say a little more, or more of a good deal about Major J. C. Bowles. You can gather all you may wish to know of his character and history by turning to our first chapter. Suffice it, You will find him there among the politicians of South Carolina of some forty years ago. A state, a gentleman he appears to be, coming from the somewhat stiff portrait in question, the half-length painting, from which it was taken, hanging in state in the parlor of the house in Somerville. Often did the young minister sit in that parlor of summer afternoons and study, not only his biography, Mrs. Bowles's, but a real deal of national history, too, in that imposing portraiture.

Evidently a commanding man the Major was, with his high rolled collar, huge cravat beneath his chin, and the locks brushed away from the broad forehead, only to be thrown across the bosom lacking to make it pass as the likeness of a royal duke. The painting in question represented him then: the gentleman came presented him by his constituents after his great speech in the canvassing season which knew, the sword wherewith he fought in the Revolution hanging on the wall behind him. St. Michael's Church through the window, to s ow the portrait was taken in Charleston. Do you can see it all for yourself, dear reader, turning to the window in question, and his life besides on the next page.

Let us talk here long enough, however, to say at least this: Colonel Bet Roberts and Major J. C. Bowles were as exactly alike, and as utterly, eternally, and irreconcilably unlike, as any two men can possibly be. Both were apparently gentlemen of the highest type of breeding and courtesy, yet Colonel Bet Roberts was only under the surface as much a bully as Major J. C. Bowles was a genuine gentleman to the centre of his soul. Colonel Bet Roberts was a talented, highly talented man; Major J. C. Bowles was not, even a little dull. With Colonel Bet Roberts, the Major believed to the hour of his death that South Carolina was the first State in the continent—in the world, in fact; unlike the Colonel, however, the Major never in his life uttered and published his opinion upon the point. In the Colonel did every day of his life, whoever and whatsoever was in conflict with him on this point. That Calhoun was the superior of Webster Major Bowles never entertained the slightest doubt; yet Webster was a national, respectable, perhaps conscientious individual. This the Major sincerely believed, while the Colonel did not—or, at least, swore he did not. That the peculiar institution was a blessing, nothing, religiously, politically, eternally right, the essential definition of a perfect government, a thing to exist for ever and ever by every lover like that which rolls the stars, both heartily believed; yet Major Bowles, a gentleman, cared for his negroes like the Christian gentleman he was; seeing himself to it, with a deep sense of responsibility, that they were preserved from every irreligious instruction neglected. Colonel Bet Roberts, on the other hand, believed and acted in every sense of the word that his negroes were only speaking animals, to be worked to the utmost by the strictest overseers. However, as Colonel Bet Roberts would but seek reference himself to his own higher nature as an immortal being made in the image of his Maker, you could not expect the purpose he should impose on any such thing for an instant in reference to his slaves. When in good-humor he would treat them to Monongahela whisky, and all manner of frolics and illness; but with the same feeling toward them in good-humor as in bad, that they were but animals, and no more though than the horses in his stable, pretty and sleek, but beasts as such.

Major Bowles had no specially rigid notions on the subject of religion, yet he was not an avowed and insolent scoffer at it like Colonel Bet Roberts—even attended church, at least occasionally, a thing that Lamum never could induce the Colonel to do even when the most important political object was at stake. Nor did Major Bowles admire any Puritanism in regard to morals; yet he would have sold his fingers with the greasy cards, the dirty dice-box, the dripping gin-tumbler with which Colonel Bet Roberts was familiar, to say nothing of the profanity, obscenity, and practical debauchery which peopled the Colonel's plantation with his mulatto offspring, as much to the Colonel, and not to him, the pure inheritors of his kennels. And the Major had as supreme an adoration for honor as the Colonel; but it was a principle which would have made him blow to leave a debt unpaid, or to do even a deed of doubtful honesty wherein the Colonel differed from him amazingly in practice. A gentleman gentlemen of honor, both had "been out" with an antagonist. The Major had gone out only when grossly insulted, and then had privately received his enemy's fire in the air. The Colonel, on the other hand, had ever been the one provoking the quarrel, and then eager on the field to kill; in which, by the number of scars five or six foes, he had been remarkably successful.

But why speak of Major J. C. Bowles? Do he not speak for himself with too profound an hospitality, too utter a devotion to politics, and so subside, in his later years, first into what remained of his large property, a small house in Charleston, and a practice at the bar, for which he had become too old or too unused by politics to do to succeed, and then into his grave there in St. Michael's church-yard? Had he but had Colonel Bet Roberts's—but shall we call it?—some high-toned and unsworn foe about him, he would not have lost acre or negro. However, so it was.

When somewhat advanced in life the Major married his wife, of as distinguished and of as decayed a family as his own. A son and a daughter were the children of his old age—Frederick and Alice. These were both but children when, after the death of her husband, Mrs. Bowles removed and settled in Somerville. The Major owned lands there; Mrs. Bowles could not endure to take a lower rank in Charleston than that which her husband occupied. Mrs. Sorel had preceded her, and had written, urging to the step. So it was, that, at the date of our story, Mrs. Bowles was living in her own little cottage-home on the edge of Somerville. She had left South Carolina, it is true, but the soil was all of South Carolina that she brought.

The young minister learned all this, bit by bit, after his arrival. Welcomed at the hotel door, as he stepped out of the stage by Brooks, he and the lawyer were at home with each other from that moment; for where people are sincere they are soon at home with each other. The first sight of each other's face, from the first grasp of each other's hand. The energetic lawyer had his new possession into his chamber in a moment; and had him brushed, dined, and introduced to Warner, Warner, Ellis, and half a dozen more, within half an hour.

"You must feel yourself at home with us," he said to him in his frank, hearty way. "We are all fragments of the church that is to be. Warner here is ready to devour you the moment you say the word. Mr. Ellis has a store down town, a good place to drop into to get acquainted with people. Ferguson here—well, Mr. Ferguson can put you on the subject of Infant Baptism, if you need it at all. I am the only one not of much use. However!"

"Something to cure you for my fancy; it is a fair-cheeked, brown-haired girl we wanted for such a place as this rough and unchristianized community," said Mr. Ferguson to himself, as he went back to his room.

The afternoon of his arrival—"Why not?" the lawyer said to himself—Mr. Ellis was carried over to Mrs. Bowles to be introduced, the lawyer explaining matters to him as they walked over.

"What a neat, home-like place!" the newcomer said to himself, as they entered the front gate and walked along the path of white bark between the althæas and rose-bushes to the door. Like all houses at the South not built by people direct from the North, a goodly portico was in front of the residence, admitting to a hall into which rooms communicated on either side. It was a May morning when the new-comer stood there, inhaling the fragrance of jasmine and mimosa, glancing around at the many evidences of a refined taste everywhere, while they waited for the door to be open'd. With Mrs. Bowles, a few moments after, so warm-hearted and cordial in her salute and grasp of the young minister felt himself at once at home and at ease—he was in such hands, exceedingly much, in refinement when warmed by a glow of heart!

"I have but a small family, Mr. Arthur," she said, at last, "only Miss Bowles, my only son, is at college in Columbia." Mrs. Bowles did not say, "Columbia, South Carolina," because to her there was but that Columbia in the world. "My daughter Alice—" she began; but at that instant the front gate was heard to slam, hasty steps sounded along the gravel, and a young girl threw open the parlor door, with sunbonnet in one hand, school-books in the other, her face flushed, her eyes flashing.

And the Rev. Edward Arthur was in love!

THE MYSTERY OF TWO VALENTINES.

CLARA and KATE are twin-born maids;
Bet Clara is dark and Kate is fair:
Clara looks like a lily in shade,
Kate bath a crown of golden hair.

Clara's eyes dash, but Kate's cheek glows;
Clara is your love, Kate is mine,
Let us for once be selfish foes,
Each for the other, a Valentine.

Then for an hour's silent flow
Brows were knitted and ink was shed,
Till—this was just a year ago—
The verses were the Valentines we sped.

I.—TO CLARA.

Him that loves thee, woo bashful!
Thou wilt chill him with thy pride;
Pierce his heart with thine haughty glance;
Slowly crush him with a reign
Of alternate bliss and pain.

I have loved thee well, but now
I revoke my love, I vow,
By the martyred Valentine,
Not for Ophir's richest mine
Will I bind my heart to thine!

II.—TO KATE.

I have lain full long in the shadow
Of a love that sheds no light
Save such as the transient meteor
Flings fitfully on the night.

Thine eyes are dipped in the azure
Of the stainless heavens above,
And the color of thine golden hair
Are the constant sun of love.

I have lain full long in the shadow,
And I fain would seek the sun;
With thee shed over my heart
From thine eyes, Sweet?—only one!

These were the Valentines we sped,
In a shrewd disguise, one year ago;
But—"Love is blind," it hath long been said,
And blind love it was, second-sight, you know.

How it befell I can not say.
Love is the sport of the trickster, Fate!
But Clara is my betrothed to-day,
And Herbert sighs at the feet of Kate!

THE WHISPER-ROOM.

It was a paragon lawn, that of Housely Cottage—smooth as velvet, deep, closely matted, and flawless in smoothness. It was a fitting inclosure for the red and white roses which, in regular succession, girdled it round. The lawnmate, between their pollard blossoms above it, the great sycamore, whose broad leaves bravely faced the sun's fiercest rays, and the willow-beds below it, needed it, all added their attractions to Housely Lawn.

Seated in a low chair, under a waving cluster of blossoms on the grass-plot, apparently asleep, was Ada. Her hand held listlessly an open book; but her eyes were fixed on the blue expanse of sea that stretched far away, and on those white beacon-like sails that abounded a glorious view. She was very fair; the rich masses of light-brown hair glinting gold in the sun, the hazel eyes, which were radiant in their truth, and the rich complexion, all asserted her claim to beauty.

The open windows of the drawing-room were thrown noisily open, and a tall girl, rather older than she whom we have described, came hurriedly down the lawn.

"Oh, Agatha!" she said, "do come in and persuade your mamma to join the Daltons' picnic. It will be capital. Fred Hawkins and Harry Collier are coming."

The other's face wore an expression of humour.

"Lucy," she said, "I do wish you wouldn't talk in this off-hand manner. I don't see that any practice lies in the fact of Mr. Hawkins or Sir Harry Collier coming—certainly not enough to make you call them by their names."

"Oh, bother!" said the other, who was a dashing beauty—blue-eyed, fair-haired, and gifted with superb self-possession. "You're such a prim creature!"

The two girls strolled down the garden together, and while one was ill, in a few words, describe their history.

Agatha Clare was the only child of Mrs. Clare, widow of a physician in large practice, and left for him in affluent circumstances. She was a woman of rare talent, tact, and generosity, and very popular for her kindness and charming manners. Her house of Housely-wa as favorite resort of all the younger members of the population, for her dances and creeper parties were perfection.

Lucy Harwich was the daughter of the officer in command of the coast-guard, a retired commander, with more private property than usually falls to the brethren's share. His wife, too, had money, and his daughter was what is termed a "most pretty lady." She was a beauty, very daring and very willful, very ambitious, and very selfish. Truth must be regarded as a wondrous chronicler.

The two girls re-entered the drawing-room, where there was a group of visitors eagerly discussing the picnic. Among them was a man named Sir Harold St. Vraie was a scion of old Norman stock. Unassuming English gentleman as he was, himself called the picnic suggestion, appeared in attire dressed in gray tweed, with a hunting-whip in his hand, he bore the features and the name of a line of steel-clad warriors, whose sword had been foremost in every field of English battle from that of Hastings. The manors of his house had stretched through half a county, and the soldiers of them had been repeatedly offered a peerage.

But with him fortune had dealt harshly. But one old manor-house and a hundred pounds of land remained to him of all his ancestors' territory. His small income sufficed for his wants, and his interest with the government would probably win him a diplomatic post whenever he married, which event was not unexpected by the young ladies of the locality.

"Let us, my Vraville Towers," Sir Harold, impetuously; "the ruins are splendid, and the legend wonderful."

"Lucy," said Agatha, softly, "remember Mr. St. Vraie's family. Look at him."

Lucy did look at him, and saw that his face flushed, and that he looked annoyed.

"Poor fellow!" said her mother to her nearest neighbor, "could ring how long the property has been in the family, and the place in the place, I don't wonder at his annoyance."

"I'll console him," laughed Lucy, and swept across the room to Harold St. Vraie's side. "I'll show Miss Agatha my winning colors," she said to herself, mentally.

"Pray forgive me, Mr. St. Vraie," she began, in a subdued tone, very unlike the usual rapid and autocratic key in which she spoke, and dropping her dark eyelashes over her violet eyes with a timid aspect, "for my stupidity in proposing the visit. I ought to have remembered all that you must remember when Vraiville is mentioned."

"The stupidity's mine, Miss Harwich," interrupted St. Vraie, with a smile. "My mother's recollections are ludicrous. Never mind them. We'll go to Vraiville, and I can lead the explorers over every corner and tell all the legends. Miss Thorpe will allow me," he added, with a slight sneer.

He might have been excused for this; for Mrs. Thorpe, who had purchased the Hall, and the sake more of its ruins than of its farms, was a rich man, who bought the place for self-gratification, and was so fond of showing it to his friends, its picture-gallery and his gardens. He had refused Harold permission to sketch the old ruins which had been the forefathers' for several centuries, and therefore there was mutual dislike between Thorpe and St. Vraie.

"I admire violet-eyed blondes," said Harold to himself, as he strolled down the lawn; but if I did not, I should certainly be enslaved by that bewildered, two-colored beauty. Yes, I must be on my trust and stately quiet there is about her! But she rather repels."

Agatha's accustomed demeanor decoyed many. Accounted cold and slow of feeling, she was a girl capable of strong emotions. For him who won her heart Agatha would be a very loving wife and a fonder lofty love.

The next day the picnic party started on horseback. On the high moor, thorough-bred and glossy-coated as satin, Harold looked like the knightly descendant of the Norman, as he was. Agatha, Arriving at the ruins called the abbey cloisters, and which formed an ancient burial-ground, most of the party scattered carelessly across it. Sir Harry, a babbler smiles, turned off by the road, and Miss Harwich, on her bay pony, accompanied him.

"You see," she said, "there is some one else who thinks as you do, and avoids observation."

"I thank you," he said, warmly. "Of course, none feel as I do."

Miss Harwich replied by a winning smile, and the two rode on. Now, she was, to a certain extent, fond of Harold, and of his long descent; but she was a good deal fonder of herself, and she had heard her mother positively assert that morning the fact of Harold's hardship to an "Aunt Clinton's" property of (pressure) five thousand a year. Otherwise, Sir Harry Collier, who was merely a poor baronet, would have stood higher in the young lady's estimate, for she admired his face nearly as much as, and his conversation was far more congenial than, Harold's.

She exerted herself to talk on the subjects he liked. Her blue eyes were very brilliant, her voice very low, her sympathy very marked, Harold's admiration of her beauty great, and his emotions of ancestral pride very potent. In an impulsive moment he proposed and was accepted.

They reached the picnic party, and Miss Harwich ran off to tell her mamma. At this moment Agatha came in sight.

"What, Miss Clare," said St. Vraie, "did you not go with the rest?"

"No," she said, quietly.

"Why not?"

"Because I never like to cause pain," she answered, blushing slightly, "and your family tombs were in the cloisters. Will you help me down?"

"You are an angel," thought Harold; and then blushed deeply, remembering he was an engaged man.

The picnic proceeded. Mrs. Harwich, indeed, embraced Harold when he was apart from the others, and sobbed out her congratulations on his having "her treasure."

"What old tower's that?" said Sir Harry, flinging a Champagne cork toward it.

"Mr. St. Vraie can tell you," said Mrs. Harwich.

"Oh," said the baronet, blundering, as was his wont, "I suppose all the old legends were drilled into you till you believe 'em, Sir Vraie."

The other's haughty face flushed red with anger, and his grey eyes flashed fiercely.

"The story about that tower is merely one of family interest," he replied, with forced calmness.

"Let's hear it, Harold," said Mr. Harwich, loudly, the sun and Champagne having acted unusually on him.

Harold made no answer, till Lucy Harwich said, "Won't you tell me, Harold?"

His proud face softened, and he answered, quietly:

"It's only the tower where Hugh St. Vraie shut up his guilty wife, Lucy, till she died, then in hunger and agony. No one's not a picnic story."

Miss Harwich looked very grave, and a silence fell on the group, till Harold proposed visiting the "whispering-gallery."

Up a cork-screw flight of stairs, the ladies blushing and laughingly pushing the gentlemen before, the whole party trooped, till they found themselves in a large room, leading out to an ancient terrace of stone, and connected by a passage with a smaller room.

"What is the secret of this place?" said Lucy.

"I shall leave you to discover it for your self," said Harold; "at least, I'll tell you, Lucy, presently. I must go and see if any one's in the smaller room."

"Not by yourself," said Agatha, with concentre properties the passage reflected back the lowest whisper uttered in the large room into the small one.

Harold St. Vraie paused, and with a smile on his lips, for he thought Lucy more charming each moment. He started back, for his eye fell on Agatha Clare, who was standing out on the landscape, and whose fair face was sad. He advanced to speak, when wafted along the passage he heard Sir Harry Collier say:

"My dear, I've made a dreadful mistake! It's Sir Harry who's to—"

"Hush!" screamed to the property you said was Harold St. Vraie's, mamma?" said Lucy's voice, hurriedly.

"Yes; I found it out only just now."

"Oh, mamma, how stupid! What an awful nuisance! Come out Miss Harwich," said Agatha, after he proposed and accepted! And I might have had Collier so easily!" and the young lady stamped with passion.

Agatha Clare turned her face away to avoid seeing St. Vraie's. His features were ghastly pale, and his whole frame trembling, for Agatha's words, and his resolution was soon taken, and his face grew stern and composed. Turning to Agatha, whose back was were full of soft compassion, he said, with dignity:

"You'll keep the secret, Miss Clare?"

The two walked past the ruins. As he entered the large room Lucy was saying, passionately, "Lied irrevocably!"

"No, Miss Harwich," said St. Vraie, haughtily, while mother and daughter were overwhelmed with confusion. "The secret of these rooms—the whispering-gallery—has been told to gentlemen here, after conversation; I therefore release you freely from your promise; and I trust," he added, sarcastically, "that your future conquests may prove satisfactorily ended."

He bowed low and stood aside for them to pass. Lucy's beautiful face crimsoned and paled alternately, but her accustomed spirit deserted her, and she and her crest-fallen mother passed through the court-yard, whence, under the ples of fatigue, they soon drove off, the baronet being in attendance.

Agatha Clare leaned against the wall that Harold St. Vraie looked on her, to a certain extent, as a sharer in his secret, and she could not help observing his subdued manner and the expression of pain on his face. He came by her side that evening, and seemed unwilling to waste words on any one else. Afterward he was a frequent visitor, and ultimately he asked Mrs. Clare to give him "her greatest treasure," which, with her treasure's sanction, she promised to do.

And as Harold passed the turquoise betrothed ring on Agatha's slender finger, and lovingly pressed her hand, he whispered:

"I don't think any whisper-room will part us, my own?"

Agatha's reply is unrecorded.

CENTRAL CITY, COLORADO.

CENTRAL CITY, Colorado, of which we give an illustration on our first page, is quite a large town, situated among the Rocky Mountains. It is the natural centre of the great mining operations in Colorado. Millions of dollars of Eastern capital are invested in the different mills and claims that abound in the town. There has been much mismanagement on the part of Eastern agents, and this has rendered some of the best properties of this region unproductive. The "Lyon's Process," that promises so much, is being tested near Central City. If successful, Colorado will be the greatest State in the Union in its development of mineral wealth. Our artist has faithfully represented the peculiar topographical features of the mining regions among the mountains of Colorado.

We give also on the same page an illustration of A GAMBLING SCENE IN DENVER CITY, COLORADO. The scene represented will give our readers a fair idea may every effort be seen by stepping into the tempting saloons of Denver. In all of these establishments there is music of a very inferior quality. They are nightly crowded by men of all classes and of every The games which are played at them are peculiar to this region.

HORSE-CARS AND OMNIBUSES.

A CERTAIN London gentleman, that is almost exclusively devoted to his own comfort and enjoyment, has especially appropriate to indies—viz., dress, fashion, domestic economy, and family matters generally—has recently become involved in quite a discussion regarding the "Discipline of Young Children." An anxious mother, uncertain how to manage her rather willful little girls, asked for advice through the columns of this gazette, and immediately four of enamoured correspondents, getting up a mélange of views that the poor "mother" must be puzzled. Each has her own pet theory. One bases her success on "kindness and love;" another styles herself as "a Sister of the Rod;" another advises only gentleness and firmness; a fourth suggests a system of rewards and punishment as the best method of training a child to obedience. "A Manager of Unruly Little Girls" insists that there is no other alternative than "the use of the rod," and recommends that the whipping system be unflinchingly pursued, especially in the case of little girls, "as they are more full of mischief than boys" "A Mother" claiming the experience mama of "Cornelius," gives some philosophical views, from which we will quote a passage or two:

"I cordially agree with 'A Manager of Unruly Little Girls,' that the whipping system is the best as well as the most effective and moral stimulant. I would not whip a child till it is sore and sick, but I would do it till it is glad after it is over to cease and; but till then, for many faults it is an excellent remedy. Whipping never does get into an invisible, incurable state, which exhibits itself in crying, and what is termed 'a bad temper,' sometimes lasting for days with children of a wonderfully strong constitution. Of this state of things it is wonderful what a fine tonic and alterative to the nervous system the application of the rod is.

At this point we would suggest that "children of larger growth," who are often both nervous and fretful, be given a dose of the "rod in pickle."

"A well-disposed child, who has been whipped in early days, will rarely require the punishment in after-years.

And pray, what is a "well-disposed child" to be whipped for? "Not for amusement or employment to "Cornelia?" She goes on to say:

"Do your duty to your children in all sanitary matters and then your duty is done. Whipping is the last thing I'll don't learn off a pleasant employment because the children don't like it. Whipping is the last thing I'll do. I will not give up an interesting book because the children make a noise. Whipping is the last thing I'll do to cook, because the castle to be abandoned when you wish to paint. Mothers make themselves miserable by doing what is considered before them."

In short—as Mr. Micawber would say—teach your children by example to be supremely selfish. Such a doctrine is wholly false. Children have their rights in the home—rights as much as the parents' belonging to the parent. The family is the child's world, where he is to learn not merely obedience, but love, generosity, benevolence, justice, and restraint. All these things are taught by parents' example. A child's happiness is as much to him as is the parents' happiness to them. And what so often gives the right to disturb the peace of the family to selfishness or fretfulness, no more has the mother a right to distort the family by like means.

But we have unconsciously drifted upon a mooted question, and had better return to the subject.

The following is suggestive to clergymen:

The late Rev. Samuel Eliot ("Dan Brown") once prayed in a prayer-meeting, "that the Lord would bless the Methodists scrambled, and that portion of it which was on the way to church, and that in which he who was preaching." Another, and that, in his infinite patience, he would bear to preach, and that in which he would be pleased to grant the benediction." By this eccentric method the clergyman succeeded in breaking up a bad habit, which had insisted all through his sermon.

Somebody, who evidently has not cultivated his taste for the beautiful, thus remarks upon the appearance of the female sex as exhibited in the Academy of Music in Philadelphia:

The toilets were superb in material but often tasteless in fashion. As a general thing, the ladies seemed to be too much addicted to confuse three splendid dresses, and procure a magnificent one. Sometimes, the hideous White Lady of vagary ran no further ago. There are pyramids of fabric that flow gracefully, and blouse loosely, but the grand staircase of rails and puffs, improperly swept, and built the first time, is a monument of folly. Some ladies dress, but not the less tolerable, and not to be endured. The fees in town enough to bear this utterly hideous arrangement of the hair.

"Doctor," inquired a lady, last week, of one of the most distinguished physicians in New York city, "what about the cholera? Shall we have it here next spring?"

"Well," replied the physician, "you can judge as well as I—here is a specimen of what to expect it."

"If so, what would you advise us to do? Run away from it?"

"Well, yes, I think I should, if in your place. You are somewhere in the vicinity of a bone-boiling factory, are you not?" "Why, yes, certainly." You, I would certainly get out of the way of such a nuisance if the cholera prevails."

"We are dreadfully annoyed by that nuisance," she replied with a sigh, "although not as much as some of our friends who live not a dozen blocks from us. It is positively awful, especially on the west side of the city. But I have often heard it said—though I never believed it—that disagreeable as is the odor, it was not unhealthy, and consequently safe from the cholera." "Indeed!" was the term."

"That is utterly false," responded the Doctor: "it is positively injurious to the health; and if cholera prevails, such nuisances will greatly increase the risk of remaining in the city. You had better remove that source of danger this spring."

"I hope there will," returned the lady, emphatically; "I should like to fly make it!"

The lady has "done wh it she could." in this sending to us an opinion of one of the first physicians in the city, on the health-fulness of bone-boiling establishments.

The rich, whose brown-stone fronts line the fashionable thoroughfares, in summer, can leave their homes a prey to burglars next summer, and fee for their lives. But there are thousands who have neither money nor country seats, and they must remain, while some benevolent souls will risk their own lives to care for others.

The following incidents related by a visitor to the united town of Plymouth, North Carolina, is indicative of the state of feeling in that section of our country:

Five of us were exploring a fort in the vicinity of Plymouth. We, the ladies, leaving our friends discussing some point of military architecture, paced around an embankment which hid them from our sight, and came suddenly upon an old negro who was removing for fire-wood the palisades of the fort. Among the rest his hat in the most approved style and stepped aside for us to pass, but never took off his hat. Here is a conversation between him and me:

"Well, uncle, how do you enjoy your freedom?" she asked.

He eyed her suspiciously for a moment; then putting on a look of stupidity and indifference, asked:

"Ah, missus, you know—don't you? Is it true?"

"What?" we exclaimed, in astonishment; "don't know that you are free? What do you mean?"

"No, missus," he persisted, "don' know nothin' 'bout it; nobody tell me."

Just at that moment one of the officials who accompanied us came on. He at once saw the state of affairs, and Lord uniform the look of stupidity vanished as if by magic. He took off his hat in a twinkling, and with a smile beaming all over his dark face, he turned to us exclaiming:

"Yes, missus, I know all 'bout it now. You see, I'se free, and I know what I is. You, missus, I'se free, massa, thank God!"

An interesting article recently appeared in one of our daily papers in regard to the city of New York fifty years ago. The writer stated that "this 'Delmonico' of fifty years ago was kept by a Frenchman, a Mr. Bitty's Hotel, in Wall Street, east of Frankfort, where it was the custom of the prominent merchants, lawyers, and politicians to dine, private evenings, for luncheon cakes. Pike was a general resort." He also remarked that when, "of a Sunday afternoon, the wanted exercise and fresh air, they would walk up to the State Prison, then a prominent feature far away out of the city, but now in the very heart of business," our Christopher Street. It then looked directly upon the river —now several streets intercept the view."

Nothing can be more salutary and yet exercise worth speaking of can be obtained short of the Central Park. And when, as is the case the present season, the skating ground is unusually good, thousands will avail the exhilarating sport never grudges a long journey to obtain it. Besides, the ride to and from the skating ground is enjoyed the pastime so long and so thoroughly. It was estimated that not less than one hundred thousand visitors made their appearance in the Central Park on the first week, about eighty thousand of whom were on the ice during the day and evening. The Park Commissioners did well to ignore "her beauty and her chivalry," and "all goes merry as a marriage bell."

A few days ago a poor broke his leg in Chatham Street. A coach was procured, and he was sent in charge of a police officer, to the City Hospital. He was refused admittance there because he was not a pauper, and ordered so severe as to prevent his removal to Bellevue Hospital. Upon this the officer refused to take the patient because he had been in the country only four weeks. Application was then made to the Commissioners of Emigration, but they could do nothing, because the unfortunate was not registered on their books as an emigrant. Learning that the sufferer was a native of Ireland, application was made to the Irish Society for aid from the fund for the benefit of the emigrants. Both Boards of Commissioners disclaimed the responsibility of conveying him, without a permit, to the Seaman's Retreat, where he was cheerfully received and attended by the best physicians. Such a case of a place where his broken leg could be dressed, four months' hours! Comment is unnecessary.

They make excellent pastry on a large scale at the Sandwich Islands. The Honolulu Advertiser tells of one that measured 16 inches in length, 16 inches in circumference, and weighed 9 pounds! Such a potato ought to last a family a month.

Now that the "sugar-effect" is a little past it is rumored that it originated not in Paris, but in India! This is on the authority of Dr. Judson, the celebrated Baptist missionary, who is also the inventor of pipe-smoking. Describing the costume of Karen women, said they were fancifully-constructed bags inclosing the hair, suspended from the back part of the head.

A new style of engagement-ring is mentioned among the novelties in an English paper. It is composed of "three sweet stones, which may be read as a pleasant mandate, and which the wearer alone, being in the secret, is able to resubject into the three centre-stones."

In a London literary weekly appears a long list of the "ages of English writers." A few of the more popularly known will be interesting:

Wilkie Collins, 42; John Bockin, 47; Rev. C. Kingsley, 47; Captain Mayne Reid, 48; Anthony Trollope, 51; Charles Reade, 52; Thackeray, 53; Mrs. Henry Wood, 54; Dickens, 54; Tennyson, 57; Sir E. Bulwer Lytton, 61; Harrison Ainsworth, 61; Barry Cornwall, 67; T. Carlyle, 70.

An exchange says:

A lady of our acquaintance, young, lovely, and intelligent, called on a celebrated physician to do "something" for a cold in the head.

"Madam," said the doctor, "I can do nothing for you, unless you will consent to a surgical operation."

"Oh, I will consent to anything," said the lady, "if you will only cure my cold."

"Then," said the doctor, "you must consent to have your head cut off."

"Cut off my head!" exclaimed the lady, astonished; "why, doctor, what do you mean?"

"Why, I mean," said Dr. Sarsaparilla, Jayne's Expectorant, and Dr. Sherman's Lozenges and Plaster, and—"

"No Peruvian Syrup?" interrupted the disappointed doctor, "all these do your complaint no good?"

"No," said the lady, sadly, and immediately inquired the patient.

"Take it!" exclaimed the doctor, eying her from head to foot; "take!" exclaimed he, after a moment's reflection; "why, you're not a corpse!"

Those who read the interesting article on "Diamonds and other Precious Stones," in our number for the last and other Precious Stones," in our number for the last number of Harper's Bazar, may realize how costly the eye can be decked from the following little anecdote, cut from a recent London journal:

An extravagant baronet, well-known at the Clubs in St. James's Street, being on one of his periodical visits to Paris for money, bribed his wife's waiting woman to procure for him a diamond worth 1,000 guineas, with pressure for which he promised to the family jeweler, explaining that he would redeem it in a few days from the sale of his wife's diamonds. "Why, my lord," was the reply, "I did that for my lady two or three months ago, and I have not been paid yet." "Why, my lady" was quite as fast as her lord, and in nothing was he her master."

The following directions to a portrait-painter are characteristic of some persons:

"Represent me in my portrait," said a gentleman, with a look of command, and reading aloud, "sitting by a table, in a chair, with my left hand resting on it, and my right hand also, in a careless manner that he may bear on what I am

ST. VALENTINE'

[ARTHUR LUMLEY.]

ABOARD THE "PROMISED LAND."

THE "good ship" Promised Land really deserved that praise. She was new, had made only one voyage, in a remarkably short space of time, was copper-fastened, two hundred tons burden, was of course registered A 1 at Lloyd's, and was now loading at the St. Winifred's Docks. Many had read the enticing and almost appetizing advertisement, which had been in the Times for many days, under heading of "Steam to the Brazils," of the "spacious poop and after-decks, the fine and well-ventilated saloon," and the decks "flush from end to end, and offering an agreeable and unbroken promenade," of the surgeon, who was "experienced," of the "fire-annihilator," which was infallible, of the "water-condensing apparatus," above all, of that "Favorite Captain, Robert Macgregor, who was "so well known on the American line." The latter announcement had blessings irresistibly induced me, when appointed engineer for surveying a new line of railway in the Brazils, to choose the new "first-class liner," the Promised Land, and her Favorite Captain, Robert Macgregor.

That was indeed a dismal first meeting of all the passengers in the saloon. There was a Spanish-looking actress, a wife or two of a consul, two or three consumptive travelers, a couple of sisters of their wives, some Frenchmen, some Germans—with, in fact, the almost unvarying elements which make up the ocean-lement of a poor bound on a long voyage. One gentleman I particularly noticed, who was taking supper, with great relish, by himself. He had come on board with the well-established himself early in one of the best cabins, and had got every thing he wanted in it "proper pretty." When nearly every one was like a sorry and troubled spirit, going up on deck and coming down again, and then again into wrong cabins, and hitting over unseen trunks and packages, he was perfectly and calmly at home. By eleven o'clock he had finished his supper, had read the evening paper through by a wax-candle, as he would have done at his club, and had gone comfortably to bed. This gentleman's name was Colter, a Chancery barrister in fair practice, who had been ordered a long sea-voyage to strengthen his chest, and enable him the better to direct the affairs of their "Lthdley."

In the morning we were tossing about in the Channel. The sea was dull and angry, and the "turkey-cock-lover" role hearing and seeing. Already the bulk of the passengers were in their cots, to the music of the "hish" of the waters, and the creaking and creaking of the timbers above. It was a dark day, too, was raining on deck, and only a bare half-dozen appeared at breakfast. Captain Robert Macgregor came down himself, and at the head. He was a surprisingly young man for a Favorite Captain, had of a stout build, dark curly hair and large fair face, and a very Scotch accent. "Still bit of weather to begin with," he said, cheerfully; "almost the better, though, for passengers; they get into it at once and have it all over. I wish we had a good storm at once, to try this vessel. She's a good way thing, Sir. Go any where. Built under my own eye."

The Chancery barrister was, of course, there, picking out the best bits of lavished food and wiping with his fork. I saw him well. Tall, thin, with a dry blowish face, and "thin hair, beparkled sparse." "Captain," he said, slowly, "what is the steppage last night? It awoke me. Somewhere off Gravesend, eh?"

"Yes," said the captain, "off Gravesend it was —a small booker came alongside, with two passengers. We nearly run down; seven ten night, too. Practice, stopping a vessel in her course! And only the agent would have been making a row, and talking of the company, and perhaps stopping the passage-money out of my salary. I'd have let him about till they were hoarse."

"And now, captain," said the barrister, buttering toast with a raging, crackling energy, "what were they like—men, women, or children?"

"A woman, Sir—a lady, I suppose we must call her," the captain said, with disgust, "though, how, isn't it—ladies coming out in bookers to stop mail-packets on the high seas?"

"And where is she now?" said the barrister, eating a fresh egg. "Breakfast in berth, eh?"

"I suppose so," said Captain Macgregor, angrily. "Of course, she's sick. By Jove, the wind's freshening again!" he said, rising; "this is the style of thing. It looks like a good storm before night."

All the day the weather freshened, and in the afternoon it was almost a storm, and we had less company at the table than ever at breakfast.

This all went on for a couple of days, when things began to mend. The storm abated altogether; and one morning we arose to the smoothest and most lovely weather that could be conceived. The passengers came crawling out of their burrows, with white faces, but with some hope. They plucked up wonderfully, as some one remarked. In fact, the breakfast-table, all but some children were assembled. Captain Macgregor was at the head, down at the loss of his stormy weather, and I and Mr. Colter near him.

"We are all right," said the barrister; "a different one to the first day, eh? By-the-way, where's the Gravesend lady? She that woke us up out of our sleep—eh, captain?"

The captain answered gruffly that he did not know.

"You should have all your passengers here, captain. No excuse such a morning as this. No breakfasting in bed—in berth, I mean—it's bad for the morale of the ship."

The Scotch captain shook himself at this.

"Well have none of that, aboard. No favor or exceptions. Here, steward! You're not to take in breakfast to any one—d've hear?"

No, Sir. Only that lady in No. 20."

"Has she been ill?"

"No, Sir, the stewardess says. She had dinner yesterday there, and tea and breakfast ever since she came aboard."

The captain almost leaped up with anger.

"This is outrageous. My orders defied by any woman. Lady or woman, it's all one. I'll have the same discipline for all. That's logic, Mr. Colter."

"And good logic, too," said that gentleman.

"Ay, ay. The ship before every thing. And see, steward. Tell that lady—what's her name?"

"Mrs. Arlington, Sir."

Mr. Colter, at hearing this name, started.

"Arlington!" he said. "Are you sure?"

"Why," said the captain, "what's there in it?"

Mr. Colter seemed quite ashamed of having started so suddenly.

"Nothing," he said. "There's a leading case, you know—Arlington and Hooker—very nearly the same point as the rule in Shelley's case, but out-Heroded Herod, you remember."

"Well, tell Mrs. Arlington she must be here for dinner or go without any. That's blunt; but it's the fact and the way out of it."

The captain went on deck.

"Now," said Mr. Colter to me, "why should that lady, who has come on board in an exceptional manner, and who has not been in the least ill (as, indeed, I found out in a very odd way, for I saw her reflected in the looking-glass of her berth, and reading and working all through the storm)—why shouldn't she come in and take her meals with us—eh?"

"Well, I never thought of it in that way," I said.

At dinner that day—the fine weather still continuing—all the passengers were assembled, except one. Just as the second course appeared a little one, he was heard, and a tall, graceful lady stood at the door, looking down the long table as if for a place. She was very nearly my own age, and a great human beauty—slight—was in a purple silk—had a very small face and features—soft hair, with a tiny bit of lace—nothing any or a girl, and was about two-and-thirty years of age. The lawyer got up, and, with much bustle, caused room to be made for her opposite—next to Captain Macgregor, who shook himself angrily, like a Newfoundland dog.

"I expect every one to be on time on board the Promised Land," he said, roughly. "Can't allow any eating and drinking in the cabins. So I hope, in future, ma'am—"

She was quite composed, and answered him with a soft voice: "I beg pardon, indeed, Captain Macgregor. I did not know the rule—indeed, no. But in future you will find me the most obedient of all your passengers."

"Well, I hope so," he said. Get this lady some soup."

The barrister, who had his eye on her all this time, said to her, curiously:

"Hope you have not suffered during the rough weather?"

She answered softly, and with an expression of pain:

"I always suffer. I am almost always a martyr."

"Why," said the Scotch captain, "we know that you weren't ill during the storm, for you had your meals in regularly; and the stewardess here saw you sitting up, reflected in some way on his skylight, reading away, when it was blowing great guns. Now?"

She raised her eyes from her plate and turned them steadily on the barrister. He helped himself to wine—very coolly.

"You are determined to be hard on poor me, Captain Macgregor," she said. "I did not say that I was sick, but that I was almost always sick. I will even appeal to that gentleman who used reflection to see how a woman suffers."

The barrister laughed. "That's putting it very strongly against me. But if I had had such a reflector the other night, when you were all so stopped, and mysterious passengers came on board that would be worth something. What do you say, captain?"

"I say it was a thing I wouldn't do again, for this lady or for any lady."

Again her eyes were studying the barrister very carefully.

He said, suddenly, as if putting a question:

"You were also home from foreign service—you and your husband?"

She almost started, looked at him, then answered steadily, with her eyes steadily on him:

"Well, yes, supposing we were?"

"Oh, certainly," said he, with great politeness; "I have no right to put any more questions."

"No more," she said, with a firm smile, "than you have to construct those reflectors of yours. Even my memory here, Captain Macgregor, wouldn't resort to that."

"It must have been very perilous," continued the barrister, affably, "that mode of escape, to land in an open boat on a rough night. It required great courage," he said, looking round with a smile, "or great pressure and necessity. From Gravesend, I think you said," he repeated.

"Suppose it were Gravesend," she answered, with a smile which was also full of patience. "Would you like to hear," she went on, calmly, "my long dreadful, names of relations, age next birthday, and other particulars according to a census paper?"

The barrister put up his hands to his face.

"Serve me right," he said; "a capital hit—well sent home too."

"Ah!" said she, laughing; "I wish to hit nobody, provided they do not hit me."

"At any rate," said the barrister, "I have got a lesson."

But I don't think he had. For at tea that night he came up to the table, laughing. "Look here," he said; "I am incorrigible. I belong to the law. So that is my excuse. You know the challenge you gave me about a census paper? Well, I have been working my head ever since, as I should do at a brief for the Vice-Chancellor to-morrow morning. May I tell you what I have found, provided I tell you how?"

The faintest flush of uneasiness passed over that piquant face, but she hid it by setting back the little cap. "Do as you please," she said, with a smile. "You know I am helpless. Captain Macgregor here, who I thought would be my protector, is turned against me; so entirely lady is privileged."

"First," said Mr. Colter, "you are married, madam, or were married, and your husband's name is Charles H. Arlington—captain in her Majesty's Nineteth Regiment of Foot, now stationed at Chatham."

She almost started out of her seat, a strange wildness came into her eyes, with a dash of fury, as she bent over to the barrister.

"Nothing," he said. "There's a leading case, you know—Arlington and Hooker—very nearly the same point as the rule in Shelley's case, but out-Herod Herod, you remember."

"Well, tell Mrs. Arlington she must be here for dinner or go without any. That's blunt; but it's the fact and the way out of it."

The captain went on deck.

"Now," said Mr. Colter to me, "why should that lady, who has come on board in an exceptional manner, and who has not been in the least ill (as, indeed, I found out in a very odd way, for I saw her reflected in the looking-glass of her berth, and reading and working all through the storm)—why shouldn't she come in and take her meals with us—eh?"

"Well, I never thought of it in that way," I said.

At dinner that day—the fine weather still continuing—all the passengers were assembled, except one. Just as the second course appeared a little one, he was heard, and a tall, graceful lady stood at the door, looking down the long table as if for a place. She was very nearly my own age, and a great human beauty—slight—was in a purple silk—had a very small face and features—soft hair, with a tiny bit of lace—nothing any or a girl, and was about two-and-thirty years of age. The lawyer got up, and, with much bustle, caused room to be made for her opposite—next to Captain Macgregor, who shook himself angrily, like a Newfoundland dog.

"I expect every one to be on time on board the Promised Land," he said, roughly. "Can't allow any eating and drinking in the cabins. So I hope, in future, ma'am—"

She was quite composed, and answered him with a soft voice: "I beg pardon, indeed, Captain Macgregor. I did not know the rule—indeed, no. But in future you will find me the most obedient of all your passengers."

"Well, I hope so," he said. Get this lady some soup."

The barrister, who had his eye on her all this time, said to her, curiously:

"Hope you have not suffered during the rough weather?"

She answered softly, and with an expression of pain:

"I always suffer. I am almost always a martyr."

"Why," said the Scotch captain, "we know that you weren't ill during the storm, for you had your meals in regularly; and the stewardess here saw you sitting up, reflected in some way on his skylight, reading away, when it was blowing great guns. Now?"

She raised her eyes from her plate and turned them steadily on the barrister. He helped himself to wine—very coolly.

"You are determined to be hard on poor me, Captain Macgregor," she said. "I did not say that I was sick, but that I was almost always sick. I will even appeal to that gentleman who used reflection to see how a woman suffers."

The barrister laughed. "That's putting it very strongly against me. But if I had had such a reflector the other night, when you were all so stopped, and mysterious passengers came on board that would be worth something. What do you say, captain?"

"I say it was a thing I wouldn't do again, for this lady or for any lady."

Again her eyes were studying the barrister very carefully.

He said, suddenly, as if putting a question:

"You were also home from foreign service—you and your husband?"

She almost started, looked at him, then answered steadily, with her eyes steadily on him:

"Well, yes, supposing we were?"

"Oh, certainly," said he, with great politeness; "I have no right to put any more questions."

"No more," she said, with a firm smile, "than you have to construct those reflectors of yours. Even my memory here, Captain Macgregor, wouldn't resort to that."

"It must have been very perilous," continued the barrister, affably, "that mode of escape, to land in an open boat on a rough night. It required great courage," he said, looking round with a smile, "or great pressure and necessity. From Gravesend, I think you said," he repeated.

"Suppose it were Gravesend," she answered, with a smile which was also full of patience. "Would you like to hear," she went on, calmly, "my long dreadful, names of relations, age next birthday, and other particulars according to a census paper?"

The barrister put up his hands to his face.

"Serve me right," he said; "a capital hit—well sent home too."

"Ah!" said she, laughing; "I wish to hit nobody, provided they do not hit me."

"At any rate," said the barrister, "I have got a lesson."

But I don't think he had. For at tea that night he came up to the table, laughing. "Look here," he said; "I am incorrigible. I belong to the law. So that is my excuse. You know the challenge you gave me about a census paper? Well, I have been working my head ever since, as I should do at a brief for the Vice-Chancellor to-morrow morning. May I tell you what I have found, provided I tell you how?"

The faintest flush of uneasiness passed over that piquant face, but she hid it by setting back the little cap. "Do as you please," she said, with a smile. "You know I am helpless. Captain Macgregor here, who I thought would be my protector, is turned against me; so entirely lady is privileged."

"First," said Mr. Colter, "you are married, madam, or were married, and your husband's name is Charles H. Arlington—captain in her Majesty's Nineteth Regiment of Foot, now stationed at Chatham."

She almost started out of her seat, a strange wildness came into her eyes, with a dash of fury, as she bent over to the barrister.

"What do you mean?" she said, in a thick voice. Every one had been listening, and now turned to each other with surprise and wonder. In a moment a good deal was changed. She had tried tears, and, with her handkerchief to her face, she just uttered the words, "He is dead! how unkind!" and floated away out of the saloon.

Many reproachful eyes were turned on the barrister.

"Come, I say, Mr. Colter," said the captain, who had looked after her with much compassion, "this is going a little too far, I think. A helpless woman in the hands of a clever lawyer. It isn't equal, you know. Poor soul!"

"Pon my word," said the eager barrister, "I meant nothing. I really did not. It was a mere chance shot. I knew her name was Arlington. So I looked in an Army List."

The words struck the wind had again freshened, I went up very early upon deck. It was a cold, delicious morning, the vessel was bending through the waves with a sharp, breezy decision that is always very acceptable. It was very early in the morning, and I should have the deck all to myself; but, to my surprise, there was the captain leaning against the mainmast, with a lady in a little bonnet and shawl by his side—a young and lady. Presently they began to walk about, and the captain pointed out this "stay" and that "rope" to the lady, who became the person to take an eager interest, and I could see was asking all sorts of questions, which he answered very readily, and with great politeness. Presently they came toward me and explained the compasses, and then she went to the very end of the vessel, where she stood up on the bulwarks, in the breeze, and looked down on the hissing waters with more courage than, perhaps, I could have done, and looked like a mermaid. The captain came on the end of the vessel looking at her in this attitude, when I heard a voice close at my ear: "A fine morning!" It was Mr. Colter, the barrister.

"I thought we should have the deck nearly to ourselves," he said, and walked down toward the pair at the bows. But the lady and the captain she jumped down. "I so said nothing to him between 'Good-morning!' but that was said with an air of defiance.

That day the luggage "wanted on the voyage" was to be got up—a grand ceremonial of unpacking for passengers, a remarkably busy and amusing scene. Every one got up his trunk, and got out of it what he could not or would not want. Still it was an amusement, and even little things are welcome upon a voyage. Every one was unlocking and unpacking, even the great Chancery barrister, Mr. Colter, Q.C.

At dinner we were all in great spirits. The captain had given Champagne, which was much enjoyed by the lady who sat near him. Her spirits began to sparkle, and she talked very pleasantly and with great ease, which I noticed that Captain Macgregor listened with extraordinary attention to every thing she said, spoke very little himself, not even a word about the weather, of course!

"We deserve this," said the barrister, gayly, "after our hard work to-day. Excellent wine it is!"

"You should drink, Mr. Colter, to our full and perfect reconciliation; and promise, over Captain Macgregor's Champagne, to be friends. I have never to offend me any more. You must get rid of your animosity to me. Will you promise?"

"Certainly," said the barrister, gayly, with all my heart. I am deeply penitent. I feel as if I had committed contempt of court, and had been told to attend on the bench of the bishop's tenantry row. Indeed, how could I feel any thing but cordial good-will to a person about whom I am beginning gradually to know every thing?"

"Know every thing?" she said, a frown coming on her forehead. "You are beginning again. Now, I warn you!"

"Yes," said he, "but we have not drunk our Champagne tog-ther yet. It is really the oddest thing. There was no mystery whatever between us, for these things force themselves on me. Now to-day, at the luggage, I found out your name and address."

"Champigne, ma'am?" said the waiter.

"No," she said, fiercely, "I'll not drink with you. I'll have nothing more!"

"Pray hear me first," he said. "Stay a moment, waiter. I saw a portmanteau swung up rather roughly, and the luggage-label against the hold, and half torn off a card. I saw it wouldn't stay on a minute, and really with the best intentions, thinking it might fall off. I took it off. On the face was your name, Mrs. Arlington, written in a very pretty hand. On the back was, 'To be left at Captain Arlington's, 19th Regiment, Chatham, Garrison and skyscore to pay. 11/6/63.' (You know the old way they write that.) The very day before our voyage. Now, I apologize for the trunk-maker's bill for a lock or repairs."

She shrugged, put down her wine-glass, and looked in her hand.

"You will not stop till you get a lesson," she said, grimly. "I am not a woman to let myself be persecuted. I can do nothing more if; but if I ask other gentlemen"—and she looked at Captain Macgregor—"I am sure they will help me. Perhaps the next thing you will tell us all—or, that you have opened my little trunk and searched it."

"Indeed," said Captain Macgregor, who had been appealed to, "you might let this lady's affairs alone. If we have barristers aboard, I don't see why we need have barristers' ways. In fact, now, as captain of this craft, I tell you plainly, Mr. Colter, I won't have it. I have authority here, and I must require you to give over prying into this lady's business, or looking into her trunks and that sort of thing."

He looked to her, whose eyes turned to him with speechless gratitude. There was a silence. Half the table heard that speech. Mr. Colter drank a little wine, then called in a clear voice to a gentleman a few places from him:

"Mr. Wilson I you were next me to-day when a portmanteau came on deck with a card half hanging to it. Would that card have dropped off at a touch?"

"At a touch," said Mr. Wilson.

"Did I save it from dropping back into the hold?"

"You did," said Mr. Wilson.

"Who was it first perceived that there was writing on the back?"

"I did, certainly," said Mr. Wilson. "I in fact, I remarked it as the trunk came up."

"There," said Mr. Colter, calmly. "So much for looking into this lady's affairs. As for my remark yesterday about the husband of this lady, I looked, out of the merest idle curiosity, to see his rank and name-sake, in an Army List."

"An Army List!" she repeated, startling.

"Yes," he went on. "An Army List of the present month, and that is the only the correct one. I found him there. But that, of course, must be a printer's error (these things are edited so carelessly), for I am sure a gentleman of honor (so to say your husband is not alive?"

"Never," she answered, excitedly. "I said I was afraid he might be dead or dying, as I left him very ill."

"Then I mistook," he went on. "Now, that being so, I appeal to the company whether or ex-cell-ut captain has not traveled a little beyond what is proper in the way he has spoken tome. Really it seems a little unwarrantable. And if I was one of your people with a grievance, and were to bring the case before the Lord Mayor, Sir Charles Robinson, chairman of the quarter-sessions, he might look at it rather seriously. Now, I put it to the captain, as a friend, and one of his best seniors going, whether he has not been a little rough with me to-day."

The captain colored.

"Well," said he, "perhaps I spoke too strongly, and perhaps you are right, Mr. Colter. You know I have great sensibility."

The look of anger and contempt the lady gave him was beyond description. She rose at once.

"I see you have descried me," she said, in a whisper, to the captain. "Well, so be it. I shall go on deck and make the wind and the sea my friends. They are kind, and are faithful."

And she passed out. In about ten minutes the captain followed her.

Very soon the curiosity of the passengers had been excited about this lady and her doings; and I could see that the barrister's little speech had produced a marked effect. Even the ladies, who seldom took her part; but the ladies were, to a lady, against her.

The barrister was very pleasant on the subject.

"I have got so into the habit of putting this and that together," he said, "that really I can't help continuing, and following out my speculations in this way. Now, this lady, though I really may be putting myself in bodily risk (for who knows how she may turn out if she gives way to such wicked sucks), is really quite like a child's puzzle to me; and positively I must put it together successfully before the voyage is out."

There was a rustle behind us, and she was standing at the top of the table. She had heard him. There was the same twitch of vexation in her mouth.

"No warning," she said, with a smile, "will do you any good. Then come; other people may be fond of puzzles too."

"Nothing can be fairer," he said, laughing.

He was walking on deck with her, when I saw her come up to him with a very sad and bewitching face. I could hear her low voice almost distinctly. I heard close by I heard her say something about—

"Oh, so clever! with such a reputation as you!"

To which he replied:

"Oh, nonsense. You never heard of my name before, because you had been reading conveyances and deeds all your life. No, no."

The next thing we heard was that the captain had given up his own private cabin to the strange lady. She had accepted it, and chose to put up with the worst accommodation. This inflamed all the ladies still more, but more particularly Mr. Colter, who said to me, in a very cross and singular partiality." That very day we saw an English brig bearing down on us with a signal of distress flying. That was a great excitement. The passengers, and we thought every one up from below with glasses, to assist in the excitement. We slackened speed and let her come near. It turned out that the brig's chief was only "short of water," which created quite an ill feeling against the brig, and sent down most of the passengers in disgust. The captain came aboard our vessel in his long boat, and was presently surrounded by a group of passengers, with letters of questions, which provided a great subject of discussion at dinner that day. After dinner, Mr. Colter said, in his gay way: "While they were all talking to the captain, I got hold of the steward, and secured a couple of English newspapers. What do you say to a rubber? I suppose no one ever thought of that; though there is not much news, except—except—indeed—" and he kept looking up and down the columns, searching for his bit of news, "one of the usual dreadful murders," he said. "Where is it?"

As he spoke, I was made to look up by an angry and impatient rustle opposite, and I saw that the eyes of the lady fixed on him with such an expression of mixed terror and agony, that I was really startled.

"At Chatham, I think it was," he said; "near to your part of the world. So you had a lucky escape, Mrs. Arlington."

She was growing pale and red by turns, her hands were grasping the table with a clutch, and she half rose to go.

"Ah, here it is!"

"What do you mean by this?" she said.

He did not affect to see her, but I saw him steal a look at her.

"Why, you are not well," said Captain Margrave. "Take my arm, and come on deck."

"You won't wait to hear the exciting details?" said Mr. Colter. "Why, I declare, it's not at Chatham, after all. It was at Portsmouth. Yes, at Portsmouth. How stupid of me!"

A curious expression of relief came into her face. "It was only for a moment," she said. "You know my poor husband is lying ill there, and these things happen so often."

"Ah, I see," said the captain.

"Was the murderer a sergeant—one Ridley?" I asked a passenger.

"Yes! God bless me, you!" said Mr. Colter. "How did you find that out?"

"Why, that all happened before we left England. I read it in the Times a week before. The fellow must be hanged by this time."

"Well," said Mr. Colter, laying down his pack, "after that I give it all up. I am getting stupid. I may retire from the profession."

The second passenger laughed aloud, and received a step in rank on the spot, in respect, from his fellow-passengers.

Meanwhile our captain never abated in his attentions to the lady, though he grew more gloomy and moody every day. He had lost all his self-confidence for the ship, and never talked of her in a boastful and affectionate way. On the other hand, carrying out his law of rewarding every fighting man came in his way. Mr. Colter had latterly taken great interest in the ship, and all about her, "just to fill in the time," he said. Every day at noon, when the observations were taken, he was careful to assist, and picked up the outlines of navigation in a very short time. He was the main pronouncer that the work the reckoning "afore to-morrow next day." This was always his way. Mr. Colter said, "because," he said, "by which he knowed that a calculation might be briefed to me? Lost year I had a dooing case, and I made up all the chevalnis in a week." He had by the mate's permission taken to the crane line, and Mr. Colter worked out the ship's reckoning for himself in a very satisfactory way.

The sun, on a great dark cloud, sank upward-bound, came in sight, which the captain, eagerly getting his glass, and making the lady who stood near him look, announced to us a new day of hard weather. As it drew near all the passengers got out their letters, which, after a short parley, were sent in a body; and it showed the ship in sight. This was a real incident, and was talked over eagerly and notably at dinner. Mr. Colter, to whom the weather was very cool and very fine, was massive since their little discussion, quite taking the lead. "Such a small as went on board," he said; "and of a writing from me to her father and mothers, dau'hters, wives, and husbands. By-the-way," he went on gayly, and with his eye on the lady, "I didn't see you give a contribution, not a line, to that poor husband in the barracks at home, sitting in his bare room, coming back from their dull ease."

She colored, and again that fierce contortion of impatience came into her face. "How do you know?" she said. "In the next thing to be shot I am to show you all my letters before I post them?"

"God forbid," he answered, laughing. "I am to read of look at ladies' long letters. No, no, Mrs. Arlington, only, as I always tell you, you are quite a study to me." He laughed again. "But enough now," he went on, half addressing these near him, "I don remark that Mrs. Arlington missed the post, or did not know there was a mail going out from the boat under opportunity of writing to her husband. It was very unlucky."

Some of the passengers looked one at the other, for by this time—and really in part owing to these hints of the barrister—a sort of mystery of suspicion began to grow among them about the lady. There was nothing to do, monotony was beginning to set in, so that even a little suspicion was welcome. This fact, therefore, stated so boldly—nay, by Mr. Colter, was taken up readily, and speculated over very often. And the looks of fury and scared horror that naturally came into the lady's face—as I surprised her often looking at "her persecutor"—were remarkable. Really he was carrying it all too far. But he never seemed to tire of it.

A little passage that took place between them a couple of mornings later "intrigued" us all yet more.

"I am hungry this morning," he began, addressing the company as usual, "and do you know who is the reason? Of some would guess, I am sure Mrs. Arlington, you are the reason I am hungry. What is this, fried collops? Yes, Mrs. A. is the reason." And so she was in great measure. The ladies' eyes were upon her. "Now for the explanation. Mrs. Arlington spilled some of my chocolate this morning. I think you did it on purpose. The steward was worrying it in (I always have it at home, and I must say the hat makes it wear) as well as my own man, and Mrs. Arlington came on against him, spilled some of it, and the poor boy brought it in afterward to my cabin, and wanted to know should he make what was left. Of course I said no. But I didn't know that it left."

The public were a little disappointed at this story, which they could not follow. The only thing they enjoyed was her really helpless state of confusion and terror. And after that morning the impression still more evidently pervaded that there was something very odd about the strange lady. Later, we all knew the explanation of this chocolate story.

The Promised Land had now been some seven or eight days at sea, and with fair weather. We were all getting tolerably well shaken down into the ship, as Mr. Colter said. This eighth day was remarkably fine, with a bright sun out, and the one or two stout ladies passengers came creeping out of their berths to get a little fresh air and sun. Poor souls! Every one was happy, but the only curious thing was the behavior of the captain, who all the day long had his powerful double-glasses to his eyes searching the horizon for and near. This at first was not attended to; but, as he continued anxiously at this all the day, even sending men to the mast-head, and keeping a little boy there till he nearly fell off, people began to notice him and to ask. The first to take notice was Mr. Colter: "Not looking for land, surely?" he said, with a smile. "I make up a reckoning with the mate, and we are in latitude so and so."

The captain answered him roughly: "I can look through my glasses, I suppose, without having to give an account of myself, Mr. Colter? We have our subjects at home as well as you." And then he walked away down to the cabin to the lady; then came up, and spoke to the man at the wheel. It was now about five o'clock, and time for dinner. Mr. Colter, who was very friendly with the mate, and talked with him a good deal about the ship and her behavior, now walked over to take a look at the binnacle before going down. "Why, look here, Cobbett," he said, "we're taking a bend out of our course. Eh? What the deuce—"

"Yes, we are, Sir," said the mate. "What's this, Jim?"

Up on his mast he keep a quarter-post at us to nor'ard," said the steersman.

"Very odd," said Mr. Colter.

"I don't know what's crossed over the captain," said Cobbett, thoughtfully. "I think," he added, cautiously, "he's now after one of the Havers boats (so he supposes) that we left in the lurch, and he should meet about here. That's what's at the bottom of it, Sir. I suspect he wants news, or something."

"Indeed," said Mr. Colter, and went down to dinner. At this meal the captain and lady were both restless, and spoke little. Mr. Colter was powerful. When it was done, a message from the boy came in, and whispered to the captain, who got up hastily, and went on deck. This motion excited curiosity. What could it be?

After dessert had been put on, Mr. Colter, wiping his mouth with his napkin, said, gayly, "I really must see what is going on."

"Ah, you may see and see again," said Mrs. Arlington, with extraordinary fierceness, "and you will see no good out come of it. I wish interfere much now."

"I?" said he, good-humorously. "Not I, indeed. But a little walk on deck can do no harm." He went up, and presently many followed, for curiosity is stronger than wine.

The sun had set, and the half darkness had come on. The sky-lights over the saloon looked like gorgeous illuminated lanterns. The ship's head was east, and blue, and the moon, seeming to be out a little before its time, was shining. Many faces were looking out in the one point where there was a cloud of dark, and a twinkling red and green light growing larger every moment. Many fingers pointed it out, and the cloud—"See the Havers boat!" said Cobbett, coming up to Mr. Colter; "we're out of our course by three hours. Nigh on forty mile. Only think! Captain makes it his affair, and he'll see what the owners will say."

The captain was on his paddle-box, giving orders.

"We're going at full speed, you see," said the mate. "She's a faster boat, and won't be by for long. The French skipper knows the duty to his company."

"Oh, I see," said Mr. Colter. "Where Mrs. Arlington?"

She was in her cabin. By-and-by some boxes were coming up from the hold. Presently the lady herself came up, with her shawls and cloaks, and with all her baskets and packages. "I see," said Mr. Colter again.

"Perhaps you do," she said, "but not for much longer. I am going at last to be set free from your insolent and unmanly persecutions. The kind captain is going to put me on board that vessel which is bound for New York."

By this time a knot of leading passengers had gathered round, listening with wonder. We were gradually drawing nearer to the vessel. The captain was coming down from his paddle-box with triumph.

"We shall overhaul her yet," he said. "They have seen our signals, and are lying to. Bring out the boat to be have it ready. They have stopped at last."

He was turning to go, when Mr. Colter, suddenly changing his habitual jocular manner, said: "Just a word with you, captain, before you move in this matter."

He took him by the arm, and led him away down to the end of the vessel, the captain going sullenly. Mrs. Arlington was watching during this little view, but she looked very often toward the dark French ship.

In a moment they both came back. The captain was very excited.

"I'll not listen to you, Sir. You should be ashamed of yourself. I'll make a move in business, or listen to such calumnies."

"Brave and gallant protector," she said, taking his proffered hand. "I knew I had a friend in you who would stand by me."

"Then you force me to appeal to the passengers, and to them I shall appeal."

"You would not be so cowardly—so cruel," she said, half imploringly.

"I shall tell them what I know and can prove as soon as we touch land. I shall tell them that this woman—"

"Tell what you like," said the captain, doggedly. "Here's the vessel, and go on board she shall."

In fact we were now drifting up beside the great black figure of the ship, quietly breathing and blowing off the steam like a tired horse. The men were in the boat, and the cranks were about being swung over the side.

"Well, then," said Mr. Colter, "if you won't listen to reason, I shall go too. New York will be very pleasant, and he have an action brung with that country."

There was a pause. The two stood looking at each other, the lady trembling and breathing hard. The voice of the French captain was heard through a speaking-trumpet.

"Well, then," said she, with a sort of dreadful smile; "since you are so positive in the matter I suppose you must have your way. I am very sorry that all other passengers should suffer on this trip; but it is better to submit than to have a scene. I shall ever be able, Mr. Colter, to repay you for all your intrusive kindness."

She hurried down again to her cabin, but her last look at the barrister was one no one could forget.

The vessel was put on her old course.

For some days the voyage continued. Still the lady did not come into the cabin for meals. "I have given her leave," said the captain, ferociously. "I suppose I have some power aboard my own ship, and I'd like to see the man that will dispute it."

"So should I," said Mr. Colter, smiling. "Poor Jack would be laid in irons, and properly so. The law gives you full power, captain, to a certain extent. Eh? What shall support the law, captain. Eh?" legal theory is, that the deck of every English vessel is a portion of the British soil."

The captain answered nothing. It was the last day. We were to be off the coast by evening. By evening we were in the coast, near a town, with land and a light-house. But it was nearly dark. Passengers were all in excitement. A splash of oars, a rush of passengers and the Custom officers, a dozen green-looking men in brigand hats, came on board. They went through the usual business. In our surprise Mr. Colter talked with them in what was apparently excellent Spanish, with the leader of the party. The leader was very obsequious, and touched his hat. Then Mr. Colter gave him a letter as the boat went away—two were left behind in charge of the vessel.

Mr. Colter was literally now regarded as a being of mysterious power.

About time that night (we were all to land in the morning) a boat was heard coming alongside, the ship, and a gentleman came up the side, who in English asked the captain to see Mr. Colter. The captain made a reply, and then a little gruffly. "I am the consul here," said the other.

Mr. Colter, who was smoking, came up. The consul took off his hat. "I hope Lord Cowbitter is well," he said, obsequiously. "His lordship wrote to me by the last mail. We shall do every thing we can for Mr. Colter. Would you please to come ashore to-night and sleep on dry land—at a hotel? I can manage that."

"Well then, you know, I should," said Mr. Colter, gayly. "I have, however, a few little things to put together first."

"Hope you've had a fine voyage," said the consul.

"Well I did, since you ask me," he answered. "It has really been very pleasant. We finished up all the flashing eyes, and distorted features, and a quivering lip.

"Good gracious!" said Mr. Colter.

"What legacy? I say," she repeated; "a noble, manly, and chivalrous one! You a gentleman? No. I will tell you what you are—a miserable spy, a common detective! God forgive you!"

"What strange language!" said Mr. Colter, looking round.

"If I was a low creature I would curse you," she went on, in a fury; "I would pray—as I will pray—night and day, that God may take you to sleep may open and sink to the bottom. You mean, unworthy spy, you! You mouchard, you! Ha, ha! crawling, cringing, spying! It is the dirty work you love! Curse you, I say!"

"What 'rinnigue' said Mr. Colter, not in the least distress.

"What have a done to you? Why did you fasten on me from the beginning of the voyage—a poor woman that did you no harm—tell me that—eh?"

Mr. Colter suddenly became grave. (It was a curious and very exciting scene; the yellow oil lamps of the saloon playing on her face.)

"Since you ask me," he said, "I will tell you—something. Young William Arlington, your husband—that man—"

"Was?" she repeated, faltering.

"—was the son of a very dear friend of mine. I knew something of his history—how he foolish boy had been entrapped into a marriage with Bonfoy's daughter—and that French woman that no one knew any thing of, and about whom there were strange rumors. Now, Mrs. Arlington?"

"False, false—every word of it," she said, furiously.

"We shall see," he said, gathering up his coats and shawls. "I shall not appear much more in this business. Others will look after it. Sorry no one else is to see you. Good-by, Cobbett."

She gave a half shriek and shook her hand at him.

"May that boat of yours sink you, sink you, sink—"

She stepped herself and rushed back into her cabin, for strae passengers were looking out in wonder. I could not for a long while get rid of the dreadful idea of her appearance as I saw her then.

In the morning—a beautiful bright morning—we saw the fine gorgeous coast quite close. The steamer, which had come in the Spanish "ress on the deck talking with the captain, who was very excited. And the English consul was there too. The passengers were all gathered on the deck, and whispering.

At last the captain went down and two of the officers. He came up in a moment with a wild, scared face.

She was in her cabin; but it was fast locked. No one had seen her. No one could see her, or ever did see her again. That deadly look given to Mr. Colter proved to be the last look she gave to mortal man. When the anxious captain had at last forced the door open, she was found living in her berth quite dead and cold; and the ship's doctor pronounced that she had died of poison.

When the English newspapers got out to the Brazils, on all board of the steamboat Colter's murder of a young officer who had married a half French mulliner against the wishes of his family.

The murder was the papers' meat, and got away—it was believed in a Brazilian packet—but they got, according to their favorite phrase, that "the offender of justice would soon be on her track."

Mr. Colter made the return voyage successfully, and much improved in his health, and is now the junior partner Sergeant Colter, who stands next for Solicitor-General.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

WARNED A DISCIPLINE.—A contemporary opens a grave attack on the Bishop of Oxford with the remark that "every one knows he had a committee sitting for several years on Gun Cotton." Well, all we can say is, if he avoided getting into that material, we wonder they haven't long ago furnished a report.

NATIVE WIT.—Brown, being advised for the benefit of his system to take an occasional glass of grog, did so, but often, passed a sleepless night in trying to connect a riddle with about the only thing of pointing that spirit puts on edge.

Why is alacrity like the pole-star when they are wanted?—Because it is an invisible force.

Milton was once asked why he did not touch his drop-tors foreign languages. "I surely can compass enough for a woman," was his reply.

MYSTIC LINES OF HUMOR.—For of the submitted know the significance of wearing long ends of ribbon round the neck, and for what end it is made the following statement: When they wear the ends hanging in front it means "the last is married," and when a gay shouter, that "she is engaged;" over the left shoulder, that "she has a fellow engaged;" and when they are thrown back, that down the back it means "boys, come follow me." If this is not enough to let the world know, I don't know what I don't wish to have any thing to do with "any other fellow."

"Why did Joseph's brethren cast him into the Pit?"—"Because they didn't w—ish in the Family Circle!"

General Nay says "Congress may be able to reconstruct the southern states on a permanent basis, but I will never be able to reconstruct the women: they are perfectly un-fix'd."

A gentleman who takes the morning journals, and whose attention is apt to be monopolized by them, remarks rather severely to his wife at breakfast, "You never look at court-papers, when the lady replied, "if you indulge in your papers, I don't see why I shouldn't enjoy mine."

A man advertises for competent persons to undertake the sale of a patent medicine. He says that it will be profitable to the undertaker." No doubt of it.

A traveler, relating his experience in the East Indies, alluded to the great number of servants employed by gentlemen in that country. "For instance," he said, "I had four servants." "It is awful," said a lady, "to think of the duty of the day to bring me the paper; the second filled it; the third lighted it." "And what did the fourth do?" "The fool, he smoked it—I never could bear tobacco myself."

Our lectures should be like our shoes. If too small, they gall and pinch the feet, if too large, they will cause us to stumble and to slip.

A locomotive on a Western railroad has been ordered with the title, "The Last Resort," from the number of the passengers can say at the end of their journey.

It is vain to stick your finger in the water, and, pulling it out, to look for the hole that will remain. Just so will it be, ever large a place you occupy, the world will miss you for a little time.

Why is a horse like the letter O?—Because G makes it go. And what is the difference between the conundrum and the sentiment?—Why, one is the sentiment, and the answer; the other is an unit, Sir, with a queue.

A WRONG FIX.—"Many and many a year ago" a true lover proposed to his fair one, and the couple appeared at the gateway of the parsonage in a two not a hundred miles from Liverpool. Before the ceremony he by also claimed companionship with a hog, evidently the same to which he had formerly proposed. The astounding, the gallant youth left his lady and the pig, and returned to the house, where he remained for half an hour's doze, and entered the mansion. Soon re-appearing, he was seen to lead the pig to the gateway, and, after a little calling, in sentorian tones, "Come along, you ugly beast, you've got me into a fix!" Guiding the animal, the lady was received by her wondering lord, and soon "twas one flesh and one bone," and the minister was left in possession of a goodly supply of bacon.

BOARDING-HOUSE DIALOGUE.—"Your milk does not pay me income-tax, I suppose, Mr. Skidgrave?" "Why not, Sir?" "I shouldn't think it was rich enough."

SHAKSPEARE POPULARIZED.

"All's well that ends well," said the gentleman said when he wrote the pedestrian to hit him.

"Measure for measure," as the chemist said when he took a dose of his own medicine for a bleak draught.

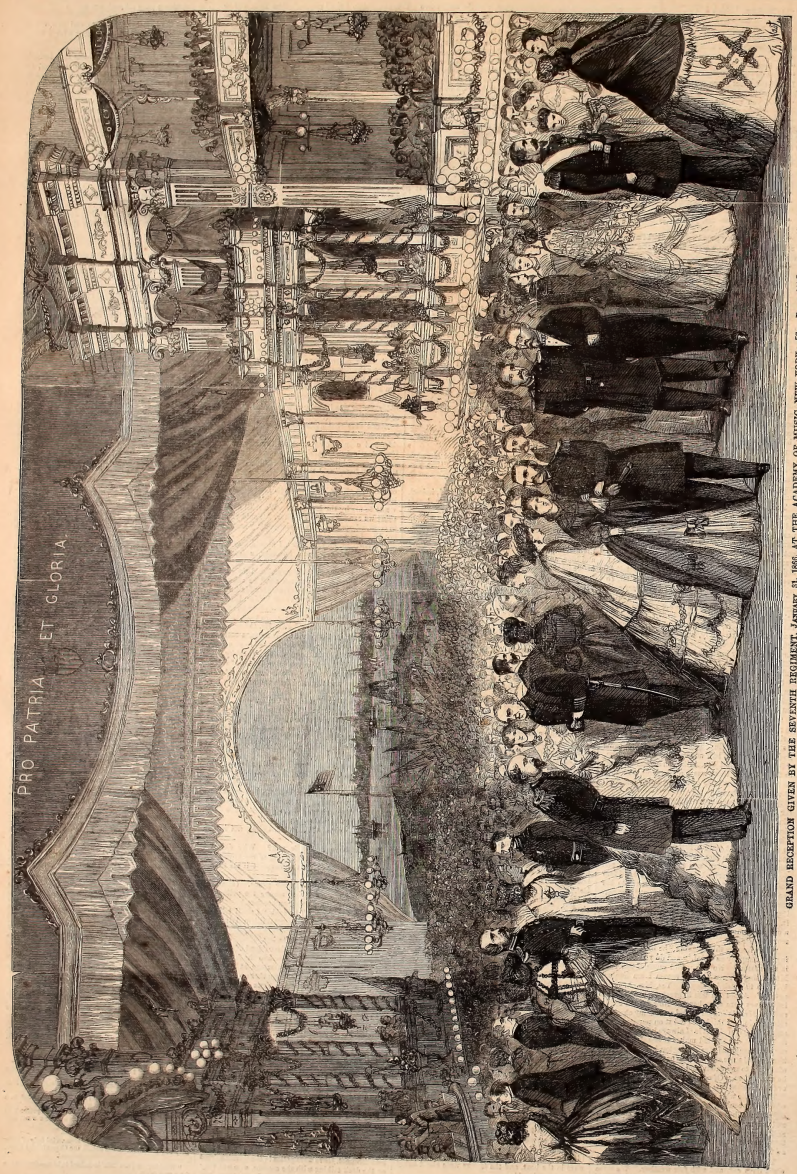
"As you like it," as the servant girl said when he drank his master's cold tea.

"A winter's tale," as the shopbreaker said when the proprietor asked for some cash.

What is the difference between hind-side and rig-stand, ing?—One is accent with inner to kill; the other, kill with intent to ment.

MUSICAL CATECHISM.

What is a rest?—Going out of the choir for refreshments during service.



What is called singing with "an understanding?"—Making the music on the floor with your feet.

What is a staccato movement?—Leaving the choir in a hurry because one is dissatisfied with the leader.

What is a well?—A gentleman of music who pretends to know everything about it a science, while he has not even the slightest ignorance.

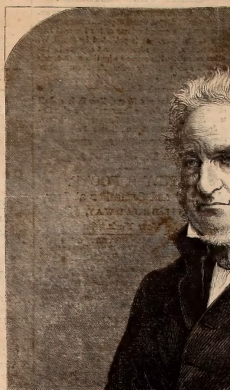
Miss Thompson says that every unmarried lady of sixty may consider that she has passed the Cape of Good Hope.

"Working for Bare Life" is defined to be making clothes for a new baby.

GRAND RECEPTION GIVEN BY THE SEVENTH REGIMENT, JANUARY 31, 1866, AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, NEW YORK.—[SEE PAGE 130.]

THE REV. DR. NOTT.

THE REV. DR. ELIPHALET NOTT, whose death occurred on the morning of January 29, was the veteran among American divines. He had nearly reached the end of his ninety-third year when he died. His life was more than coeval with that of the republic. Born in the midst of the exciting events which heralded our first Revolution, he lived to see the close of its second—a revolution more momentous than that of '76.



Dr. NOTT was born June 25, 1773. For almost two-thirds of a century he held the position in which he died—the Presidency of Union College. He was born of English ancestry. His father, a merchant, had been unfortunate in business, and was unable to give his son the advantages which at an earlier time he might have done. His mother, a woman of fine culture, exercised a great influence over his first intellectual training, and her discipline created in him an ardent desire to pursue his studies to the utmost practicable extent. While still a boy his brother, the Rev. SAMUEL NOTT, of Franklin, Connecticut, adopted him as a member of his own family, and taught him the elements of Greek and Latin. At the age of sixteen he took charge of a school in Plainfield, where he received much aid and encouragement from one of the most learned divines of that day, the Rev. Dr. JOHN BRIDGMAN. In his twentieth year he entered Brown University, and, after being connected with that institution for the brief period of six weeks, graduated with the honor of the first degree in the arts.

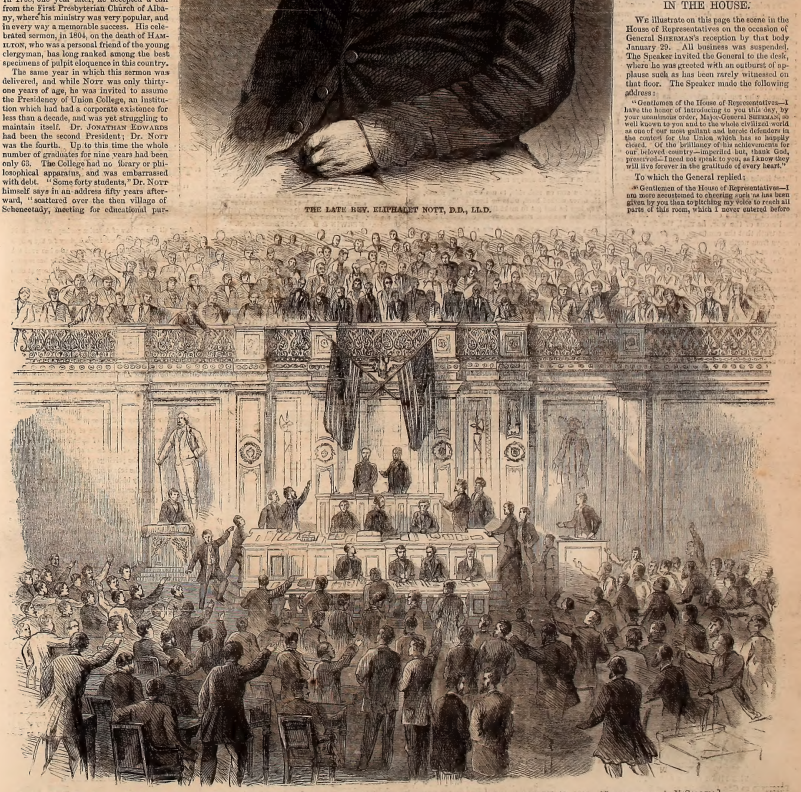
Returning to Plainfield he commenced to study for the ministry under Dr. BRIDGMAN, teaching school at the same time. In his twenty-fourth year he was licensed to preach. In 1798, one year later, he accepted a call from the First Presbyterian Church of Albany, where his ministry was very popular, and in every way a memorable success. His celebrated sermon, in 1804, on the death of HAMILTON, who was a personal friend of the young clergyman, has long ranked among the best specimens of pulpit eloquence in this country.

The same year in which this sermon was delivered, and while NOTT was only thirty-one years of age, he was invited to assume the Presidency of Union College, an institution which had had a corporate existence for less than a decade, and was yet struggling to maintain itself. Dr. JONATHAN EDWARDS had been the second President; Dr. NOTT was the fourth. Up to this time the whole number of graduates for nine years had been only 63. The College had no library or philosophical apparatus, and was embarrassed with debt. "Some forty students," Dr. NOTT himself says in an address fifty years afterward, "scattered over the then village of Schenectady, meeting for educational purposes in what was then a cabinet-maker's shop, with a single professor, was the whole of Union College." He bent himself to the work of removing all these disabilities and providing for these pressing needs. The State had as yet made no available appropriation, but through his energetic and persistent efforts a law was passed, in 1814, which may safely be said to have laid the foundation of the success of the institution. By this act, granting also liberal assistance to Hamilton and Columbia Colleges, Union College was to receive $200,000, to be appropriated to the payment of its debts, to the purchase of a library and apparatus, and to the erection of college edifices, etc.

From this time the College progressed rapidly. Dr. NOTT has himself been the most munificent benefactor to the institution.—Through his direct bounty the College will realize over half a million of dollars. Dr. NOTT had acquired a fortune through valuable inventions which he had contributed to society—among which was that of the first anthracite coal stove ever used in this country—and the College reaped a large harvest from his success.

To the last of his long life Dr. NOTT retained a very large proportion of the vigor and enthusiasm which had characterized his early career. It was not until September, 1860, that he ceased to appear in the lecture-room. In 1863 he presided at the annual Commencement of the College. Since then his decline has been gradual, and death came to him as winter follows upon autumn, after the rich and abundant harvest of life had been fully reaped.

THE LATE REV. ELIPHALET NOTT, D.D., LL.D.



GEN. SHERMAN'S RECEPTION IN THE HOUSE.

WE illustrate on this page the scene in the House of Representatives on the occasion of General SHERMAN'S reception by that body January 29. All business was suspended, The Speaker invited the General to the desk, where he was greeted with an outburst of applause such as has been rarely witnessed on that floor. The Speaker made the following address:

"Gentlemen of the House of Representatives—I have the honor of introducing to you this day, by your unanimous order, Major-General SHERMAN, so well known to you and to the whole civilized world as one of our most gallant and heroic defenders in the contest for the Union which has so happily closed. Of the brilliancy of his achievements for our beloved country—imperiled but, thank God, preserved—I need not speak to you, as I know they will live forever in the gratitude of every heart."

To which the General replied:

"Gentlemen of the House of Representatives—I am more accustomed to cheering cars; the last been given by you than to pitching my voice to reach all parts of this room, which I never entered before save in those galleries. I can simply say I thank you from my heart for the reception you have given me. I hope on future occasions to deserve the good will you have now. I shall endeavor to do all I can to deserve it."

GENERAL SHERMAN'S RECEPTION IN THE UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JANUARY 29, 1866.—[SKETCHED BY A. M CALLUM.]

General SHERMAN, after being introduced by the Speaker to the members thronging around him, repaired to a seat in the back part of the House, where he listened with great attention to Mr. RAYMOND'S able speech on reconstruction. He is said afterwards to have, in a private conversation, cordially indorsed the sentiments uttered by Mr. RAYMOND.

RECEPTION OF THE SEVENTH REGIMENT.

We illustrate on page 108 the grand reception given on the evening of January 31 by the Seventh Regiment, National Guard, in this city. The Academy of Music and Irving Hall were connected together, forming one immense edifice for the occasion. The Academy was profusely decorated with flowers and drapery. Along the balconies of the first tier, the red field of drapery, were inserted the names of those members of the regiment who rose to the higher ranks of the army during their term of service. Among these names were those of Generals GANSEVOORT, JARDINE, DURYEA, M'ARMEN, GURNEY, SHALER, and M'NEIL. The balusters of the second tier were twined with evergreen and hung with white and gold drapery, relieved with touches of pink. Rustic baskets of flowers were placed here and there, overshadowing the snowy ground-work of the festoons, each panel of which bore the name of a soldier of the war. On the third tier deep blue and gold and silver drapery, with white lettering, and knapsacks and flags were used with good effect.

Conspicuous on the stage was a scenic painting representing Fort Fed-ral Hill, occupied by the regiment in 1862, with a view of Baltimore in the back ground. Irving Hall was used as a banquet saloon.

The principal feature of the evening's entertainment was the address delivered by Major-General JOHN A. DIX. He recounted the valuable services rendered by the Seventh Regiment at an early stage of the war, and again in 1862 and 1863, and their conduct in the great riot in New York city. The crowning glory of the regiment, he said, was the large number of officers it had furnished to other organizations. "I hold in my hand," he said, "a roll of five hundred and fifty-seven members of your regiment who received commissions in the army, the navy, or the volunteer service. Nine-tenths of the number were serving with the regiment when the war broke out. Three rose to the rank of Major-General, nineteen to the rank of Brigadier-General, twenty-nine to the rank of Colonel, and forty-six to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. Many whose names are on this roll of honor are sleeping in soldiers' graves. Others are moving about with mutilated limbs and with frames scarred by honorable wounds, the silent but expressive memorials of faithful and heroic service."

General DIX then reviewed the momentous events connected with the close of the war. As among the lessons of the war, he said, the first "is the great truth that the course of military success is always from north to south—from frosts and snow to flowers and sunshine. Our very instincts teach us that it must be so, and all history confirms it. It is not because the southern nature is less spirited or less capable of high and heroic achievement, but because the northern muscle, educated under a colder sky and through more invigorating influences of climate, acquires more compactness, tenacity, and strength, carrying with it for the mental and physical conditions always assimilate) a greater moral power or endurance. Southern races are, for the most part, precipitate, impassioned, fiery valorment, sometimes breaking down all opposition by force of their resistless impetuosity. Northern races, on the other hand, are calm, deliberate, persistent, determined, and as immovable as a rock against which wind and storm are idly expending their fury." The political tone of the latter portion of his speech was conservative. He advocated forbearance even in the assertion of our undeniable rights.

At the conclusion of this address the floor was cleared for the dance, and hundreds of couples took their positions, and executed quadrilles, polkas, galops, and waltzes until midnight. Among the prominent guests present at the reception were Generals BARLOW, "Baldy" SMITH, ANDERSON, HAZEN, and FORTER.

We give on this page a representation of the Fifth Corps' badge presented on the evening before the ball to General R. N. BOWERMAN by his old comrades of 7th G Company, Seventh Regiment. It was manufactured by Messrs. D. AUSTIN & SON, of this city, and is a Maltese cross of solid 18-carat gold, having on its face the coat-of-arms of the State of Maryland, surmounted by the national emblems, suspended to which by a white ribbon is the Seventh Regiment badge, the whole attached to a gold clasp, in the centre of which is a Brigadier-General's star set in brilliants.

General BOWERMAN, a native of Maryland, had been in business in this city for some years previous to the rebellion, at the commencement of which he was appointed in the Seventh Regiment and served with them in the campaign of '61. On their return from Washington, on the recommendation of his Captain, he was commissioned First Lieutenant in the Eleventh New York regiment, "Ellsworth's Zouaves." He fought at Bull Run, and was, in 1862, promoted Captain, and there served on Gen. Rodman's staff. He afterwards left the army on commission by the disbandment of his regiment. He fought with the Seventy-Third New York, without rank, in the Red River campaign, and in the Banks campaign. In the Wilderness he fought with the rank of Colonel, and when General DUNCAN was wounded he took the place of the latter at the head of the Maryland Brigade. This brigade had become attached to the Fifth Corps. August 24, 1864, he received a wound in the battle of the Weldon Railroad. In the battle of "Five Forks" he was again wounded. His brigade in that battle captured 1700 prisoners, of which General BOWERMAN took 600. He retired from the service with the rank of Brigadier-General, and was appointed Deputy-collector of the port of Baltimore.

THE SINGULAR MAN.

THERE was a young man, you may think very strange,
But sometime or other a little deranged;
And if it be true, that I here have said of,
He was once a mere infant, but age made him old.

His face was the oddest that ever was known,
His mouth stood across 'twixt his nose and his chin;
And whenever he spoke, it was with his nose;
And in talking he always made some sort of noise.

He'd an arm on each side, to use when he'd please,
He never worked hard, when he found it his ease;
Two legs he had got to make him complete,
He thought was most strange, as I much and sure he feet.

His legs, as folks say, he could use at his will,
And when he was walking, he never stood still;
He never had yet seen his equal, I'll say you burst,
For one leg or Father would always go first.

Another strange thing as e'er I did meet,
Was when he was hungry he always did eat;
He drank when he was dry, and then, if you'd note,
Whatever he drank always went down his throat.

If this animated fellow had a river to cross,
If he couldn't get over, he said where he was;
And though he ne'er went off the dry ground,
So great was his luck that he never was drowned.

Another strange thing about him I'll tell,
For when he was sick he was always unwell;
He gave a deep sigh, then oped his mouth wide,
And somehow or other this odd Fellow died.

But the reason he died, and the cause of his death,
Was simply, poor soul, for the want of more breath;
And now he is left in the cold earth to moulder,
If he had lived a day longer, he'd have been a day older.

THE FIFTH CORPS BADGE,
PRESENTED TO GEN. BOWERMAN BY THE 7TH REGIMENT.

THE PEOPLE'S HISTORIAN.

MRS. ANN S. STEPHENS, the great American authoress and talented writer of popular romance, has now lefted the second volume of her Pictorial History of the War. It is published by Mr. B. W. HITCHCOCK, whose advertisement appears in another column. His reasons why this work excels all others are especially commended to our readers' attention.—Communicated.

THE FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL, New York, and all other popular hotels, use BERRYER'S Flavoring Extracts. Sold by druggists and grocers every where. JOSEPH BURNETT & CO., Boston, Proprietors.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HENRY S. FOOTE,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law,
117 BROADWAY,
New York.

THE GENERAL HISTORY OF FREE-MASONRY in Europe, from its foundation, in the year 715 B.C., to the present time, translated from the French of LAWRENCE, M. D., &c., is now published complete. It is now read it to be the most reliable, complete, and satisfactory history of the Fraternity ever published. Part I., containing 112 pages octavo, now ready. Price one Dollar. Sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of the price. Address

J. F. BIENNAN,
TRANSLATOR AND PUBLISHER OF FOREIGN MASONIC BOOKS,
Box 1059, P. O., Louisville, Kentucky, or
Box 1788, P. O., Washington, District of Columbia.
At the Options of the Subscriber.

CARPENTERS, etc., willing to manufacture the simplest and best SELF-KEY WIRE-TOOTH HAY or COTTON PRESS, can be invited to address, with stamp, S. H. JENNINGS, Bridgeport, Conn.

Pimples on the Face
REMOVED AT ONCE BY THE USE OF "UPHAM'S PIMPLE-SHIELD." MAILED TO ANY ADDRESS FOR 75 CENTS. By S. C. UPHAM, No. 55 SOUTH EIGHTH ST., PHILADELPHIA. Sold by all druggists.

BUST BLACK INK, 8 cents a gallon. Recipe sent free for 5 cents. Address Box 16, Hinsdale, N. H.

"THE RIGHT WAY."
A Radical Newspaper. Present circulation 65,000 copies weekly, reaching every State and Territory of the Union. A portion of one page devoted to advertisements at 50 cts. per line. Orders may be addressed to
GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., 38 Congress St., Boston.

MERWIN & BRAY,
MANUFACTURERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS IN
ARMS AND AMMUNITION OF ALL KINDS.

Sole Agents for the Ballard Breech Loading Sporting Rifles, of different calibres, and Eagle Arms Co.'s Bolt and Pocket Cartridge Revolvers. The Bolt Size carries the Army Size Balls, the Pocket Pistols the same size Balls as Colt's 6 in. These arms have no equal now in market. Send for circulars, and for Illustrated Circular. MERWIN & BRAY, 93 Broadway, N. Y.
P.S.—We manufacture all our own goods; also are Sole Agents for the celebrated Allen & Wheelock Army Revolvers.

REMOVAL.
G. L. AND J. B. KELTY, DEALERS IN
WINDOW SHADES AND CURTAIN MATERIALS,
To 447 Broadway, between Howard and Grand Streets.

Superfluous Hair Removed
From all parts of the body in five minutes, without injury to the skin, by "CRUMA DEPILATORY POWDER." Mailed to any address for $1 25, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. Sold by all druggists.

LATE IMPORTATIONS.
Percy's Iron and Steel. Tate's Petroleum. Kurt's Mineral Kingdom. Jarob's Precious Metals. Russell's Atlantic Cable, &c., &c., &c. IRVAN NOSTRAND, No. 192 Broadway, Publisher and Importer. Send for Catalogue.

Miss Mulock's New Novel.
HARPER & BROTHERS New York,
Publish this Day:
A NOBLE LIFE.
BY THE AUTHOR OF
"John Halifax, Gentleman," "Christian's Mistake," "A Life for a Life,"
"The Head of the Family," "Olive," "The Ogilvies,"
"The Fairy Book," &c., &c.
12mo, Cloth, Beveled, $1 50.
From the London Examiner.
This is another of those pleasant tales in which Miss Mulock (henceforth to be known as Mrs. Craik) speaks, out of a generous heart, the purest truths of life. In the clothing of the skeleton of the story with warm flesh and blood the author of "John Halifax" uses her own magic arts. The chief of them are her sympathy with all that is bright and kind in human intercourse, and her habitual solution of all problems of life by reference only to the highest grounds of action. ... story, which has "Fint Volumtes Tun" for its motto, her main thought is that the most hopeless lot in life is to be accepted without murmur, but that there is no passive resignation in the right saying, Thy Will be done. For acquiescence in God's will implies the careful use of what powers are left, however feeble they may seem, in lifelong endeavor to procure the doing of it. There are more touches of pathos than of humor in the tale, which may ask some tears in the true reading of it.
Sent by mail to any part of the United States, postage prepaid, on receipt of $1 50.

Now Ready,
COMPLETE IN TWO VOLUMES,
THE Pictorial History
OF THE
War for the Union.
By MRS. ANN S. STEPHENS.
To be had only of Authorized Agents, and not in Book Stores, being SOLD BY SUBSCRIPTION ONLY.
THE TWO VOLUMES
Contain 1150 Pages,
Embellished with over
200 Splendid Engravings,
By first-class Artists, embracing Views of Battle-Scenes and Thrilling Incidents, Maps and Illustrations of Notable Events,
Portraits of all
The Prominent Union Generals,
And Portraits of all the Prominent Confederate Officers,
The whole forming a
COMPLETE AND RELIABLE HISTORY OF THE WAR FROM ITS COMMENCEMENT TO ITS CLOSE:
Giving a graphic picture of the great Drama of War, its bloody encounters, frightful scenes, hair-breadth escapes, individual daring, desperate charges, personal anecdotes, &c., &c., gleaned from eye-witnesses of and participants in the terrible scenes described—a truthful, living reflex of all matters of interest connected with this the most gigantic of human struggles.
Also a complete
CHRONOLOGICAL RECORD,
Giving every Event in the Order of its Occurrence.
THE IMMENSE SUCCESS
Which has already crowned the efforts of the Publisher proves this work to be
"THE PEOPLE'S HISTORY,"
"THE BOOK FOR THE MILLION,"
"The Cheapest and Best History Published."
Among all the writers of America perhaps no one could be found more capable of writing a history for the people than Mrs. ANN S. STEPHENS. No person who has read the historical romances which first gave this lady her reputation will doubt her ability to produce a history at once truthful and brilliant. Without deviating from facts she has spread the charm of her great descriptive powers over actual events, throwing them upon the pages of history with a distinctness and force that gives them the charm of romance, while every battle she describes is as truthfully delineated as the dullest writer could give them, and each event can be depended upon as authentic in fact and detail.
REASONS WHY THIS HISTORY EXCELS ALL OTHERS.
1st. It is a well-written and truthful narrative of events as they occurred, and not a political text-book, nor designed to pander to party feelings or to party interests.
2d. It is not a mere expression of private opinions, or laudation or condemnation of individuals, but a clear and lucid exposition of the deeds of war, leaving to the readers' judgment the privilege of deciding upon the merits or demerits of the actors engaged.
3d. It is the only history published containing the portraits of the Confederate officers engaged in the War.
4th. It is the only history containing a complete Chronological Record.
5th. It is the best printed, most handsomely illustrated work of 1150 pages now being published, at the exceedingly low prices for which it is sold.
Cost to Subscribers.
BOTH VOLUMES,
Bound in Cloth, Marbled Edges..... $6 00
Bound in Embossed Leather..... 7 00
Bound in Sheep (Library Style)..... 7 00
Bound either in Embossed Leather or Sheep, Gilt Edges..... 8 00
Specimen Copies mailed on receipt of price.
Subscriptions
Received by the Publisher and his authorized Agents, by whom the work will be delivered, free of expense, on receipt of the price. An Agent wanted in every town in the United States. Liberal inducements given to Canvassers. Address
B. W. HITCHCOCK,
PUBLISHER,
14 Chambers Street,
NEW YORK.

CONSTITUTION

LIFE SYRUP,

COMPOSED OF

IODIDE POTASSIUM,

WITH THE COMPOUND CONCENTRATED FLUID EXTRACT OF VALUABLE MEDICINAL ROOT AND HERBS.

PREPARED BY

WILLIAM H. GREGG, M.D.,

Graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, formerly Assistant Physician in the Blackwell's Island Hospitals, late Medical Inspector of the New York State Volunteer Depôts, under Governor Edwin D. Morgan.

Constitution Life Syrup

HAS PRODUCED A REVOLUTION IN MEDICINE.

What many scientific incredible is that many diseases hitherto considered hopelessly incurable are frequently cured in a few days or weeks, and by comparatively little investigations of the literal-minded and solicitude to cures which were to parallel at the present day.

During the past five years we have contended with obstacles, and overcome opposition, as herculean as were ever encountered by any reformers.

RAPIDITY OF CURE,

Some say, "Your cures are too quick. Those other doctors do their permanents, and think that disease can only be cured by slow, comparatively process of "doctoring."

This is our reply: In health the body, like a well-balanced machine, is in a state of equilibrium; when, then, any cause, down gain on side of the scale, we have the effect of disease. What is requisite is to restore the normal equilibrium of the elec-

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

is so effected and operates entirely for all diseases originating from an impure blood, as SCROFULA (TUBERCULOUS) and for all (hereditary) DISEASES transmitted from PARENT TO CHILD.

PARALYSIS.

It is now generally admitted that CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP is the only cure by means of restoration in the vitality to the nerves, that we are not aware of, because that it is emphatically the Great Life-giving Power.

DYSPEPSIA.

INDIGESTION, WEIGHT AT STOMACH, FLUTTERING, LIVER COMPLAINT, WANT OF APPETITE, BAD BREATH, CONSTIPATION, MELANCHOLY.

SCROFULA.

STRUMA, KING'S EVIL, GLANDULAR SWELLINGS, ERYSIPELAS, CONSUMPTION, SALT RHEUM.

This taint (HEREDITARY AND ACQUIRED), filling life with untold misery, is, by all usual medical remedies, incurable.

RHEUMATISM

(ARTHRITIS), LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, GOUT, TIC DOULOUREAUX.

If there is any disease in which the CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP is a sovereign, it is in Rheumatism and its kindred affections. The most intense pains are relieved in a remarkably short time—sometimes swellings are reduced. Cases, chronic or virulent, of twenty or thirty years' standing, have been cured by us.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Purges the system entirely from all the evil effects of MERCURY, removing the bad Breath, and curing the Weak Joints and Rheumatic Pains which the use of Calomel is sure to produce. It leaves no Spongy Gums, and secures the Teeth as firmly as ever.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, like

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES,

And all other difficulties of this kind, which so much disfigure the outward appearance of both males and females, rendering them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

For all Forms of Ulcerative Diseases,

Ulcer of the Nose, Throat, Tongue, Palate, Forehead, or Scalp, no remedy has ever proved its equal.

Many Persons upon Reaching Middle Age, regarding upon a diseased action of the Liver, are very unpleasant to the party subject to it. A few bottles of CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP will correct the secretion, and remove the depôt, which is directly under the skin.

Diseases of the Liver, giving rise to Languor, Dizziness, Indigestion, Weak Stomach, or an universal or cancerous condition of that organ, accompanied with burning or other unpleasant symptoms, will be relieved by the use of

Constitution Life Syrup.

As a General Blood-Purifying Agent, the LIFE SYRUP stands unrivaled by any preparation in the world.

THE RICH AND POOR

Are liable to the same diseases. Nature and Science have made the CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP for the benefit of all.

PURE BLOOD

Produces health in man and woman; and if the constitution is neglected in youth, disease and early death is the result. Both of these and the means are so near at hand, and within the reach of all.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

IS THE POOR MAN'S FRIEND, AND THE RICH MAN'S BLESSING.

Buy it, Take it, and be Cured.

WILLIAM H. GREGG, M.D.,

Sole Proprietor,

NEW YORK.

SOLD BY EVERY DEALER IN MEDICINE IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

MORGAN & ALLEN,

WHOLESALE DRUGGISTS, AGENTS,

No. 46 Cliff Street, New York.

SOLD WHOLESALE BY

JOHNSON HOLLOWAY & COWDEN, Philadelphia, Pa.
GEORGE C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass.
FULLER, FINCH & FULLER, Chicago, Ill.
JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio.
COLLINS BROTHERS, St. Louis.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

100,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.,

Worth $500,000!

TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,

AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$150 00
100 Gold Watches	100 00
100 Ladies' Gold Watches	100 00
500 Gold and Gents' Hunting Watches	75 00
10 U. S. Bonds	$50 and $100 00
300 Diamond Pins	7 00 to 10 00
300 Diamond Rings	7 00 to 10 00
3000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 00 to 10 00
300 Ladies' Uniform Diamond Rings	4 00 to 10 00
8 00 Elegant Gold and Steel Lockets	4 00 to 10 00
1000 Elegant Pens, Silver-mounted Holders	4 00 to 10 00
100 9 Gold Watches, Full Jewelled Cases	4 00 to 6 00
8 000 Gold Lockets, Plain and Engraved	3 00 to 6 00
5000 Tea, Dessert, & Table Spoons, per doz.	12 00 to 14 00
5000 Dessert and Table Forks, per doz.	14 00 to 15 00
4000 Butter Knives, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
4000 Sugar Shells, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
31000 Other Articles	4 00 to 10 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put in envelopes, sealed up and mix d; and, when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificates you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. One of these envelopes will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents, 5 for $1; eleven for $2; 40 for $5; 25 for $10; and 100 for $15.

Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y. (ESTABLISHED 1850.)

Agents wanted in every city and town in the United States. Circulars and terms to agents sent on receipt of stamp.

Alcock's Porous Plasters

A celebrated physician says he was amazed at the great number of beneficial infections produced by one of these Plasters. He attributes this absolute power to one virtue just below the breast-bone; that one placed over the navel will cure hysterics as well as dysentery, and affections of the bowels.

CURE OF VARICOSE VEINS.

CITY POINT, VA., January 24, 1865.

T. ALCOCK & CO.—Seeing your notice in the Police Gazette, I got four of your Porous Plasters, and put them on the parts where the pains were most severe, and in less than twelve hours could walk as well as ever. I could hardly believe it, but it was true. I wanted to see if the lameness would come back on me or not, so I did more walking that day than I had done in a week. The next day I had to walk a great deal, but I put on a plaster there, and in two hours the pain was all gone; nor have I felt it since. Certainly they are the best application for the cure of pain in the side, back, or bowels, and for varicose or enlarged veins. I have ever known; and I would not be without them on any account.

YOURS, truly, JOSEPH GATEWOOD.

(From the Rev. J. W. Poland's Autobiography.)

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

It was early in the spring of 1855 that this Compound was first introduced to my notice. I had been for some time with an irritation of the throat, attended with a distressing cough. I had for some months previous sought this or preparation, having for its basis the tonic bark of white pine, might be compounded with it such medicines as the state of the throat and lungs. To test the value of it in disease as above mentioned, I availed a small quantity of the same, and in less than three days, and gave it in teaspoonfuls doses. The result was obtained. The distressing irritation of the throat was removed, the cough subsided, and a speedy cure was effected. Soon after this I was sent to a help for Leadville, Col. Ter., who had been suffering for some weeks with a bad cough, accompanied with pain in the breast, and had raised considerable with blood. She soon found relief, and sent for more. She has since been owned in Chicago, Ill. In December, 1855, I first advertised it under the name of WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

As a remedy for kidney complaints the White Pine Compound stands unrivaled. Sold by druggists.

This great New England Remedy is now offered to the afflicted, having been proved by the test of many years in the New England States, where its merits have become well known. It cures sore throat, coughs, diphtheria, bronchitis, spitting of blood, and pulmonary affections generally. It also cures all diseases of the kidneys, such as the kidneys and bladder, and gravel; and for piles and scurvy it will be found valuable. Sold by druggists and dealers in medicine generally.

GEO. W. SWETT, M.D., PROPRIETOR, Boston, Mass.

BURNHAMS & VAN SCHAAK, Chicago, Ill., JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio, GENERAL AGENTS FOR THE WEST.

Pile Remedy

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of piles in a few days. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it freely. It is warranted.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

Coughs

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Croup, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

THE EVANS ORIGINAL WORLD-RENOWNED

GIFT BOOK ESTABLISHMENT

(INSTITUTED BY G. G. EVANS in 1850).

It has outlived all Competitors.

All books sold at publishers' retail prices, and a Beautiful and Useful Present, worth from 25 cents to 100 dollars, given with each book.

AGENTS WANTED EVERY WHERE.

Early information to persons who will act as agents. Send for the new classified catalogue, containing a list of books and a new and popular plan, also instructions for forming clubs, &c., for the G. G. EVANS GIFT BOOK ENTERPRISE, 439 Washington street, Boston.

Editors inserting the above will receive a handsome present on receipt of their paper containing the same.

THE DAYS of BRASS JEWELRY Are Over.

THE COSMOPOLITAN

JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,

Capital, $2,500,000.

Great One-Price Gold Sale.

Sell no Brass or so-called Plated JEWELRY.

WARRANT ALL JEWELRY GOLD,

OR NO SALE.

Let it be distinctly understood that this is emphatically a GOLD SALE, by an association of manufacturers, on a one-price average system, and that not a single article of brass or plated jewelry is included in the whole immense stock.

250,000

Pieces, Gold and Silver Watches, Diamond Rings, Sets of rich Silverware, Fine Gold Jewelry, Photograph Albums, &c.,

Worth $2,500,000,

All to be sold for two dollars each, an average price of one-fifth the usual cost, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.

INSURING THE DOLLAR WORTH FOR $2.

☞ THE PROOF.—We guarantee to send any customer, in exchange for the least article they may get for $2, a splendid really Jewelled Stem-winding silver Butter-Dish as Cluster, fine plate, valued at $10, or a beautiful 10-piece ture morocco Photograph Album, valued at $6; and you have a positive choice of getting a Fine Gold Watch or Plate.

Send 25 cents for the Golden Envelope, containing valuable receipts and songs; and one of the sealed Certificates, which are well mixed and taken out regardless of choice, will be sent, which will inform you what you can get for $2, from a Butter-Dish or Caster, worth $10, to a Watch or Grand Piano, worth $500. Also will be sent our new color, containing list of articles and full particulars; also terms to agents, to whom great inducements are offered.

Two for 50 cents, with a beautiful Photograph; 5 for $1, with a silver case-fruit, worth $1; 11 for $2, with a Silver Napkin Ring, worth $2; 17 for $3, with a Silver Fruit Knife, worth $3; 30 for $5, with a Gold Pen, Extension Case, worth $6; 100 for $10, with a Gold Double Locket, worth $15; 160 for $15, with a fine Silver Watch, worth $18; 190 for $20, with a Silver Hunting Watch, worth $40.

In all cases, upon receipt of the money, the premiums as above will be sent with the certificates.

Address CALKINS & CO., Managers, Broadway, New York.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

501 BROADWAY (36 Nicholas Block),

Photographic Materials, Stereoscopic Goods,

WAR VIEWS,

SCENERY, GROUPS, &c.

Photograph Albums, Gold-plated Jewelry, Cartes de Visite of Noted Persons, &c., &c.

French Engiish, and American Novelties.

PORTABLE PRINTING OFFICES!

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Steamboats, Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular sent free. Six-ed Type, Cuts, &c., 19 cts. ADAMS PRESS COMPANY, 76 AND 78, New York.

Chapped Hands and face,

SORE LIPS, CHILBLAINS, &c.—HIGHAM & CO.'S CAMPHOR-ICE WITH GLYCERINE, prevents chapped hands, &c., immediately, and will keep the skin soft and clear even in the severest weather. Sold by druggists. Price 25 cents. Sent by mail for 28 cents. HEGEMAN & CO., Chemists and Druggists, 488 Broadway.

PHARAOH'S SERPENTS.

Eggs of Pharaoh's Serpents, each of which, when ignited, will evolve in the air a most beautiful, elastic, and extraordinary serpent. Price 25 cents. Sent by mail for 28 cents. HEGEMAN & CO., Chemists and Druggists, 488 Broadway.

$1500 PER YEAR! We want agents every where to sell our Patent Self-Inking Printing Machines. Three new kinds. Under a 4 paper fold. Warranted five years. Above salary or large commission paid. The only machines sold in the United States for less than $40 which any fully licensed Dr., Wheeler & Wilson, Grover & Baker, Singer & Co., & Batchelor's all other cheap machines are infringements. Circulars free. Address or call upon Shaw & C° Biddeford, Maine.

MUJAVIRO

Is the most delicious and lasting of all perfumes. The odor is like a bouquet of sweet violets, heliotrope, and hellotrope. What can be more fragrant?

For sale by all druggists and at all fancy stores.

VIOLINS and BOWS

Sent to any part of the U. S. on receipt of following prices: GERMAN. Best for amateurs, $2 50, $3, $4, $5, $6, $8.
DOUBLE BASS, $8, $7, $9, $11, $13, $15, $17, $19.
FRENCH. Best for amateurs, $5, $6, $7, $10, $12, $15.
ITALIAN. $6, $10, $14, $16, $18, $20, $24, $30.
OLD AMATI VIOLINS, $40, $50, $60, $75, to $200.
MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of every description at lowest New York prices. Send stamp for price-list.
Especial attention given to this department.
FREDERICK BLUME, 205 Bowery.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.

ONE DOLLAR EACH.

PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 29, 1865.

AN EXACT AND RELIABLE POCKET TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen. Correctly constructed on strictly mercantile principles. Scientific principles, and warranted to DESCRIBE SOLAR TIME with absolute certainty and the most perfect accuracy. It never can be wrong. It requires no key or winding. IT NEVER NEEDS REGULATING, and can never get out of order. It is a most remarkable article. Approved by the Faculty and ALL WHO HAVE SEEN IT. Any child can learn how into this country from Paris, where it is secured by Letters Patent. Price for a limited number, only one dollar each. Every watch dial, in gold or silver gilt case, only $1 each; postage paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Safe delivery guaranteed. Beware of imitations, as the machine is in accordance with a set of mathematical rules, by adjusting a motion to which (with a slight alteration of name) every watch or clock can be made to keep true time. All orders must be addressed to J. W. DELAHUNT & CO., SOLE PROPRIETORS, 208 Broadway, New York.

WATCHES AT WHOLESALE.

Full sale for spendthrifts and others who are fond of gambling in the trade. Price-list now ready. Address, LIONEL DAVIDSON, 49 Ann st., N. Y.

Central Park SKATING and POCKET LANTERN.

No person should skate after dusk without this Lantern, attached to the arm or carried in the hand. It is adapted for any pocket.

Send to any address on receipt of $1.

BIRDSALL & SMITH BROS., 102 Bleecker st., New York.

FIRST PREMIUM IMPROVED

$5 SEWING $5 MACHINE.

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originality and Merit Must, Sooner or Later, Prevail, and, Guided by Talent, Succeed.

Reader, in 1865, the celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with its many valuable improvements, simplified and elegantly-ornamented Novelty, is sounding in spontaneous, sure-toned strains, and invoking favorable reviews with double or single thread of all kinds. Makes the STRONGEST SEWING, and works forward and backward by hand, and with extraordinary rapidity, making stitches resembling in many respects those of the WHEELER & WILSON, HOWE, GROVER & BAKER, SINGER & CO., and other high-priced machines, at one-tenth the cost. Sold out of order in 5 years. It has taken the PREMIUM at STATE FAIRS, and received the approval of all who have seen it. Sales and of those who have used it. It is the only practical sewing machine for the million ever offered. Cheap, that is PATENTED. ALL OTHER sewing machines at the same price are IMPERFECTIONS.

"For the drawmaster it is invaluable; for the household it supplies a want long felt."—New York Tribune.

"With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common spool of cotton, sews the fair seam exactly like hand-sewing."—New York Times.

Agents wanted in every county. Circulars, containing full information, sent free. Address,

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY, Office 102 Nassau Street, New York.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

CHEAPEST AND BEST. Price of Presses, $10, $16, $25, and $38; $75 and $150. Type, $1 per pound. $3, $5, $6, $8, and $7. Send for a circular to the LOWE PRESS COMPANY, 66 Fulton st., New York.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make SIX Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine an invention acquiring needed by every body. Or a sample sent by mail for 50 cents. Address as directed, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 159 Chatham Square, New York.

DUMB-WAITERS.

JAMES MURRAUGHS celebrated DUMB-WAITERS are manufactured only at No. 1335 Broadway, New York, where a model can be seen.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR FEBRUARY, 1866.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or Copies for $20 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $8 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of first-class Advertisements for their Magazine, at the following rates: one quarter of a page, each Number, $25; one half, $45; whole page $85. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any other publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 120,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS, at $4 00 each; or 6 Copies for $20 00. Payment invariably in advance.

The BOUND VOLUMES OF HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent to any part of the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of $2 25 per Volume.

Cloth Binding . . . . . 50 cts. Volume.
Half Morocco . . . . . 75 " "

Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—One Dollar per Fifty Cents per line for the first insertion. Ten per cent for outside Advertisements, each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

ST. VALENTINE'S POST-OFFICE.

Quick, Cupid Clerks! as swift as doves, Love's mail to every box assign.
Obey, and fly! for I am Love's Postmaster General, VALENTINE.

New Books

PUBLISHED BY
HARPER & BROTHERS,
NEW YORK.

Sent by Mail, postage prepaid, on receipt of the price.

A Noble Life. A Novel. By MISS MULOCK, Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman," "Christian's Mistake," &c. 12mo. Cloth, $1 50.

Wives and Daughters. A Novel. By MRS. GASKELL, Author of "Mary Barton," "Cranford," &c. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 50.

The Belton Estate. A Novel. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE, Author of "Doctor Thorne," "Framley Parsonage," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

Guy Deverell. A Novel. By J. S. LE FANU, Author of "Uncle Silas," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

Doolittle's China. Social Life of the Chinese: With some Account of their Religious, Governmental, Educational, and Business Customs and Opinions. With special but not exclusive Reference to Fuhchau. By Rev. JUSTUS DOOLITTLE. Fourteen Years a Member of the American Board. With over 150 Illustrations. In Two Volumes, 12mo, Cloth, $5 00.

Half a Million of Money. A Novel. By AMELIA B. EDWARDS. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

Plymouth Pulpit. Notes from Plymouth Pulpit: A Collection of Memorable Passages from the Discourses of Henry Ward Beecher. With a Sketch of Mr. Beecher and the Lecture-Room. By Abbott. Moore. A new Edition, revised and greatly enlarged. 12mo. Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

Prison Life in the South: at Richmond, Macon, Savannah, Charleston, Columbia, Charlotte, Raleigh, Goldsborough, and Andersonville, during the Years 1864 and 1865. By A. O. AMORY, late Lieutenant 1st New York Dragoons. Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

Rich'd Cobden, the Friend of America and Apostle of Free Trade: his Political Career and Public Services. A Biography. By JOHN MCGILCHRIST. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $1 50.

Prison Life in the South: at Richmond, Macon, Savannah, Charleston, Columbia, Charlotte, Raleigh, Goldsborough, and Andersonville, during the Years 1864 and 1865. By A. O. AMORY, late Lieutenant 1st New York Dragoons. Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

Rich'd Cobden, the Friend of America and Apostle of Free Trade: his Political Career and Public Services. A Biography. By JOHN MCGILCHRIST. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $1 50.

Plymouth Pulpit. Notes from Plymouth Pulpit: A Collection of Memorable Passages from the Discourses of Henry Ward Beecher. With a Sketch of Mr. Beecher and the Lecture-Room. By Abbott. Moore. A new Edition, revised and greatly enlarged. 12mo. Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

Half a Million of Money. A Novel. By AMELIA B. EDWARDS. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

Guy Deverell. A Novel. By J. S. LE FANU, Author of "Uncle Silas," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

The Belton Estate. A Novel. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE, Author of "Doctor Thorne," "Framley Parsonage," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

Wives and Daughters. A Novel. By MRS. GASKELL, Author of "Mary Barton," "Cranford," &c. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 50.

A Noble Life. A Novel. By MISS MULOCK, Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman," "Christian's Mistake," &c. 12mo. Cloth, $1 50.

Doolittle's China. Social Life of the Chinese: With some Account of their Religious, Governmental, Educational, and Business Customs and Opinions. With special but not exclusive Reference to Fuhchau. By Rev. JUSTUS DOOLITTLE. Fourteen Years a Member of the American Board. With over 150 Illustrations. In Two Volumes, 12mo, Cloth, $5 00.

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad St., New York,
(Two Doors from Wall.)

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks, Bonds, and Gold will receive our PERSONAL attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

MOTHERS!

Children die by thousands—Worms the cause—whose lives might have been spared, had they used VAN DEUSEN'S WAFER CONFECTIONS. Children are as fond of them as they are of Candy. Sold by Merchants. 25 Cts. a Box. Sent by mail on receipt of the price. VAN DEUSEN BROTHERS, Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

POLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 60 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail, at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $80 each.

A CURE
Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL, and disorders arising from excess, use

Smolander's Extract Buchu.

Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York, and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

WARD'S,
PERFECT FITTING
SHIRTS.

Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and Collars, sent free every where.

THE CASH CAN BE PAID TO EXPRESS COMPANY.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
S. W. H. WARD, No. 387 Broadway, New York.

MERCHANTS, BANKERS,
And others should send to all parts of the United States by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, 60 Broadway.

Ladies & Gentlemen
OUT OF THE CITY,
TAKE YOUR OWN MEASURE AND SEND TO
E. A. BROOKS, &c.
Importer and Manufacturer of
BOOTS, SHOES, &c.
575 Broadway, New York.

Directions for Measuring the Foot.

First. Place the foot upon a pieced paper and trace the outlines of same with a pencil, which will give the length and spread of the foot, as shown in figure A.
Second. Obtain the following measurements, in inches and fractions, with tape measure, as shown in figure B, viz:
1st.—The Ball of the foot.
2d.—The Low Instep.
3d.—The High Instep.
4th.—The Heel.
5th.—The Ankle.
6th.—The Calf.

Fig. B.

Fig. A.

50 MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP PER-CENT SAVED BY

Using B. T. Babbitt's Pure Concentrated Potash, or Ready Soap Maker. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or ley in its length and spread of foot, as shown in figure A. Second. Obtain the following measurements, in inches and fractions, with tape measure, as shown in figure B, viz:
1st.—The Ball of the foot.
2d.—The Low Instep.
3d.—The High Instep.
4th.—The Heel.
5th.—The Ankle.
6th.—The Calf.

B.T. BABBITT'S, SALERATUS 70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.

If you want healthy bread, use B. T. Babbitt's best medical Saleratus." Made from Common Salt." Bread made with this Saleratus exercises when baked, nothing but common salt, water, and flour. W. T. BABITT, Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., New York.

B.T. BABBITT'S STAR YEAST POWDERS 70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.

Light Biscuit, or any kind of Cake, may be made with this "Yeast Powder" in 15 minutes. No shortening is required when sweet milk is used. No. 64 to 74 Washington Street, New York.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.
Neuralgia and Rheumatism are among the most difficult diseases to cure, as from their attacks no tissue in the human body is exempt—as eye, ear, or calling, secure. Holloway's medicines are, without exaggeration, the only safe and sure remedies for these difficult. Sold every where.

Marvin's Patent
ALUM AND DRY PLASTER, FIRE AND BURGLAR
SAFES
Never lose their fire-proof qualities, corrode the iron, or mould their contents.
Sideboard and parlor safes for silverware.
MARVIN & CO.,
265 Broadway, New York.
721 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

CHINA AND GLASSWARE:
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway New York.
Four Doors below Broome Street,
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

TO LET.
The Four-Story Building, No. 81 Broad Street, 38 feet front. Possession 1st of May next. Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, Franklin Square.

PATENT REVERSIBLE
PAPER COLLAR
The Cheapest Collar Ever Invented,
Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides. Made in white, fancy and printed stitch.

Is made of the best Spring Steel Wire, and is just the thing to wear with Paper Collars, being far superior to elastic cord for holding "Butterflies," "Uniques," "Bows," &c., in place on the shirt button.

MARCH BROS., PIERCE & CO., AGENTS,
Winthrop Square, Boston.

Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf Supporters at the lowest Boston prices, by
BOWEN BROTHERS.....Chicago, Illinois.
J. LOWMAN & BRO.....Cincinnati, Ohio
MAYER & HAHCH.....Cleveland, Ohio.
CLEMENTS & CO.....Louisville, Kentucky.
C. CAPEN.....295 Broadway, New York.
WM. A. SWETNAM.....1 Bank St., Philadelphia, Pa.
A. BUSHMAN & CO.....Detroit, Michigan.

PATENT EXPANDED
STAR COLLAR
This Collar, showing a space for the cravat, excels all others by its superior shape and weight, and the exquisite finish and whiteness of the paper.

MARCH BROS., PIERCE & CO., AGENTS,
Winthrop Square, Boston.

Dealers can be supplied with the above Collars and Scarf Supporters at the lowest Boston prices, by

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

JOHN W. BARRATT & BROTHER,
MANUFACTURERS OF GLAZED PAPERS,
FOUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
ANY SIZE OR COLOR MADE TO ORDER WITH DISPATCH.

"American Union Company,"
Manufacturers of the New ORGAN-TONED PIANO, EQUAL, if not SUPERIOR, to any. Warranted in every particular. Warerooms and "Agency," 427 Broome St.

$3 00 to $5 00 A DAY
Guaranteed. Agents wanted. A good watch presented to each. Address with stamp,
Box 1955, P. O., Philadelphia.

WANTED—every man in the United States, who has lost either an Arm or Leg—to engage in a profitable business. Send Twenty-five Cents, for Sample, to A. F. BELCHER, Box 85, Philadelphia, Pa.

JAMES'S CELEBRATED LINIMENT
FOR NEURALGIA, RHEUMATISM, AND SCIATICA. WARRANTED. 3 Astor Place. Price One Dollar.

WARD'S
PAPER COLLARS
AND CUFFS FOR LADIES
& GENTLEMEN.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
387 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Ladies' Victoria Turn-over Paper Collar.

Ladies' Empress Turn-over Paper Collar.

Ladies' English Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies' American Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies French Paper Cuffs.

Ladies' English Paper Cuffs.

Gentlemen's Piccadilly Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Standing Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Turnover Paper Collar.

Gents. Reversible Paper Cuffs.

Gents. English Paper Cuffs.

Ladies' Collars from 75 cents to $2 per 100.
Gentlemen's Collars from $7 50 to $4 per 100.
CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—These are the only paper collars and cuffs that are made from pure linen stock.
NOTICE TO THE TRADE.—Wholesale Price-List sent by mail.

TRADE MARK

OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY.
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 65 Chambers Street, New York.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. X.—No. 478.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1866. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1866, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

PORTRAITS OF WASHINGTON.—[SEE PAGE 126.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1866.

AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION.

IT is now nearly eighty years since the Constitution of the United States was framed. The sagacity which moulded it is attested by the fact that it has adapted itself so long to the necessities of a nation which has increased and extended beyond precedent. No written national constitution has endured so long and prosperously. But wise and skillful as it is, it was the work of man, and, like all human work, it was not perfect. The fathers who made it foresaw that Time would reveal the necessity of change in some of its details, while its great principles of Justice and Liberty would remain forever immutable. They provided, therefore, for its amendment by means which should not in the least degree imperil the stability of the Government established by it, and various amendments have been already adopted.

The experience of eighty years has shown that in two essential points the Constitution was defective. These points were not unknown to its framers; but they were those which made the adoption of any constitution doubtful, and they saw that, to form the Union, some concession was essential. The Instrument, therefore, did not speak plainly and decidedly on either point. It left the terms destroy all claim of State Sovereignty, and it did not secure the equal rights of all the people of the country; and it is now clear that from that double obscurity the civil war proceeded. The injustice was continued by some of the States, and the doctrine of State Sovereignty was unanimously maintained in those States that a convenient constitutional pretext might be found for destroying the nation in which it contains the injustice. When the crisis came the rebellion justified itself as constitutional, and so thoroughly had the public mind been poisoned that the power of resistance was almost paralyzed. But it rallied, and the struggle was fierce and long, ending in the assertion written in the life-blood of thousands and millions of American citizens that the doctrine of State Sovereignty is not to be tolerated under any pretense, and that equal rights shall be universal.

It is obvious that after such a struggle the Constitution must be amended; for if we are to have a Constitution it ought certainly to express the unanimous convictions of the people sealed by their blood. And if the Constitution is ever to be enlarged or modified in any manner now is the time. The war is the ghastly proof of the weakness of certain parts of the instrument, and we can never strengthen those parts so securely as now. It is because this is the universal national conviction that the emancipation amendment was so readily passed.

But the moment that was adopted it changed certain fundamental provisions, and made others necessary. Thus the basis of representation and taxation has hitherto been the whole number of free persons, and, excluding untaxed Indians, three-fifths of all other persons. But the emancipation amendment abolishes the three-fifths five-fifths who have no political power, and, if they are to be thus counted, a gross inequality of representation is created in favor of those who are most alienated from the Government; and, still further, the consequence will be that, in the very section which is thus unjustly preferred, only half the population will be taxed without any representation whatever. An amendment to avoid so absurd a result is therefore justly necessary; and, under such circumstances, to complain of "tinkering the Constitution," is to complain of simple justice. The New Hampshire Democratic Convention and the Virginia Legislature are opposed to any constitutional amendment. But such opposition merely proves both its justice and necessity.

In amending the Constitution it will be always remembered by wise men that it is the fundamental law, and should contain only permanent principles. Temporary expedients are better attained by Congressional acts. Yet, as the fundamental law of the United States will be manifestly imperfect until it guarantees equal rights for every one of the people, we shall gladly hail and support every practicable measure toward this great result; and, meanwhile, let every man who knows that peace and progress are sure only as they are founded upon justice, do what he can to persuade public opinion to believe it.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

THE last solemn rite in commemoration of ABRAHAM LINCOLN has now been performed. As the historians at the Grecian games told the traditions of the country to the assembled Greeks, so the historian of the United States has recited the latest chapter of its story to the Congress and all the chief officers of the nation. The orator was most wisely chosen, and his discourse illustrates the immense advantage to a public speaker of severe literary training. MR. BANCROFT, of whom we last week published a portrait and sketch, is so accustomed to a comprehensive view of the sequence and relation of events, and to a graphic relation of them, that he treated the story of the war with thoroughness of grasp, completeness and felicity of description, and a severe but true eloquence. His words are exactly chiseled, and the force and precision of his history of the civil war in its causes and relations will secure a permanent value to this discourse.

The character of LINCOLN himself we could have wished estimated with a subtler sympathy. But it is hard for a man of purely intellectual temperament like the historian heartily to appreciate a simpler and more emotional nature like that of the late President. Posterity will see in him a greater man than his contemporaries can acknowledge. The latter days the poetic mist of increasing time would have enlarged him in the popular mind to a demi-god. And among all the incidents of his life none will be more fondly prized and remembered than that which THOMAS NAST has illustrated in this paper.

On Tuesday, April 4, the day after the capture of Richmond by the Union army, President LINCOLN entered the city. He came up as far as VARINA in the River Queen, and was thence drawn over in an open carriage to Richmond, where he met Admiral PORTER, who had by that time reached the wharf in the Malvern. About eleven o'clock the President walked up the streets of the late rebel capital, preceded by half a dozen marines, and accompanied by Admiral PORTER, Captain BELL, and some citizens who had come down ahead of his arrival. Crowds thronged the streets, and chief and eager among them the emancipated race, which called HOOVER'S Benediction upon their Liberator and FRANCIS the Greeted by. Ten days afterward those sad eyes that had seen the end of the great labor closed, and the anxious heart that had fear for the consequences, was stilled forever. The nation that loved him mourns for him, and will long mourn. It will be more. It will secure to the utmost the Liberty which, in the name of the nation, ABRAHAM LINCOLN proclaimed.

TAXATION OF OUR PUBLIC DEBT

IT was well known at the time, that many of our lending capitalists, among them Mr. ASTOR, were lately examined by the United States Revenue Commissioners on the question whether or not it is equitable for the General Government to impose a direct tax on such of its public debt as was held by citizens of the United States, the amount received to be applied to a sinking fund pledged to the ultimate payment of the principal of the debt. The ostensible reason for the imposition of this tax was the supposed inequality of existing legislation to meet the growing disposition in favor of a tax by the several States on the income derived from those securities. A report having been made on the subject to Congress since our last issue was made up, the injunction of secrecy imposed on the press is no longer in force, and we are glad to be able to notice this very important proceeding. The entire bill accompanying the report imposes an annual tax of one per cent. on the face of that portion of the debt which is payable in coin, and seven-tenths of one per cent. on the principal of the gold-bearing bonds. The tax is equivalent to a reduction of the rate of interest on the Seven-Thirties of one per cent. annually, and on the Five-Twenties and Ten-Forties each of seven-tenths of one per cent. annually, thus leaving the true rate payable in coin, the Seven-Thirties $5\frac{3}{10}$ per cent. instead of 6, and on the Ten-Forty bonds only $4\frac{3}{10}$ per cent. instead of 5 per cent., an unjust discrimination against the latter. The income derived from the reduction of rate of interest is left subject to the income tax of ten per cent. imposed by the United States, and is also subject to such State, county, or other tax as shall hereafter "be equally imposed and levied upon all incomes, or directly upon all real and personal property within the United States, subject to taxation." The tax by its terms excepts from its operation that portion of the debt which is held abroad, supposed to amount to $200,000,000, and applies to the residue, upward of $2,000,000,000, held at home. It is thus seen that the value of these securities will be greatly impaired if the bill pass, unless it shall be accompanied by exemption secured by the bill against the schemes of demagogues in the several States amounts to a flat equivalent for this forced reduction in the rate of interest. The arguments presented in the report of MR. HAYES, one of the Commissioners (for he does not directly responsible for the measure) in favor of the passage of the bill, are founded in part on the testimony given by those capitalists, a synopsis of which is published with the report; but we see nothing in the evidence thus taken to justify so large a reduction in the rate of interest, and hence we infer that the justification for it is found, if any exist, in the mass of testimony not reported, taken by the Commissioners, to ascertain the effect of present taxation on the industry and future growth of the country. We regret that we are not able to present a view of this testimony, but we can not shut our eyes to the conviction that the fear of State taxation is not the only motive for the bill, but that it is founded also on the apprehension that the burden of the debt will be found too oppressive. The Report states: "Our debt is not excessively large compared with our means of payment. Our interest paid is reasonable and extreme by just." . . . "A general system of indirect taxation on a scale as large as ours will either be abandoned for a better, or it will reduce the masses to pauperism and dependence," etc. The payments for local and general taxes are stated at $597,000,000, or within $125,161,781 of the entire net earnings of the people of the United States for 1860, which are quoted with approbation from the Social Science Review at $799,161,781, or 5 per cent. on the whole amount of property. According to the amount of Government tax the per-centages stated as necessarily charged by wholesale and retail dealers on their commodities reach consumers, and the payments amount to $125,161,781 over and above those entire net earnings.

An examination of these figures presents the monstrous fact that our annual payments for and by reason of all taxes require a constant invasion of the capital of those who pay, and hence the conclusion in the report that "the interest paid is unreasonable and extravagant," having reference of course to the amount of the debt. The remedies proposed are:

1. Such a change as will secure a reduction in the rate of interest, the amount to be applied to a sinking fund for the ultimate payment of the principal of the debt.

2. The imposition of a tax on the real and personal property in the United States according to its assessed value, for which purpose an amendment of the Constitution is proposed. This will relieve much of the industry of the United States from the burdens upon it which are now distributed.

3. A resort to specie payments, by means of a reduction in the weight of metal equivalent to the present difference between gold and our legal-tender paper.

If measures of this sweeping character are necessary for meeting the payments of the Government on the debt, of course be resorted to; but we have been accustomed to suppose, and we still think—although without the lights which the great body of testimony taken by the Commissioners must afford—that the resources of the country are ample for this purpose without resorting to this extraordinary measure. It has already been mentioned that MR. HAYES is solely responsible for this bill and report not undergoing examination in Congress; but all the Commissioners recommended that his report should be printed. We think that, on the strength of which MR. MCCULLOCH sent it in, especially recommending its consideration, but stating that he disagreed with its objects. The report is long, but the majority of the commission upon a partial consideration did not accede to the proposition to recommend the passage of the bill. The remarkable language shows that they neither dissented from it nor were willing to state that they were unfavorable to its passage. They merely did not agree "to recommend its passage." It was the possible fear that the foundations of the Government credit might be seriously shaken which induced this extraordinary act that has been observed in introducing this measure to the deliberations of Congress and the country.

If the alleged discontent with the exemption of the bonds from State taxation is a danger of being aggravated by the action of demagogues into a feeling calculated to impair the value of those securities, and if taxation of the debt by the General Government is necessary to counteract this mischievous tendency, it would seem that a much lower tax might accomplish the purpose. The sinking fund created out of this tax constitutes the sole provision for the ultimate payment of the principal of the debt. While the holders of the bonds must contribute in the shape of taxes to the payment of interest they alone are called upon by this bill to pay the principal to the exemption of foreign capital. This is scarcely a necessary, under any view of the case, to saddle the whole principal of the debt upon the holders of it here, the consideration for it being the certain and ultimate payment of the lower rate of interest adjusted by the bill. On the contrary, every interest in the country ought to be liable for this object, the accomplishment of which constitutes the highest and most sacred duty of an American citizen.

DEMOCRATIC SPRING FASHIONS.

THE Democratic Conventions of New Hampshire and Connecticut have laid down the Democratic platform for the spring elections. Upon the one important point of reorganization they are logical and consistent. They declare that the Legislatures of the late rebel States having revoked their pretended Acts of Secession, "said States are of right entitled to all the privileges and powers of States belonging to and exercised by them previous to said pretended Acts of Secession." This is the ground which the New York World took early last spring, before the complete surrender of the rebels. "Throw down your arms," cried the World to its political allies in rebellion, "repeal your Acts of Secession, elect Senators and Representatives, hurry to the Capitol, and demand a voice in the organization of Congress; and let us see who will dare to oppose you." That is all it has seen. Probably it has discovered that the loyal American people, who were strong enough to conquer rebel arms, were also shrewd enough not to be fooled by rebel arts. Probably it will continue to behold the same spectacle for some time yet.

And now let every honest citizen of Connecticut and New Hampshire, as well as of all the other States, understand exactly what this Democratic platform is. It asserts that South Carolina and Mississippi, having laid down their arms and accepted their Acts of Secession, are again in the Union exactly as New York or New Hampshire are. If this be true military commanders have no right to control the civil authorities in those States as they now do. Yet if the United States troops were withdrawn, every loyal Union man in those States would be in danger of his life. That, of course, does not trouble the Democracy, which, in its party sympathies during the war were for the rebels in those States, can not be expected to care for Union men now that the war is over.

Again, if the Democratic position be correct, the Freedmen's Bureau must be abolished, and the ongoing legislation of the late rebel States, which at every hazard was wholly loyal during the war, must be abandoned to the Black Codes and the Vagrant laws, as well as to the unbridled wrath and vengeance of men who bitterly hate them. The consequences may be imagined.

When Democratic plan be adopted, the men who are still hot with hate of the Government and the Union, who frankly confess it, and who are elected for that very reason, must be admitted to Congress to Congress to take a supreme share in the control of a Government whose destruction they have long and fiercely attempted. They will naturally regard as a conquering and alien power. He who doubts whether they would strain every nerve to involve the country in foreign wars, and to ruin its credit by imposing upon consequences for the losses of the war at the South, has little knowledge of human nature or of history.

These Democratic Conventions also solemnly declare that they support the President. But it is see if they do. If, as they claim, every late rebel State is of right entitled to exercise every power that it did before the rebellion, certainly the President has no right to override their civil authority with the national military power. Yet he does so. He retains General Tenney in Virginia, who suspended the action of the State Legislature in certain cases. Do the Connecticut Democracy approve? The President continues General SICKLES in South Carolina, and Governor ORR submits. Do the New Hampshire Democracy approve? The President sustains the Freedmen's Bureau. Do the Connecticut Democracy approve? The President favors impartial suffrage in Tennessee. Do the New Hampshire Democracy agree? The President approves a Constitutional Amendment limiting the basis of representation to actual voters. The New Hampshire Democracy oppose with true Tory instinct "all proposed or anticipated amendments to the Constitution." The President holds the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus suspended in several States. The New Hampshire Democracy declares that "it is a right which must be preserved." If the States in question are entitled to their position before the rebellion, how do the Connecticut and New Hampshire Democracy support a President who denies them that position, and who insists that only men known to be "loyal" shall be admitted to Congress?

Our readers will not suppose that "loyal" friends the Democrats, so-called because of their hostility to every distinctive Democratic principle, were in favor of the war. Three years ago they relieved that they were in favor of the war, but were opposed to carrying it on. Now they resolve that they support the President, but are opposed to what he does. Really, they, as the old judge said to the young lawyer that the court might be supposed to know some law, so the loyal people of this country, who have saved its Government from armed rebellion at the South and Copperhead sympathy at the North, may be supposed by this time to understand the huge political nonsense called the Democratic party. From the moment the people of the United States, plainly seeing whether this party was driving the country, put it out of power, its oracles have regularly proclaimed with owlish solemnity that we are all going to the "dominion bow-wows." Journals which unscrupulously supported HORATIO SEYMOUR, who declared he would give up the Union rather than Slavery, and which strenuously advocated the election of GEORGE H. PENDLETON, an open disunionist, against ANDREW JOHNSON, now inform the people who elected ANDREW JOHNSON that they are his only loyal supporters and the bosom friends of the Union. We are in great peril, they tell as plaintively, as they have told us for five years past, but all can be avoided upon one little condition. If the people would only comprehend! If they would only see that to put the country out of danger it is only necessary to put the political allies of JEFFERSON DAVIS and the leaders of the Chicago Convention into power! In a word, if they would only believe—and with the experience of the last five years how can they help it?—that the Democratic party are the sole friends of the Union and of the Government and of ANDREW JOHNSON! Yes, if you only believed a green cheese to be the moon! Why, believe more than that, the people will intrust the Government to the political allies of its enemies, and not until then.

COLORADO.

THE Senators from Colorado have been admitted to the floor of the Senate, and their admission to seats is warmly urged in some quarters. But before that is done Congress will doubtless thoroughly investigate the facts of the case.

It will then appear that in March, 1864, an enabling act was passed by Congress, but that people of Colorado met, at a legal election in September of that year, decided against the admission under the Constitution proposed. In the summer of 1865 an informal call was issued by the Territorial Committees of both parties for a Constitutional Convention, and an election was held—or, rather, since there was no law, an expression of opinion was taken for delegates to the Convention, and subsequently for a Constitution and a Legislature. The Constitution was adopted by a majority of the votes cast, and the Legislature was chosen in pursuance of the Constitution. The Legislature elected Messrs. EVANS and CHAFFEE Senators, and they went to Washington. Upon their arrival they requested the President to proclaim Colorado a State. But the President very properly replied that his whole authority in the matter was derived from the enabling act, and as the Constitution submitted to the people of the Territory in pursuance of that act had been rejected by them, its force had expired, and with it its authority. He therefore referred them to Congress.

The whole proceeding, therefore, from the call of the Committees to the election of the Senators, must be regarded as a petition of certain people of the Territory that it be erected into a State; and the labor of Congress is made all the more difficult because it must explore every detail. An enabling act is a convenient method devised by Congress to ascertain the wishes and conditions of a Territory in regard to a State Constitution. If there shall appear to be a sufficient population; if a majority, upon a fair vote, accept a Constitution framed by delegates elected in pursuance of the enabling act; and if the conditions of the Constitution are in the judgment of Congress republican—then, it may, at its pleasure, admit the Territory as a State. But it is absolutely unbound except by its own discretion. It may refuse to admit a State formed in virtue of an enabling act if the Constitution is unsatisfactory, and it may admit a State without an enabling act if it is fully satisfied upon all those points upon which it is the purpose of an enabling act to inform it.

Now it is very strongly urged that the whole population of the Territory of Colorado is not more than 25,000—men, women, and children; that of the votes cast for the Constitution under the call of the committees there was a majority in its favor of only 155, and that at least 2000 were obtained from votes on the ground of the illegality of the election. The Constitution thus adopted excludes colored men from the suffrage, although we have the testimony of a witness of the fact that such men enjoy the benefit of the Homestead Act, preempt lands of the United States, discover and mine the Government mineral lands, have a share in the division of any rights by the district laws of the miners, and are quiet, industrious people, and many of them rich. Moreover, this Constitution disfranchised them at the very moment they were volunteering into the army.

These statements will, of course, be satisfactorily proved or disproved before Congress acts finally upon the question of admission. The action of the voters upon the Constitution was not authorized by Congress, and merely informally expresses the wishes of certain inhabitants of the Territory. This fact being borne in mind, we may all trust Congress to see that no injustice is done any resident of Colorado.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE SUFFRAGE.

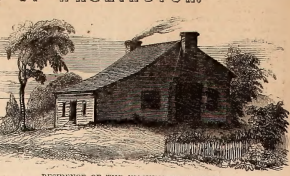
No man who knew the White House in the dreary days of PIERCE and BUCHANAN could have believed that in less than six years after they left it, a man who in their time was a slaveholder and a Southern democrat would stand in that House as President and say to a delegation of colored men, headed by a fugitive slave and pleading for absolute equal rights:

"I would it were so that all you advocated could be done in the twinkling of an eye;" and adding, that they were pursuing the same end but by different means. We confess that we are more cheered by this fact and these words than surprised or disheartened that the President does not agree as to methods and times with Mr. DOUGLASS and his friends.

The President's position is plain. Let us suppose it is one that should cause disquiet or discourage those who believe that an honorable and peaceful Union can be established only upon equal rights. He is not opposed to impartial suffrage, but he thinks it better that those who are now vested with the political power in any State should decide when and how it is expedient to alter its system. Looking at the actual situation, he is of opinion that the morbid hate of the colored race upon the part of the whites, in the unorganized States, and the ignorance of the colored people there is in general landless, homeless, ignorant, and habitually dependent, as sufficient reasons for not enfranchising them by the law as regards an unconstitutional exercise of power. The consequence of such action, however just in itself, he considers would be a conflict of races—a war between the whites and the blacks—which could hold their own against the whites in the contest, he supposes, and his doubtless right in the supposition, that in the end none but the whites of the whole country would be aroused against the unfortunate colored population and postpones indefinitely the establishment of equal rights. It is known that the President is, as a matter of expediency, to maintain the personal freedom of the colored race, to give them land and protect them in its enjoyment, to restrict the present political community in which they live to enfranchise them, to secure that result by compulsory not by voluntary enactment.

Now if, as many assert, he proposed to leave the freedmen at the South naked to their enemies by withdrawing the troops, by abolishing the Freedmen's Bureau, or by restoring the privilège of the habeas corpus—if, in a word, the President were in favor of the Democratic policy in the Southern States, he would be scorned and repudiated by every human and honorable man. But it is not so. He thinks and says a great deal more. He virtually says in his judgment and in his conscience, which in my judgment and in my conscience I BELIEVE, Congress, alone, has the right to give it. But if will do all that I can to make them see that it is their interest to give it to you by recommending, as I have recommended, that representation shall be based upon the number of voters. I do not propose to leave you defenceless to your enemy panoplied in political power. I will not withdraw the strong or cast down the weak. And if I can not do what you wish directly and in your way, I shall yet do it in the speediest way I can.

This is certainly an intelligible and consistent position. Its weak point, however, is evident. It makes the President's judgment and not the place of the ballot in the colored population of the late Slave States. But it admits to Congress those who deprive the freedmen of the ballot, and it leaves the Freedmen's Bureau shall be continued. If the enemies of the freedmen shall at this time have an increased representation based upon the whole race—as they will have after the unorganized States be required to adopt the amendment—we shall have done what we can to deprive the freedman of the only defence against the hate which the United States in question are thus disproportionately represented, and secured by various combinations in overthrowing the Union, what will prevent this hate from the enormous guilt of conferring freedom upon a race, yet, while it had the power, refusing to secure it? And when the millions are once more



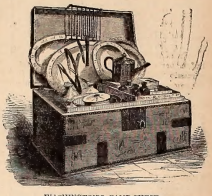
THE BIRTH-PLACE, HOME, AND TOMB OF WASHINGTON.

SITE OF WASHINGTON'S BIRTH-PLACE.

SWORD AND STAFF.

RESIDENCE OF THE WASHINGTON FAMILY.

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S birth-place was destroyed before the Revolution. Upon its site was owned by WASHINGTON'S father. It was soon after WASHINGTON'S birth, in 1732, that his parents removed to this estate. The mansion has long since gone to decay.



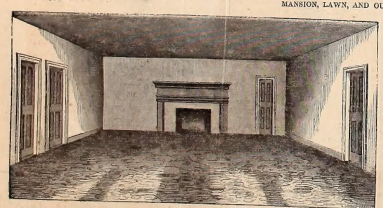
In the rooms of the National Institute (a portion of the Patent Office Building) at the Capital are to be seen WASHINGTON'S SWORD AND STAFF. The sword is inclosed in a black leather sheath, with silver mountings. The handle is ivory, colored a pale green, and wound spirally with silver wire. The belt is more ancient, having upon it a silver plate on which is engraved "1757." The staff belonged to FRANKLIN, and was by him bequeathed to WASHINGTON. It had been presented to FRANKLIN by a French dowager Duchess, Madame DE TOBACH.

Near the Staff and Sword stand WASHINGTON'S CAMP-CHEST, of which we give an illustration. This is an old-fashioned hair trunk, twenty-one inches in length, fifteen in width, and ten in depth, filled with table furniture used by the chief during the Revolution. The compartments are so ingeniously arranged that they contain a gridiron, a coffee and tea pot, three tin sauce-pans, five glass flasks, three large meat dishes, sixteen plates, two knives and five forks, a candlestick and tinder-box, tea and sugar boxes, and five small bottles.

POHICK CHURCH, where WASHINGTON worshiped, is about seven miles from Mount Vernon, upon an elevation on the borders of a forest of oaks, chestnuts, and pines. The MANSION AT MOUNT VERNON was occupied by WASHINGTON both before and after the War for Independence had been fought. It overlooks the waters of the Potomac and the shores of Maryland beyond. WASHINGTON'S mansion is built of wood, cut so as to resemble stone, and is two stories in height. The central part was built by LAWRENCE WASHINGTON, brother of the General. WASHINGTON himself added the wings. On the eastern or river front is a

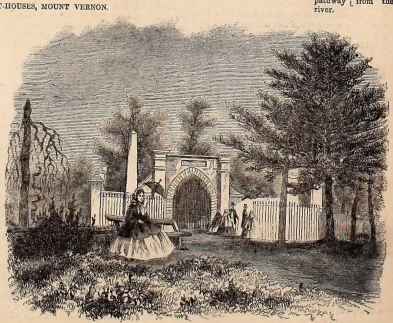
POHICK CHURCH.

WASHINGTON'S CAMP-CHEST.

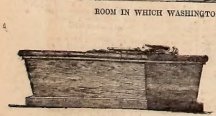


GEORGE W. P. CUSTIS, Esq., Washington's Aid-de-camp, placed a slab of free-stone, represented in the above engraving. The house was precisely the same in appearance as the RESIDENCE OF THE WASHINGTON FAMILY, shown in the engraving opposite. It was a plain honse-stead of one story and attic, situated on the "Wakefield Estate," near the junction of Pope's Creek with the Potomac, in Westmoreland County, Va. The stone which marks the site was deposited in its place in June, 1815. It was enveloped in the Star-Spangled Banner, and laid upon the spot by four Revolutionary patriots and soldiers. The pedestal was constructed of bricks from the old chimney that once formed the hearth about which WASHINGTON played in his infancy. This was the first monumental stone ever erected to the memory of WASHINGTON.

The residence of the Washington family, in the engraving already alluded to, was situated on the Rappahannock, near Fredericksburg, in Stafford County, and piazza, extending the entire length of the building. The estate passed into WASHINGTON'S hands July 26, 1752. The large north room in which he entertained his friends is preserved, with the furniture in the same condition in which he left it. Upon the walls are pictures of hunting and battle scenes. The ROOM IN WHICH WASHINGTON DIED is closed to the public gaze. The architecture of the room remains unchanged. It is entirely empty, as represented in our engraving.



The TOMB OF WASHINGTON is a spacious vault of brick, with an arched roof. Its iron door opens into a vestibule, in which, seen through a picketed iron gate, stand two marble sarcophagi, containing the remains of WASHINGTON and his wife. Over the vault door is this inscription: "I AM THE RESURRECTION AND THE LIFE; HE THAT BELIEVETH IN ME, THOUGH HE WERE DEAD, YET SHALL HE LIVE." The tomb is situated near the pathway from the river.



MANSION, LAWN, AND OUT-HOUSES, MOUNT VERNON.

ROOM IN WHICH WASHINGTON DIED, DECEMBER 14, 1799.

THE TOMB OF WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON'S COFFIN.

THE LID.

THE NAMELESS GRAVE.

DEDICATED TO THE MEMORY OF WILLIAM C. DEVEREUX,* FIFTH REGIMENT, EXCELSIOR BRIGADE.

THE low wind sighs o'er a Southern plain
That once was strewn with the battle slain;
And the moist earth drinks the falling rain,
That once was wet with a blood-red stain.

Dark, lowering clouds the heavens o'erspread,
Whence the battle smoke has long since fled;
And where voiceless lay the fallen dead
A nameless grave is seen instead.

Through the leafless woods the low winds creep,
As a sobbing moan from the loved who weep;
And with aching hearts their vigils keep
For one in a nameless grave asleep.

The withered grass 'neath the falling rain
O'er the grave bends low like ripened grain;
But weary hearts, though bowed with pain,
His nameless grave shall seek in vain.

In forest wild and meadow green
May be many a lowly hillock seen;
A patriot heart from the tempest keen
Each nameless grave for aye shall screen.

'Neath this low mound lies one who gave
A life to God—the right to save;
Too noble thou to live a slave—
Thou fellest now a nameless grave.

Slumber, loved one! sweetly sleep;
Thou art at rest—the living weep;
Green thy memory here will keep,
For we on earth thy life-fruits reap.

Rest thee, dear one! Not in vain
Hath thy life-star set in pain;
For thou the holy place shall gain
The noble dead alone attain.

On wings triumphant from the tomb
Rise, patriot spirit! This thy doom:
"Enshrined for aye in vernal bloom,
A nation's heart shall be thy tomb."

FITZHUGH, PA., Jan. 7, 1866. G. W. D.

* "Missing" since the second Bull Run engagement, August 31, 1862.

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

INSIDE.

A CHRONICLE OF SECESSION.

BY GEORGE F. HARRINGTON.

IN TWENTY-FOUR CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER VII.

LET us linger a few moments longer before we plunge again into the stormy epoch of Secession with which these pages began. We will loiter but a moment. Heaven knows Secession will come soon enough.

Blessed forever be the quickening of the sap in the veins, the putting forth of leaves and tender blossoms hued like the rainbow, the eager joy of beginning the earliest rudiments of future fruit—the spring-time of youth! Never physician entered upon the case of his first patient, never lawyer undertook the business of his first client, never painter began his first painting, nor sculptor his first statue, nor poet his first poem, with more eagerness than did the young minister engage in his new charge. Only his was a diviner joy than theirs, as his work was a diviner work. He had dreamed of it all while yet a boy, for, from his earliest remembrance, the ministry had been the purpose of his life. A hundred times had he planned exactly what he would do, and what he would not carefully avoid, if, after having charge, while yet in college. As to his three years in the Theological Seminary, not a day but he had determined upon some new evil to be avoided in his future ministry, upon some new virtue to be practiced. During all the three years, he had never, to any one known one of his own proposed profession, thrown with him in biography or in person, but he had said to himself, "By the help of God, this man enter the ministry, I will never, never be this and that as I see it in this individual. God helping me, never will I be guilty of this fault, this success which adorns this man shall be equaled, by the grace of God, surpassed, when I am fairly upon the stage."

That memorable morning after his arrival in Somerville, when he awoke in Rutledge Bowles's office, there in Mrs. Bowles's front yard, it was a feeling half of pleasure and half of terror with which he realized that his life's business, for which he had been so long time and so praying, dreaming, was at last fairly entered upon. Ah, how fervently he prayed that God would be beside his neat bed! What expressions of his own inability to do aught unaided on his lips, and what perfect confidence that he should be enabled, every thing throbbing the same instant in his heart! No patriarch more dignified than he in conducting family worship that morning as Mrs. Bowles's parlor beneath the steady stare of the old Major from his gilded frame, Mrs. Bowles in her low rocking-chair, the old gentleman upon an ottoman at her feet, and the two family servants seated solemnly near the door. Had he perfect control of his voice during the prayer expressly and definitely to Mrs. Bowles and her daughter, his manner would have continued artificial; but, from the first habit, after the space of eight verses, he became deeply and devotionally interested in the words, and read them accordingly; so that of his prayer nothing could be more natural because nothing could be more sincere. Were it only for the effect of it on one's consequent humility, his Maker's ear is as admirable thing to possess a deep and habitual reference to, and heart-felt belief in, One supremely above the whole of us.

"The head of the table, did you say?" asked Mr. Arthur a few minutes after, as they were seating themselves at the breakfast-table.

"If you please, Mr. Arthur, the foot of the table," said Mrs. Bowles, with a slight South Carolinianism of stress upon the word.

It was a dreadful moment for the bashful theologian, fresh from the barbarism of three years' eating with slouched and slipshod companions in the seminary refectory. His cheeks burned, and Alice's eyes danced with fun. As all the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew in the world can not destroy the true gentleman in a man where it exists by nature—

"You must pardon me, Mrs. Bowles," he said, with a frank smile, after pronouncing the blessing, and with perfect ease of manner; "but I have been living for the last several years like a sort of Robinson Crusoe upon a species of desert island."

"Yes?" asked Mrs. Bowles, to whom his manner was as an Open Sesame, while Alice's mirth became diminished as she found it shared with their guest himself. And so, during the pauses of the breakfast, their new acquaintance gave them in a humorous manner some description of his scholastic life. It was doubly interesting to the mother from the fact that her son was at college in Columbia.

"Really, Mr. Arthur," she said, at last, "it is almost like having Rutledge Bowles on a visit home from Columbia. He always occupied since the death of his father the seat you are now in. You remind me of him, I assure you." Higher compliment than that no new acquaintance could receive from her lips. "You were not educated at Columbia, Mr. Arthur?"

"At Hampden Sydney, Madam," replied her guest.

"In Virginia, I think it is?" asked she. Not quite as low down as Yale or Princeton; however, he was not to blame, she felt sure. Mr. Arthur replies in the affirmative. "You are a native of Virginia, I think?"

"Yes, Madam."

"You did right, quite right to enter an institution in your own State," said Mrs. Bowles, glad to find a defense for him. "I dare say they are not so extravagantly expensive where you were educated. I am almost shocked at Rutledge Bowles's expenditure. I suppose, however, his situation in such a place as Columbia requires greater expense than in other places."

And terribly expensive the fond mother did find her son's education there; but she stinted herself proudly for it; she mentioned it with unconscious pride in her tones; it was part and parcel of being at Columbia.

"Though, while we are upon the subject, there is one thing in regard to Columbia I have never yet fully understood," said Mrs. Bowles, after a while. "Rutledge Bowles has explained it to me over and over again in his letters—the perpetual revolutions in the College, I mean. From what Rutledge Bowles writes it has been impossible for the students to pursue, consistently with their own honor, any other course. It seems strange that the many Faculties of the College can not come to understand, any of them, what the youth of South Carolina are, and what they will not submit to. Strange! It is a great interruption to the studies, I fear, if know very little of the institutions out of the State; but I fear it is something peculiar to Columbia," said Mrs. Bowles, though her fear sounded far more like pride.

Yes, in the history, eventful enough, of the College of South Carolina, at Columbia, you have, in epitome, the character and history of the State itself. Self-will, contempt for rightful authority, reckless disregard of every thing except the selfish satisfaction of the hour! Gallant, generous, high-toned youth, they yield their own opinions to those of their Faculty? No, Sir! Rather than that, let the institution be wrecked to its foundation! Rather than that, let their own education, and consequent success in life, perish! See the same youth when grown a few inches higher in stature and immeasurably more generous, gallant, high-toned, and all the rest; they submit their own ideas to the superior authority of the General Government? they yield a hair's-breadth from their own heated view of their own rights and wrongs—imprescriptible rights, infinite wrongs? By all that elevates the man above the brute and the negro, never, Mr. Speaker, never! Rather, Sir, let the General Government be wrecked till not a spar floats to tell where once it sailed! Rather perish the hope of the human race! Above all, rather, Mr. Speaker, we of South Carolina lose every negro from our fields, every cent from our coffers, every city from our soil, every son on the field of battle from our hearth-stones! Perish the universe and we, Sir, we with it, rather than it move save as we intend it shall move! From his birth to his death never in the ages such a conspiracy as against your South Carolinian. Nurse, parent, schoolmaster, College Faculty, General Government, opinion of Christendom, course of God's eternal providence—one only-begun, universal, incessant combination against him. But not more magnificent the coalition than the defiance thereof on his part!

Poor Mrs. Bowles! From its foundation was practical Secession the incidental but leading part of the Columbia Curriculum, and well was the lesson learned. The yellow-fever is, they say, a standing affair in Cuba; and there lives scarce a man beside the Pedees, the Congaree, the Edisto, and the Cooper and Ashley but inhaled Secession as his vital atmosphere. It was too strong even for the Gospel. Heaven defend us, even in the conventions of religious bodies. It was: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Moderator, it is painful to us, Sir, it is very painful, but on this point we can not yield. No one can regret it more than ourselves, but, if brethren will press this point, there is, Sir, but one course left us—In secula seculorumque, aut South Carolina aut nullus.

Sturdy, wrong-headed little State! Look at it on the map there, altogether unlike North Carolina even on the one side, and Georgia on the other; tough, three-sided fragment of medieval granite, refusing to be dissolved or to lose an angle even in the rolling of the great waters of progress; requiring something besides the silent, serene processes of nature by which the craggy mountains are being melted slowly down and the rough globe rounded into shape; requiring the extra force and fury as of waters too long and too obstinately dammed back from their natural and inevitable course. Every soul of us, however, admires the South Carolina of history. Only let him be master, and a truer gentleman never breathed. The Hardkoppig Pelt in him is hidden under the Bayard, the Cœur de Leon. He is only a hundred years or so out of place, that is all. There is nothing to laugh at in Don Quixote except his living a century or two too late. Even then it is with pain that we smile at the ancient armor, hungaye defiant of the universe, and, most sorrowful of all, poor old Rosinante which bears him up!

But Mrs. Bowles has made us forget ourselves.

Breakfast over, the Rev. Edward Arthur sallied out into Somerville and his new life. Before night he had been introduced to more persons than during his entire academical course.

"If I can only remember all their names!" he thought. And all along, as he went here and there over Somerville, he had it vaguely often in his mind, "Oh, if I can but exert a new influence, an influence for good, a divine influence on these!"

So pleased was his manner, so unsuming, too, that the impression he made upon all was decidedly in his favor. It was not particularly much that the people of Somerville cared for preachers; there was any quantity of them to be seen every day about the streets, and to be heard every Sunday; yet all had a vague respect for the special denomination to which the new-comer belonged. Besides, education and piety had given a certain elevation to the countenance and bearing of the new preacher. As to that, every thing new has its gloss, we know. Very faithful were the lawyer, Mr. Ellis, Dr. Warner, and his other immediate friends from that time, not only in making him known to the people, but in making them known to him; and all such knowledge kept up a running commentary there-on in the mind of the novice.

"What an agreeable gentleman this Mr.—Mr.—" began he, on parting from the last introduction one day.

"Simmons—not Mr. — Captain Simmons. Don't forget the Captain part of his name when SEEKING DIVINE GUIDANCE.

ARTHUR'S FIRST MEAL AT MRS. BOWLES'S.

you speak to him next," said the lawyer, who had introduced him.

"What an agreeable gentleman the Captain is!" continued the young minister. "You heard what he said about having led the choir before moving to Somerville. And his sentiments of regard for our new organization."

"And the tears in his eyes as he told you about his good old father, and about his mother's death-bed and dying charge. Umph, yes; drinks," replied the lawyer. Humph! And the young divine had on the instant planned a series of sermons on intemperance.

"Mr. Perrem, this is our new preacher, Mr. Arthur; Mr. Arthur, this is Mr. Peters, a member and pillar of one of the Somerville churches," interrupted the lawyer, introducing him to a tall, spare, white-haired old gentleman.

"Don't call me Mr. Peters—Brother Peters; and you must call me so always, Brother Arthur," said the old gentleman, warmly grasping and holding in his own the hand extended to him. "I heard you had come, and glad to see you—glad to see you. And you are but a young hand at the great work—a young hand, a young hand, Brother Arthur. You'll find it a hard field, hard field. But you know where your help is. Bless your soul, I was not five when I joined, and I've been about as good about since then; seen wonderful things. We must get better acquainted, Brother Arthur, better acquainted."

"Mr.—Brother Peters seems to be a warm Christian," said Mr. Arthur, after a few more cordial expressions with his new acquaintance, during the latter part of which his companion had endeavored several times, but in vain, to catch his eye.

"I declare," said the lawyer in reply, pushing his hat back off his forehead, and fingering indecisively a moment behind his right ear in consideration, "I do not know whether to leave you to find your new acquaintances or not. Besides, I don't want to cast a damper on you. But the fact is, this Brother Peters—"

"Does not drink, I hope?" asked his companion, hastily.

"Oh no," replied the lawyer, quick to deny such a charge. "Sober as you or I, hard working, honest, kind-hearted, punctual at church as can be; nothing in the world against him but his awful flux. Lying deep beneath is his name every where. He knows it as well as any one. His friends have talked to him about it, his church has worked with him in every way, every new preacher they get makes a special effort with him; it does no good. He has lied so long it has become his nature to lie where he has happen to be speaking about, and always. Like an old weaver and his oaths, lying Sam Peters tells falsehoods from morning till night without knowing it."

Alas! that sudden sinking of the heart in the bosom of the young minister. It is a painful thing that sinking of the heart in the bosom of the young and sanguine. After a while they will learn to bear more sturdily through every thing.

"Ah, yes, Annias and Sapphira, the sin and the penalty of falsehood; I must speak on that subject," muttered Mr. Arthur to himself, some relief in that.

In the course of the day the two friends came upon Brother Barker, to whom the new-comer was made known. As soon as it could be conveniently done, mother Barker—as Brother Barker felt compelled to tell his new brother in the ministry that there were certain doctrines held by him or brother's denomination which he really could not agree with him in at all, which, in fact, he regarded as against Scripture and common sense, and which would actually be regarded as—but he would not wound the young brother's feelings by saying all he deeply, very deeply felt on the subject!

A series of discourses establishing our peculiar doctrines, and as soon as possible. Because, you must know, very much depends is for one to do!" thought Mr. Arthur, as he parted from his new friend.

As for brother Barker, the arrival of the new minister precipitated him for weeks after with a velocence never seen to him against the obsession doctrines in question. That person with the zealous Brother fairly dilated with their enormity, as in private conversation and from the public pulpit he fought against the execrable doctrines, with long, muscular arms, gleaming eyes, and feet in incessant motion while he talked, like an athlete in the arena.

Before the week was over the young diving had seen his preaching necessity of preparing, and delivering as soon as possible, sermons innumerable. He had indentified been thrown with Bob Wilson, who had told him in confidence of a third interview that he would have been a Christian long ago, instead of "the regular whisky-drinking, cock-fighting, carousing, swearing scamp, by George, which I now am, Mr. Arthur!" if it hadn't been for the gross inconsistencies he had observed, by George, in every single professor, by George, it had ever been his misfortune to meet with; not one single exception to the rule, Sir, not one! Although to say there is something attractive to Mr. Arthur in the round, sensible, good-humored face of Mr. Wilson, his fresh eyes and ruddy cheeks would be an abuse of the English language. Although there is a glow of ripe grapes in Bob's face, it is a vast deal sunnier and more pleasing to Mr. Arthur's opinion, than Brother Barker's dry and lean, though rigidly correct, face. And that he must preach a sermon warning Christians on this point was only too evident to the youthful theologian.

Mr. Ellis, too—threadly, amiable, humble Mr. Ellis—whom Mr. Arthur had been drawn to from his first acquaintance with him, unintentionally—for he had added to anything to know what the ardor of his new pastor. In answer to inquiries over his counter at the store on the part of that pastor, he gave it as his opinion that the main obstacle in Somerville to the spread of religion consisted in an intense worldliness. He readily agreed with his pastor that here was the grand evil to be aimed at. After Mr. Arthur had added parental neglect, Sabbath desecration, profanity, infidelity, and a score more of evils, to be immediately combated, to his list, he was fain to pause from the enumeration.

However, if he lay down a little wearied at night with accomplishing, by conversation, in Somerville vastly more than has ever yet been accomplished by all his profession put together for men since Christ left the world, nevertheless a sound night's rest sent him forth next morning to his studies and into Somerville as hopeful as ever.

And so the new church was duly organized. It was a small organization at the outset, indeed. Yet, on reflection, even this was a new pleasure to the ardent pastor to know into what a noble size the church might grow from such a little seed. And those who were its members clustered around him so heartily, too. Energetic Jay Brooks, steady, sensible Benson, smiling Dr. Warner, devoted Mr. Ellis. Mrs. Sorel, too, punctual as the clock did she alight every Sabbath morning at eight o'clock with Mr. Robby, her bright little boy—Frank is old enough to have a class, and is there before her on his pony—on the door of the little edifice, which was then answering as a church for the present, in time for the Sabbath-school just established. Mrs. Colonel Bat Roberts, too, a valuable friend of being there with her children. A thoroughly-informed man of the world could have read the Colonel's domestic character in the manner in which he bowed head and sorrowful eyes of his wife. To Mr. Arthur she was but an estimable, silent, subdued lady, accompanied by a child of Sabbath. Ah, how devoted she was to her children, specially to her boy with his father's superb eyes and bold brow! And what a help she was generally is when her love for her husband is spurred, nothing left for her to love but her children, closely devoted to them, and to their father, who all her care is required to undo all the evil influence upon them of their father.

Mrs. Bowles, too, was unanimate she was in regard to the new enterprise! Mr. Arthur never came home at night from a visit without having had something new and hopeful to tell in connection with the church: some new family who had said they would attend the services next Sunday to Sunday-school; some new young man whom she had ascertained to have had parents in connection with the denomination, and who ought to be looked after; some brain-new young lady who had agreed to teach in the school. Almost every day, and often after prayer before her guest, as enthusiastic as she, could tear himself away from the sitting-room to go for hymn-book, Bible, or what not, that Mrs. Bowles would run in upon him of morning there in the midst of his studies, with an apology for interrupting, but that there was what he would like to hear this, that, and the other encouraging something about "our church." How much the new pastor's wife would grow in the pulpit with some preparation of which he was heartily ashamed, to find, from his own feeling and his parishioners' kind but frank opinion, that it was far better than he had ever dõne before. One Sabbath when he would count confidently on having quite a crowded congregation, he would be chilled to the soul to find but a small one. Another Sabbath, counting confidently upon but a quiet attendance, he would be encouraged by a house full. Now he would be led to count assuredly upon certain persons becoming members of the church, to be duly appointed tested; and to receive, unexpectedly, persons into membership of whom he had never heard such a thing. To-day would he be encouraged by the unconscionable presence of certain individuals, to-morrow be disheartened by reason annoyed by the unaccountable absence of others.

This week he would attend some funeral, and wonder at the apathy to the important spiritual concerns thus brought to mind on the part of those present, at the same time that his own inability, standing beside the open coffin, with the cold face beneath his hand, to set forth, as he knew he should, the lesson to be learned, would be illuminated with some unexpected or long-expected wedding, with all the incidents therewith connected.

And there, also, was the pastoral visitation; the conversing with persons from whom all the parochial information must be gained, and sometimes not more than Yes and No during the interview. However, there was placid, sensible Mrs. Sorel; a practical lady herself, Mr. Arthur felt, from whom he could converse. Crusty as Mr. Ferguson was, too, the young minister soon learned to keep inside of the storm in connection with the sweet himself and the Scotchman's hidden reefs; learned even to keep aloof, with a mariner's instinct of a storm, from the Scotchman altogether when that Scotchman was all reef and breakers. And so passed the days along.

Perhaps the most delightful hour in his charge for the least degree as he had dreamed it would be—pleasures and pains all different; yet it was a great while before that would arrive, and in which he laid himself out with joy. The very buying the ground for the new church, the planning of its beautiful form, the whole thing was an epic of interest for months. And the actual erection of the edifice, from foundation to weather-vane, it was a daily joy and rejoicing. We say nothing of his intercourse with the workmen during this period; with almost every one of whom he had a pleasant word, the young pastor had intimate acquaintance from their arrival on the ground until finishing touches of the painter.

The months of picnicking—if we may so speak —in the covered in but unfinished church, with loose seantlings on trestels for seats, and a pine table a foot across for pulpit, was accompanied with a purer pleasure than the worship in many a stately edifice all granite and walnut, brass, and velvet. The obtaining of the church bell, from the instant of the conception of the idea in the head of Mrs. Bowles, until its first ring upon the ears so attentive to the next Sabbath morning, was one long and pleasurable excitement. And for the painting, the furnishing the church throughout, in which the ladies threw themselves with their inseparable and indissoluble zeal and adornment of their faculties—was that a matter without deep interest to the pastor, as well as to many others? There was the organizing a choir, and the temporary recidiscovery of Mr. Ferguson's splendid bass, a more growl hitherto under his grizzly beard, developed into sonorous music—and the old Mormon smitten by the sun; culminating in the suggesting, subscribing for, obtaining, and actually using an instrument. It is impossible to pass lightly over that. And the Ladies' Fair also, from the first idea, for the interest and for that; the Sabbath-school celebrations of ribboned and rosy and hungry children; the grand efforts and triumphant success in the one town; the purchase and arrival of a grand Congregational Library; the building of a study for the pastor; the accumulating of the added sets of linen and altogether unexpected writingdesks.

Oh, blessed period of life, when a man is fairly at his life's work, with Youth and Health and Hope his close companions! Blessed period when, like a mariner with his head to the fore, a joy in every fibre at the very encountering and mounting and leaving behind the opposing billows as they rise and fall in succession, when every defect discovered in one's self is a joy, in the hope of henceforth destroying the same; when every experience additionally gained leaves the novice how henceforth to act so as to secure instead a thousand friends; when every opposing circumstance but a fresh stimulant to the path over which leads one that much higher above what he was before! But, O youth thrice blessed, when the Heavenly Comforter descends to Mentor is realized, more than realized, in him who, engaged in the service of an incarnate God incarnal, walks and talks with Him by the side all the day, kneeling morn and night in communion, fellowship, friendship closer and sweeter than the world knows, than even the best friend and brother! There is too entire an identity between the life of him who is doing the will of God on earth and the life of the Father and Son of God in heaven, for the happiness and energy of the one in heaven not to be very much the energy and happiness of the other on earth.

In nothing was it more evident how fully engaged the young pastor was with his work, and how entirely it filled his thoughts, than in what gants, children, husband—household, in fact, was the theme upon which she dilated most freely and fully. Neat and energetic housekeeper as Mrs. Warner was, it was certainly not at home only that she washed her "dirty linen." Some of it showing, in her hands, so very dirty, too.

As the years rolled by the canal gases had been too often opened to close now at all. But her children did not particularly mind, her servants had grown used to it, her husband was too old a sailor to be tossing deck and amidst the whistling gales of his home not to have come to regard it all as the ordinance of nature. Every day he gave father and ballast and more stooped about the head, more slovenly about the person, quite a weather-beaten mariner, but wonderfully strong and mild. But for his late table, and her exquisitely neat and clock-work household—if one were but stone-blind and perfectly deaf, or a philosopher—Somerville, he could live even under Mrs. Warner's roof.

And all alone, months Mr. Arthur continued with Mrs. Bowles. The idea never occurred to her in that form; but her guest was to her all that Rutledge Bowles would have been had he instead tenanted the little office in the front yard all this time—after more perhaps.

"And Mr. Arthur is such a vast assistance to Alice in her studies," said Mrs. Bowles to Mrs. Sorel one day; "and they have read a great deal of history together, too. Mr. Arthur takes a pleasure natural to a scholar in such things. Really I believe Alice is improved beyond her years—more thoughtful, too. So they return to Charleston as soon as Rutledge Bowles is settled in the practice of the law there. It is too soon to speak of such things yet, you are aware; but if Alice is finally married into one of the old families there I will be satisfied."

And yet Mrs. Sorel only smiled in her quiet way, and said nothing upon the subject whatever.

THE "IRREPRESSIBLE CONFLICT."

BY THE AUTHOR OF THE "SUBLIMEST PAPER."

ONE of the wisest statesmen of the age has coined an immortal sentence and applied it so pertinently that it has become a "household word" throughout the land. May I be pardoned for borrowing it and applying it to the war that is daily being waged between the wives and mothers of this glorious republic and the so-called servants, domestics, help, or whatever you may please to call them?

Oh that I could, in my pen in fire, and thus light up the truths I am about to utter; that I might bring before the eyes of the people this great social ulcer that is eating the lives of the one class of women the world ever saw! I do not hesitate to say there is not a wife or mother in the land but will override the shortcomings of her servants, if "they try to do their duty, and their wrong-doings are mistakes only. If there are mistresses who refuse to do their duty, the exceptions will prove the general rule. But it is the indifferent and malicious servants with whom we have to deal; it is those who live for the house and have nowhere to do their bidding, the finer the house the more helpless their victims. I would speak of the cook, who, in winter time, breaks eggs in the tea-kettle for her own delicate breakfast while the steak is sent to the dining-room not to be eaten. The amiable Jones says, "What is the matter with the steak? I bought the best in the market. Arabella, my dear, if you would only take three pounds where a little more I think we should be repaid in home comforts." Arabella leaves a great sigh, shuts her mouth close, and while she may be all upset for the want of proper maid, and yet have the power of coming to breakfast in a dainty morning-gown with a thousand little pet articles in her face: for does not she think she shall wear her hair frizzed. Jones is fastidious about these things; wants his little wife to look a little better than any body's else; this is Jones's pet weakness. Poor Arabella knows where the trouble lies, but where is the remedy? Her head begins to ache, and she is all upset for the day, and she begins to fear that Jones doesn't love her as he used to, though the honey-moon is scarcely over. She comes to the conclusion that marriage has a bit "forte;" while the amiable Jones goes to his office with a shadowy remembrance of those beefsteak breakfasts at home, and wonders whether his home will ever resemble his neighbor's across the street, who, by-the-way, has a wife who has sacrificed her life on the funeral pile of fashion. Mandi. 'Tis true she has not been entirely consumed; there is just enough left for locomotion; but that genial, bright, happy face looks vanished from the countenance, showing that she was made of colors that would not wash in the beginning, and yet the washing process has been kept up for an indefinite period. Said wife is cook when cook fails to do her duty; is nurse when the children are sick; in fact, is just as much a martyr as any Brahmin widow, the only difference consisting in the fact that she is no longer fond of her chains. I am speaking to the married sisterhood who have not the strength to endure life's perpetual warfare.

Mrs. Stowe—whom I reverence for her efforts in the behalf of the amelioration of woman's trials—says the houses must be built with the floor-level, spiral, inclined, and moving-walks in all corners; and the conservatory is to open off from all these; and the wives and daughters must do all the work. Now, in all charming and very much needful, but it happens that her advice comes too late and what are we to do in such a case? It happens that our house is already built, and the servants are on my part will make my beloved Job pull out the infernal arrangement, and fix it according to Mrs. Stowe's programme. And I have every reason to believe there are thousands of matrons in this country who have husbands as hard to convince as Job Simmons.

But suppose I succeed in having the house arranged accordingly, and suppose Job should accidentally become the father of twins one a year, wouldn't I be excused from doing my own work, and my daughters, the aforesaid twins, be excused on account of size and weakness of muscles? And suppose I was able to have the easy-chair wheeled to the open door of the conservatory, would it be agreeable to have Bridget making peanut cakes and vegetable soup under my invalid nose? Wouldn't I be excused from dying, just in self-defence, leaving Job and the twins to the care of a gentle Xantippe, who would sigh in a very short time, "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown?"

Again, Mrs. Stowe says we must make every thing so pleasant for the servants that gentle people in decayed circumstances will be glad to find them places for the sake of a home; and that, in some unaccountable way, we must remove the stigma of servitude, and make it equal to any in the fellowship in a College. I might as well attempt to scotch the brightest part of a rainbow to make a rock-for the one is as difficult to reach as in securing knives, unless these same knives are to reflect some loved one's visage; and as Job is the only masculine about the premises, I prefer to have his sentry confined to the library. The relation between mistress and servant is as devoid of sentiment as a promenade in Space. We cannot help the fact—not fancy. Suppose I succeed in finding the genteel person who will come for the sake of a home—as they put it—and others follow suit, but more I doubt. Wouldn't I not only have my own trials to bear but theirs also? Are not my hands full to plethora, and my heart to bursting, with the many things I do for the twenty-ninth President, and devising plans to keep Job away from that interesting club? And to keep Job away from that club! Should I have to get another girl to do their work? And are they not the very ones to forget who is the mistress of the house, not from any fault of their own, but error of habit?

This same worthy woman, whose shoe-latchet I feel unworthy to unloose, says we must elevate labor. As we can not bring the servants up to us, we must go down to them, in this the age for the elevation of the masses. Perfectly as Genius has segar-coated the pill, nevertheless it sticks in the throats of common mortals. Elevate labor! as the task may seem, the cleansing of the Augean stables by Hercules is no comparison to the task.

We have no way of judging the future but by the past." It never has been done, even when Rome was at its zenith of power and glory; and shall we, in America—we who have the best material to work under this ear of Juggernaut that Erin and Africa may second to their proper sphere? Anna B. Dickinson says it is a glorious thing to die for one's country; but I notice she is as plump as a partridge, apparently a long way from transmigration, and I fear those who preach most are the least apt to practice.

The irrepressible conflict wages. What is to be done? While the American wives and mothers are amply supplied with brains they are perishing for the want of so much bone and muscle. These much needed accommodations are not to be had in countries—why not here? It can not be owing to our peculiar institutions. The fact that "help is washed upon our shores by the tide of emigration" does not change the nature of that help? If they are industrious and orderly in their own country why should they not continue to be so when they come here? And here is the pivot of the whole difficulty. American house-keepers must have unity of action.

"And Ulysses S. Grant has succeeded in quelling the rebellion, no matter how brave and capable he has proved himself to be, had he gone forth unattended and alone. But he went forth with an army and announced that no help will be employed without bringing satisfactory reference from the last place. This is not strictly applicable, for I do not think it necessary to form ourselves into a Union league, with ramifications extending to the farthest hamlet in the land, in order to overthrow the cruel and unjust leprosy. Servants must be given to understand that mistakes will be pardoned, but indifference and malevolence will be summarily dismissed. Every servant must be made to know, if they do not perform their duty, the consequences will be sudden and unexpected. Then the mistress must nerve herself to endure every trial until the dawn of the new morning.

This is a work of time; but we must set our faces, flint-like, in the right direction, and we are sure to triumph. "The battle is not to the strong alone, but to the vigilant, the active, the brave." No great good is achieved without a struggle. Every earthly birth is attended by a great throe and pain. We say: "Who will cook the breakfasts and do the chamber-work during this transition period?" A couple of days, Madam, and you are restored to wash the few dishes. The dirt about the house may be allowed to accumulate—it will probably be there just as much when order is restored—the children may be neglected in the mean time. Children must be fed on baker's bread and molasses, and we must raise our own tea with our own hands. Meals must be kept closed, and all outward indications of "Not at home" must be kept up to frighten away company. Let us be willing to make any sacrifice up with the exultant feeling that we have the power in our own hands. Should we become ill in the transition time we will have the doctor and a baker's crust laid on our table. And should we die, better die a natural death than of an overdose of Fire or the Black plague. The very weakness and fear that we will not die in this struggle—that we will fight the good fight till the battle is fought—that the eyes of the countries of men and money, and we can hold out until the enemy's strength is entirely exhausted. Oh for the glorious time when the intelligence offices are overflowing, and the officers of the Freedmen's Bureau groan with the black millstone they have hung about their necks! Will it not be a foreshadowing of the new millennium?

Having finished the above literary balloon, before cutting the cable loose I left it before my husband Job with the apple-pie at lunch-time. Pretty fair article so far as condiments are concerned, but you don't intend it as any thing practical? I admire that feline arrangement of yours, only I fear a crusade against the cats; but as a cat has nine lives, I'll bet on them every time. Can you imagine how the Princess Rudzoulkowsky looked when the Genie told her that a roc's egg must be hung in the middle of her chamber before the palace would be perfection? Two great pearls, surpassing any of Bull, Black, & Co., glistened on my cheeks. Job instantly soared to his proper element, and says: "Little wife, I think the lesson for us all is here: is submission to the inevitable. Could your two hands lift up the pitcher that holds the Atlantic Ocean and pour it on the Western continent, it would not cover the mountains until every little hill and valley was submerged. And just so long as the demand exceeds the supply, just so long this same state of affairs will continue." I interrupted him, and said: "Job, you are sufficiently rough a man, my eyes." "They are all I happen to have for the present." "But I feel sure that I am in the right." "Then you have proved that theory as well as the excellent apple-pie, Starry!" "The cook left a week ago," I sobbed. "Let us be thankful, Starry, that the kitchen is not destroyed on account." I'll take another piece of that apple-pie, and you may expect me home to dinner to-day. Home is the sweetest place on earth, after all." The smoke of Job's cigar ascended, and I am still living to tell the tale.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

"NO man ever felt any thing but irritation at seeing a woman's gown doing the business of the crossing sweeper, and Mrs. Bloomer, in the matter of pippin-shaped, flapped beneath a taper-cap skirt. If young ladies would but believe it, the prettiest thing in the world of small importance in it when they do believe it—a man will be perfectly satisfied with their appearance, so far as their considerations are concerned, if their petticoats are modest and clean and their boots are neatly blacked. Amen.

So says the London Saturday Review, emolliently. We know not how it may be in London, but we unhesitatingly affirm that petticoats are shocking "elaborately clean" are virtues unattainable in this city by ladies who promenade the streets. The process of "do" and "undone" that one meets in Broadway on a bright afternoon very few seem to realize this fact, though every body knows it. In the sea, the ocean grave is gathered up pretty few bones, and the gay petticoat is a vast improvement on the shroud. But we are not going to preach a sermon, because such gorgeous fabrics as we constantly see worn in our dirty streets? Costly silks of delicate hues meet one at every turn, and the young maiden, threading through the mud, leaves a fatal stain upon the fabric, and the lady who wears it is unconscious in haste. Such ladies are suitable only for the drawing-room; and even though one may afford thus to destroy her wardrobe, such waste is not only wrong, but foolish.

For such streets as we have, at this season, plain woolen fabrics are the only wear appropriate for the promenade and library, the Empress' cloth, and even the stout water-proof—all are serviceable and pretty, and are to be obtained in every color.

An exchange gives the following, which may suggest to careful wives the reason why their husbands' "dickeys" disappear in such a mysterious way:

"Biddy," said Mrs. Pennyroie, "there is little starch in the dickeys this week, and altogether the clothes do not look as well as usual."

"And shure you must remember, ma'am, I git but shtarch and stargum to do them wid. If you would be after the coal mate you must rise on my wages."

"And what is stargum? I never heard of it before."

"Shure and stargum stiffens them more; but it takes tin and sixpence to put on the fine gloss."

"Well, Biddy, you shall have it. Only, Biddy?"

"Now its me last till you, 'tiwould make them look so illigant as to attract the notice of the men folks."

"So, Biddy, you are disposed to make a 'strike' if I would have my wife's clothes look nice?"

"Och! no, mem; it's not me that will ever break the pace by striking for more. The married woman likes to put her finger to her mistress; and didn't I tell Patrick O'Flaherty to whom I was married, that I'd not put the hand would do the dirty thing for all the money in America?"

"Well, Biddy, I will see what we will do about the starch-billing system."

"And, by the powers, Mr. Pennyroie shall be stiffened, but I won't promise to gloss him."

The following communication, which has just come to hand, will explain itself:

"DEAR GOSSIP,—I saw a very good thing done at a concert the other night. Tickets were one dollar. And there were three persons in front of me who had paid only for a single piece. Rather high. But after the good pieces the ushers all disappeared, and stood in the entries. Then, and only then, until the singer or the player came back again and began, would they open the gilt screen doors instead of twelve. Not price six cents and a quarter each, which is rather dear, I think.

"It strikes me that would be a good remedy for high prices. When I go shopping I don't want a great mills and rake ten cents for it let the servant girl clap her hands, and the whole establishment pour in to the front door at once. When a lady goes to Stewart's, and buys a silk dress at three dollars a yard, she don't want to be waited on in a square of sheeting, and then have to go to the desk to get a napkin, and stop on second immediately can her and another lady in front of her, or coming, and the gentleman visits the shoemaker's and gets fitted with a pair of boots for a dollar and a half, and then goes to the shoemaker three in a pair of slippers. In like manner there is a ridiculous waste in sending all the clerks to the music communication of the work you should send him the bill, and he will pay it.

"It appears to me that the general adoption of this principle would make the cost of avoiding all the bills very small indeed. Will you not urge it upon the public?

"Yours, &c., BROOME."

"P.S.—The topic suggests that what has led to the extensive adoption of the Bible in school is the feeling that it would lead to the minister's preaching his sermon over again."

A young man in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, on a wager of $500, recently walked a hundred miles in as many consecutive hours, and won the bet. Throughout the whole his nervous excitement was kept up by strong tea. His head was bandaged and bathed frequently with rum and water. He suffered from nervous weakness and exhaustion. The fourth and last day was one of weariness, aching limbs, and deep heat, and sleep. He reported to the sporting reporter as he went his hearty rounds. In the 60th hour he fainted and fell. Every hour of the last four he was helped all over with rum and alum. In the 70th hour he again fell in faintness. The last hour at length arrived, and with his assistance he completed his mile in 59 minutes. A terrible reaction took place afterward, and constant medical attendance and careful nursing alone saved his life. The sad result of betting in connection with the foolish and wicked expenditure of strength is the consideration to which the misguided reporter appears to have given the least attention. Even in these times the amount of money he had received would not induce him to make a like effort."

The following singular romance originates in Connecticut:

Norwalk is exercised about two scratches, which, on Sunday night last, disfigured the body of a young lady, who had been buried that afternoon, and succeeded beyond their anticipations. She had been buried within a catalepsic fit, and, upon being exposed to the night air, awakened from restless. The resurrectionists dug her and she walked home. Her parents refused to admit her, supposing her to be a ghost. She then went to the house of a young man to whom she was engaged. He took her in, and Monday morning they were married.

Under the title of "Sweet Potato Jim," Martha E. Lines publishes the following spicy paragraph in the San Jose (California) Courier:

"Jim Bunkard, Robert Lucas, having advertised me in last week's paper as having left his bed and bread without just cause, and forbidding the public from trusting me on his account, I wish to state that the bed was mine before I married Lucas, and as for the bread, there was none to my since he married me. He has spent a fortune since I married him, and I will be cursed, if I am to pay the board of my children's share on his word. I hereby caution the public not to trust him on my account, as I shall pay no debts of his contracting."

It is stated that the United States Telegraph Company have refused their rates for messages between New York and Eastern cities fifty per cent. The rates are now for ten words to Boston, thirty cents; to New Haven or Hartford, twenty cents. It may be hoped that this telegraphy is to a general fall in prices.

It is said that the last male aboriginal inhabitant of Tasmania, or Van Diemen's Land, was present at the annual ball of the Governor of Hobart Town (the capital), accompanied by his wife, the only surviving representative of their tribe, who numbered in the first of this century from 5000 to 7000.

Strange as it may seem, the following absurd epitaph is said to have been actually copied from a tombstone in a Massachusetts church-yard:

Here lie the remains of Ellen Hill,
A woman who would always have her will,
She enabled her husband, though she made good bread;
To go to the devil, which he rather thinks dead.
She skipped her children (and she drank her gin)
Before they had learned to read the Bible or spell.
May all such women go to some great hell
Where they belong, and let Ellen Hill rest well.

To plenish contrast in this curious epitaph, found in Plymouth, England, to the memory of Rev. Mr. Colton and wife:

Forty-nine years they lived, man and wife,
And 'while were one, no many were their strife.
She first departing, he a few days tried
To live without her, could not, and he died.

Coleridge classifies readers as follows:

1. Sponges, who absorb all they read, and return it nearly in the same state, only a little dirtier.

2. Sand-glasses, who retain nothing, and are content to get through a book by the wish of getting through with it.

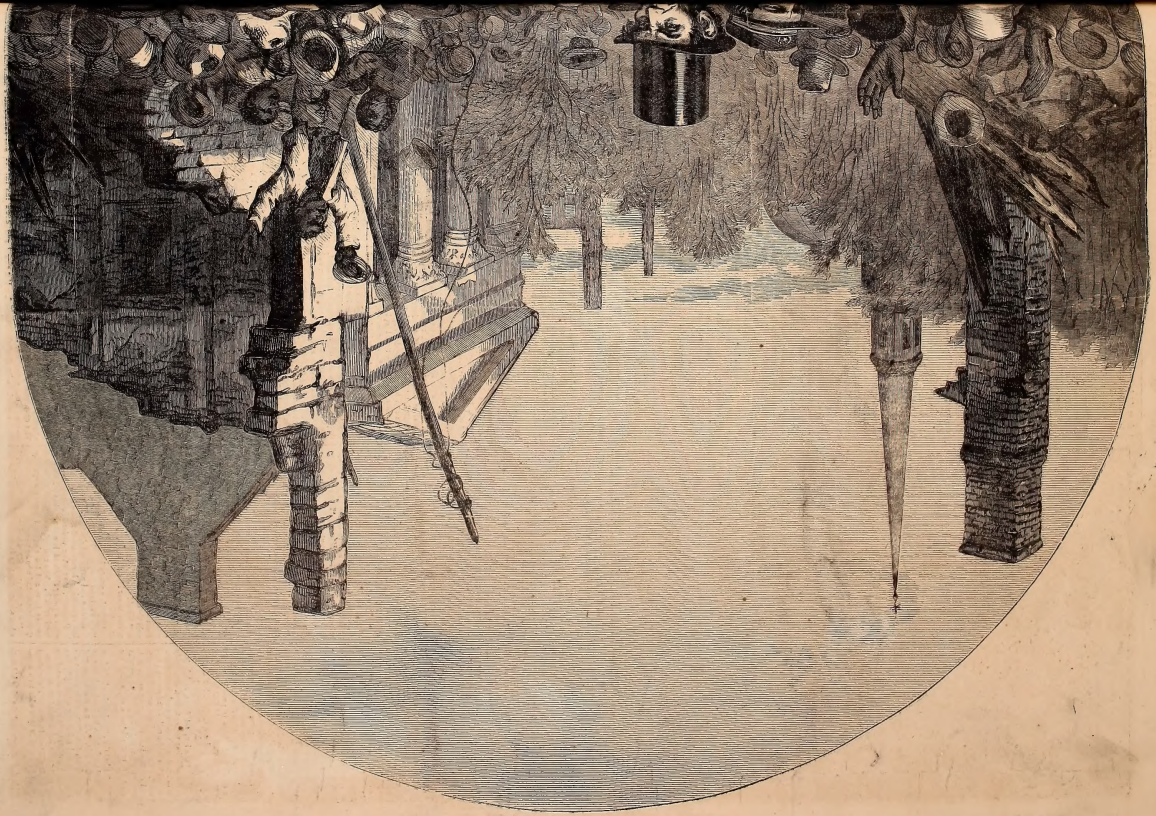
3. Strain-bags, who retain merely the dregs of what they read.

4. Moral diamonds, equally rare and profitable, who get only what they read, and enable others to profit by it also.

In the latest fashion-reports from across the waters we find that for some time past blue has decidedly been the favorite color among young ladies who have officiated as bridesmaids. Whether this custom or whether some one case may have been, trimmed with blue, blue-satin round was said, and the fashion hovers in the air, but does not set of livery among them. Blue appeared to be the color selected as a matter of course. But the favorite hue is at last losing its prestige—probably from the fact that no common, or possibly the wisest season has had something to say with its being cast aside, decidedly, for a new, giving place to the warmer and more glowing shades of scarlet and cerise.

We have been present at several fashionable weddings of late, and have remarked that red trimmings of some shade have been invariably selected by the bridesmaids as ornaments to their dress; while dresses with velvet trimmings upon white silk dresses prove very effective, and are particularly appropriate to the present dreary season of the year.

At a recent fashionable wedding in London the bridesmaids were dressed in rose pompon, the overskirt round the skirt with two graduated rows of scarlet ribbon velvet; scarlet bunes mantles, trimmed all round the edge and up the centre of the back with two rows of white chiny guipure; white tulle bonnets, with scarlet flowers. The bride's dress was magnificent in material and make up proportions, for the skirt trained certainly more than one yard and a half long on the side as the fair lady walked up the church, and the front of rich white satin, cut out in wide deep scallops round the skirt, was also deeply scallop ensuring more than twelve inches in depth; numbers of white roses followed the outline of the scallop a short distance up the skirt, and above the bouillonnés were ruchings of satin and a splendid Honiton lace flounce.



We may be permitted to question whether a bride's dress cut with a train a yard and a half long is not very inconvenient to the wearer. Were it a Court train, which, as every one knows, is only allowed to be worn by a marquisate aliquot, for on getting in and out of a carriage it can be thrown over the arm and carried gracefully; but when the bride is required to walk any considerable length, then it appears to involve a ceremony of rolling and unrolling previously to entering the church, and returning to the carriage, which must be even more unpleasing to the lady who wears it than to the spectators who witness the ceremony.

At a proposed Fancy Ball in Paris, it is announced that every sixteen, one, or twenty-four ladies have to appear as birds. The eldest is to represent a swallow, and the youngest a humming-bird. The first will wear a white satin dress, with swallow's wings on each part of the skirt, arranged as a stomacher; the front of the bodice and the white satin, and the back black velvet, cut out with ends, so as to represent the long-pointed tail of a swallow; one scarlet with outstretched wings is placed on the small shoulder-knot, and a long veil from the head-dress.

The humming-bird will be much more brilliant. The young lady wears a shot emerald-green satin skirt, crossbanded with humming-birds, the throat and wings of which are each of the rich variable colors; these are most gorgeously-colored among little birds. These wings and breast of the bird-dress find space on the skirt, and at a short distance have all the effect of a flight of birds suddenly raised in their passage through the air by the green satin. The bodice looks as though it were fastened with humming-birds of utmost microscopic dimensions, so minute are their proportions. These birds are represented, as feathers, but in brilliant metallic substances, which seemingly change color with every position they are placed in. The bodice is cut low and sleeveless, embroidered with white bugle beads, and the head-dress consists of three small humming-birds lighting amidst the curls.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN ENTERING RICHMOND, APRIL 4, 1865.

KATTIE AND "THE DEIL."

In a certain village of Bohemia lived a peasant woman called Kattie. She possessed a little hut of her own, a garden, and a small income; but had she rolled in wealth, not a lad would have ventured to say—"Kattie, will you be mine?" for she was manyish as a cat of the woods, and owned a tongue which worked like a flail. She had an old mother, providentially as deaf as a log, and her she scolded from morning till night, so that her voice was audible half a mile off. If any neighbor entered her cottage, she spat, and set up her back, and hissed so that the intruder was only too glad to escape without a scratched face. When any one passed her door, Kattie flung him a spiteful word; and was only too glad if the passer stopped to retaliate, for if he had an ugly expression to cast at her, she had a dozen to pelt him with in return.

By the time that she had reached the age of forty, without having found a lover, all the—milk of human kindness she never had, which might acidulate —but all the sweetness of her nature had become Concentrated Sulphuric Acid, ready to blacken and burn any thing with which it came in contact.

It is the custom in Boh mia for young people to resort to the tavern on Sunday afternoon for a dance. As soon as the fiddle or bagpipe is heard, the lads run into the streets, the girls appear at the cottage doors, and the children peep out of the windows. Young men and women then follow the musicians to the inn, and the dance begins.

Kattie was always the first to follow the fiddler, and to appear in the public house. There she saw the lads whirling about with the lasses, but never in all her life had she been invited by any one to dance; Sunday after Sunday she tried her luck, and hoped against hope; no man solicited her hand as a partner. "Well!" said she, impetuously, one Sunday, "here am I getting an old woman, and I have never danced yet! never saw any thing like the lads here! Such a set of clowns! This is provoking. I'd dance with the—with the old Deil himself, if he were to ask me!" and she snapped her fingers, and stamped on the ground.

She bustled into the inn, sat down, and looked about her at the whirling, merry figures. Suddenly a gentleman in huntsman's suit came into the room, seated himself at the table, called for beer, and had a tumbler filled. Running over the assembly, he espied Kattie. Immediately to his feet, walked across the room, and with the most graceful bow, and with the most courteous air, offered her the glass.

Kattie, delighted at the attention, drank the beer with avidity, and made room for the gentleman to seat himself at her side. After a few words had passed between them, the stranger flung some silver to the fiddler, and asked for a "solo." The dancers deserted the centre of the room, cleared the area, and the gentleman led Kattie forth to dance.

"Bless us all, it will rain to-morrow!" exclaimed the old people, opening their eyes wide with astonishment.

The lads bit their fingers and the girls hid their faces to conceal their laughter. But Kattie saw no one; she was radiant with joy, now that she had a chance of dancing; and danced she would have, in spite of the whole world laughing.

All that afternoon and all that evening the strange gentleman danced with Kattie, and with her alone. He brought her gingerbread, almond-rock, and lemon-drops, and she ate and sucked to her heart's content.

As soon as the dancing came to an end the stranger escorted her home:

"Oh dear!" exclaimed Kattie; "would that I might dance with you forever!"

"That is quite within the range of possibility," replied the stranger.

"Where do you live, Sir?"

"Put your arm round my neck and I will.whisper to you." Kattie did so, and, presto! the stranger had become a devil, and was flying with her to his home—a place which need not be specified. In he came at the door, bathed in a profuse perspiration; for his necklace was a heavy one.

"Now then, Kattie, let go," said he.

"Oh, never! never!"

"Come, there's a dear soul, take your arms off."

"Dearest, never!"

"Why, whom have you got here?" asked the Master of the spirit, in a voice of thunder which had in it a faint thrill of dismay.

"E-K-K-atitie," panted the unfortunate devil, struggling to shake his fair load off.

"Kattie!" echoed his Majesty, leaping off his throne, casting aside his bifurcated sceptre, and turning—not exactly pale, but Oxford mixture:

"Kattie, here's an end to our quiet life, if that woman becomes an inmate of Pandemonium. She'll bring the place down about our ears. Away with you, Moloch, and do not show your face in here till you have shaken off your dreadful encumbrance."

So there was nothing for it but that the quondam Jäger should return to earth and free himself from the embrace of Kattie as best he might.

He flew back sweetly and despondingly, with decided crick in his neck. On reaching earth he seated himself on a flowery bank, and putting on a more expressive mask, and, in a hollow voice:

"Kattie, if you do not let go I shall plunge you in molten brimstone!"

"Oh," replied she, with empressement, "I feel no pain so long as I am with you!" and she laid her head on his breast.

Aaron!" Moloch looked vacantly at the landscape, "Kattie!" he resumed, as a brilliant idea entered his head, and illumined his countenance with a momentary gleam of ghastly joy: "Kattie, I am so rich; I will give you a mountain of solid gold if you will only let go."

"What! leave you for filthy lucre? Never, never, never!" and she buried her head in his breast.

"Here's a pretty kettle of fish," said the spirit; "what is to be done now?"

He rose and wandered despairingly over a desolate moor which lay stretched before him.

Presently, staggering under his load, he came upon a young shepherd, in a sheep-skin with all its wool upon it. The evil spirit resumed its former human form, and the shepherd was consequently quite ignorant of who he was.

"Why, my good Sir, whom are you carrying?" asked the shepherd, in perplexity.

"Ah, good friend, I scarcely know! why look you: I was walking peacefully along my way, without thinking of any thing in particular, when, with a leap, skip, and jump, this woman fastened herself to my neck, and will on no account let me go. I want to carry her to the next village, and there obtain my liberation; but I am scarcely in a fit condition to do so, my knees are shivering under me."

"Come now," said the compassionate peasant, "I will help you; but I can not carry her for long, as I have my sheep to attend to: half the way—will that suit you?"

"Ah! I shall be thankful!"

"Now then you! hang yourself to me!" cried the shepherd, addressing Kattie.

The woman looked round, observed that the shepherd was infinitely preferable to Moloch; he was good-looking and young. She let go her hold on the Deil, and click—she was fast as a spring-collar round the shepherd's neck.

The man had not quite enough to carry, what with Kattie, and what with his immense sheep-skin dress; and in a very short while he was tired, and strove to disengage himself from his encumbrance. In vain! Kattie would not listen to his remonstrances, and the more he struggled the tighter she clung.

Presently he came near a pool. Oh, if he could but cast her in! But how? Could he manage to slip out of his sheep-skin? No harm trying; but it must be done v-e-r-y cautiously—v-e-r-y gently. Hist! he has slipped one arm out, and Kattie is none the wiser. Hist! he has slipped the other arm out, and Kattie has not observed it. Now then! he slides his hand stealthily up his breast, and unbuttons the cape. He has undone one button, two, three—a bo: of the head, a splash, and Kattie and the sheep-skin are in the pond. She sinks —she rises; and her eyes, ering ever rest upon the shepherd and the evil spirit dancing in an ecstasy of delight on the bank.

"My best of friends!" exclaimed Moloch, enthusiastically, "you have laid me under a lasting obligation; you have imposed upon me a debt of gratitude which I never can adequately discharge. But for you I might have held Kattie hanging round my neck throughout eternity! I might never have been able to shake that woman off; and never," continued the spirit, musingly, "never is a very long word! Now, look you here, shepherd—I am—" In what words than I could express it the spirit had described his nature to the young man. "Well, and being what I am, it lies in my power to repay you, in my poor way, for what you have done. I will forthwith proceed to the next town, and will enter into and possess the Chancellor. As soon as all doctors and exorcists have failed to free the Chancellor from me, do you go to the town and offer, for the recession of two bags of dollars, to liberate the Chancellor from the evil spirit which torments him. Then come up to the bedside, say 'Hocus pocus!' and I will fly away out of the window, and enter into and possess the Prime Minister. When all other means of cure have failed, do you interpose, at the price of two sacks of gold pieces, to free the Prime Minister. Come to him, say as before, 'Hocus pocus!' and I will fly from his throat, and enter into and possess the King. And now, I warn you, beware how you venture to attempt to expell me from the body of the King. Should you, notwithstanding this caution, risk the attempt, I shall infallibly tear you in pieces, limb from limb."

The shepherd expressed his acknowledgment in the best and most appropriate terms of which he was master. "Well," said the Deil, as he spread his wings and flew away.

"Ta, ta!" replied the shepherd, gravely, looking after him. Shortly after this a rumor spread through the country that the Chancellor was out of his mind—quite out of his mind—what he should be. It was whispered about that the Chancellor had been playing pretty pranks, and that it was necessary that professors of medicine and of theology that he was possessed by a devil. But all medicines, allopathic and homœopathic, having failed to cure the Chancellor, the clergy took him in hand and tried the last appeal to exorcism. Accordingly the Chancellor, or rather the Chancellor's tenant, was proof against all ecclesiastical demonstrations.

The pagan shepherd now came to the town, and loudly proclaimed his power to cure any one of diabolical possession. All other resources having failed, the King determined to try the shepherd's skill, and so ordered him to visit, and prescribe for, the Chancellor. As soon as the peasant entered the room the new and unknown Lord of the Highest Office of the Crown was critical. He was kicking his attendants, abusing them in language hardly consistent with the dignity of his position, and foaming at the mouth.:

The shepherd demanded as his fee for curing him two sacks of solid gold, and the bargain was concluded. He now approached the unhappy man, whose convulsions became more terrible as he drew near.

"Hocus pocus!" said the shepherd, in a loud and with a solemn face, at the same time making various fanciful signs in the air with his hand. Away flew the Chancellor's tenant in a shower of glass in the window into countless fragments on his way. The shepherd received his fee, and returned to his village.

But it was soon noised abroad that something had gone wrong with the Prime Minister, and it was surmised that the demon which had been expelled from the Chancellor, had entered into the keeper of the King's conscience—awkward, decidedly. What was to be done? The practitioners were again applied to first, as a matter of course, the allopaths tapped the Minister's constitution with violent medicines without any explosive effect. The homœopaths did nothing at all, and the divines sent the devil to sleep. When all had failed, recourse was had to the shepherd, at the price of two sacks of gold pieces the shepherd agreed to perform a cure. The circumstances resembled those in the former case, with one exception: the window was prudentially opened, and a glazier's bill saved. But now the evil spirit struck at higher game, and he took full and undisputed possession of the—

As might be expected, people were not long in the wiser for experience, and the usual allopathic, homœopathic, and ecclesiastical systems were tasked to recover the King, and proved, as every one knew would be the case, a failure. Then they sent for the shepherd, but he refused to come. They sent again and offered a room full of gold dust, but he persisted in his refusal, remembering the devil's warning. The Prime Minister now ordered out a regiment of horse, and had the shepherd-exorcist brought will-he nill-he. In vain did the poor man protest his inability to cure the King; the Prime Minister insisted, and the Chancellor threatened to put the law in force, which required that the lad which could sing and wouldn't sing should be made to sing. Cowed by this threat the shepherd determined to do his best.

He entered the regal apartment. The King was howling and frothing at the mouth, and looked desperate. "Hallo!" roared the spirit within; "you here, shepherd? did not I warn you not to attempt to cast me out of his Majesty?"

"Steady," said the shepherd, putting on an expression of awe; and, stealing on tip-toe across the room, with his hand to his mouth, he whispered: "Do you think you can find a fool as to attempt any thing of the kind? I'm only come to tell you, dear friend, that—that—that—KATTIE IS OUT OF THE POND, AND IS ENTERING THE TOWN!"

"Kattie!" gasped the devil. "Then I'm off!" and away he flew.

IN JEOPARDY.

I'm a bricklayer, I am; and, what's more, down in the country, where people ain't so particular about keeping trades distinct as they are in the great towns. This may be seen any day in a general shop, where, as one might say, you can get any thing, from half a quarten of butter up to a horn lantern; and down again to a hundred of short-cut nails—well, down in the country I've done a bit of a job now and then as a mason; and not so badly neither, I should suppose, for I got pretty well paid, considering, and didn't hear more than the usual amount of growlin' after it was done—which is saying a deal. Ours ain't the most agreeable of lives, and if it warn't for recollecting a little about the dignity of labor, and such-like, one would often grumble more than one does.

Some time ago—I don't matter to you, nor me, nor yet any body else, just when it was—work was precious slack down our way—all things considered, I ain't a-going to tell you where our way lie. A day's work a week had been all I'd been able to get for quite two months: so Mary, that's my wife, used to pinch and screw, and screw and pinch, and keep on squeezing shilling after shilling out of the long stocking, till at last it got so light that one morning she lets it fall upon the table, where, instead of coming down with a good hearty spang, it fell softly and just like a piece of paper that was empty. And then, poor lass! she bangs on to my neck, and burst out a-crying that pitiful that I'm blest if I didn't want my arms round her every quarter of a minute. I hadn't minded the screwing and pinching, not a bit of it. First week we went without our Sunday joint. Well, we got on much. Second week we stopped my half-pints o' beer. Third week I put my pipe out. Mary kep' on saying that things would look up soon, and that I should have an ounce of the best to make up for it. But things didn't look up, and, in spite of all the screwing, we got down to the bottom of the stocking, as I said just now.

I hadn't much cared for the pinching, but it was very poor law as got pinched the more; and the way a-getting paler and thinner every day, till I couldn't bear to see it. I ran out o' the house, and down to Jenkins's yard, where I'd been a-working for years. I soon found Jenkins, and I says to him, "Governor," I says, "this won't do, you know; a man can't live upon wind."

"True for you, Bill Stock," he says.

"And a man can't keep his wife upon wind," I says.

"Right you are, Bill," he says; and he went on and spoke as fair as a man could speak with what he hadn't a bob he could put me on, or he would have done it in a minute. "I'm werry sorry, Bill," he says; "but if times don't mend, I tell you what I'm a-going to do."

"What's that?" I says.

"Go up to Lunnun," he says; "and if I was a young man like you, I wouldn't stop starving down here, when they're giving first-class wages up there. And when times is looking pretty well round, as think as thick, and good big jobs, too: hotels, and railways, and bridges, and all sorts."

I feels mighty sharp, and starts off home: for when a feller's hungry and close up it lays hold on his temper as well as his stummick, more especially when there's wife and child to think of. I puts them was in the bottom o' the jar into it, lights up, and then down aside of Mary, and puts my arm round her, just as if I meant it, and comforts her, and then begins smokin' an thinking. Werry slow as to the last, and werry slow as to the second; as smokin' costs money, and the dust was dry: so I went on thinking came cheap jest then—and it's sur-prising how yer can think on yer own inside. I suppose it is because there's plenty o' room for the thoughts to work in.

Well, I hadn't been settin' above a minute like this, when my lass lays her head on my shoulder, and though she wouldn't let me see it, I knowed she was a-going to cry; but I didn't say nothing. Perhaps I held her a little bit tighter; and there I sat thinking and watching the thin smoke, till I could see buildings, and scaffolds, and heaps o' bricks, and blocks o' stone, and could almost hear the ring o' the trowels, and the "sur-jar" o' the big stone saws, and there was the man a-running up and down the ladders, and the gangers a-giving their orders, and all seemed so plain that I beats my grow warm. And I keep on smoking till it seemed as though I was one of a great crowd o' men standing round a little square wooden office place, and being called in one at a time; and there I could see them a-takin' their six-and-thirty shillings and two pounds apiece as fast as a clerk could book it. And then all at once it seemed to fade away, like a fog in the sun; and I kep' on drawing, but nothing come, and I found as my pipe was out, and there was nothing left to light agen. So I knocks the ashes out—what there was on 'em—and I fixes the breaks the pipe up, bit by bit, and puts all the pieces in my pocket—right-hand trowsers-pocket.

"What for?" says you.

Not in' at all, as I knows on; but that's where I did; and I am a-telling you what happened. Perhaps it was because I felt uncomfortable with nothing to rattle in my pocket. Howsomever, my mind was made up; and brightening up, and looking as cheerful as if I'd six-and-thirty shillings to take on Saturday, I says to her as was by my side:

"Polly, my lass, I'm a-going up to London!"

"Going to London!" she says, lifting up her head.

"London," I says; and then I began to think about what going to London meant. For, mind you, it didn't mean a chap in a rough jacket making up a bundle in a clean blue handkercher, and then shovin' his stick through the knot and sticking it over his shoulder, and then stuffing his hands in his pockets, and taking the road upards, whistlin' like a blackbird. No; it meant something else. It meant breaking up a tidy little home as two young folks—common people, in course—had been a-saving up for years, to make snug; it meant half the breaking a poor simple lass's heart to part with this little thing and that little thing; tearing up the nest that took so like-a-building, and was also to smug arter a cold day's work. I looked at the clean little winders, and then at the bright kettle on the shiny black hob, and then at the werry small fire as there was, and then fust at-one thing, and then at another, all so clean and neat and homely; and all a-shoving here and there, as I was now and then, and then I thought a little more of what going up to London really did mean, and I suppose it must have showed through (and I was afraid faint and poorly, and I'm almost ashamed to tell it, for I'm such a big strong chap; but truth's truth. Well, sometow I seemed to grow dim in my eyes, and my head went down upon my knees, and I cried like a school-boy. But it went off, for my lass was kneeling down close by me in a minute, and her thick old head upon her shoulder, and began a-doing all she could to make-believe it was all right, and she was sorry she was so poorly, and how wonderful well up there; and so we talked it over for long enough, while she made-believe to be cheerful, and kep' me and the side, a-chirping away"—a-putting down nought for herself, and a-carrying I don't know how much for me—till glowed up under the discovery how much I'd ever work on plenty, or whether work was slack, I, Bill Stock—christened William—was rich in my good wife.

That was something like a thought, that was, and seemed to stiffen me up, and put bone and muscle into a fellow till he felt strong as a lion; and set to talking over the arrangements; and two days arter, Polly and I was in a lodging in London.

Nex' morning I was up at five, and made myself smart; not fine, but clean, and looking as if I wasn't afraid of work; and I finds my way to one of the big wick-shops, where the bell was a-ringing for six o'clock, and the men was a-scuffling in; while a chap with a rose in the button-hole of his coat, late-ones, for stopping on pay-day out of their wages —which is but fair, yer know, for if two hundred men lost a quarter of an hour apiece in a week it would come to something stiff in a year. Well, there was a couple more chaps like me standing at the gate, and I says to 'em if they could put work on, and one o' 'em slips in, and comes out again directly a-swearing and growling like any thing, and then another goes in, and he comes out a-swearing too, and then I feels my heart go sinking down ever so low. So I says to the fust:

"Any one on a job?" I says.

"Go to—" somewhere, he says, cutting up rough; so I asks t'other one.

"Any vacancy at a job?" I says.

"Not a h'porth," he says, turning his back, and going off with the fust one; and I must say as they didn't look a bit like jobbers.

So I stood there for quite five minutes wondering what to do; whether I should go in and ask for my self, or go and ask somewhere else. I didn't like to try, arter seeing two men refused. All at once a tall sharp-eyed man comes out of a side place and looks at me and says here.

"Now, my man," he says, "what's your business? What do you want?"

"Job, Sir," I says.

"Then why didn't you come to I says," he says.

"Saw two turned back," I says.

"Oh! we don't want such as them here," he says, "but there's plenty of work for men who mean it;" and then he looks through me a'most. "I suppose you do mean it, eh?"

"Give us hold of a trowel," says I, sitting in both hands.

"Bricklayer?" says he, smiling.

"Right," says I.

"From the country?" says he.

"Yes," says I.

"Work slack there?" says he.

"Awful," says I.

"You'll do," says he. "Here, Jones, put this fellow in number four kit."

I'm sure I believe me, I could have taken hold of him and hugged him; but I didn't, for I kep' it for Polly.

Well—I wonder how many times I've said well since I begun—I was in work now, and I meant to keep it, and I did. I make the bricks and morter fly! My hodman did his day's work that day, if he never did it afore. Then some of the men began to take it up, and got to chaffing: one says there'd soon be no work left; and another says I'd better have a couple o' Paddies to keep me going, one for bricks and another for morter; while one fellow makes himself precious unpleasant by keeping on going "puff! puff! puff!" like a steam-ingin', because I worked so fast. But I let them chaff as long as they liked; and bime-by I comes to be working alongside of my steam-ingin' friend, and just as he's been going it a little extra, I says to him quietly:

"Ever been out o' work, matey?"

"Not to signify," he says.

"Cause if ever you are, and come down werry close to ground, you'll be as glad to handle the trowel again as I am." He didn't puff any more that day, not as I heerd.

London work was something fresh to me, used to think that I'd been about some tidy buildings down our way, but what was the tidiest on 'em to the London jobs I was put on! Jobs where the scaffolding must have cost hundreds upon hundreds of pounds more than the house, and, and every thing put together, the biggest place I had ever worked upon. I used, too, to think I was pretty strong in the head; but I soon began to feel small there—specially when I had been up about a week and was put on at a big hotel. Right up so high that one turned quite giddy and sick and faint to look to my say, for I knew she'd have been on the fidget all day if I had told her.

The highest I got to stand it all pretty well; and we began to feel a bit settled in our one room. Not that we much liked it, but then it was werry cheap, and we kep' a good fire up, and I could draw your week's wage, good wage too, jest as I had seen it when settin' in my own place at home. Then I got to like it, and I began to get to feel that we were at home in London, and Polly she said she never should, after having a baby our two selves we made things pretty comfortable.

The big hotel was getting on at a tremendous rate, but I was the strong body on us at work, and it used to make me think and think of the loads upon loads of bricks and hundreds upon hundreds more it would take before it was finished. One day when I was bricklaying up at the top—I don't know how many pair of stairs it was—and I never used to care to look to see for fear of turning giddy—one day it came on to blow a regular gale; and how at last a lot of the top of the scaffold-pole did quiver and quiver, while, wherever there was a loose rope, it rattled and beat against the poles, as if it was trying to get being fetched down, and wanted to break loose and be off.

It blew at last so werry hard that I should have been obliged to stop if an accident or two hadn't, and I couldn't well leave my work, and the old hands didn't seem to mind it much; so I kep' at it, though the wind blew, and I kept on, and my eyes, I can cull it all back again; the creaking and quivering of the poles, the rattling of the boards, and the hissing and whistling of the gale as it swept savagely by in a rage because it could not sweep us away.

A high wind is pretty hard to deal with sometimes on the ground; and I have seen folks pretty hard driven to turn a corner. So it may be generally the case of fust it is right on end, and then it's scared, and where a man is expected to work with both hands and hold on by nothing, and that, too, where a single good-hearted wind can—there, it's a thing as allus makes me nervous to talk about.

It was getting to be somewhere about half past three, and I was working hard, so as to keep from thinking about the storm, when all at once I happened to turn my head and look, and the men was pened to turn my head and look, and the men was a-scuffling down the ladders as hard as they could go. And then, before I had time to think, there was a loud crash, and a lot of planks and poles, and a big pipe and all swept with it poles, boards, and bricks right into the open space below.

I leaped up at a pole which was projected from the roof above me, threw up my head, caught it, and hung suspended, just as the boards upon which I stood but an instant before went down to join in the general ruin some twenty feet below. Tightly clasping the rough fir pole I clung for life.

Think? I did think. I thought a hundreds of things in a few seconds as I shut my eyes and began to pray, for I felt as I could not hold on long, and I knew as I should fall a long way before long, and I knew as I should fall either give way or shoot me when the hooks should either give way or shoot me off again with a spring, and then I knew there would be a crowd round something upon the ground, and the police coming with a stretcher.

"Creep out, mate, and come down the rope," cried a voice from below. I looked down, and there was a man who had placed the pole I was hanging to had a block at the end, through which ran a rope for drawing light things up and down by the side of the building. But I dared not move; then, raising myself, I went hand over hand toward the pulley, and in another instant I should have grasped it, when I heard a rushing sound, and the creaking of a wheel, as the rope went spinning through, and was gone; the weight of the things below had dragged the other through. As I hung I distinctly heard it fall, perhaps a hundred and fifty feet.

As the rope fell, and I hung there, my head began to clear a little from those below; but nobody dared to my assistance, for I was beyond help then; but I seemed to get more used with the danger, though my arms felt as if they were being wrenched out of their sockets, and my nerves as if they were torn with hot irons. Sobbing for breath, I crept in again till I was over the stage first; then close into the face of the building; and there I hung. Once I tried to get some hold with my feet, but the smooth bricks let my toes slip over them directly. Then I tried to get a leg over the pole so as to climb up and sit there; but the time was gone by for that. I had hung too long, and was now growing weaker every moment.

I can describe what I felt. All I knew is, that it was horrible, and that long afterward I used to jump up in bed with a scrdam; for so sure as I was a little out of sorts dreamt of hanging to that scaffold-pole, expecting every moment to be one's last.

I can't say, either, how long I hung; but feeling at length that I was going, I made one last try for it. I thought of my poor lass, and seemed to see her a-looking at me in a widder's cap; and then I clenched my teeth hard, and tried to get on to where the end of the pole was fastened. I got just over over the hard bricks and hooked my fingers and held on; then I got the other hand over, and tried to climb up, as I could see from below encouraged me; but my feet and knees slipped over the smooth bricks, and in spite of every effort they hung down straight at last, and I felt a sharp quiver run through me as slowly, slowly, my hands grew stiff and fingers straightened, and, with pains like dividend and bloodshot, I fell.

—Fell what seemed to be an enormous distance, though it was only to the next stage, where boards, bricks, and tools, shaken by the concussion, went with a crash below. The deal planks upon which I lay, still kep' in their places, but with their ends pitted so near the edge that it seemed to me that the least motion on my part would make them slip, and send me off again. I was too exhausted and frightened to move, and lay there for some time, not knowing whether I was much hurt or not. Then I remember as recalled me to myself was the voice of a man who came up a ladder close at hand; and I could see that he had a rope and pulley with him, and that he had hooked on to the ladder.

"Hold on, mate," he says. "If I throw you the end of the rope, can you tie it round you?"

"I'll try," I says. So he makes a noose, and pulling enough rope through the block, he shies it to me, but it wasn't far enough. So he tries again and again, and at last I manages to hitch the rope in it. But now, as soon as I tried to move, it seemed as if something stabbed me in the side, and, what was more, the man, who was small, I found, used the boards down, and of course me with them.

"Tell them to hold tight by the rope," says I; and then I began to feel very weak, while I got both arms through the noose, and told him to tighten it, which he did by pulling, for I could not have got it over my head without making the boards slip.

"Now, then," he says, "are you ready?"

"All right," I says, faintly, for I felt as if every thing was a-swimming round me; but I heard him give a signal, and felt the snatch of the rope as it cut into my arms under the shoulders, and I was jerked backward and forward in the air; while, with a crash, away went the boards upon which I had been a-lying.

I couldn't see any more, nor hear any more, for I seemed to be sent to sleep; but I suppose I was lowered down, and sent to the hospital, where they put my broken ribs to rights in no time, and it wasn't to werry long before I was at work once more; though it was a month while before I could get on to a high scaffold again without feeling creepy and shivery; but, you know, "use is second nature."

Polly showed me the stocking t'other day, and I must say it has improved wonderful, for wages is very good, and work plenty; and as for them chaps who organize the strikes, it strikes me they don't know what being out o' work is like. But, along of that stocking, one feels tempted very much to go down in the country again, but don't like to, for fear o' things not turning out well; and Polly says, "Let well alone, Bill." So I keeps on, verry well satisfied, and very comfortable.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

THE LATEST THING OUT.—The policeman.

What length ought a lady's crinoline to be?—A little above two feet.

SHAME!—The meanest reason for getting married that we ever heard was a man who said he wanted some one to part his buck hair for him.

"The rich," said the Jew, "act reveless because it teh dear; I am always economical because I'm cheap."

Why was the giant Goliah very much astonished when David hit him with the stone?—Such a thing had never entered his head before.

MARITIME LAW.—The Law of Lifted does not apply in "running down" cases. The parties are not in the same boat.

THRIFT THOUGHTS.

It is quite a subject, with respect to certain heavily bottles moving in a brilliant circle, to suppose that in direct proportion to their extravagance is their capacity for astonishing.

In matrimony one of the liberal arts?. We ask this because in a new young persons who are all in all to each other, and whose limbs are always in the right place, and who are always smiling. This sweet pair propose in a forthcoming announcement to compete with the old economical system. The tender denial of "No company."

There is something sarcastic and significant in those few familiar words which have passed into history, of course, Man—that gorgeous monosyllable—and of course, Enough—that compact little trifle, of a lady does not hit it, she continues till doomsday a Miss.

A THOUGHT IN THE DARK.—The haunted chamber is often how well the ghosts of reminders of course.

If a man simply asks you to be his surety, he will probably pay. If he makes you a solemn speech of thanks, maybe you'll pay for him. Wherever he goes, he simply speaks the truth: But if he writes you a touching letter, and begs that he may be bailed, the right hand turned off before you shall be burnt, you had better lay aside the money at once, as you will be sure to lose it.

A former who had passed innumerable sleepless nights immortalized himself by discovering a method for keeping his babies quiet. The method of operating is as follows: As soon as the smaller awakes, set it up, propped by a pillow, if it can not sit alone, and ensure the fingers with little nuisances; then put half a dozen feathers into its hands, and it will set and pick the feathers from one hand to the other until it drops asleep. As soon as it wakes again, moisten and more feathers and in place of the monosyllabic yells, there will a silence and enjoyment unspeakable.

Man-hood, a hat; woman-hood, a bonnet

The man who takes things easy—The city shopkeeper.

PADDY BLAKE'S ECHO

In the gap of Dunlo
There's an echo so fine,
And some of them echoes is very surprizin',
You'll think in this place
That I mane to deceive—
For a bullock's a thing you expect to find lies in.

But savin and thrun
In that will surprize you
There's an echo as sure and as safe as the bank too;
Just give civilly spoken,
"How d'ye do, Paddy Blake?"
The echo politely says, "Very well, thank you."

One day Teddy Keogh
With Kate Connor did go
To hear from the echo their wonderful talk, Sir;
But the echo, they say,
Was cantankery that day,
Or perhaps Paddy Blake had gone out for a walk, Sir.

"How are you?" says Teddy to Kate,
"'Tis too hard to be bate
By this deaf and dumb baste of an echo, so lazy:
But if we both shout
At each other, no doubt
We'll make up an echo between us, my dairy!

"Now, Kitty," says Teddy,
"You never be touchy;
"Oh, very well, thank you," cries out Kitty; then, Sir,
Says Teddy, "I think you like to be civil,
Kitty darlin'!" says Ted.
"Oh, very well, thank you," says Kitty again, Sir.

"Do you like me?" says Teddy:
Cried, "Very well, thank you," with laughter beguiling.
"Will you marry me?"
Teddy could not be less
Than pay his respects to the last there were smiling:

Oh, dear Paddy Blake,
May you never forsake
Those hills that return us our voices endearing;
And may girls all translate
Echo's "No" to be "Yes,"
No faithfulness doubting, no treachery fearing.

And, boys, be you true,
Like frolicsome Teddy—
Be earnest in loving, though given to joking;
And thus, when inclined,
Sigh all your lovers find
Sweet echoes to answer from hearts they're invoking.

One of the editors of a New Orleans paper, soon after beginning to learn the printing business, received a call at the preacher's daughter. The next time he attended the meeting he was shown an honorable seat within the inclosure as his text, "My daughter is grievously tormented with a devil."

Two lawyers, when a knotty case was over, Shook hands, and were as good friends as before. "Friends!" said the testy client, "how could you To be such friends, who were such foes just now?" "Fool!" said one, "that was to get a living, though no king, Like sheers, we're cut ourselves—but won't entwain!"

Punch gives sur—good advice to women in looking for suitable husbands. Among other things he says:

Don't be afraid to look out for a man that tries whole snuff, and stands with his back to the fire, for a man who is fond of snuff has to marry as any consideration, either for love or money, but decidedly for love, for if he has to marry for money, he is over, is discovered to have had none, he very sure to make his husband a miserable man, he very sure to be rewarded with the best of wives like his deserving being in like. Say dears, when you see and the best of mothers to be your husband. In the next will be a man who do your best to marry him. In the severest winter he would not mind going to bed for you.

The way to get around the chest is to have a large beard within it.

"Dar ar," said a sable orator, addressing his brethren, "two roots to dis world. De one am a heap sweeter dan de oder, but de bitter is perfection, and de odder a narrow and broad road dat leads to destruction. De colled individual takes to de woods."

ALL OUT.—A man asked a servant, "Is your master at home?" "No, Sir." "Is your mistress?" "No, Sir; she's out too." "Well, I'll just step in, and take a warm at the fire till they come in." "Faith, Sir, and that's out too!"

"I wish to look at some shoes for Sissy," said a very impertinent lady's maid to a shoe-shop keeper.

"Yes, ma'am," replied the obliging clerk, instantly displaying a dozen pairs of the smallest that he could obtain before the astonished dame.

"Why, these are for Master, Sir. Why, Sissy is my daughter, a grown-up young woman, and wears ladies' slippers a number six!"

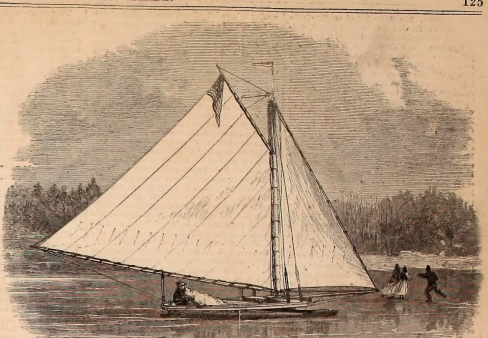
"No man can do any thing against his will," said a metaphysician to an irishman. "By Jabers! I had a brother," said he, "that was born in Botany Bay, and faith I know it was greatly against his own will."

"I will bet you a bottle of wine that you shall descend from that chair before I ask you twice." "Done," said the gentleman, who seemed determined not to obey the summons on obstinacy. "Come down." "I will not," was the reply. "Then stop till I ask you a second time." The gentleman, having no doubt he should gain his position until that period, came down from the chair, and his opponent won the wager.

Why is a letter like a flock of sheep?—Because it is pressed and folded.



A DOGMA.—An opinion laid down with a mast.

FOUNDERING OF THE STEAMSHIP "LONDON" IN THE BAY OF BISCAY.—[See Page 126.]

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL PRIM.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY FREDERICKS & CO.]

ICE-YACHT ON THE HUDSON.

GENERAL PRIM.

DON JUAN PRIM, the leader in the late attempt to overturn the Spanish Government, bore the rank of Lieutenant-General in the national army of Spain. He is Viscount del Bruch, Count de Reus, Marques de Los Castillejos, and Grandee of Spain of the first class. He was born at Reus, in Catalonia, December 6, 1814. He fought against the adherents of DON CARLOS in the six years of civil war, terminating in 1839. At the close of the war he was elected Deputy to several successive Parliaments. In 1844 he is said to have been seriously implicated in a conspiracy against NARVAEZ, then at the head of the Government, the upshot of which was an attempt to assassinate the Prime Minister as he was driving to the Opera one evening, by firing at his carriage in the Calle de Ballesta. NARVAEZ himself and the present Minister of State, BERMUDEZ DE CASTRO, who sat in the front seat with him, escaped with their lives. Not so NARVAEZ's aid-de-camp, RAZETTI, who was in the back seat and was shot dead on the spot. PRIM was tried with others, convicted of participation in the murder, and condemned to death; but NARVAEZ, either out of a very extreme magnanimity or possibly from some intimate conviction of PRIM's innocence, induced the Queen to cancel the sentence.

In 1854 General PRIM was sent as Spanish Military Commissioner to the camp of the Allies during the Crimean war. On his return from the East he passed through Paris, where, in 1856, he married a Mexican lady, Senora ECHEVARRIA, who brought him a dowry of $600,000, with expectations of no less a fortune from her mother, and $1,000,000 from each of her two uncles. He was promoted to his present rank in the army in 1856, and in 1858 was raised to the Senate. In 1861 the joint expedition to Mexico of England, France, and Spain was projected, and PRIM was sent out in command of the Spanish contingent, being charged at the same time with the duties of a Minister Plenipotentiary. How PRIM proceeded to Mexico with the French and English contingents, and came back with the latter, leaving to the former alone the task of a complete subjugation of Mexico and the installment of an Austrian dynasty there, are matters of well-known contemporary history.

Under the Ministry presided over by Señor MON, PRIM was again implicated in some underhand manœuvre which caused him to be banished or "confined" to Oviedo. He was recalled by NARVAEZ, during his last Administration, and is nevertheless said to have joined O'DONNELL in the efforts made by the latter to oust his rival, by fair means or foul. Soon after O'DONNELL's accession to power, however, PRIM seemed to recall to memory his former political predilections; he leagued himself with ESPARTERO, and threw himself with all his influence into the interests of the Progressistas.

It was on January 2 that General PRIM left Madrid on his "shooting excursion," and placed himself at the head of the mutinous cavalry regiments at Aranjuez. His insurrection has not been supported with any great force, and he has retired to Portugal.

SAILING ON THE ICE.

AN engraving which we publish on this page illustrates one of the most exciting of winter recreations on the Hudson. It represents a boat on skates, so to speak, and impelled by the wind in the same manner as an ordinary yacht. With a strong wind and smooth ice these novel craft glide along with almost fearful velocity, attaining a speed said to equal, if not exceed, a mile per minute, or greater than that of the most rapid locomotive.

These ice-yachts on the Hudson are all made on the same general plan. A light frame, 13 feet long, partially floored, is secured to a transverse plank, 13 feet in length, by two bolts and rubber springs. To this movable runners are attached, thereby giving an easy motion to the boat. The stern rests on a third runner, which forms the apex of an equilateral triangle. By this the helmsman guides his boat in perfect safety while flying literally with the speed of the wind.

Poughkeepsie, New York, claims precedence in the proper construction of these glacial yachts. Great rivalry exists among the ice-boatmen, each striving to lead the "fleet" in the constantly-occurring races during the winter season.

THE HARBOR OF CALLAO.

PERU, having entered into an alliance with Chili, has declared war against Spain. The Peruvian and Chilean fleets have effected a junction, and all Spaniards residing in the province of Lima have been forbidden to leave the country. As our readers are aware this war is in consequence of the seizure of the Chincha Islands, with their valuable deposits of guano, by the Spanish fleet, as a material guarantee for the compensation which is claimed on behalf of some Spanish subjects lately resident in Peru. These circumstances give some additional interest to our engraving of the Harbor of Callao, the chief Peruvian sea-port. The town of Callao, when not covered with mist and cloud, which is too often the case, presents a pretty and pleasing aspect from the water. The streets, indeed, are dirty in the extreme; but the view of the country around, studded with trees and verdure, and bounded by ranges of deep blue hills in the distance, is agreeable and picturesque. On a clear day the towers of Lima, the metropolis of Peru, may be seen at the base of the hills sparkling in the sun, as shown in our engraving. The two forts on the right were built by the Spaniards before the era of Peruvian independence. They form a prominent feature of the town, being constructed of stone and colored a bright yellow. The Peruvian fleet consists of a frigate, an iron-clad ram on the Merrimac principle, and one or two gun-boats and mail-packets converted into warsteamers, besides a sailing brig. The Peruvians have also attempted to build a Monitor, carrying a revolving turret; but though now about two years under her turret-clad, she is capable of so small an amount of speed as to be of little or no service should the Spaniards have it into their heads to bombard the port of Callao.

THE HARBOR OF CALLAO—THE PERUVIAN FLEET AT ANCHOR.

WRECK OF THE STEAMER "LONDON."

For many years no shipwreck has created a more profound sensation than that of the steamship London, bound for Australia, which foundered at sea soon after leaving the British Channel, and on the 11th of January went down with over two hundred souls on board. The late fearful gales off the European coast have left behind them many a signal monument of their power for destruction, but none either so memorable as the disaster which forms the subject of our illustration on page 124.

The London was one of the finest ships for strength that ever left the Thames. She belonged to WIGHAM & SON, and was of nearly 3000 tons burden. She had been built about a year, and had made two voyages to Melbourne and back, and her success had realized the great expectations which had been entertained respecting her as a vessel competent to sail around the Southern Capes to Australia. But the gales off the British coast proved fatal to her, as they had not encountered or countered the difficulties of this southern voyage.

The London left the East India Docks December 28, commanded by Captain MARTIN, an old merchant navigator of great experience, and, as the event proved, a man of great moral courage. As the night of the 10th came on unusually dark, and the wind ahead, the vessel brought up at the Nore, and remained there the whole of the next day, which was Sunday. There were two clergymen on board, the Rev. Dr. WOOLLEY, Principal of Sydney University, and the Rev. MR. DRAPER, and both took part in the morning worship service. At eight o'clock on Monday, the 1st of January, the anchor was weighed, and the ship steered down the Channel still against a head wind, but making her way slowly, passing outside the Isle of Wight the wind increased to half a gale, and Captain MARTIN deemed it prudent to put back and lay-to for the night in St. Helen's Roads.

On the morning of January 3 the vessel proceeded int to the open Channel; and as the wind was, the wind, which was at first light, increased blowing a gale right ahead, with a rolling sea, all the way to Plymouth. Here she took on the rest of her second class passengers who had arranged to join her at Plymouth. Some incidents in connection with the built—the discords between the mate which had been already encountered and the storm that was to come—are worthy of record as illustrating the apparently fortuitous disposition of our lives by the hand of Providence How fortunate for the second-class male passenger who, appointed to the possible fate of the vessel, resigned his passage at Plymouth and returned home! How fortunate, also, for the lady who, after repeated applications to the owners' agents at Plymouth, was finally excluded from among the doomed passengers by the Captain on the ground that his cabin was already full! and for a young man who had taken passage on account of some family quarrel, and who at Plymouth was induced to forego his voyage! But, on the other hand, what a fate it was that, with the persistence of Nemesis, had followed, and on this occasion succeeded in overtaking, a poor girl couple with their three children, who had, on two occasions previously, attempted in vain to go upon the voyage, and each time in a vessel that was wrecked before it reached its destination, but who succeeded the third time in gaining a passage upon the London, and were drowned with their unfortunate companions!

At midnight, on Friday, January 5, the London proceeded on her voyage, and on Sunday the wind again threatened, with a head-sea rising. In the night the wind increased to a gale, and by noon it blew. On the morning of Tuesday, the 9th, while the Captain was endeavoring to keep the ship in her course in the absence of the screw, the violence of the gale carried away at one sweep the jib-boom, the foretop-mast, the gallant-mast, and the royal mast. It was impossible to again secure sail under all this crisis, the gale all the while continuing to increase, with a sea running mountains high, the Captain seems, for the first time, to have been seriously alarmed, though he had not been in bed the previous night. Still the engines were kept steaming ahead, and there was no anxiety yet as to the ultimate safety of the ship. About the middle of the afternoon a tremendous sea struck the ship, carrying away the port life-boat abaft the main rigging.

The next morning, the 10th, the Captain turned the ship about for Plymouth. In half an hour after the ship's course had been altered another blow from the sea carried away a second life-boat and stove in the starboard cutter. At noon a heavy cross-sea was running, with the wind dead astern, which caused the ship to roll heavily and much impeded her progress. But no danger was even now anticipated, and all through the evening of Wednesday and long after midnight all the ship continued to run slowly ahead, the Captain and his officers remaining steadily at their posts and the passengers appearing to have full reliance upon the skill of Captain MARTIN to bring them safely to port. At 10.30 P.M., the ship still rolling deeply in a heavy cross sea, and the wind blowing a whole gale from the south-west, a mountain of water fell heavily over the waist of the ship, and spent its destructive force upon the main hatchway over the engine-room, completely demolishing this massive structure, measuring 12 feet by 8 feet, and flooding with tons of water the portion of the ship. Instant endeavors to repair the hatchway were made with a portable tube and vigor commensurable with the imminent crisis. Every spare sail that could be got at, and even blankets and mattresses from all parts of the ship, were thrown over the aperture, but each succeeding sea shipped by the vessel tore away the frail resource of the moment, and within but a few minutes after the hatchway had been destroyed the water had risen above the furnaces, and the fires were all put out and drowned fires employed in this part of the ship. The lower decks were also now bodily filled with the mass of water which was momentarily taking in. The chief engineer remained at his post until the water had risen above his waist, when he went on deck and reported that the fires were out, and his engines rendered useless. Captain MARTIN, with calm conviction, remarked that he was not surprised; on the contrary, he had expected such a result. Finding his ship at length little more than a log on the water, Captain MARTIN immediately ordered the mainmast to be cut, in the hope of keeping her before the wind. The difficult work had scarcely been accomplished when the force of the wind tore the sail into ribbons, with the exception of one corner, under which the ship lay-to throughout the remainder of the night. The donkey-engine, supplied with a hose, was pulled upon deck, and all the deck-pumps, were kept going throughout the night, and the passengers of all classes, not excluding those of tried imminent danger, shared with the crew their arduous labors. Notwithstanding every effort to keep the vessel free from water, pumps and the gale continuing at its height, cross seas with tremendous force were constantly breaking over the vessel, which at length succumbed to the unequal conflict. From this moment the action of the ship was low and heavy, and she refused to rise to the action of the seas. At a quarter after 4 o'clock on Thursday morning she was struck by a stern sea which carried away four of her stern windows, flooding the deck of water through the breach. From this time all efforts were useless; and at day-break Captain MARTIN, whose cool intrepidity had never for a moment forsaken him, entered the cuddy, where all classes of the passengers had now taken refuge, and, responding to the universal prayer, called upon them to the exercise of all human hopes. It is a remarkable fact that this solemn admission was solemnly received, a resigned calm prevailing, which continued unbroken by any but the briefest intervals by the well-timed and appropriate exhortations of the Rev. Mr. DRAPER, whose spiritual services were very necessary during the previous twenty-four hours.

The next morning, the fatal 11th, the Captain informed those in charge that the ship was sinking, and they must prepare for the worst. A lifeboat was lowered with the mate, who, as he was hastily swamped, though the men were got on board, was dead. Was there no hope, then, in that last resort, the life-boat? Alas! no; all attempts were desperate. All the passengers and crew gathered as by one consent in the main saloon, weeping and with pale, passionless faces, but with no tumult, no frantic exhibition of terror.

About 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the water gaining fast on the engine-room, and the consequent of the storm subsiding, a small band of men determined to treat themselves to the mercy of the waves in a boat rather than go down with the ill-fated ship. Leaving the saloon, therefore, they got out and lowered away the port cutter, into which sixteen of the men and three of the passengers succeeded in getting, and they launched her clear of the ship. Three minutes men shouted to the Captain to come with them; but with that heroic self-sacrifice which his chief characteristic, he declined to go with them, saying, "No, I will go down with the passengers." In a bath you God-speed and farewell. The boat then pulled away, tossing about helplessly on the crests of the gigantic waves. Scarcely had they gone 80 yards, or been in a minute off the deck, when the fine steamer went down stern foremost with her crowd of human beings true, and with an unusual cry of helpless terror rang, and was the last forever. Those in the boat were saved, being rescued the next day by the Italian bark Adrienne.

Among those lost, numbering all together 220, was the distinguished actor GUSTAVUS VAUGHAN BROOKE and his sister. The case of the wreck of the London was probably the largest amount of iron on board.

PRESIDENT WASHINGTON.

THE PORTRAITS OF WASHINGTON, nine in number, which we give on page 125, were painted at different time grouped together in a single series. Two of these portraits have, we think, never been engraved before. One of these, painted by JOHN TRUMBULL, represents WASHINGTON in the regalia of a Freemason. It was for many years in the BRADFORD family mansion, at Philadelphia. We have had a copy of one painted soon after the battle of Princeton (obetber by CHARLES WILSON PEALE or V. M. PEALE is uncertain), and which used to be the only original picture of WASHINGTON in his full uniform as Commander-in-Chief, except that in possession of the Lenox family. This copy of PEALE'S painting was burned in the house of EDMUND J. LEE in 1864 by HUNTER'S forces. But two years before an excellent copy of it was painted at Washington for HON. CALEB LYON, of LYONSDALE. This and the AUDUBON picture were painted at about the same time, while General WASHINGTON was on the ARNOLD affair, after the battle of Princeton. The AUDUBON picture, we understand, is the last of the original pictures were considered to be the best portraits of WASHINGTON during the active portion of his life.

The portrait which is known to have been painted by C. W. PEALE, in 1772, represents WASHINGTON at forty years of age, in the uniform of a Virginia Colonel of that day. PEALE was a remarkable man. He entered the Revolutionary War at an early period of the contest, and from studies commenced at Valley Forge he painted another full-length portrait of WASHINGTON as Commander-in-Chief at the battle of Princeton. This latter portrait is in the National Institute at Washington.

DR. MANN'S portrait represents WASHINGTON as a young man of twenty-five. The portrait of WASHINGTON which is most familiar to every body is STUART'S, which represents him at a very late period. This is more massive and grand than any of the others. The original head is in the Boston Athenæum in an unfinished state. The celebrated "Fitcher" portraits were copied from STUART'S.

The portrait of WASHINGTON painted in the latter part of the last century, was considered by his family as their most faithful likeness of any extant.

A COMFORTABLE DOCTRINE.

WHEN DR. Livingstone was sleeping out one night in the country of his explorations a lion seized and shook him, with a view to further proceedings. It is not many men who can say with Miss Pecksniff that they have "lived to be shook" in such a style as this. The doctor records it as his experience that the result of this shaking was to superinduce a sort of comatose state—a feeling rather of numbness, half of contented repose—in which he distinctly felt pain, but had no complete dread of the tearing of flesh and limbs which was to precede his death. Thereupon he suggests the idea that, when pain is inflicted in the way of the mode in which it is observed in all feline animals, as well as in dogs and in some of the more violent fishes, in a Providential arrangement it is rendered necessary victim pain. If we look into tales of death by violence, we shall see in very many cases some such preparation for a comparative state of mind. We say, that is to say, as compared with the horror which the account excites in those who hear or read of them. This would appear to be the case, at least in some kinds of railway accident. The shock and jar of a collision has something peculiarly numbing about it. Passengers who escape with a few bruises and a concussion relate that they suddenly became conscious of something happening or being about to happen, and knew nothing more till they found themselves lying and round the other way, or heels uppermost, or contorted in some of the many strange ways in which the human body is flung by the force of other accidents of this kind. There has been no blow to account for a loss of consciousness; there is no bruise to show, no outward injury to account for any locomotion of a very complicated and difficult nature has been achieved, and a space of time has passed which can not be any means be filled up. Something of the same kind is observed during the interval which elapsed between his leaving the carriage and his finding himself quietly seated on the ordinary earth seven feet below the ruined train, he would have met it without conscious suffering. And, without going through such a hazardous ordeal, as many passengers of gentlemanly habits have experience which points in the same direction. A man who is a bad sailor, and has crossed the Channel in a very dirty weather, finding on the deck, knows what it is to be suddenly lifted, as it were, from his seat by some strange power, such as that of a wave, and the prince and princess of the "Arabian Nights' backward and forward through the air, and deposited ever so far off in a heap, among various articles of deck-load, and without the expediment of a sick passenger on a stormy day. At the moment of his deposit, and for some moments after, he is conscious of death in any form could have much effect in rousing him even to a struggle to evade it. And even the same result follows passengers from what the Irish call a gentle tap on the "Arabian Nights' backward and forward through the air, and deposited ever so far off in a heap, among various articles of deck-load, and without the expediment of a sick passenger on a stormy day. At the moment of his deposit, and for some moments after, he is conscious of death in any form could have much effect in rousing him even to a struggle to evade it. And even the same result follows passengers from what the Irish call a gentle tap on the make every nerve of one's body quiver at the barest cricket, there are great chances in favor of the victim's having proceeded through a momentary fury, a shock, or blow which paralyzes that part of his system to whose sensitiveness pain is due, and so render him unable to feel the keenest pangs. And this would be very well hold in the case of those who struggle on and cry aloud in their apparent torture, even as the subject would be who has a knife stuck into him; but pain when his nerves are under the blessed influence of anesthetics. It is a comfort to think of such things in these days, when steam locomotion and steam machinery bring to so many households the horrors of a dreadful death to enhance the usual very high degree of misery. In face of the dreadful catastrophe in the Bay of Biscay, it is a great comfort to think that a similar effect is often produced, although perhaps not to such a degree, by lightning, by exposure to wet and cold, by prolonged and anxious doubt. Sea-sickness has especially, and to a very high degree, this effect. A man under its influence will constantly say, "Do with me what you will." If he were to fall overboard he is sure he should make no effort to save himself. If he is told that the ship is sinking, the announcement has but little interest for him. In that storm in which the London went down, how little a benefit some of the passengers could have become accustomed to the notion of the vessel's going to be sent to the bottom many years ordinary sufferings rendered it impossible for them to have that keen perception of the horrors of the situation which each fresh detail brings to us on land. And of the rest large numbers must have been tired into resignation, tired by the efforts at self-preservation and the preservation of others they had so spiritedly and so nobly made, tired by exertions the very intentness of which precluded the possibility of much agony of anticipation while such exertions lasted. Many again of those whose sex or age or infirmities forced them to be somewhat inactive spectators of all this sort of work must have been half alive to their trials. The discomforts of a vessel on which the sea was making sheer breaches, the numbness of cold and the results of exposure to wind and spray, the deafening noise of the elements and the confusion of all within the ship's hull—all these and many circumstances would be at work to reduce persons of weak constitution to a half-regardless state, some time before death was known to be inevitable.

LAUGHING BUSINESS.—"Every body and his wife" and little ones go to the COLTON DENTAL ASSOCIATION, 19 Cooper Institute, to inhale the laughing gas and have their teeth extracted. The Doctor has really destroyed the dread of Dentists.

BENNETT'S COCOAINE defies imitation, and is the most perfect hair preparation of the age. This fact has caused numerous worthless imitations.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HENRY S. FOOTE,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law,
117 BROADWAY,
New York.

BASSETT'S EXTRA FINE
GOLD PENS.
The most substantial Gold Pens used.
C. R. BASSETT, MANUFACTURER, 254 Broadway, N.Y.

GENERAL HISTORY OF FREEMASONRY AND ANCIENT Masonic Association, in the year 718 B.C., to the present time. Translated from the French of Bro. REBOLD, M.D., &c. Is acknowledged by all who have seen it to be the most complete, conclusive, and satisfactory history of the Institution ever published. Part I., containing 112 pages octavo, now ready. Price One Dollar. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price. Address
J. W. BRENNAN,
TRANSLATOR AND PUBLISHER OF FOREIGN MASONIC BOOKS,
Box 1926, P.O., LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, or
Box 2785, " Cincinnati, Ohio.
Agents wanted in every locality.

CATARRH CURED FOR ONE DOLLAR.
THIS IS NO HUMBUG.
Read!—For One Dollar per mail, I will send you a recipe and medicine that will cure the worst cases of Catarrh in the head or bronchial tubes, in a few weeks' time. I have cured myself, and so I believe, cured my wife. I know it is what I say. Send an envelope to me for the recipe, free from that tormenting and dangerous disease. Address T. F. SYMMES, 1051 FIRST AVE., N. Y.

100 Photographs of Rebel Generals sent postpaid for $1; 100 Photographs of Rebel Officers for 25 cts.; 100 Photographs of Female Beauties for 25 cts. Address C. A. BAUCH, Holland, N. Y.

"FANDANGLE."
Ladies, rad for a "Fandangle," and gratify your propensity for fun. Price twenty-five cents. Address, with stamp,
ALLEN & CO., Box 901, Boston.

NEW MUSIC.
Arrah-na-Pogue, Grand March ..... 30c.
Arrah-na-Pogue ..... 25c.
I have Heard Sweet Music Steeling ..... 40c.
Hunting Song, by Blumenthal ..... 40c.
I can not Sing the Old Songs, by Claribel ..... 30c.
Warning of the Roses, by Claribel ..... 30c.
Have You Seen Her Lately? (comic) ..... 30c.
Marine Gems, Colored Lithograph, illustrating Catastrophe on Skating Pond ..... 50c.
Mailed, postpaid. FREDERICK BLUME, 203 Bowery.

63. $5 00 63.
Our beautiful Number 63 Album for 100 pictures, bound in French Morocco, full gilt, gorgeous and elaborate, cuts, extra clasps, sent to any address, post paid, on receipt of Five Dollars.
LEWIS & CO., Publishers,
Box 945. Springfield, Massachusetts.

MUJAVIRO
Is the most delicious and lasting of all perfumes. The odor is like a delicate compound of Violets, Jessamine, and heliotrope. What can be more fragrant?
For sale by all druggists and at 647 Broadway.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.
You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine an invention urgently needed by every body. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50 cts. Circular 3 cts. Address, H. L. BALLARD, P.O. Box 5643, 170 Chatham Square, New York.

DUMB-WAITERS.
JAMES MURTAUGH'S celebrated DUMB-WAITERS are manufactured only at No. 1235 Broadway, New York, where a model can be seen.

THE EVANS ORIGINAL
GIFT BOOK ESTABLISHMENT
(INSTITUTED BY G. G. EVANS IN 1854).
It has outlived all Competitors.
All books sold as publishers' retail prices, and a Beautiful and Useful Present, worth from 25 cents to 100 dollars, given with each book.
AGENTS WANTED EVERY WHERE.
Extra Inducements to all persons who will act as agents. Send for the new illustrated catalogue, containing the list of books in every department of literature, also instructions for forming clubs. Address G. G. EVANS, GIFT BOOK STORE, 624 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.
Editors inserting the above will receive a Handsome present on receipt of their paper containing the same.

CONSTITUTION

LIFE SYRUP,

COMPOSED OF

IODIDE POTASSIUM,

WITH THE COMPOUND CONCENTRATED FLUID EXTRACT OF VALUABLE MEDICINAL ROOTS AND HERBS.

PREPARED BY

WILLIAM H. GREGG, M.D.,

Graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, formerly Assistant Physician in the Blackwell's Island Hospitals, Medical Inspector of the New York State Volunteer Depots, under Governor Edwin D. Morgan.

Constitution Life Syrup

HAS PRODUCED A REVOLUTION IN MEDICINE.

What may seem almost incredible is that many diseases hitherto considered hopelessly incurable are frequently cured in a few days or weeks; and we cheerfully invite the investigations of the liberal-minded and scientific to cure which have no parallel at the present day.

During the past five years we have contended with obstacles, and overcome opposition, as herculean as were ever encountered by any reformers.

RAPIDITY OF CURE.

Some say, "Your cures are too quick," while others doubt their permanence, and think that diseases can only be cured by the slow, retrospective process of Nature.

This is our reply: In health the body, like a well-balanced scale, is in a state of Equilibrium. But when, from any cause, down goes one side of the scale, we have the effects of disease. What is requisite is to restore the normal balance of the scale.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Is a positive and sure remedy for all diseases originating from an IMPURE STATE OF THE BLOOD, and for all (hereditary) DISEASES transmitted from PARENT TO CHILD.

PARALYSIS.

It is no universally admitted that CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP is the only effective means of restoration in the various forms of Paralysis, that we need not reiterate that it is emphatically the Great Life-giving Power.

DYSPEPSIA.

INDIGESTION, WEIGHT AT STOMACH, FLATULENCE, LIVER COMPLAINT, WANT OF APPETITE, BAD BREATH, CONSTIPATION, BILIOUSNESS.

SCROFULA.

STRUMA, KING'S EVIL, GLANDULAR SWELLINGS, ENCEPHALUS, ULCERATION, SALT RHEUM.

This taint (HEREDITARY and ACQUIRED), filling life with untold misery, is, by all usual medical remedies, incurable.

RHEUMATISM.

(ARTHRITIS), LUMBAGO, NEURALGIA, SCIATICA, GOUT, TIC DOLOREAUX.

If there is any disease in which the CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP is a sovereign, it is in Rheumatism and its kindred affections. The most intense pains are almost instantly alleviated—enormous swellings are reduced. Cases, chronic or violent, of twenty or thirty years' standing, have been cured by us.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Purges the system entirely from all the evil effects of MERCURY, removing the foul Breath, and curing the Weak Joints and Rheumatic Pains which the use of Calomel is sure to produce. It hardens Spongy Gums, and secures the Teeth as firmly as ever.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

Eradicates, root and branch, all Eruptive Diseases of the SKIN, like

ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES,

And all other difficulties of this kind, which so much disfigure the outward appearance of both males and females, often making them a disgusting object to themselves and their friends.

For all Forms of Ulcerative Diseases,

Either of the Nose, Throat, Tongue, Spine, Forehead, or Scalp, no remedy has ever proved its equal.

Moth Patches, and the female face, regarding upon a diseased action of the Liver, are very unpleasant to the Young wife and mother. A few bottles of CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP will correct the secretion, and remove the depots, which, if left, will darker the skin.

Diseases of the Liver, giving rise to Languor, Dizziness, Indigestion, Weak Stomach, or an disturbed or enervated condition of that organ, accompanied with burning or other unpleasant symptoms, will be relieved by the use of

Constitution Life Syrup.

As a General Blood-Purifying Agent, the LIFE SYRUP stands unrivaled by any preparation in the world.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE POOR

are liable to the same diseases. Nature and Science have made the CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP for the benefit of all.

PURE BLOOD

Produces healthy men and women; and if the constitution is neglected in youth, premature decay and death is the result. Do not delay when the means are so near at hand, and within the reach of all.

CONSTITUTION LIFE SYRUP

IS THE POOR MAN'S FRIEND, AND THE RICH MAN'S BLESSING.

Buy it, Take it, and be Cured.

WILLIAM H. GREGG, M.D.,

Sole Proprietor,

NEW YORK.

SOLD BY EVERY DEALER IN MEDICINE IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA. ✶

MORGAN & AILEN,

WHOLESALE DRUGGISTS, AGENTS,

No. 46 Cliff Street, New York.

SOLD WHOLESALE BY

JOHNSON, HOLLOWAY & COWDEN, Philadelphia, Pa.
GEORGE C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass.
FULLER, FISCHER & FULLER, Chicago, Ill.
JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio.
COLLINS BROTHERS, St. Louis.

FIRST PREMIUM

IMPROVED

$5 SEWING $5

MACHINE.

The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Simplicity.

Originally patented May 13, 1862; Improvement patented June 5, 1863. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with GRINDING attachment, a most wonderful and elegantly-constructed Novelty, is SUNSHINE in operation, using the ordinary Needles, and making the LOCK STITCH, SEWS with DOUBLE or SINGLE THREAD of ALL KINDS. Makes the SEEMING-EST but more perfect and regular than by hand, and with extraordinary rapidity, making SEVERE STITCHES in each evolution of the Wheel. Will HEMSTITCH, HEM, RUFFLE, BIND, TUCK, RUN UP BREADTHS, &c., &c. Stronger, machine manufactured. Warranted not to get out of order in 3 years. It has taken the PREMIUM at STATE FAIRS, and received the approval of all the principal journals and of those who have used it. It is the ONLY low-priced sewing machine that has received a premium, or that is PATENTED. ALL other sewing machines at the same price are IMITATIONS.

"For the dressmaker it is invaluable; for the household it supplies a want long felt."—Ladies' Book.

"With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch correctly like hand-sewing."—New York Tribune.

Simple machine, ALL COMPLETE, sent to any part of the country per express, packed in box, with printed instructions, on receipt of the price, $5. Self-delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted every where. Circular, containing liberal inducements, sent free. Address

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
Office 102 Nassau Street, New York.

THE DAYS

OF

BRASS JEWELRY

Are Over.

THE COSMOPOLITAN

JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION,

Capital, $2,500,000.

Great One-Price Gold Sale.

Sell no Brass or so-called Plated JEWELRY.

WARRANT ALL JEWELRY GOLD,

OR NO SALE.

Let it be distinctly understood that this is emphatically a GOLD SALE, by an association of manufacturers, on a one-price average system, and not a single article of brass or plated jewelry is included in the whole immense stock.

250,000

Piano, Gold and Silver Watches, Diamond Rings, Sets of rich Jewelry, Silver Ewers, Photograph Albums, &c.,

Worth $2,500,000,

All to be sold for two dollars each, an average price of one-fifth the usual cost, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.

INSIDING TEN DOLLARS WORTH FOR $2.

☞ THE PROOF.—We guarantee to and any customer, in exchange for the least article they may get for $5, a splendid rosely chased or engraved silver Butter-Dish or Caster, fine plate, valued at $10, or a beautiful 30-plate three morocco Photograph Album, valued at $8; and you have a possibility of getting a

Fine Gold Watch or Piano.

Send 25 cents for the Golden Envelope, containing valuable receipts and songs; and one of the sealed Certificates, which are well mixed and taken out regardless of choice, will be sent you, and after you know what you get, if for $2, from a Butter-Dish or Caster, worth $10, to a Watch or Grand Piano, worth $1000. Also will be sent our circular, containing list of articles and full particulars of our terms to agents, to whom great inducements are offered.

Two for 50 cents, with a beautiful Photograph; 5 for $1, with a Silver Nut-Pick, worth $1; 11 for $2, with a Silver Napkin Ring, worth $2; 17 for $3, with a Silver Fruit Knife, worth $3; 30 for $5, with a Gold Pen, Extension Case, worth $6; 65 for $10, with a Gold Double Locket, worth $12; 140 for $15, with a Silver Hunting Watch, worth $18; 300 for $30, with a Silver Hunting Watch, worth $40.

In all cases, upon receipt of the money, the premiums as above will be sent with the envelope.

Address CALKINS & CO., Managers,
Broadway, New York.

GOVERNOR FOOTE ON THE WAR AND THE UNION.

WAR OF THE REBELLION; or, Scylla and Charybdis. Consisting of Observations upon the Causes, Course, and Consequences of the late Civil War in the United States. By H. S. FOOTE. 12mo, Cloth, $2 50.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

☞ HARPER & BROTHERS will send the above work by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $2 50.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.

ONE DOLLAR EACH.

PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 27, 1865.

AN EXACT and RELIABLE POCKET TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen. Correctly timed and in the most approved SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES, and warranted to DESCRIBE SOLAR and SIDEREAL TIME correctly and the utmost precision. It never can be wrong. It requires no KEY to wind up; never stops, unless broken, and will never be too fast or too slow. It is a most remarkable article. Approved by the Press and all who have seen it. Sent free of duty into this country from Europe, where it is received by Royal Letters Patent. Price for a single one, with plain or fancy white dial, in gold or silver gilt case, only $1. Sent, postage paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Safe delivery guaranteed. Beware of Imitations, whose inaccurate advertisement with a view to swindling the public, by offering a useless article (with a slight alteration in the machinery) for TWELVE DOLLARS. Address, for order, &c., EUROPEAN TIMEKEEPER COMPANY, 78 Nassau Street, New York.

PHARAOH'S SERPENTS.

Eggs of Pharaoh's Serpents, each of which, when ignited, will evolve in a few seconds a harmless Serpent, several feet in length. Box of 12 eggs mailed to any address for 20 cents, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia. Sold by all druggists.

$1500 PER YEAR! We want agents every where to sell our IMPROVED $20 Sewing Machines. These are NOT shuttle. Under and upper feed. Warranted five years. Above salary or large commission paid. For circulars, address SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

ASK for the VICKSBURG SCHOTTISCHE, composed and by D. ROSENBERG. Invalid Gem. With a superb title-page, in colors, of the city of Vicksburg. Published by WOODWARD & TOMLINSON, Vicksburg, Miss. For sale at the principal Music Stores in the country.

"FANDANGLE!"

Gentlemen, send for a Fandangle, which will make more fun with your friends than any thing you ever saw. Price 25 cts. Address, FANDANGLE, Akron & Co., Box 310, Boston.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

501 BROADWAY (36 Nicholas Block),

Photographic Materials, Stereoscopic Goods,

WAR VIEWS,

SCENERY, GROUPS, &c.

Photograph Albums, great assortment, Cartes de Visite of Noble Persons, &c.

French Engish, and American Novelties.

PORTABLE PRINTING OFFICES

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Sanitaries, Druggists, and all who wish to print cards, circulars, and exposition[illegible]. Price $10 and upwards. Send for Type List, 10 cts. ADAMS DUFF COMPANY, 30 and 32, New York.

Pile Remedy.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Piles and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief, and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.

For sale by all Druggists. Price, Large Box, $1.

Coughs.

DR. STRICKLAND'S HELLEBORUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

A Household Necessity exists for the Use of

DURNO'S CATARRH SNUFF,

Which, in the first stages of a cold, sets like magic. Headache, Hoarseness, Diphtheria, and Bronchitis. Sore Eyes, Deafness, Bad Taste and Smell—being the mouth of Catarrh—the Snuff removes and prevents all these, and insures a healthy head. Its effects are pleasant and safe, even for infants who suffer from Snuffles.

It has the highest professional testimonials. Sold by all Druggists, or sent by Mail to all parts of the United States, for 30 cents per Box, or $1 for Four Boxes.

Address JAS. DURNO, P. O. Box 1315, New York.
Wholesale by D. BARNES & CO., 21 Park Row, N. Y.

GREAT DISCOVERY.—DE GRATIIS ELECTRIC OIL is a sure remedy for sore throat, deafness, frost-bite, limbs, piles, and all sores and pains. In from 1 to 2 days. Sold by all druggists, and by DEMAS BARNES & CO., New York. Depot, Philadelphia.

"THE RIGHT WAY."

A Radical Newspaper. Present circulation 65,000 copies weekly—reaching every State and Territory of the Union. A splendid one of the best mediums for Advertisements at 50 cts. per line. Orders may be addressed to GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., 39 Congress St., Boston.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

100,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.,

Worth $500,000!

TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH, WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,

AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Case Watches	$100 00
100 Gold Watches	75 00
200 Ladies' Gold Watches	60 00
200 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	40 00
100 Sterling Castors	18 00
1000 Breaking Castors	$15 00 to 30 00
5000 Oval and Chased Gold Lockets	7 00 to 10 00
5000 New York, Boss, and Grand Chains	5 00 to 10 00
250 Ladies' California Gold Nugget Rings	5 00 to 8 00
1000 Solitaire and Cluster Stone Lockets	4 00 to 10 00
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Extension Holders	4 00 to 6 00
5000 Gold Pens, Silver Extension Holders	4 00 to 6 00
8000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	3 00 to 6 00
5000 Gold Vest Chains, Opera, per foot	12 00 to 24 00
5000 Doctrt and Table Forks, per doz	14 00 to 24 00
5000 Napkin Rings, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
5000 Napkin Rings, per pair	4 00 to 10 00

Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one has, are first placed in envelopes, sealed up and mixed, and, when ordered, are sent out without regard to choice, and by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you can have, and then it is your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. Any one of those envelopes will be sent by mail, postage paid, for 25 cts.; 6 for $1; eleven for $2; 30 for $5; 65 for $10; and 100 for $15.

Agents wanted everywhere. Great inducements to localities and gents to act. Call and send stamp for circular, which gives full list and particulars.

Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.
(ESTABLISHED 1850).

REMOVAL.

G. L. and J. B. KELTY, DEALERS IN

WINDOW SHADES AND CURTAIN MATERIALS,

To 43 Broadway, between Howard and Grand Streets.

Superfluous Hair Removed

From all parts of the body in five minutes, without injury to the skin, by "UPHAM'S DEPILATORY POWDER." Sent by mail for $1 by J. C. UPHAM, M.D., 25 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. Sold by all druggists.

CARPENTERS, or others, wishing to manufacture the simplest and best SURLEY WATER-LEVEL AND RAKE, patented May 10, 1864, are invited to address, with stamp, S. H. JENKINS, Bridgeport, Conn.

Pimples on the Face

REMOVED AT ONCE BY THE USE OF "UPHAM'S PEARL BALSAM." MAILED TO ANY ADDRESS FOR 75 CENTS, BY S. C. UPHAM, M.D., 25 SOUTH EIGHTH ST., PHILADELPHIA. Sold by all druggists.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR MARCH, 1866.

CONTENTS:

IN AND AROUND RICHMOND.
Illustrations:—Ruins of Richmond and Petersburg—Railroad Bridge.—Berkeley, near Harrison's Landing.—Fortifications, Camp Lee.—Overnight Camp Lee, Camp Lee.—Hanson's Mill.—Ashland.—Machanicsville.—Coal Yard.—Fredericksburg.—Falls of the James.—Dutch Gap Canal.—Fort Powhatan, on the James.—Fort Powhatan.—Arrival, Bridge, and Fargo-Mill.—Ruins at Richmond.

SAND-MARTINS.

THE BURROWERS AT HOME.
Illustrations:—Burrows of the Mole.—"Earth" of the Fox.—A Prairie Dog.—Town.—The Rabbit at Warren.—The Bear.—The Prairie Armadillo.—The Ant Yard.—Woodpecker.—Kingfisher.—Bank Swallows.—Nest.—The Beaver.—The Lair.—Prairie Hen.—Wood.—Pitches in Rock.—Shipworm.

OUR Spider and Some Kin.—Hunting Spider.—Lurking Bee.—Burrying Beetle.—Scarabæus.—Ant Nest.—Ant Lion.—Ant Lion's Pit.—Scorpion.—Centipede.—Cocoon of Scarabæus and Golonil.

AUNT ESTHER'S STORY.

ARMADALE. By WILKIE COLLINS.
BOOK THE FOURTH.
CHAPTER XIV. Mrs Gelfe's Diary.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—A Client for Mr. Felgit.

THE SECOND LIFE OF WASHINGTON.

TOO LATE.

THE CHILDREN'S HAND.

THE SEVEN DAYS' BATTLES ON THE PENINSULA.

SUMMER LONGINGS.

WHAT HOPE BELL FOUND IN HER STOCKING.

THE LATEST NEWS FROM ACROSS THE ATLANTIC.

BATTLE MEMORIES.

THE GRAY JOCKEY.

EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.

LITERARY NOTICES.

MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.

EDITOR'S DRAWER.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $3 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, for $7 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of Electro Advertisements for their Magazine, at the following low rates: one quarter of a page, one month, $75; half, $125; whole page, $250. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

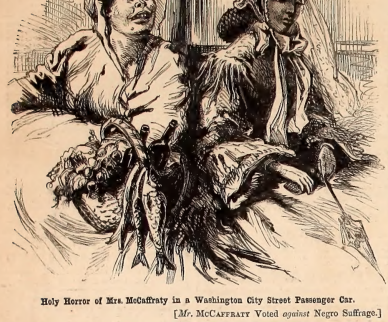
Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Payment invariably in advance.



THE BOUND VOLUMES OF HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent by mail or express, at the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, viz.:

Cloth Binding . . . . . $2 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco . . . . . 5 00 "

Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—One Dollar and Fifty Cents per line for Inside, and Two Dollars per line for Outside Advertisements, each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Holy Horror of Mrs. McCaffraty in a Washington City Street Passenger Car.

[Mr. McCAFFRATY Voted against Negro Suffrage.]

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad St., New York,
(Two Doors from Wall.)

Collections made, with quick returns.
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks, Bonds, and Gold will receive our resolute attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

MOTHERS!

Children die by thousands—Worms the cause—whose lives might have been spared, had they used VAN DEUSEN'S WHITE CONFECTIONS. Children are so fond of them as they are of Candy. Sold by Merchants. 25 Cts. a Box. Sent by mail on receipt of the price. VAN DEUSEN BROTHERS, Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.

Calenberg & Vaupel's
AGRAFFE-PIANOS,
161 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway.
Warranted for Six Years.

POLLAK & SON Manufacturers of Fine Meerschaum Pipes, 672 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Stems cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $60 each.

TO CURE
Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL, and disorders arising from excesses, use
Smolander's Extract Buchu.
$ Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York, and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

CHINA AND GLASSWARE:
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
479 Broadway New York.
Four Doors below Broome Street,
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES.

A new, practical, and original work, illustrated with 120 Designs and Plans of Houses of moderate cost, including stables and outbuildings, with a chapter on the construction of Balloon Frames.
Price $1.50, mailed free to any address.
Geo. E. & W. Woodward, Publishers, No. 37 Park Row, New York.

MERWIN & BRAY,
MANUFACTURERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS IN
ARMS AND AMMUNITION OF ALL KINDS,

Sole Agents for the Bullard Breech Loading Sporting Rifles, of different calibres, and Eagle Arms Co.'s Ball and Pocket Cartridge Revolvers. The Bell Size carries the Army Ball Cartridge, the Pocket Pistols the same size Balls as Colt's do. These arms have no equal now in market. For further particulars, send for Illustrated Circular. MERWIN & BRAY, 262 Broadway, N. Y.
P. S.—We manufacture all our own goods; also are Sole Agents for the celebrated Colt's Model Whitney Revolvers.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.
Anxiety is the bane of human happiness: prudent people adopt measures to avoid it. Some insure their property, while the more thoughtful secure their lives; but what is life without health? The wisest man secures his own well-being, and in these remedies finds an indisputable policy of assurance against disease.

MERCHANTS, BANKERS,
And others can send $5 to any parts of the United States by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, 65 Broadway.

Marvin's Patent
ALUM AND DRY PLASTER, FIRE AND BURGLAR
SAFES
Never lose their fire-proof qualities, corrode the iron, or mould their contents.
Sideboard and parlor safes for silverware.
MARVIN & CO.,
265 Broadway, New York.
721 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING
B. T. BABBITT'S LABOR-SAVING SOAP.
This Soap is made from clean and pure materials, contains no adulteration of any kind, will not injure the most delicate fabric, and is especially adapted for woollens, which will not shrink after being washed with this Soap. It may be used in hard or salt water. It will remove paint, grease, tar, and stains of all kinds. One pound warranted equal to two pounds of ordinary family soap. Directions sent with each bar for making three gallons handsome soft soap from one pound of this Soap. Each bar is wrapped in a circular containing full directions for use, printed in English and German. Ask your grocer for "B. T. Babbitt's Soap," and take no other.
B. T. BABBITT, Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington Street, New York.

50 MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP PER-CENT SAVED BY
USING B. T. BABBITT'S PURE CONCENTRATED POTASH, or READY SOAP MAKER. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or ley in the market. Put up in cans of 5 pounds, 3 pounds, 3 pounds, 2 pounds, and 12 pounds, with full directions, in English and German, for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 25 gallons of Soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market.
B. T. BABBITT,
64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., N. Y.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING
B. T. BABBITT'S best Medicinal SALERATUS, or "made from Common Salt." Bread made with this Saleratus contains, when baked, nothing but common salt, water, and flour. Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington Street, New York.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING
B. T. BABBITT'S STAR YEAST POWDER. Light Biscuit or any kind of Cake, may be made with this "Yeast Powder" in 15 minutes. No shortening is required when sweet milk is used. No. 64 to 74 Washington Street, New York.

PINE APPLE CIDER
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
A certain cure for Cholera, Dysentery, Heart Disease, Fluttering, and excitement for old people, as it quickens the circulation of the Blood.

TO LET.
The Four-Story Building, No. 81 Broad Street, 98 feet front. Possession 1st of May next. Apply to
HARPER & BROTHERS, Franklin Square.

WARD'S PERFECT FITTING SHIRTS.
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars, sent free every where.
THE CASH CAN BE PAID TO EXPRESS COMPANY.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
E. W. H. WARD, No. 387 Broadway, New York.

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

"American Union Company."
Manufacturers of the NEW ORGAN-TONED PIANO, EQUAL, if not SUPERIOR, to any. Warranted in every particular. WAREROOMS and "Agency," 497 Broome St.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying small objects 800 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 50 CENTS, or TIMES for $1.00.
Address F. C. BOWEN, Box 328, Boston, Mass.

HEALTH OF AMERICAN WOMEN.
One trial will prove that MARSHALL'S UTERINE CATHOLICON will cure "female weakness" and "uterine complaints of women" together with nervousness, pains and indigestion connected with that cause. See that the seal of the Glenfarnley Company is on every bottle. PRICE $1 50. SOLD EVERY WHERE.
THE GRAFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS.
The best pill for all liver complaints, biliousness, and indigestion. They never gripe, and do not leave the bowels constipated. PRICE 25 CENTS. SOLD BY DEALERS EVERY WHERE.

Old Eyes Made New,
Without Spectacles, Doctor, or Medicine. Pamphlets mailed free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

CROUP.
How it may be easily Prevented without Medicine; also its Cause and Cure. Sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

COMFORT AND CURE FOR THE RUPTURED—Sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE, 400 pages, 100 illustrations, $1 50. Sent by mail every where, postage prepaid. Contents table sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M.D., 1130 Broadway, New York.

$3 00 to $5 00 A DAY
Guaranteed. Agents wanted. A good watch presented to each. Address with stamp,
Box 2665, P. O., Philadelphia.

WANTED—every man in the United States, who has lost either an Arm or Leg—to engage in a profitable business. Send Twenty-Six Cents, for Sample, to
A. F. BELCHER, Box 65, Philadelphia, Pa.

WARD'S PAPER COLLARS AND CUFFS FOR LADIES & GENTLEMEN.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
387 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Ladies' Victoria Turn-over Paper Collar.

Ladies' Empress Turn-over Paper Collar.

Ladies' English Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies' American Standing Paper Collar.

Ladies French Paper Cuffs.

Ladies' English Paper Cuffs.

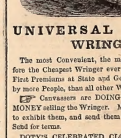
Gentlemen's Piccadilly Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Standing Paper Collar.

Gentlemen's Turnover Paper Collar.

Gents. Reversible Paper Cuffs.

Gents. English Paper Cuffs.



Ladies' Collars from 75 cents to $2 per 100.
Gentlemen's Collars from $2 50 to $4 per 100.
CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—These are the only paper collars and cuffs that are made from pure linen stock.
NOTICE TO THE TRADE.—Wholesale Price List sent by mail.

TRY IT!—MOORE'S RURAL NEW-YORKER, the great Agricultural, Horticultural, Literary, and Family Newspaper. Ably conducted, finely printed and illustrated—every week Engravings in the four No's for Jan.) Adapted to the Latitude—both Town and Country. Largest circulating Journal of its Class in the World, and thousands added every week—in each receipts for 13 days ending Jan. 6, 1866, being $13,859.51! Send $3 for a year—or, if you wish to know more of it first, the 13 Numbers of this Quarter (Jan. to April) will be sent, On Trial, for only 50 Cents. THE TRIAL IS CHEAP and SAFE if it is NOT THE BEST. Address D. D. T. MOORE, Rochester, N. Y.

SCHILBERG'S GERMAN OINTMENT.
Warranted a certain cure, without the slightest danger for piles, old wounds, salt rheum—all bone and skin diseases, &c. 99 Bowery, New York.

UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER.
The most Convenient, the most Durable, and therefore the Cheapest Wringer ever made; has taken more First Premiums at State and General Fairs, and is used by more People, than all other Wringers together.
Canvassers are DOING GOOD and MAKING MONEY selling the Wringer. Merchants who take pains to exhibit them, and send them out on trial, sell easily. Send for terms.
DOTY'S CELEBRATED CLOTHES WASHER sold also by
R. C. BROWNING, General Agent,
32 Courtlandt Street, New York.

OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are the best made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 89 Chambers Street, New York.

ROGERS' FRAGRANT ODONTOLINE
FOR THE TEETH.
For Sale by Druggists, Fancy Goods Dealers and Perfumers.

THE NATIONAL REVOLVER.

This new celebrated Revolver excends all others for compactness, efficiency, convenience, power, and safety in carrying. Is light (14 oz.), but only 7 in.), with larger useful cylinder carrying (37-100 ball than any Revolver made of same size and weight. Send for circular. GEO. A. HICKCOX, 24 Cliff Street, New York.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York,
Have Just Published:
SOCIAL LIFE OF THE CHINESE: With some Account of their Religious, Governmental, Educational, and Business Customs and Opinions. By Rev. JOHN DOOLITTLE, Fourteen Years Member of the American Board. With over 180 Illustrations. In Two Volumes. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $6 00.
A WORLD LIFE. By HESBA STRETTON (Mrs. CRAKE), Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman," "Christian's Mistake," "A Life for a Life," "The Clifftop," "The Head of the Family," &c. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25.
GOVERNOR FOOTE ON THE WAR AND THE UNION. Speeches of the Hon. Henry Stuart Foote, Ex-Senator of the United States, and Ex-Governor of Mississippi. Containing Observations upon the Causes, Course, and Consequences of the late Civil War in the United States. By H. S. FOOTE. 12mo, Cloth, $2 00.
WIVES AND DAUGHTERS. By MRS. GASKELL, Author of "MARY BARTON," "RUTH," "NORTH AND SOUTH," "Sylvia's Lovers," &c. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 50.
RICHARD COBDEN, the Friend of America and Apostle of Free Trade: His Political Career and Public Services. A Biography. By JOHN MCGILCHRIST. With Illustrations. 16mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $1 50.
GUY DEVERELL. By J. S. LE FANU, Author of "UNCLE SILAS," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.
HARPER & BROTHERS will send the above books by mail, postage paid, to any part of the United States on receipt of the price.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. X. No. 479.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1866. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

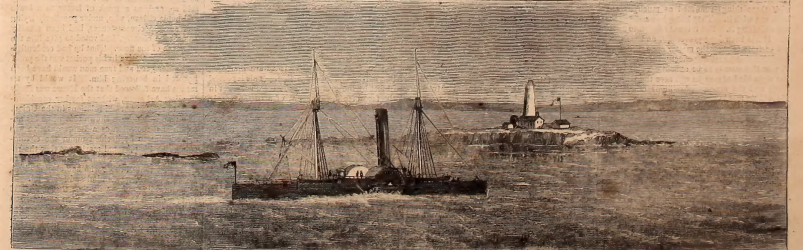
Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1866, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

STARKWEATHER THE MURDERER.

On the last day of January of the current year was concluded at Hartford, Connecticut, the trial of ALBERT L. STARKWEATHER for one of the most horrible murders on record. The prisoner, whose portrait we give on this page, was convicted of murder in the first degree. The sentence was postponed until the meeting of the Supreme Court of Errors on the third Tuesday of February, before which there was to be a new trial, but the evidence of the prisoner's guilt is so overwhelming that no reversal of the verdict could have been expected.

The circumstances of the murder were as follow: Young STARKWEATHER was unmarried, but had been paying attentions to a young lady in Manchester named EMERETT CAMPBELL, who had refused her consent to an engagement, apparently on account of his embarrassed circumstances. According to STARKWEATHER's own confession:

In the early part of the week preceding the homicide his mother, he said, came to Hartford and executed a deed to him of the homestead. Previously (in 1860) she had delivered to him a deed of a lot containing 63 acres, though the deed had never been recorded. In giving him the deed of the homestead she had required him to give in return a mortgage note for $1000 in favor of ELIZA, his sister. On the Saturday following, he said, he went to Rockville, and, securing the services of a lawyer there, had the 63 acres of land given to him in 1860 and the homestead which had just passed into his possession deeded by a warranty deed to EMERETT CAMPBELL, thus disposing to her of all his estate to which he held title. On his return home that evening he stopped at Mr. CAMPBELL'S house and gave the deed to EMERETT. When he reached his own house he told his mother what he had done, and she, very naturally, censured him for doing what she pronounced to be a very foolish act, and expressed herself in strong terms. She finally told him, however, that if he was willing to take the deed of the place, as previously agreed upon, and let the note of $1000 in favor of ELIZA stand as it was drawn, and would keep the deed in his own name and live on the premises, the arrangement she had made with him with regard to property might remain binding, and if EMERETT would marry him she could come there and live; but if he chose to treat the matter as he had—deeding away all he was worth—he should not have a cent out of the ground." The words quoted are precisely those used by her, as stated by STARKWEATHER in his confession. He told her that he would do nothing of the kind—would not take back the deed—and that he had given to EMERETT—and then entered into a discussion with his own and Miss CAMPBELL'S arrangements. Some further conversation of an excited character ensued, which resulted in his mother's going and getting the deed and note (which were in her possession) and tearing them up in his presence. High words followed. "and I told her," said he, "that I would be revenged." The destruction of the deed and note rendered the deed he had given to Miss CAMPBELL totally valueless to her from that time," he added, "until the time of the murder the idea of killing mother did not leave my mind." He said he thought of it constantly—all night Saturday, and Sunday and Sunday night, and all the following day, "and the more I thought of it the murder I grew." were the words he used. Monday night he made up his mind to do the deed, as a favorable opportunity was presented by the absence of his hired man and boy. His mother and sister sat up to a very late hour, as they were frequently accustomed to do. Toward morning, about 4 o'clock, the house became quiet, and he took the axe from the wood-shed and the knife from a drawer, and proceeded to the bedchamber of his mother up stairs. On getting there he immediately struck her blows upon the head with the axe, and he so doing startled his sister ELIZA, who was lying in the back part of the bed, and she sprang up and jumped toward him. He did not expect to kill her, but, awaking as she did, and, as he supposed, seeing him, he was led to knock her in the head in order to put her out of the way, that she might not be a witness to his crime against him. To make certain work he used the axe freely, and then stabbed his sister with the knife. Having done this much he says he knocked his head against the wall, and made a bruise on his forehead and one on the side of his face, and then took his jack-knife from his pocket and cut his clothes and his breast, to that the story he had decided to tell, relative to his being assaulted by two men, might be believed. After this, in order to cover up the crime, he set fire to the beds, in defiance of the finding of which by Mr. WARD, to whom hear the murderer repaired and gave an alarm, appeared in the evidence on the trial.



This is the story as given by the prisoner himself. His counsel put in the usual plea of insanity as the only defense; but the deliberation with which the crime was committed, and with which the attempt at concealment was made after the act, destroy the plausibility of such a supposition, for which the very enormity and unnaturalness of the crime might otherwise have elicited some degree of credence.

ALBERT L. STARKWEATHER, THE MATRICIDE.
[PHOTOGRAPHED BY S. H. WAITE, HARTFORD, CT.]

NAVAL RACE BETWEEN THE "WINOOSKI" AND "ALGONQUIN"—THE START, 3 P.M., FEBRUARY 13, 1866.—SKETCHED BY B. S. OSBON.—[SEE PAGE 142.]

NAVAL RACE BETWEEN THE "WINOOSKI" AND ALGONQUIN"—THE "WINOOSKI" OFF FAULKNER'S ISLAND, FEB. 14, 1866.—SKETCHED BY B. S. OSBON.—[SEE PAGE 142.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1866.

CUSTOM-HOUSE FRAUDS.

THE Report of the Revenue Commission, which should be carefully pondered by every citizen, and whose admirable philosophy and simple and wise suggestions we have already commended, is fully sanctioned by the Secretary of the Treasury. There are some statements in it which are startling to every intelligent eye. Thus the Commission affirms that in its judgment

"the annual loss experienced by the Government through the frauds practised in connection with the Boston Custom-house range from twelve to twenty-five millions of dollars."

Now the revenue collected at this port during the last year was about $60,000,000, so that the loss by fraud amounts to from one-fifth to five-twelfths of the whole amount. The largest sum exceeds the entire estimate for the Naval Department for the coming year, and is about two-thirds of the sum asked either for the War Department or the Civil Service. The Commission add:

"A very large part of these frauds arise from the undervaluation of invoices, coupled with the neglect and incompetence in the Department of Appraisers."

Here is a very distinct charge. The Appraisers' Department deals mainly with articles upon which an ad valorem duty is imposed. These are probably about one-third of the whole amount of duties; and if we estimate them at $20,000,000, the frauds perpetrated in and through this Department are fully equal to the entire sum collected. The Commissioners cite several instances of the "common, systematic, and shameless manner" in which these frauds are accomplished. Thus they inspected

"two invoices received during the past few months from one of the largest and most respectable houses in one of the chief cities of Europe, one of which invoices seven to fifteen per cent below the rate of duties was nearly 40 per cent, less in amount than the other which was transmitted for the private account of the importer."

The Champagne makers at Rheims have lately been exposed in this way, and the Commissioners mention half a score of invoices of Rhine wines, in none of which was the amount stated to be one-half of the real market value, and in some cases barely one-third.

The case of the Sunday Magazine, to which we have lately called attention, is an instance in point. The English publisher of that periodical, we are informed, denies the truth of our statement that the Magazine was exported to our Custom-house at the sworn value of three farthings. Our English correspondent says: "Mr. STRAHAN assures me that this is untrue, and that the article is invoiced and sold at 2½ pence," that is, ten farthings. We must, however, repeat, upon the authority of the Commission, that the work was entered at our Custom-house at the sworn value of three farthings, less than one-third of the sum at which Mr. STRAHAN declares that it was invoiced, and, as we are prepared to show, not more than one-sixth of its true market value at the place of production. Certainly if any Custom-house appraiser passed this sworn invoice of three farthings he was either grossly dishonest or utterly incompetent; and in this case incompetency is bravely to be supposed, for the price at which the Magazine is sold is plainly printed on the cover. That price is seven-pence, or twenty-eight farthings; and if we deduct one quarter for the difference between the wholesale and retail price, we have twenty-one farthings instead of three as the true market value in London.

Probably the management of the New York Custom-house is no worse than it has been for years, and certainly there are gentlemen of the highest character and capacity in its various departments. But these enormous frauds are the natural result of the system of filling responsible and difficult offices by persons who have no special fitness or training for the work, and no interest in it whatever except to draw their salaries and to make hay while the sun shines. The honest men in the Custom-house wish these things reformed as much as any body can wish it. They know how outrageous the swindling is. But it is not enough to know it. It has been long proverbial, and we shall not hesitate to press the matter upon the public attention that something effectual may be done. A new Collector is to be appointed. If he be the right kind of man he will save the Government and the tax-payers millions of dollars. He will do this in three ways:

First—In charge by character, experience, and capacity fully competent to manage such an institution.

Second—By displacing first the knaves and then the fools in the different departments.

Third—By sharply watching the invoices of representatives of many "respectable houses" in the chief cities of Europe.

The man who is fit to be Collector of New York will "feel satisfied," with the Revenue Commission, "that the necessity of reform in the manner of doing business in this institution was never more urgent than at present."

THE VETO MESSAGE.

THE Senate did wisely in adjourning after the Veto Message was read. Legislation under such excitement is not likely to be dignified or sagacious. That the Message was a sore disappointment to the truest friends of the President can not be denied. Their regret may be measured by the rejoicing of those who would fain use him for their own purposes. Whether those friends are to be found among those who most earnestly advocated his election, or those who most strenuously opposed it, whether those who were lukewarm rebellious at the time, and those who heartily supported them at the North are really the wisest advisers upon the great problem of reorganization, are questions which time will adequately answer.

Of the President's sincerity there is no doubt. That he honestly wishes, as he says, to secure to the Freedmen the full enjoyment of their liberty we fully believe. But he seems to us not entirely master of his own positions. Thus he acknowledges the usefulness of the Freedmen's Bureau as established by the act of last March. But he regards it as a war measure, and war having ceased, he is of opinion that the matter should be left to the States. Yet, if war has ceased, why does he support General TERRY's military order reversing the action of the Virginia Legislature? The President says that in his judgment the late rebel States "have been fully restored, and are to be deemed to be entitled to enjoy their constitutional rights as members of the Union." But this is not the only in his late proclamation restoring the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus did he except the late rebel States. That proclamation defines the conditions under which the right of suspending the privilege may be exercised. It is only when in case of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it. Yet he expressly exhorts us in the Message not to suppose that the United States are in a condition of civil war.

The Freedmen's Bureau is exceptional, but it is so only because the condition of the country is exceptional. All the President's acts in initiating the reorganization of the late rebel States were exceptional. But the question of the hour is very simple in itself, however difficult it may be to answer. How can the United States most surely and judiciously and temporarily secure the fruit of the victory they have won? Having given liberty to millions of slaves, how can the nation secure and protect it maintain its perpetuity? To suppose that a coerced adoption of the Emancipation Amendment, without any specific method of enforcing it, will prove this surety of the fruit of victory is one that a declaratory resolution would effect it. The Constitution itself contains a guarantee of a republican form of government. But how secure it in half the country. Why should we expect of an amendment a virtue which does not inhere in the original instrument? The President says that a year ago the case of the indigent persons was never contemplated by the authors of the Constitution. Certainly not, and this fact is no more remarkable than an appropriation for military hospitals would be. It is a simple necessity of the situation. Shall these homeless, landless, forlorn persons be left in the misery of those who have been driven from them, or shall the United States say, "We cut the bonds that bound you to the ground, and we will protect you while you are struggling to get upon your feet?"

If the President believes that the word of the nation secretly pledged to the freedmen will be kept by the black codes of Mississippi and of Mississippi, his faith would remove mountains. And if he proposes to abandon the freedmen to civil authorities created under laws by those who think that the colored race should be eternally enslaved, who deny the constitutionality of emancipation, and who have now a peculiar if unavowed hostility to the whole class, we can only pray God that the result may be what we have no doubt he honestly wishes it to be. We believe that he is likely to what he conceives to be the best interests of the whole country. And while upon this question we wholly differ from him, we differ with no aspersion or suspicion.

WAS MR. BANCROFT DISCOURTEOUS?

THE charge of discourtesy brought against MR. BANCROFT for speaking plainly of the position of foreign powers during the war in the presence of their representatives seems to us very superfluous. Congress invited MR. BANCROFT to deliver a discourse in commemoration of ABRAHAM LINCOLN. To do it properly was to speak of the civil war of which the late President was a central figure; and it was certainly impossible to speak truly of the war without describing the unfriendly attitude of England and France. SIR FREDERICK BRUCE probably remembered that it was his own chief, LORD RUSSELL, who was responsible for the situation in which he found himself. For if the Foreign Minister of England did not hesitate to speak of the United States in its fierce struggle to save its government and existence as a republic, the English Minister in Washington surely has no reason to be offended if in a discourse commemorative of the Chief Magistrate during that struggle the fact was plainly mentioned.

Nor was it surprising that the orator should point the contrast between the American President and the British Prime Minister. They were the heads of the two chief constitutional countries in the world, and they died within a few months of each other. They were most striking and characteristic representatives of their countries and of their differing political and social systems, and the parallel drawn by the orator was entirely natural, appropriate, and instructive. It is simply impossible that the true story of ABRAHAM LINCOLN's life should be agreeable to the spirit that controlled British or French policy during the war, and Mr. BANCROFT has no right to tell the truth. He did so with signal and memorable power and effect.

KING COTTON REDIVIVUS.

IN a late Number of this journal it was stated that there was reason to expect that this year's cotton crop would not, under favorable circumstances, fall short of 3,000,000 bales, and might exceed that figure. Further reports from the South, received since that statement was made, go to confirm the views then expressed. Throughout the South, with the exception of a few localities mostly outside of the Cotton States, the farmers are evincing unusual nerve to plant a great breadth of cotton, the freedmen are hiring readily, and the general report is that every acre cultivated will be planted in cotton to the exclusion of food. It must be expected of course that a certain proportion of the crop will be lost through disputes between planters and freedmen. A certain number of the latter will refuse to cheat their laborers, and a certain number of the latter will desert their employer in the hour of his need. But the best judges do not estimate either the loss from this source will reduce the crop below 3,000,000 bales—if the weather proves favorable.

Assuming that this year's crop marketed between 1st September, 1866, and 1st September, 1867, will amount to 3,000,000 bales, what would be a fair average price for the crop of 1867? And at what figure would it be safe to estimate the average price of raw cotton, with a three million crop this year, from 1st September, 1866, to 1st September, 1867?

For the ten years ending in 1857, the cotton crop of the United States averaged about 3,000,000 bales, and the price averaged about 12 to 12½ cents per pound for middling uplands. In 1849 the crop was less than 2,100,000 bales, and in 1855 it was over 3,500,000. At times the price was as low as 6 cents per pound, and at other times rose as high as 16 cents for middling uplands. In 1858 cotton culture was stimulated by an increased demand, which absorbed the crop, and the crop rose to 3,851,000 bales; in 1859 it further advanced to 4,660,000 bales; and of the crop of 1860, which is not far from the mark, it is believed that fully 5,000,000 bales would have been sent to market. The price was then 12 @ 13 cents per pound for middling uplands.

All estimates of the available crop for 1867 must depend on: 1st. The willingness of the freedmen to labor; 2d. The willingness of the planters to employ them; and, 3d. The price of the staple. Upon the first point no one can be made if planters and laborers do not work harmoniously together, and there will be no incentive to produce a crop if the price of the staple be low. If, on the other hand, the price of cotton be high, planters will be tempted to offer laborers fair wages for fair work, and, according to the conflicting rules of human nature, laborers will be anxious to secure such wages. The "joint" of the question thus appears to be the price of cotton.

Middling uplands is now worth in this city 44@45 cents per pound, nearly four times its value before the war. It seems natural to suppose that such prices will be maintained if we begin to produce crops on the old scale. But, on the other hand, it is equally unlikely that prices can fall to the old figures. Within the last four years there has been a great progress in numbers, civilization, and necessities. The United States alone, which used to require barely a million of cotton per annum, will now want over a million bales. It is reasonable to suppose that the wants of England, France, Germany, and Russia have increased in a corresponding proportion. This is proved in fact by the firmness of the cotton market in the face of a development of a cotton supply fully twice as large as was expected. Of the countries which, during our war, undertook to supply the world with cotton, Egypt alone succeeded to any extent, and the rapidly increasing consumption of cotton goods in the Levant and Southern Russia fully counterbalances this increased supply. India can never furnish any material amount of cotton to Europe. Nor can the West Indies or Central America until they are better furnished with labor than they now are, or have any present prospect of being. Should the present middling cotton quotation in New York to 25 @ 30 cents in gold, it is hardly likely that the competition of these countries would be felt, and there is reason to believe that spinners at home and abroad would, at such a price, take every bale that could be grown here until the product far exceeded the crop of 1860.

Now, in the old days of slavery, a planter was said to be on the high road to fortune, and was willing to pay $1200 for adult field hands when he could sell his middling cotton at 12 cents per pound. It is hardly necessary to demonstrate, even to the planters of South Carolina, that free labor is cheaper than slave labor. That is now universally admitted. If then a planter could grow rich by growing cotton at 12 cents per pound with slave labor, what will be the result when he can grow cotton at 25 cents per pound with free labor? Will it not follow, inevitably, that whatever objections the planters may at first entertain to hiring their old slaves, and whatever annoyance the freedmen may evince in renewing their relations with their old masters, both parties will eventually, in view of the obvious profit to be made by harmonious co-operation, agree to work together to grow cotton for the world? To assume that they would not, would be to deny the natural tendencies of human nature.

If the crop of 1866 should amount to 3,000,000 bales, worth on the average 25 cents a pound in gold, it would be safe, in the opinion of sound judges, to look for an increase of 1,000,000 bales in 1867—say a crop of 4,000,000 bales. There are those who, believing in the broad commonsense of the planters and of the sound instincts of the freedmen, predict that the crop of 1867 will in effect prove the largest ever made—over 5,000,000 bales. But it is best to assume nothing but what can be demonstrated as a certain or highly probable. If we raise 3,000,000 bales this year—and the very men who persisted that the same crop would not be made of freedom, and that we should not grow a million bales a year for ten years to come, now pin their faith to this estimate—it is reasonable to believe that in 1867 the increase will be as much as is stated. And if in 1859 the world consumed a crop of nearly 5,000,000 bales @ 12 cents per pound, it is also reasonable to believe that in 1867–8, with an advance in all prices throughout the world, and a general increase of population and necessities, a crop of 4,000,000 bales would be absorbed without a decline in price below 25 cents a pound.

If these anticipations are realized the United States will be able to export in the fiscal year 1867–8, 3,000,000 bales of cotton worth $75 a bale, say $300,000,000—very nearly enough to pay for all our importations from every part of the world; and the United States Government will realize from the tax of 5 cents a pound, which it is proposed to levy on cotton, not less than $80,000,000 a year—which, with the revenue from spirits, tobacco, whisky, and tobacco, ought to suffice for its wants.

A MISTAKE.

THE House of Representatives plainly made a mistake in refusing to Colonel JOHNSON, of Arkansas, the privilege of the floor, and we speak of the circumstance now because the error may be repeated in the case of others. The House has properly, indeed, intrusted to a Committee the investigation of the question upon what terms certain States may resume their relations to the Union, but until that Committee reports the House is honorably bound to take no seriousness upon any vital point involved. There is no doubt that the purpose of refusing to Colonel JOHNSON to the floor was intended to feel the temper of the House, with a view to calling upon it for a snap judgment upon the question already referred. But the proposition, if it was undoubtedly a natural indignation with such an effort that induced many members to vote against granting the privilege of the floor.

Yet we are very sure that there was not a single member who so voted who had not as hearty a feeling of admiration and respect for Colonel JOHNSON as any of those who voted the other way; and we should have been glad if Mr. STEVENS or Mr. JULIAN or Mr. KELLEY or Mr. BINGHAM or Mr. ELIOT had plainly said so, and, as a mere matter of form, have and noble citizen, who, under peculiarly trying and adverse circumstances, had been steadily true to the country, had voted to grant him the privilege of the floor. That he had credentials as a Representative in his pocket was the proof that other good and true men would have been honored in honoring him. It would by no means have followed that the House was ready to allow Arkansas, without further consideration, to resume her old relations to the Union. The vote would have shown that while his unconditional reception as a Representative was not a point to be decided under the circumstances by his personal merit, yet that the respect of the House for him and his conduct, as well as for that of those who had elected him a Representative, was cordial and profound.

Meanwhile we have no fear that the moral will be drawn by the Union men of Arkansas which has been delicately set forth. Men tried as we are by the government and by suffering well that the delay in the admission to his seat of a man like Colonel JOHNSON is due to a wise and natural reserve that the Union for which he and his Arkansas companions fought shall be secured as far as possible against the peril which still threatens it. They will not sue on the caution of Congress a proof that they have gained nothing by fidelity to the Union. On the contrary, they will see in the delay, with the Unionmen of Tennessee, only a little more sacrifice to make sure of the perfect triumph of their cause.

We should be glad to see the House reconsider its refusal, and express the respect it unquestionably feels, by admitting Colonel JOHNSON to the privilege of the floor.

NEWSPAPER MANNERS.

IT is letter to a friend at the time GEORGE CANNING was made Prime Minister of England, old Lord ELDON wrote: "The whole conversation in this town is made up of bitterly abusive talk of people about each other—all fire and flame. I have known nothing like it." Lord ELDON was an arch-Tory, and he spoke of the mutual crimination of Tories and Whigs. But fierce as party quarrels were, he does not record that they maligned each other, or that Tories abused Tories.

The necessity of harmonious party action to secure desirable results in a free country is indisputable. To this end a certain concert of action between those of the same party, who may differ as points of policy, is indispensable. Forgetfulness of this fact is a blunder of which we are surprised even veteran politicians and politicians guilty. Yet the conduct of many of the Union orators and journalists toward some of their party allies would be amazed even tough old ELDON. Certainly the New York Tribune helped neither its cause nor its own influence and character when it spoke of an ultimate abolition of its own party as "a little villain," and cried to another, "You lie, you villain." In like manner Mr. STEVENS's late speech, with stinging sarcasms at the President, whose good faith even Mr. STEVENS could not question, and whose cooperation with the dominant party of the country seeked, was by wisely regarded.

But this want of sagacity and good manners is not confined to what is called the radical wing of the Union party. Thus the New York Times not long since, in a tone of lecturing contempt in speaking of its party friends from whom upon some points it differs. It is fond of calling the Boston Liberals, for instance, "a common scold;" but is it not the most common and vulgar scolding to speak of faithful Union men whose views of justice and good policy differ from your own as the "villainous" of the negro, "the negro communion," and "the amalgamationists." We expect to find such absurd epithets in the New York News or World, but the personal abuse of President JOHNSON a few months since made the old Aurora's abuse of WASHINGTON seem tame and dull. Why should a Union paper descend to such slime?

The Times speaks of the colored people of this country, whose condition and conduct certainly must be better than mere slaves, very freely faithful American, as a class "which not only hold themselves to be the saviours of the nation, but will find a powerful faction both in and out of Congress clamorously asserting these preposterous claims on their behalf." If the Times concedes that disloyal ignorance shall vote, why is it unreasonable to suppose that loyal ignorance might vote also? It describes those who do not adopt its own views of policy as "revolutionists in Congress who threaten the Executive with impeachment unless he bends before their decrees." When and by whom was this threat made? It sneers at the same persons as "those who refuse to see the necessity of party ends." Those who would do this are of course those who love party supremacy more than justice or equal rights. But if the point should be conceded, each wing of the Union party would probably be found guilty of the charge. The Times was doubtless disgusted when Mr. SUMNER spoke, but as it proved wrongly, reported in the warmth of debate to have called the President "the pundit at the other end of the avenue." It undoubtedly held Mr. SUMNER's words of impolite and bad taste when he spoke of the President as sending a "whitewashing" message to Congress. But how can it suppose its own sneers and gibes reflected when it deliberately describes the Speaker of the Assembly of New York as "bucking and gagging," and smears at him as "his High Mightiness" and "His Loftiness?" If this strain when indulged by an orator with wit and point makes him "a common scold," what does it make of a newspaper-writer who uses it without either?

All such recrimination is of questionable service against an adversary, but among party allies it is worse than foolish, for it produces an exasperation which imperils the common objects of the party. Differences there must be, but why insist upon aggravating them into fatal quarrels; and why, when differences are to be expressed and argued within a party, should the expression not be such as prevails among well-bred persons? Differences there must be, but those who work wonders if every body keeps his temper. It is easy to call those who differ from us knaves; but it is hard to expect them to continue to regard us as friends.

BOUNTIES.

A LARGE meeting of soldiers, sailors, and marines was lately held in front of Independence Hall in Philadelphia to urge the equalization of bounties, which has been promised, but undoubtedly be made to this result which will be felt in the elections. In speaking of the matter one of the speakers declared that the sum necessary for this purpose would be not less than $550,000,000, we said that the question might be considered settled, because, as the Administry, and the men themselves, who had proved their devotion to the country, would not insist upon adding more than half a thousand million more to the national debt. No, however honorable their claim might be. We said that we must be just before we are generous, meaning that we must pay the debts we have honestly and distinctly contracted before we assume or create others. Of course we are not saying that the man who volunteered early and served long and well has a less deserving than any other; but only that the bounty for service were distinctly defined, were accepted by him, and have not been repudiated by any party. And we say so much in explanation to a "reading"—a soldier who writes us forcibly from Ohio.

He is of opinion that the case, as presented by the soldiers, is not understood, and he states it as follows:

"From the day of the first call of 75,000 men up to the 6th day of August, 1861, the pay of a private soldier was $11 pay proper and $2 50 clothing allowance per month; from August, 1861, to December 24, 1863, $13 pay, $3 pay proper $13 and clothing allowance $3 50 per month. From January 1, 1864, to June 30, 1864, the same amounts as $100, to receive which a soldier must serve at least two years and be honorably discharged, or be killed or die from wounds received in battle. On June 25, 1863, $400 bounty and $300 bounty were promised and given to recruits for new regiments, and on December 24, 1863, $402 bounty was promised and given to recruits for both old and new organizations. From January 1, 1864, up to the 31st day of March, 1864, when the so-called commutation bounty was suspended, the pay of a soldier was the same as from '63, 1861, was paid. This up to July 18, 1864, when, as per act of Congress of the 18th of July, the same amount of bounty for one year's service, $100 for two years' service, $300 for three years' service, was promised and given, one-third to be paid in advance. The latter bounties are still being paid. By act of Congress, July 28, 1866, $1,394, pay proper and clothing allowance remained respectively as in '63 and '64 and from March 3, 1865, when clothing allowance was increased to $8 38 per month to the present time, $16 per month. The pay of officers, first three examples are not exceptional or impossible, but have been common. The same pay prevailed in the navy, with a greater difference if the whole term were taken into account. What I will be glad to see is local bounty received by the late soldier, what was paid to the early soldier will not be unreasonable.

"The Pensioner-General says it will take $200,000,000 to pay the demands. His calculation is based upon the assumption that enough to make up $400 Government bounty can be obtained in addition to the pensions. That $400 was paid to veterans only, and no soldier who went into the service as a recruit in 1863 or 1864 ever got quite as much to the Government as that of a veteran who received little or no bounty. Let the bounty be added that $400 already received, is all that is asked. Thus, $300 bounty to one who received $100 bounty, $200 to one who received one-half. A little more than one-half will be required to make up the amount. This is asked to be received no bounty at all—being discharged for disability before the expiration of his term, or to the widow or heirs who have never received bounty have forfeited their right to the pension, and to the widow or heirs of a soldier, by reduction. In this connection I would ask, is not the soldier who is discharged for disability before the expiration of duty as much entitled to the full payment of his pay as he who was honorably discharged who received his bounty?

"I admit the difference in the condition of the Treasury now as compared with 1861, yet who does not believe in the country's ability to pay more now than then? If this money was to be taken out of the country the case would be very different, but it is not. It is to be paid to our own soldiers, and used at home.

"If Congress would equalize these claims, and pay them, say, part in land and part in a bond or money, the most reasonable argument against them I have yet heard become beautifully less. The course would, in addition to strengthening that bulwark of our soldier and our Government—it would, I say, prove a positive benefit to the whole country. Many thousands of men, numbering many thousands of good, stanch, sound men smotty our fire-eaters in the South-West. It would be a power for good and a great influence in keeping certain evil-disposed persons in a correct path. The settlement of some of the country's natural agricultural land would thus be developed, and would, in the meantime, for short time, return to the Government every dollar then expended by an increased tax and revenue."

LITERARY.

"The War of the Rebellion: or, Scylla and Charybdis," by HENRY S. POTTER. (HARPER & BROTHERS.) This book disarms criticism. What can be said of the political speculations of a gentleman who thinks that MILLARD FILLMORE was a great statesman, whose election in 1856 would have spared us the civil war, and while he censures MR. BUCHANAN for saying that he could not correctly solve the question of the right of SECESSION, declares in 1856, when he was himself a candidate, that of course the friends of slavery would not submit to the constitutional election of FREMONT? Mr. POTTER has been long in public life. At one time he obtained an unenviable nickname, of which he speaks frankly, explaining the circumstances, so that every reader will regret if he has ever given it currency. A colleague of JEFFERSON DAVIS in the Senate of the United States, and subsequently Governor of Mississippi, Mr. FOOTE was an earnest advocate of the Compromises of 1850. He was afterward an "American" in politics and a resident of California. In 1860, a citizen of Tennessee, pleading against the election of BRECKINRIDGE in 1860, and vigorously "saving the Union" according to the gospel of Cattle Garden. In 1862 he appeared in Richmond as a rebel representative from Tennessee, but if there had been no heartier rebels than he the Confederacy would have died of atrophy in a month. He went to the rebel Congress to be on the way of aiding an adjustment at the first opportunity; and when all hope was cut off, and the new Richmond authorities bent upon an insane defiance to the last, he undertook alone the task of pacification, and with results remarkable. But the banquet was beyond the offices of sweet-oil, and he therefore quietly to Europe. Returning after the final surrender, he has written a book which can not be read without interest and with a peculiar kindliness for the author. Evidently amiable, courteous, and gentle; a conservative and a patriot, he has been brought often into intimate relations with the rebel eminent of the public men of the last generation, and has borne a part in important public measures. But he never suspects that morals have any possible connection with politics, and therefore he supposes that a little artful management would make fire and powder the happiest union conceivable. That his own party was not stolen half a dozen and half free seems to him a sentiment little short of blasphemous. He sees that it had no ordured for eighty years, and can not conceive that during that time it was really hastening to the catastrophe. Mr. POOTE belongs to that large school of "politicians who make the world," the fierce foes of moral sentiment, who regard man merely as a machine. But man is a machine plus a soul; and the soul is the unexpected something which is to be in economy. Mr. POOTE has an overpowering admiration for DANIEL WEBSTER. But the WEBSTER of Plymouth Rock in 1821, and the WEBSTER of Faneuil Hall in 1837, not WEBSTER of the 7th March, 1850, in Washington, are two different men. The first acknowledged, the second denied the organizing force of moral principles in politics. In Mr. FOOTE's opinion the war might have been avoided by some kind of compromise; and, utterly unable to understand, no man should not prefer peace at any price to war, and recognizing the moral progress in the late struggle, he adjusts himself at the end of the book like HAMLET among the ruins, and exclaims, "Oh, my poor country! Oh, my unhappy land!"

The glimpses which the author gives us of the terrorism of the rebellion, and its utter defiance and disregard of every dogma of State rights and sovereignty, are vivid and terrible. The most conspicuous despots was the SEDDON of Virginia, whose figure is a fine specimen of the Southern member of the Peace Convention of February, 1861, and was the rebel Minister of War and tool of DAVIS. He should be a hero in Boston. Mr. FOOTE gives copious history of the social and inner aspects of the rebellion, and he half promises such a work should the country encourage him. We are sure to do that, and to win for its author, from every sympathetic reader, the praise of a sincere, if mistaken, sense of duty.

"A Noble Life," by Miss MULOCK, also issued by the HARPERS, is one of the sweetest and saddest of stories. It is written pathetically a true life of a young Scotchman, the last Earl of Cairforth. The scene is in the far north of Scotland, upon a bonny loch, shifting briefly to Edinburgh; and there runs through the whole story the tragical romance which is the undertone of Scotch poetry and tradition. A dwarf and life-long cripple and sufferer, with the clearest perception of all the forces of passion and selfishness which play upon him, never know; thoughtful, simple, and generous, he devotes his whole life and fortune to the welfare of others, conscious always with an inexpressibly tender solemnity that the proud name of an honored and traditional line ends in him. There are one or two passages of exceptional power, as when the Earl asks Helen Cardross whether her son, to whom his whole fortune is to descend, shall lose his reprobate father's name, and the reply of the mother, which is too sad: as a biography it is of the utmost interest and beauty.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

February 15:

In the Senate, Mr. Fessenden reported a Constitutional Amendment, providing that Congress shall have the power to regulate the elective franchise in order to secure to the citizens of each State the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States in the several States; and prohibiting States equal protection in the rights of life, liberty, and property. Mr. Johnson, of Maryland, again recommended that his amendment providing that there shall be no withdrawal from the Federal Union by any State or portion of it. He thought that relationship should be denied to rebels.

In the House, Mr. Wilson reported resolutions regarding the Monroe doctrine, and advocating an alliance between all the American republics. Previous question being called, the House, by a vote of 13 to 85, refused to second it. Mr. Washburne, instead of laying on the table a resolution for the admission of Colonel Johnson from Arkansas, has voted that it be referred to the Committee on Elections, negative.—The Committee on Elections reported in favor of Mr. Trowbridge for the contested Michigan seat, and against Mr. Baldwin.

February 16:

In the Senate, the Constitutional Amendment debate was continued.

In the House, Mr. Trowbridge, of Michigan, was confirmed in his seat.

February 19:

In the Senate, there was further debate on the Constitutional Amendment.

In the House, no business of importance was transacted.

February 20:

In the Senate, a bill to prevent the perversion of the mails to fraudulent and illegal purposes was referred. Debate on the Amendment continued.

In the House, the resolution to purchase 1000 copies of the Memorial Record, together with the Address of Mr. Bancroft, was adopted.

February 21:

The Senate not in session.

In the House, speeches were delivered on reconstruction by Messrs. Cook, Lawrence, and M'Clellan.

February 19:

In the Senate, Mr. Wilson introduced a joint resolution to disband the military forces of the lately rebellious States, and to admit their reorganization.—There was much discussion upon the President's Message vetoing the Freedmen's Bureau bill was read. There was considerable excitement in the Senate, but it was finally determined to postpone the reconsideration of the bill till the 20th.

In the House, by a vote of 102 to 56, the following resolution was adopted: "That in the language of the proclamation of the President, of May 29, 1865, the rebellion which was waged by a portion of the people of the United States against the lawfully constituted authorities of the Government existed in the most violent and revolting form, but whose armed forces have now been entirely overthrown, and the people of those States have now been deprived the power by which the rebellion was organized and waged against the Government."—A resolution was also adopted, 117 to 39, that the President be requested to furnish information relative to the number of troops in the Southern States.—Also, by a vote of 134 to 3, the following resolution: "That it is the deliberate sense of this House that the condition of the rebel States is only entitled the President in maintaining the possession and control therein, and that the Executive is restricted to the duties of the use of force during the war power for the protection of the Union citizens and the freedmen in those States."

THE HEALTH BILL.

The Health Bill has now good hope of success. The Assembly and the Senate having each passed a bill of its own, one of them (the Senate) rectifying the Consolidation Act of last session, and the other (the Assembly) grants to the Governor a Committee of Conference has been appointed, and the Committee has been active. The bill reported by the Committee takes in the four Police Commissioners, the Health Officer, the Mayor, and four members three to be physicians to be named by the Governor. It has the power to remove any officer, condemn to be made by the Governor, the majority four of the Commissioners and the Health Officer being also said, made by the bill, leaving only the minority to be appointed. This is the form which has passed, 17 to 14.

SUPPRESSION OF THE RICHMOND "EXAMINER."

The Richmond Examiner was suppressed by General TROWBRIDGE on the 15th, and the publication of the number of the journal in attempting to perpetuate ill-feeling between the North and South and Wyld Jones, Esq., the editor, came to Washington to get the order revoked, but General GRANT refused.

"The course of the Examiner is every number which it has come into our hands such as to foment and keep up ill-feeling toward the Government of the United States by the most unscrupulous misrepresentations, and we believe it to be for the best interests of the whole people, North and South, to suppress such utterances wherever the power exists to do so. The power certainly does exist when manifest injustice is done. The Government has not, as it was to pursue this course, I have felt it my duty to suppress the paper, but humane; and as much as I dislike to interfere with the interests of individuals, I would deem it improper and unjust to withhold my action in this matter for the suppression of the Richmond Examiner at this time."

Mr. Pollard then went to the President, and upon his request that he should hereafter sustain the Government and the Union, was allowed to resume the publication of the Examiner.

NEWS ITEMS.

The Union State Convention of Connecticut on the 14th of February nominated GEORGE C. GRAVES for Governor.

Fifteen miles below Franklin, in Western Pennsylvania, an oil well was accidentally set on fire a few days since, the flames of which communicated with all adjacent tanks to extinguish it. Reason increased to volume, and the whole petroleum region was soon in a conflagration, shooting up from sixty to a hundred feet, and lighting the country for many miles. The ground was literally heated for several hundred feet, starting vegetation into the premature growth of spring. The loss of property is quite much further distant.

It appears by the returns in the Treasury Department that the revenue received from the lately rebellious States from April, 1865, to the first day of February, amounted to nearly $20,000,000, principally derived from abandoned lands and internal revenue. Louisiana has paid over $6,000,000 of this, while from Virginia less than $1,000,000 has been received.

It is estimated that the entire income of the National Treasury for the present fiscal year will not fall short of two hundred to about $571,000,000; the internal revenue amounting to $275,000,000, the customs revenue (as the customs) fixed to $247,500,000.

FOREIGN NEWS

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE.

The diplomatic correspondence between Drayo de Lhuys and the French Minister at Washington, M. Bigelow, and that the Emperor's late speech. The Emperor stated that the French troops in Mexico would be withdrawn as rapidly as had been established which France had to defend in Mexico. He also referred to the question. The Emperor has decided among those which France feels bound to defend? He also referred to the question. The Emperor has decided Drayo de Lhuys is more particular. His instructions to Bigelow are dated the 3rd of December 26, and January 9 and 16, when summed up, amount to this: Our Mexican expedition had for its object the recovery of certain pecuniary claims held by French citizens, and not the establishment of any particular form of government in that country. We found that our interests could not be permanently secured unless we had a government to treat with. We found a strong sentiment in favor of a monarchy and supported that sentiment. We intended to leave the question of government to Mexican citizens, and Maximilian was accepted by a majority. We have no intention to force on the Government of Mexico was to help it to become secure and independent. We have no intention to force on Maximilian's acts; we have no exclusive interest in his government. We have no intention of saying on the table a word, and satisfy our interests and our dignity.—Such is the position of affairs toward Mexico. The Emperor is pledged by treaty to keep in Mexico 25,000 French citizens, and he will keep that number. The proportion now is the ratio of Maximilian's ability to organize native troops and pay them. Even after the withdrawal of the 25,000 French soldiers the foreign legion, according to the original agreement, will remain in Mexico. Bazaine is to remain in Mexico for six years longer.

The Pope has sent the proposed address of the French Senate in reply to the Emperor's speech repudiating the idea that the Emperor's speech repudiating the idea that the Pope is under American menace.

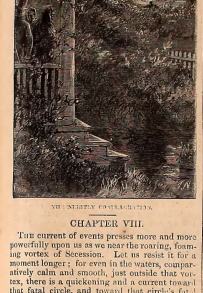
Letters from the city of Mexico report important successes of the Imperial forces. The Liberal Generals Mejia and Alatorre have evacuated the city of Tampico, which is about 150 miles northwest of Vera Cruz. The Liberals have also been driven out of Michoacan. At Matalan and Sinaloa the Liberals were so strongly posted among the mountain fortresses as to resist all the efforts of the French to drive them out.

Queen Victoria opened Parliament on 6th February. The speech expresses satisfaction at the successful termination of the American war and the abolition of slavery, and says that the correspondence relative to the rebel cruisers will be laid before Parliament.

The cattle-plague returns for the week ending January 27 show the number attacked to be nearly 12,000, against 10,000 the previous week.

William Murrill. J. M. Bryant. Emperor Williams. S. M. Small. Henry Groom. J. Godseya. Hardy Ryan. A. Ross. Scott Chinn. David Lewis. Samuel Osborne. Thomas Kennedy.
H. G. Jackson. R. H. Disney. J. P. Newman. Bishop Thomson. N. L. Bookman. W. M. Henry.

THE MISSISSIPPI MISSION CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY T. LILIENTHAL, NEW ORLEANS.—[SEE PAGE 142.]



[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

INSIDE.

A CHRONICLE OF SECESSION.

BY GEORGE F. HARRINGTON.

IN TWENTY-FOUR CHAPTERS.

THE MISERY CONTEMPLATING.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE current of events presses more and more powerfully upon us as we near the roaring, foaming vortex of Secession. Let us resist it for a moment longer; for even in the waters, comparatively calm and smooth, just outside that vortex, there is a quickening and a current toward that fatal circle, and toward that circle's fatal centre, and all its disastrous result among the black rocks and the surging waters.

Months, and even years, had passed over the young minister at his work there in Somerville. His charge has increased wonderfully from the little seed of its organization. It is no longer an experiment, but a regularly established church and congregation, having a strong family likeness to churches of the same denomination the land over. The old Major gazing down upon his family had heard Know Nothingism wondered-over as the last new thing under the sun. He had heard his daughter Alice say one night to the young minister, lifting her eyes from her slate after having satisfactorily reached the Q.E.D. of her proposition—she was getting fast toward the end of her schooling now—"Mr. Arthur, what is Know Nothingism?"

"I know nothing about it, Miss Alice."

"Oh pshaw!" Miss Alice has said; and is engaged in making a rapid but not flattering sketch upon her slate of her music-master as he appears at the piano.

"What an expression, Alice!" says Mrs. Bowles, looking up from her sewing. Her eyes are not as strong as they might be, as they were years ago when the Major overhead first surrendered to them; but Rutledge Bowles must have his shirts. Rutledge Bowles has left college now—not graduated exactly, but left it. More than once had he consented to waive the past and return to Columbia from Charleston, in the earnest hope that the College Faculty had come to their senses. The last time, however, it was too much, really too much—their course—for him to endure. In company with the other students he again withdrew as to Mons Sacer; but this time he could descend no more—could not even entertain such a proposition.

In fact there is, just now, no college at Columbia to descend to. For the time, Student-Secession has killed it. Rutledge Bowles is now in the law office, at Charleston, of one of his father's old friends. That is, he is occasionally in it. What with cigars and wine-parties, games at billiards and the like, he really has but little leisure for the office. Besides, politics must be attended to. Being in Charleston, the Mercury and the Courier must be read, at least glanced over, after breakfast, and an hour or two spent in discussing with the nearest friend the last points of the case. As Rutledge Bowles retires rather late of a night, and rises rather late of a morning, when he has done with the papers and the conversation thereupon after breakfast, it is altogether useless to go to the office that day at least.

Not that he has no purpose in life. Rutledge Bowles has plenty of talent, undisciplined as it is, and superabundance of fire to warm it. He has a purpose before him in life—a purpose to which he would gladly give all his energies. If he could only get to stand upon the floor in Congress, make one good, full speech containing all he would like to say against the North; see the Abolition Members writhe in their seats beneath it, and then have it printed and circulated over South Carolina and the rest of the South, a copy carefully mailed to his mother, he could be content, naturally or in any duel which might ensue, to die. Rutledge Bowles has his ideal of human glory, too. Let him have justice done him. Congressman Brooks is the idol of the hour in his latitude—but not with him.

"No, gentlemen," he has said in his knot of friends, "you must permit me to differ from you. I perfectly agree in all you say or can say about that most contemptible fellow, Sumner. But Brooks was wrong to cane him. With all respect for Brooks, the club is not the weapon of a gentleman. Under no circumstances is caning a gentlemanly deed. My idea is simply this: Calhoun would not have done it! If the fellow was a gentleman, call him out. If he is not a gentleman, be unaware of his existence."

But his friends can not agree with him for an instant. He does not know it; but it is the old Major, his grand old father, speaks out in him. And it is amazing in Rutledge Bowles. Not only the young approve the cudgeling; even white-headed men, members of the church, officers of churches, even venerable pastors, think, "under all the circumstances," that Brooks was right. They regret he was compelled to do such a thing in just such a place; but, as it was, he was right, Christ and all his apostles to the contrary notwithstanding. No; Calhoun is Rutledge Bowles's ideal of earthly Glory. Not exactly Calhoun the hard student in his youth; nor Calhoun the cold dialectician; nor Calhoun the spotless husband and father; nor Calhoun the irreproachable gentleman only—but Calhoun the scourge of the North. More than once has Rutledge Bowles, strolling along the street there in Charleston, thrown down his freshly-lighted cigar at the door of the public office wherein it is enshrined, and gone in yet once more to have another good look at Powers's statue of the old Roman. And Calhoun is an awful presence, standing there in a marble coldness which harmonizes with his character. Only lava cold from Vesuvius could have been better and more significant material. There he stands, his outstretched arm shattered to the shoulder by raging waters and foundering ship. Did Rutledge Bowles read no omen in this of another tempest, another foundering bark, shattering in the future more than that?

"I am astonished at you, Alice," said Mrs. Bowles. "Mr. Arthur tells you he knows nothing of the matter about which you ask him, and you say, Oh pshaw!"

"Yes; but, ma, the girls all say that is just what all their brothers and fathers say when they ask them—and they members of the Order all the time. That is the way it came by its queer name," said Alice, giving unnecessary length on her slate to the fingers of her music-master's widely-extended arms.

"You are right, Miss Alice," the minister replies. "But I am in earnest. And, what is more, I never intend to know any thing more of this new party than I do now."

He was in earnest when he said it; yet we saw how he afterward fell from this his high estate. And it is almost a positive satisfaction to know that he did err herein. The weaknesses of these ministers are so often internal and undiscovered by the world around, that this error of the Rev. Edward Arthur will help the reader to believe the assurances of the writer of these pages that he was by no means an angel. On the contrary, a man, and a very imperfect one at that.

Yes; Know Nothingism had come and had gone, accomplishing its specific something for God in the land, certainly in this individual. It had been entombed beneath editorials, pamphlets, speeches, as beneath autumnal leaves which had once been so fresh and flourishing. People had subsided somewhat into merely youths and maidens, husbands and mothers, when suddenly they are brought back to their condition of citizens with a shock. Lo another excitement begins, literally, to redden the horizon!

It had amazed Mr. Neely very much—Mr. Neely was from New Hampshire, and taught school in Somerville—when he first arrived in the South, not to find the negroes working in irons all day and carefully locked up all night. Why they were not in a condition of incessant and universal insurrection had been a puzzle to him, and multitudes with him there, before he left the North. Mr. Neely had often read items in the papers before he left the North, and he met with them in the papers of the South after settling in Somerville, to the effect that the blacks in such a county and in such a State had been discovered to be in a conspiracy to rise on a certain fixed day, murder all the whites, plunder and burn all the houses, and—who knows or had any idea of what they would do next? It was a thing in which Mr. Neely took the liveliest, deepest, most nervous interest; yet, for the life of him, he could never get the exact facts of any such case. Every few months he would read of some such conspiracy being discovered, now in this county, now in that, in the State in which he had settled. Oftener still he would hear accounts, to the same effect, of which the papers made no mention. It was always the same story—a conspiracy existing, embracing it was not known how many negroes; a discovery thereof just before the day it was to break out; certain white men mysteriously involved therein: a dozen or two of the negroes hung in company with one or more white men.

Always exaggerated, the facts were in some cases substantially so. Yet Mr. Neely could not understand the matter for his soul. Who were the white men? What was their motive in exciting the negroes to insurrection? Was it hope of plunder? Was it revenge of private grudge against certain owners? Or was it nothing other than desperate fanticism? There must be some powerful motive to induce any one to undertake such terrible risk. "What was the motive? The detected conspiracy was always followed by confession on the part of some one or more of the parties involved. What was the confession? Among so many discovered conspiracies, taking place during so many years, why was no more understanding arrived at at the germ, and process, and end aimed at? The fact and philosophy of the thing—that is what the inquiring mind of Mr. Neely wished to get at. But Mr. Neely never found any body who could cast the least light upon the subject.

THE WARNING.

A NIGHT ON THE POTOMAC.

No one could be had sought for information throughout the entire South. When such things take place people in the immediate neighborhood thereof are chiefly excited; rapid investigations are made; negroes and others are hung; but at last the whole matter remains as much as ever a puzzle and a mystery. A regular organization of white men to excite the negroes to insurrection, with agents abroad? or each one a private, isolated, spontaneous matter? The people of the South know no more on the subject than did Mr. Neely, or than the North from which Mr. Neely came.

So that when, one mid-summer morning, Mr. Bowles asked her guest, at breakfast, "Mr. Archur, what do you think of these dreadful barnings we hear so much about?" Mr. Archur could only reply, "This accoums as greatly to me, Mrs. Bowles, that I feel confident; beyond that I shod, mabbm, I feel confident; beyond that I shod, mabbm, I feel confident; beyond that I really do not know what to say or to think."

"We were speaking of the subject last night at Mr. Ellis's house," said Mrs. Bowles.

"Mr. Ellis told me about it before Mr. Ellis came in from his office and he confirmed what he had said. Stables, mills, private houses have been burned in great numbers; all in different neighborhoods, but all about the same time. In every neighborhood, too, negroes have been arrested and hung. Mr. Ferguson happened to be in my store, before it is the only place in Somerville at which he visits; and he says it is amazing sensible people should be such fools. He does not deny that many simultaneous fires, but accounts for them by the great heat of the summer, which has turned every thing to tinder. Under such circumstances, when the least spark will produce a conflagration, his only wonder is that there are not more fires. We'll see what Mr. Ferguson, however," Mrs. Bowles adds, with a smile.

But how does he account for the torpedoes and matches which are said to have been discovered among the negroes—the arms and powder also?"

"Oh! you know Mr. Ferguson. All stuff and nonsense, he says."

"If you will permit me, here is General Lamb's view of the matter," said Mr. Archur, unfolding a damp paper—the Somerville Star.

"Yes, Mr. Lamum is a—well, superior man; but, Lamum he is, nobody doubts him to be a genuine Southern man, as far, at least, as he can be, poor man!" said Mrs. Bowles. "Please read what he says."

"We have long looked for it,' read Mr. Archur—then even wondered why the work was not begun before. It is fairly inaugurated, however, at last.' True to their infernal instincts, faithful, as madmen ever are, to their diabolical threats, the Abolitionists have entered upon their work of fire, and blood, and pillage and rapine. From innumerable parts of the South and of our own State we hear of awful conflagrations and of almost simultaneous outrages on the negroes. That the whole North is entered upon a crusade against slavery we have no more doubt than we have of the shining of the sun. Not only has Texas are to the effect that over the whole of that State conspiracy reigns triumphant. From sources which we have the information that no doubt we know that there exists a powerful organization, secret, and amply supplied with men and money, ready to the work. We know, too, that her has its peddlers, map and book agents, furnitures-varnishers, school-teachers, preachers, and the like, turned over the entire South. For day are these infernal emissaries among us, in intimate intercourse with the negroes, poisoning their minds, supplying them with matches, strychnine, and arms, preparing them for what is to come. The signal has already been given. Any night we may wake to fire and carnage unprecedented in the annals of the world. Our homes, our wives!'" But here Mr. Archur stopped. There was much more to the same effect.

"You need not fear my nerves, Mr. Arthur," said Mrs. Bowles, with a smile. "I have heard and read things to the same effect in South Carolina, ever since I can remember. I am used to it.

"It reminds me," said Alice, after a pause, "of what you read to us, Mr. Archur, from Sybyle's 'French Revolution' the other night. You remember the negro alluded to therein standing before the magistrate in St. Domingo, with blood seed in his palm covered with a few white seed. He shook his hand: the white seed had been sown, the black seed sprouted and left! And after that came the awful convulsions there!"

Mrs. Archur had his breakfast in bed, the negro servant, a smart mulatto boy, waiting assiduously on the table, and hearing all that was said. That was never thought of by any one in there. Talk about excluding Abolition emissaries from the South! No public speaker for years past, and there were mounted the stump in any part of the South but he has had negroes by scores among his audience: negroes with white children in their arms; negroes attending to the horses; negroes bringing water; negroes loitering around from curiosity. And when, for years past, has one stump speaker failed in his efforts to dwell upon Abolition, conveying to his negro hearers, and through them to every black in the South, all the information and human being could convey to them on the subject? It had struck the young minister as a little odd, hearing, on a grand barbecue occasion, Colonel Ret Roberts deprecating from the stump this very thing, when, all the time he was speaking, half a dozen of the brightest mulattoes in the county stood in eager attention behind him, and arm's length of him. Save beings to do the work, needing in consequence just so much food, clothing, and the like, the house-dog and the cat, are about, save in parentheses of exoitement about insurrection.

"For my part," said Alice, motioning Charles, the waiter, to hand her the sirup—she was schoolgirl enough yet for that—"I wish you had never read that horrid book, Mr. Archur. And that description of the peasantry of France in the first part, and how they rose afterward!"

"It was a selection of mine, Miss Alice—" began the guest.

"Oh! I know that, Mr. Archur; but I do wish, with all my heart, all the negroes were in the Red Sea!" And none but a school-girl could have made such an irrelevant remark, with such singular emphasis too.

"One thing I hardly need say," observed the minister, as they lingered still around the table, "I am not a blood-thirsty character, I believe, and I abhor Lynch-law; but if there de agents among us inciting our negroes to insurrection, I am guilty of the most terrible of crimes against us, and against the negroes themselves. They can not be watched too closely, and should be tried, then, when detected, too severely."

"Yes; but what I hate," broke in the impulsive Alice, "is, that we should be in a position requiring us to be afraid of any body, requiring us to be keeping up a watch all the time. I am a genuine born girl, and I should like to act out as an Indian, with glowing cheek and sparkling eye, and I can't bear to think the South should have to be always on the watch for Yankee emissaries, and conspiracies. They want us even to be looking around to see if any of the negroes are near before we speak confidentially. We're peeping through keyholes and listening behind doors; whispering and talking low, and using all sorts of concealments, in a country that's generally condition to be in!"

"You foolish girl!" said her mother, smiling at her excitement.

"Don't parents have things they never speak of freely until their children are sent out of the room? I'm sure I've seen them under our circumstances even, and friends? What a child you are!"

But, like a willful child, the young beauty only tossed her brown and golden hair her head.

"I only know pa always taught me, and you have always taught me, and Mr. Ferguson has taught me to love England; and I'm sure there's nothing of the sore—the continual trembling and apprehending I mean—there's there, when I'm in England."

"There is in Austria and in Italy," replied that gentleman, "if I have to live for any length of time amidst universal and intense excitement and not be effected thereby. Physically, mind, it will be universally, in the human magnetism, electricity, sympathy, whatever you may choose to call it, which binds men together, insensibly."

"I have my own deliberate opinion on the subject," replied the lawyer. "But we won't bring it up now. What can you do with a child at this time. The temperament of Somerville just now is too much that of Sam Peters; the whole place takes fire at once. Mrs. Wyland, I believe all we hear. No man likes Dr. Warner more than I do," said the lawyer, apologetically, "but Dr. Warner is unwisely, really—ah, well, we all know Mrs. Warner!"

"But, Mr. Brooks, persisted Mr. Archur, "I would like to hear what you do think upon the subject. It certainly is a mysterious matter, one affecting us very—"

"It certainly is," interrupted his friend, gravely. "But we won't venture an opinion just now. My case is not quite made up, as we knows at the bar say. I certainly have very fearful opinion on the subject. But it is really too bad to utter. I may be mistaken. God grant I am! I'll be thanking I'm glad of it. If I'm right time will show. And that was all the generally frank lawyer could be induced to say.

It was the same that night after Mr. Archur's conversation that Mrs. Bowles was aroused by a tapping on her chamber window.

"Don't be alarmed, madam; it is me—Mr. Archur," said that gentleman, in answer to her hurried exclamation. "Please get up and dress yourself—Bowles and yourself don't be alarmed; I trust there is no occasion to be. I will be out upon the front porch."

There Mrs. Bowles and Alice found him when they had hurried on their dresses. But no need to ask him what had been around. Even before they left their bedroom the ruddy glare upon the walls told them of another fire. As they stood upon the front porch the whole conflagration was distinctly visible, turning night into day, and throwing the shadows of fence and trees darkly upon the ground. Full in view from the eminence on which it stood, the Somerville Factory was one vast blaze from the ground, and the flames were rising high high above the lofty roof. A six-story edifice, recently completed, thoroughly furnished, and owned by a Northern company, the establishment, a good deal sneered at as "that Yankee concern," was none the less the boast and pride of the place.

For a time not a word was spoken as they stood gazing upon the sublime spectacle, listening to the hissing roar of the same from the heated boilers. It was remembered by all of them afterward that no shouting was heard, as one was seen hurrying past their house to the scene. In fact, though all in Somerville knew the fire, few besides those immediately connected with the mill were there.

"You need not remain with us," said Mrs. Bowles, at last. "Perhaps you would like to assist at the fire. The Major always hurried to such when we lived in Charleston; he liked the excitement. If Kuledge Bowles was here he would not even have stopped to awaken us."

"I have no desire to go, I thank you," said Mr. Archur, quietly; and Alice noticed now that her brother's double-barrel shot-gun, rarely from long disuse, was leaned in a corner of the porch, behind him. Beneath his hastily-buttoned coat, too, she saw the butts of a revolver gleaming in the light of the conflagration. And not a man, or boy in Somerville that night but remained at home armed to the teeth. It is among the new and singular emotion which stirred in the bosom of this young and impulsive girl as she stood beside Edward Archur and Mrs. Bowles, she hardly knew how, of his pale face and set lips and fixed resolve. Not that he said any thing. Mrs. Bowles expressed the conversation with reminiscences of South Carolina, and the magnificent scale on which that State indulged itself in its conflagrations.

Like all the other school girls, Alice had made abundant fun of the young preacher among her companions; no truth being that reverence was a trait as yet undeveloped in her character. Her recent emotions are only easily accounted for. You have often observed that when you are suddenly awakened at midnight from a sound sleep by some there is in the sudden flash of your own mind which makes the music far sweeter to you than the very same strains heard on any other occasion; and it was in a state of a very similar flash Alice had just awakened. It might be incidentally remarked that these young people had been closely associated for some few months in our old as dwellers under the same roof. It is amazing how much of history and poetry they had read together; how much, in consequence of that, they had conversed, thought, and felt together—all in a natural, imperceptible way—from week to week. There had been in my humble opinion which may possibly have been made upon her by Mr. Archur's purity of character and refined intellectuality, with, also, his enthusiasm in his profession. You may not have thought of it before, but an honest enthusiasm in any good cause is one of the most electrifying things in this world: it imparts a light to the lip and to the eye, an uplift to the whole person. A single word, a single sentence, is the light and bliss, the element of heaven.

Not a more unpopular man existed than was Mr. Ferguson the next day, true to his native heather, he was as Scotch in his belief of the accidental nature of the fire as ever. There is nothing quite so canny in a canny man than the man who coolly refuses to go with them thereto; there is an affectation of coolness in such a line, a self-assertion in such a course which is positively insolent.

"Every cotton person in Somerville has expected the burning of that factory from the outset of the summer," said Mr. Ferguson. "It was one day in July, I think, that Mrs. Wyland's son, wool lying all about, and a raging furnace in the centre of it. Incendiary? Stuff and nonsense!"

Not an atherent did Mr. Ferguson have to his theory. He only held to it with the zeal of thousands concerned in himself. Somerville had entered upon a new collection. It had occurred to him during the last few days to collect such presents as had been sent to Infant Baptism and so far been published upon the subject of the burnings and conspiracies. "A rare treat it will be to read them after the delusion is over," he said to himself; and he entered with an enthusiasm upon the subject which he had not experienced upon in his public life in treasure of documents relating to Infant Baptism.

But the excitement in Somerville, as well as throughout the whole State, was at its highest pitch. Nothing else was thought or talked of. Arms of all sorts were cleaned, loaded, and laid in readiness. Every day brought its startling fresh lessons, with a hundred "Oh my's!" and "Oh, I am so afraid!" in the art of using the rifle and the revolver. Mrs. Bowles had not even a backyard without hearing the crack! crack! of pistol practice on the part of the inmates of the house.

As to the blacks, the Sunday afternoon service had been long stopped. By the middle of the week the streets from dark till broad day, firing promptly upon all negroes attempting to run when ordered to stop. By common action of the Mayor and Council, the room and trunk of every negro in Somerville was searched at the same hour by a large committee.

"And nothing found—not a thing!" said redheaded Mr. Ferguson, in triumph.

But at another few boxes of caps, even powder, was found, at least, several glass bottles of powder, more certainly in the negro's cabin. Very promptly was he had up before the Mayor, but as he seemed more amazed at the discovery than any one else, he was promptly released. "I need not say, gentlemen," remarked purry Dr. Ginnis, the owner of said boy, during his examination, "that I have had any hand in putting that powder there, you may string him up, abd welcome. But my boy Jim I'll take my oath he knows no more about it than I do. Why, gentlemen, Jim was raised with me! Nursed by the same mammy; wasted together a thousand times. He thinks more of me than if I was his own brother." And while the negro was being released, he looked him in the face, and puffier even than before upon the subject, Jim stood beside him open-mouthed, astonished, bewildered, unable to comprehend. It was singular the lack of definite, decisive, undoubted proof upon any one point in the whole mysterious matter.

"I am more and more convinced," Guy

Brooks had said more than once, or even twice, to his friend, Mr. Arthur. "But I may be mistaken. Wait. Let time show." But of what he was convinced he altogether refused to state.

"It really seems to me as if this excitement were deranging the whole of us," said Mr. Arthur one evening to Mrs. Bowles, about a week after the destruction of the factory, as they sat out upon the porch in front of the house enjoying the moonlight. For several nights now he had slept upon a pallet in the hall of the house, dressed, two loaded revolvers within easy reach of his hand. Mrs. Bowles said nothing to him about it, but she saw to it that every male hand in the place was under lock and key before she lay down at night, counted and safe; the silver-mounted carving-knife, wherewith the Major had carved at his hospitable table many a joint and turkey, rested safe under her pillow. And her guest never failed to be on the subject, yet, before lying down, he never failed to take the axe from the woodpile and secrete it, restoring it to its place before dawn next day. And he could not but confess to an almost sheepish, if not mean, feeling as he did it—a sense of being ashamed of himself, he knew not why.

And now, as they sit upon the porch, they hear a rapid foot along the street. Every ear had grown painfully attentive, every eye keenly alert lately. The person stops at the front gate, shields himself in the moonlight behind one of the gate posts, and begs Mr. Arthur to step there a moment. Mr. Arthur does so, and finds an Alderman of Somerville. The Alderman is fat as becomes an alderman, although his tastes smokes not within half a thousand miles of Somerville, judging from his rapid walk.

"We have learned, Mr. Arthur," he says, as well as he can—"learned but an hour or so ago that the negroes have arranged to rise, and that to-night is the time appointed for it."

"But, Dr. Ginnis, is there any foundation," begins Mr. Arthur.

"Can't tell; fear so; in fact, we feel almost certain upon the subject. But I have no time to stop," said Dr. Ginnis, in the same hurried tones. "We are alarming every family in Somerville, and glad we know of it in time to do so." And the Alderman has hastened on apprise other families of the impending insurrection, with that keen gratification in having news of moment to convey which the heart of Eve, though the news be the death of one's own father.

That night Somerville sat up.

With the single exception of Mr. Ferguson. Leaving every window of his house open and every door unlocked, the Scotchman made a point of going to bed earlier than usual, and of sleeping particularly sound, in open defiance of the panic of the hour.

If Dr. Warner could only have been induced to do so, he could have depouded under oath that, from supper until breakfast next morning, Mrs. Warner never ceased speaking; the impression produced on the Doctor's mind thereby being that, in some inexplicable but unprecedented way, he, Dr. Warner, was to blame for the whole thing. It was also currently reported afterward that Mr. Alvey, the schoolmaster, had abandoned his own bachelor home, after locking in his negro woman with her children, and nailing down all the windows, and had taken refuge, armed to the teeth, and making ten thousand inquiries as to the contemplated rising, when it was to begin, and how it was to be done, in the centre of a crowd of watchers at the hotel. "White as a gills, by George, actually frightened out of his wits!" was Bob Wilmot's statement on the subject afterward. However, it was quite impossible for Bob Wilmot's friends to speak of a Northern born man save in scorn and contempt.

As the young minister returned to the house from receiving Dr. Ginnis's information, perplexed for a moment what course to pursue, he finally concluded that here, as in every thing else, the frankest course is the best.

"I do not think there is any ground for apprehension," said he to his companions; "but then I can not be positively certain, not knowing upon what the Mayor and Corporation rest their belief."

"But have they adopted no plan in case there is a rising? Suppose the negroes do attempt it, what are they going to do?" cried the negroes move in one body, or will they rise separately, the blacks on each place attacking their own people? Where are they to begin? What are you going to do, Mr. Arthur? Oh, if Rutledge Bowles was only at home!" And Mrs. Bowles shuddered in addition upon questions on the head of her guest. Not at all hysterical either. The least frightened persons that night in Somerville were the females. Bless their unreasonable natures, they shriek at a spider, but look a lion undaunted in the face!

It was Little Bowles defender had to say; but after the servant boy Charles and his wife were gone to their room to bed, he quietly locked them in by night. Next he laid the double-barreled shot-gun within easy reach in the hall, and plenty of ammunition on the table beside it. As to his revolvers, they were girded on as a matter of course and of custom. But while he made every other preparation for the event, he treated the whole as a needless alarm—a good joke, in fact, to be laughed over hereafter.

It was eleven, and Mrs. Bowles seemed inclined to enjoy the excitement than otherwise, recounting innumerable like alarms passed through in South Carolina, especially one, in which the Major patrolled the streets by night for two weeks at a time. So excited was she that she refused to go to bed at all; and was after midnight before she at last fell asleep, with South Carolina on her lips, in her easy-chair, seated with them on the front porch. Softly although a pillow beneath her mother's head and a shawl around her shoulders, Alice again seated herself on the step of the porch, leaning herself against the column.

Mrs. Bowles's house—Rutledge Bowles's property she preferred calling it—stood by itself on the outskirts of Somerville, no other house within several hundred yards. The moon had now gone down; only the clear bright stars illumined the serene summer night. Seated in the shadow of her on the porch, somewhat in the shadow of the vines above, overhung it, her companion abandoned himself in reverie from loneliness as she sat, her face and eyes turned up toward the shining stars. Ah, that feeling of love, first love, love unuttered as yet even to the object thereof, why should I describe what we all know so well? It is the most innocent emotion felt beneath those stars. He felt unwilling to break the silence by a word, while he blessed the fat alderman for having come to change for the time the nature of the news altogether.

It seemed suddenly to occur to his companion that the situation was becoming somewhat strange one, and she uttered what came first to her lips.

"There was something I overheard Charles tell Sally, his wife, the other day, Mr. Arthur," she said, without taking her eyes from the stars. "I do not know what they had been speaking of, but I only heard Charles say: 'Never mind; never mind, we'll be free soon, any how;' and Sally answered, 'You'd better try an' see if you can't tell me what you mean.'" Such a singular emphasis on the word news."

"You have not mentioned it to your mother?" began the minister.

"No; but she knows how it is with the rest of the negroes. There is not a day but some negro says something of the same sort, especially when they are whipped, or are threatened with a whipping. And Charles and Sally were born, too, on the place, and are in the family, and if ever servants were indulged they have been."

"The truth is," said her companion, after a pause, "they hear so much from the public speakers and the newspapers on the subject—I mean all the negroes do—I do not wonder they get such ideas in their minds. Besides, there are several of the Union soldiers stationed here, who read the papers, I am told, and they communicate all they know to the rest. You know the negroes have a wonderful service was stopped: one of their preachers—I know not how true it is—is said to have been so swept away in the fervor of his prayer as to have prayed most fervently for Freedom. And where they got their notion of their being like the Jews in bondage in Egypt, and to be delivered by God, it is impossible to say, but they certainly have such an idea."

"Do you think they would be better off if they were free?" asked his companion.

"No, I do not. I confess the whole thing is a puzzle to me. That expression of Charles's and her companion was about adding marriage relation, but checked himself in time—"is not as the Gospel requires it to be among Christians. Many of our Southern ministers are writing, even preaching, upon the subject. Besides, we do know that as they respect the institution is a positive evil to—well, to us—at least I fear so. But what to do with them is the question. If we were to emancipate them, would they avoid we ship off the three millions of them?—they would relapse under its climate into barbarism. They do not do well in any sense as free, either here or at the North. I confess it is all a puzzle to me." Mr. Arthur spoke earnestly.

"Then is the world all a puzzle," said Alice, her eyes fixed upon the fleecy clouds rolling rapidly by over the stars.

"The Providence of God will solve it, and in His own time and in His own way. I am content to wait for His interposition," said he.

"It is strange, Miss Moulton making us read Guizot's History of Civilization," said Alice, after a while, "and yet he almost ignores the existence of such a book. Yet he has stolen his whole idea from it. From creation history is the slow ascension of man, the gradual unfolding of the development of the race and the establishment of God's dominion again upon earth. It seems very strange, very mysterious to my ages. At times the tendency seems to be in the other direction altogether."

"I have been reading Dickens ever since I can remember," said Alice, after a long silence, "and there is one theme running through all his pages, and it is always the right feeling so eloquently on that theme which makes his books so popular. That theme is charity, describes that that theme is—a steady denunciation of all that wrongs human beings, even the lowliest, a continual pleading upon the principle of loving-kindness toward the meanest and humblest."

"Peace on earth, and good-will toward men! Yes, and this Spirit of the Angels at the birth of Christ is becoming every day more and more the substance and staple of all popular literature. Perhaps," added the theologian, "Glory to God in the highest may come to be blended in the strain also as the world nears its consummation."

In which simple, natural mood they both are: The still night, the romance of the hour, the desire to entertain each other.

"Do you remember Tennyson's lines—'Ring out, wild bells?'" asked Alice.

"And its close—'Ring in the Christ that is to be?' Perfectly well."

"And that

"One far-off divine event,
To which the whole creation moves."

So unlike Byron, Scott, and all the old authors. There is Locksley Hall, all full of the same ageless, the continued Alice, her head still leaning against the column behind her. "You remember, her.

'Slowly come a hungry people, as a lion creeping nigher,
Glares at one that nods and winks behind a slowly dying fire.'

Who do you suppose she means by that, Mr. Arthur?"

"All enlaved people; those in Hungary, Italy, every where, said her companion.

"He means them too when he speaks, in one shape or other, so often, of 'a slowly-dying race,' I suppose?" said Alice.

"The fact is," said the minister, after a pause, "all Scripture is the Prophecy of, and all History is the Record of, the slow, steady destruction over the whole world of Feudalism—yes, Feudalism is the best word."

There fell upon them a long silence. Both were thinking exactly the same thing. Like all persons at the South these two had, from their childhood, singular ideas at times to flash upon their minds—ideas easily staved off, but often returning—uneasy ideas, disagreeable ideas which one prefers to have in their presence when loss condition. Both have a sense almost of guilt in entertaining such ideas an instant. Both would deny with scorn such a thing, if it were charged with such a crime. As to uttering such thoughts, both are thoroughly afraid to do it.

"How," said Alice, aloud, "Institution? It is an ugly word, isn't it—Slavery? I wonder if it must go down too?" ventures Alice, at last, in a low, timid tone. "Strange, Christ's words, "how full of fancies one feels such a night as this!"

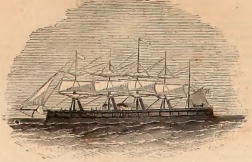
"Only one hundred years ago, or so," says her companion, our 'peculiar' institution, as we call it, existed over the whole world: nothing peculiar about it then. Just look at it to-night. Outside of the South, of all the civilized world, only Brazil and Cuba retain it. Spain! Spain! And here, on this continent, it was once unrestricted of its whole area; now it is crowded down over Louisiana and hunted down by the world—into the South."

"You forget Russia," said Alice.

"I beg your pardon. The Czar has already decreed its extinction. Serfdom ceases in Russia March 17, 1861," replies her companion, eagerly.

"And here we are to-night watching against an insurrection of slaves among us. That there will be such an outbreak I cannot believe,"—the thought strikes me sometimes so oddly! And the movement which has overthrown slavery every where else, under so many forms, will not do so here? Common sense! and for a South Carolinian too! What I hate about it is that those Yankees at the North think it is a matter of 'virtue,' said Alice, lightly. "But do you think it is to cease among us, Mr. Arthur?"

"I certainly do. I am as certain of it as I am of the existence of God," he replies.

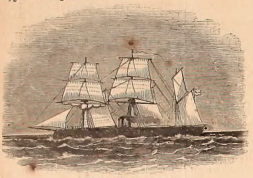


"Yes, but how?"

"I have a theory of my own, Miss Alice. I believe slavery is now driven to bay here at the South. I believe, too, that it will die gloriously, perhaps with struggle which will deluge the land with blood and shake the world—long after you and I are dead, Alice. Of the result, as certain as I am that every wrong thing must go down before God. No nation ever attempting to make a Christian of the South. Open the gates must fly, down the walls must go; the Gospel will have free and perfect course, and be glorified" said the minister. Just see those stars, great worlds they are, all moving so unswervingly, so musically upon their path—beautiful type of the Almighty; how do they assure us past doubt of the presence and power and love of God! Such a still night as this, I am tempted to make a Christian of the South. Open the gates must fly, down the walls must go; the Gospel will have and perfect course, and be glorified" said the minister. Just see those stars, great worlds they are, all moving so unswervingly, so musically upon their path—beautiful type of the Almighty; how do they assure us past doubt of the presence and power and love of God! Such a still night as this, I am tempted to make a Christian of the South. Open the gates must fly, down the walls must go; the Gospel will have free

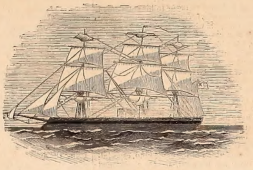
ACHILLES, 26.

Iron Ship. 6121 Tons; 1250 Horse-power; Length 380 ft.; Beam 58 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Backing 18 in.; Four masts; Built at Chatham 1863; Armed with 6½-ton 100-prs. and 6½-ton rifled guns.



AGINCOURT, 26.

Iron Ship. 6621 Tons; 1350 Horse-power; Length 400 ft.; Beam 59 ft.; Armor 6½ in.; Backing 10 in.; Five masts; Built at Birkenhead; Armament, 4 12½-ton 9 in. rifled guns, and 22 6½-ton 7 in. rifled guns, all muzzle loaders.

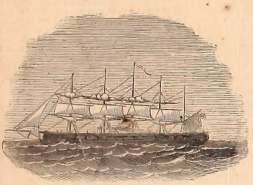


BELLEROPHON, 16.

Iron Ship. 4270 Tons; 1000 Horse-power; Length 300 ft.; Beam 56 ft.; Armor 6 in.; Backing 10 in.; Armament, 18 300-prs. in protected battery, and 6 110-prs.

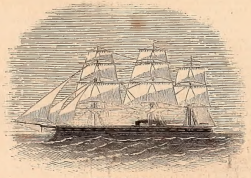
ENTERPRISE, 4.

Iron-cased Sloop. 993 Tons; 160 Horse-power; Length 180 ft.; Beam 36 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Wood ship side 19½ in.; Armed with 4 6½-ton guns, 100-prs.



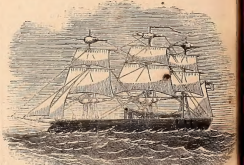
FAVORITE, 10.

Iron-cased Corvette. 2094 Tons; 400 Horse-power; Length 225 ft.; Beam 47 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Wood ship side 22 in.; Armament, 8 100-prs., in battery wholly protected, and the bow and stern each armed with a 68-pr. shunt gun.



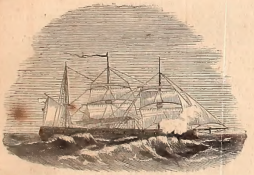
HECTOR, 24.

Iron Ship. 4089 Tons; 800 Horse-power; Length 280 ft.; Beam 56 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Backing 18 in. This ship is a powerful armament of 68-prs. and 110-pr. Armstrong gun.



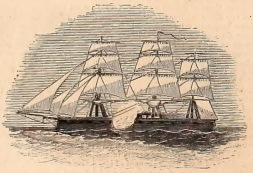
NORTHUMBERLAND, 26.

Iron Ship. 6621 Tons; 1350 Horse-power; Length 400 ft.; Beam 59 ft.; Armor 5½ in.; Backing 10 in.; Carries 4 300-prs. and 22 100-prs.



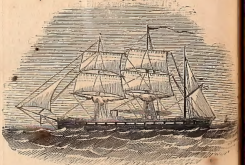
OCEAN, 23.

Iron-cased Ship. 4047 Tons; 1000 Horse-power; Length 273 ft.; Beam 58 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Wood ship side 29½ in.; Armament, upper-deck 3 110-pr. Armstrongs, main-deck 20 7-in. 100-pr. rifled guns.



PALLAS, 6.

Iron-cased Corvette. 3373 Tons; 600 Horse-power; Length 225 ft.; Beam 50 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Wood ship side 22 in.; Armament, 4 6½-ton guns, and 2 110-pr. Armstrongs.

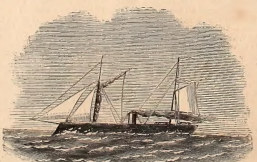


RESISTANCE, 16.

Iron Ship. 3710 Tons; 600 Horse-power; Length 280 ft.; Beam 54 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Backing 18 in. This ship is heavily armed, and has a protruding stem for use as a ram.

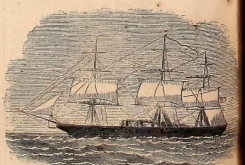
ROYAL ALFRED, 35.

Iron-cased Ship. 4045 Tons; 800 Horse-power; Length 273 ft.; Beam 58 ft.; Armor 6 in. and 4½ in.; Wood ship side 29½ in.; Armament, 10 12-ton 150-prs. inside battery on main-deck, 4 6½-ton 70-prs. outside battery, and 4 6½-ton guns on upper-deck.



ROYAL OAK, 35.

Iron-cased Ship. 4056 Tons; 800 Horse-power; Length 273 ft.; Beam 58 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Wood ship side 29½ in.; Carries 24 68-prs. and 11 110-pr. Armstrongs.

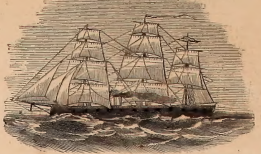


VIPER, 2.

Double-Screw Iron Gun-Boat. 737 Tons; 167 Horse-power; Length 160 ft.; Beam 32 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Backing 10 in.; Armament (probable), 2 7-in. guns; Building at Poplar.

VIXEN, 2.

Double Screw Iron and Wood Gun-Boat. 754 Tons; 160 Horse-power; Length 160 ft.; Beam 32 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Backing 10 in.; Armament, 2 7-in. guns.



WARRIOR, 40.

Iron Ship. 6109 Tons; 1250 Horse-power; Length 380 ft., Length over all 420 ft.; Beam 58 ft.; Armor 4½ in. Backing 18 in.; Armed with 68-prs. and 100-pr. Armstrongs.

BLACK PRINCE, 41.

...ron Ship. 6109 Tons; 1250 Horse-power; Length 380 ... Beam 58 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Backing 18 in.; Sister ship ... Warrior; Armed with 68-prs. and 100-pr. Armstrong ...

CALEDONIA, 31.

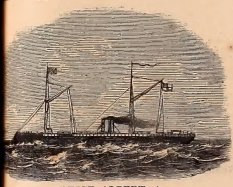
Iron-cased Ship. 4125 Tons; 1000 Horse-power; Length 273 ft.; Beam 59 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Wood ship side 29½ in. Built at Woolwich. Armed with 68-prs. and 110-pr. Armstrong guns.

DEFENCE, 16.

Iron Ship. 3720 Tons; 600 Horse-power; Length 280 ft.; Beam 54 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Backing 18 in. This ship has, like many others of the fleet, a formidable projecting beak for use as a ram, with a heavy armament.

LORD CLYDE, 24.

...ron-cased Ship. 4067 Tons; 1000 Horse-power; Length ... ft.; Beam 59 in.; Armor 4½, 5½, and 6 in.; Wood ship ... 31½ in.; Built at Pembroke; Armament, main-deck 20 ... 7-in. rifled guns; upper-deck 4 7-in. rifled Armstrong ... breech-loading guns.



LORD WARDEN, 24.

Iron-cased Ship. 4080 Tons; 1000 Horse-power; Length 280 ft.; Beam 59 ft.; Armor 4½, 5½, and 6 in.; Wood ship side 31½ in.; Built at Chatham; Armament 110-prs.

MINOTAUR, 26.

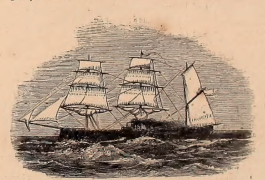
Iron Ship. 6621 Tons; 1350 Horse-power; Length 400 ft.; Beam 59 ft.; Armor 6½ in.; Backing 10 in.; Built at Blackwall; Armament, main-deck 4 150-prs. 10½ in. 12-ton guns, smooth bore; 18 100-prs. 7 in. 6½ ton rifled guns; upper-deck 4 100-prs.

PRINCE ALBERT, 4.

...ron-cased Cupola Ship. 2537 Tons; 500 Horse-power ... length 240 ft.; Beam 48 ft.; Armor 4 in.; Backing 18 in. ... armed with 4 12-ton guns in revolving turrets. The ship is represented as cleared for action with her bulwarks lowered.

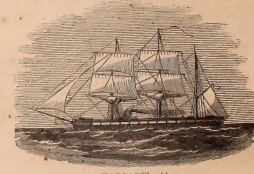
PRINCE CONSORT, 35.

Iron-cased Ship. 4045 Tons; 1000 Horse-power; Length 273 ft.; Beam 58 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Wood ship side 29½ in.; Armament, 16 68-prs., 7 110-pr. Armstrongs, 8 6½-ton guns; Crew 605.



RESEARCH, 4.

Iron-cased Ship. 1253 Tons; 200 Horse-power; Length 225 ft.; Beam 38 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Wood ship side 19 in.; Armament, 4 smooth bore 9-in. guns of 6¼ tons in a central battery.

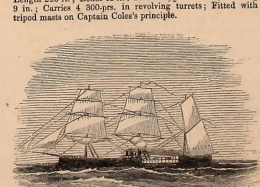


ROYAL SOVEREIGN, 5.

Iron-cased Cupola Ship. 3765 Tons; 800 Horse-power; ...ength 240 ft.; Beam 62 ft.; Armor 5½ in.; Wood ship side ... in.; Carries 5 10-in. guns in revolving turrets. The bul...arks are represented as lowered to show the turrets.

SCORPION, 4.

Iron-cased Cupola Ship. 1833 Tons; 350 Horse-power; Length 220 ft.; Beam 42 ft.: Armor 4½ and 3 in.; Backing 9 in.; Carries 4 300-prs. in revolving turrets; Fitted with tripod masts on Captain Coles's principle.



VALIANT, 24.

Iron Ship. 4063 Tons; 800 Horse-power; Length 280 ft.; Beam 56 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Backing 18 in.; Built as Millwall; Armament 68-prs. and 110-pr. Armstrong guns.

WATERWITCH, 2.

Hydraulic Iron-cased Gun Vessel. 778 Tons; 167 Horse-...wer; Length 162 ft.; Beam 32 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Back-...g 10 in.; Building at Blackwall; probable armament 2 7-in. ...uns.

WYVERN, 4.

Iron-cased Cupola Ship. 1857 Tons; 350 Horse-power; Length 220 ft.; Beam 42 ft.; Armor 4½ and 3 in.; Backing 9 in.; Carries 4 300-prs. in revolving turrets; Fitted with tripod masts on Captain Coles's principle.

ZEALOUS, 20.

Iron-cased Ship. 3716 Tons; 800 Horse-power; Length 252 ft.; Beam 59 ft.; Armor 4½ in.; Wood ship side 30½ in.; Armament, upper-deck 4 Armstrong 110-prs., main-deck 8 smooth-bore 94-prs. and 8 rifled shunt 100-prs.

THE STORY OF ERNST CHRISTIAN SCHOEFFER.

By AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

I.

I PROPOSE relating the story of Ernst Christian Schoeffer. In order to do this circumstantially, I will begin by stating that he was the only child of Dorothea and Wolfgang Schoeffer, of Ulm, and was born in an upper chamber of a house on the Gruben, just thirty-one years since.

Wolfgang Schoeffer belonged to a somewhat better class than the majority of his neighbors. He was poor, but not abjectly poor; and he had seen better days. He was a second-hand bookseller by trade, and had begun life with some show of prosperity. He inherited his father's business and stock; and his wife—a pretty Bavarian with whom he had fallen in love while traveling to and fro among the great fairs of Augsburg, Munich, Nuremberg, and Nuremberg—was reported to have had not only beauty but money. So when he brought home his bride and opened a shop in the market-place, his fellow-citizens looked upon him as a rising man, and approved of him accordingly. Their approbation, however, was not destined to be of long continuance. Wolfgang Schoeffer had started too ambitiously, and at the end of five years became bankrupt. He left his shop in the market-place for one of the ruinous little tenements on the Gruben; and there, when the brief sunshine of their career was over and the bitterness of poverty was yet new to them both, Dorothea Schoeffer died in giving birth to the only child of their marriage.

From that day the bookseller was a changed man. He had borne his reverses with tolerable courage, but this last blow told heavily. He seemed to grow old all at once: he avoided his former acquaintances and friends; he ceased to frequent any place of public resort; he became more than ever bent, more gray, more gloomy, more sordid in his clothing, and more solitary in his ways.

Put out to nurse to the wife of a poor neighbor for the first year or two of his little life, the child was brought home to his father's house almost as soon as he had learned to prattle; and there, under the care of a certain Frau Martha, who was very deaf, very pious, half lodger and half servant, spent all his motherless years.

It would be impossible to conceive a more dismal home for a young child than bookseller Schoeffer's house on the Gruben. The floors were unscrubbed, the stairs were never swept, the windows were never cleaned or opened from year's end to year's end, and the whole filled with myriads of dust top to bottom. The walls were lined, the floors were cumbered, the air was stale with them. The house contained little else: nothing for comfort, nothing for grace—not even a flower in a pot, or a spot like a garden. Books, books, nothing but books—yellow, dusty, worm-eaten, and unfragrant, like boxes in a charnel-house. As for the garden, it was a very wilderness of nettles and rubbish.

All this, however, would have mattered little if the boy had known the happiness of being surrounded by kind parents and teachers, and children of his own age; but none of these blessings were his. His nurse, really fond of him in her dull way, believed her indeed to be all fulfilled so long as he was kept clean and quiet, mended his clothes, cooked his food, taught him the Lord's Prayer, and took care that he did not betray himself in the dirt at the bottom of the Gruben. His father cared for him after a morose, negligent, fitful fashion; but as he was more frequently absent from home than not, and spent his time chiefly in traveling from city to city, he was practically left to leave the rearing of his child's health to Frau Martha and his education to the government.

The pastor, like the poet, is born, not made; and Ernst Christian Schoeffer was a born painter. He was endowed from his cradle with the gift of seeing—that precious gift without no mere training can develop, and without which all the academies that ever were incorporated can achieve nothing toward the production of an artist. This privilege is his from very birth. He enjoys it even before he knows that he enjoys it. A brighter heaven than the heaven of which he has been told is his by infancy; and for him alone of all the sons of Adam that "vision splendid" which even nature's own poet himself can only unveil on to their life, never fades into the light of common day."

Thus it was that Ernst was a happy child despite the squalor of his surroundings; thus he is so, even in the midst of these surroundings, he came to an intuitive sense of poetry and beauty. As he grew older he discovered an inexhaustible resource in his father's books. A good thief of Wolfgang Schoeffer's constituted of Fiddes-Arnold's Bible—shapes and sizes, in all languages, of all dates; some bound in wood, some in vellum, some in old brown leather; many of them illustrated with quaint wood-cuts, and some with colored maps and tailpieces of strange device. Bibles, indeed, were the bookseller's specialty; and it was chiefly on boys and sell scarce and curious copies that he traveled so constantly from city to city.

From these books the "storied windows" and altar-pieces of the churches round about—from the Gothic fountains at the corners of the streets—above all, from the cathedral, with its rich architecture and tracories, and its wonderful tower like a filigree of old lovers' work—the boy learned and studied every day of his life. He passed that cathedral each time that he went to his school, and lingered before it each time that he returned to his homeward journey. He came to know every stone of it by heart—every niche and saint and canopy; every tuft of wind-sown grass that waved aloft on its buttress and pinnacle. He knew it in the morning light and the afternoon, when the shadows lay richer and deeper; in the evening, when the eastern front was golden with sunset. The rocks that built undisturbed in the tower were his familiar friends. The great entrance portaled with quaint processions, and the bas-reliefs in the spandrils of the huge Gothic arch above the triple doorway, filled him with a perpetual wonder and delight. There is God creating the earth, the air, and the sea; the Almighty artificer being represented each time as an old man dressed in a flowing robe with a globe in his right hand; the only variation in each repetition being that he holds a smooth globe for the earth, a curly globe for the air, and a wavy globe for the sea. Then comes the creation of man; Adam looking at his ease shapeless legs with great astonishment, as well indeed he might. Then the creation of Eve, the temptation, and the banishment. Nothing in mediæval art more naïve and curious than these bas-reliefs above the principal entrance of Ulm cathedral! Few travelers turn aside from the beaten track to see them; few artists study them; but Ernst Christian Schoeffer learned all that they had to teach—all that they had the power to teach—and he took both within and without. Messages written with the brush and the chisel, upon iron, stone, wood, he mastered to them all with humility and reverence. The relievo triptoglyph over the high altar, with its Magi gorgeous in gold and colors, which in winter-time glowed like gems in the windering eyes; the slender, elaborate pyx, like a magnified ivory carving; the choir with its quaint, delicate, cinderful oak pinnacles, and clustering fruits and flowers, its lace-like canopies, and its triple rank of heroes, Pagan, Jewish, and Christian, each feature of whose sculptured face he knew by heart; the carved scutcheons of dead and gone nobles hung all about the lower end of the nave; the monumental brasses, the memorial portals, and medieval frescoes scattered so lavishly about the private chapels in the side aisles—these things were his first masters in art, and upon them his genius fed and strengthened year by year. It showed itself, as the artist instinct usually does, slow itself, in all kinds of blundering first attempts. The boy tried his prentice-hand upon every material that fell in his way. He scrawled upon his slate and in his copy-books; he dabbled in clay; he daubed a little in coarse pigments begged from a neighboring house-painter; he cut quaint statuettes in common fir-wood. These occupations kept him quiet in holiday hours, and his father, when at home, doubted no more.

At length the time came when Ernst Christian's seven years of schooling were on the point of expiring. He was now fourteen, and was in age to be apprenticed to a trade. His father intended him for his own business; but the boy had made up his mind to be a painter, and, determined to struggle to come, had also made up his mind to be first in the field. There was fierce opposition to be encountered and there were impediments of obstacles to be overcome; therefore, he argued, the sooner the opposition was combated and the difficulties were reached the better. He was convinced that he should have the moral gallantry to face his father at once upon this matter so vital to his own happiness, and yet that he should fail in heart and his breath come short as he went up to that father's chamber on the evening of the very day when his school term had expired.

It was about six o'clock on a bleak November night. The stairs creaked under his feet as he went up, feeling his way in the darkness, rehearsing the words in which he meant to begin. On the landing he paused, and guided by a thread of light upon the threshold, tapped at his father's door. No reply came. He listened—he heard a sound as of something tossed and rustled. He tapped again —he thought he was answered—he went in.

His father, standing by the table with a framed and painted picture in his hand, turned with his head, turned upon the boy in a sudden paroxysm of anger.

"What do you want?" he said, furiously. "How dare you come in without knocking?"

"I knocked, mein Vater, but—Gott! what a beautiful picture!"

It was a beautiful picture. It represented a fair delicate-featured girl with down-looking eyes and pale golden hair, in a white dress, with pearls in her braids, and a smile as pensive, as sweet, as sad as that of the Madonna del Velo. The painter of this gracious head had been lovingly and tenderly, lingeringly... Though too cold in color and too hard in effect, the portrait was as highly finished as a miniature, and was executed as if it had all come from the easel of Memling or Fiorio. It measured about twelve inches square, and was inclosed in a flimsy frame of black wood. The gate of iron by which was glazed, worked upon hinges like a little door, and locked with a small brass key.

The boy forgot his own errand in his father's anger, and all else at the sight of this treasure. He leaned forward to look upon it, but the bookseller thrust him roughly back.

"The picture is nothing to thee," he said, hastily. "Get thee gone. Get down to Frau Martha. I am busy to-night."

"But, father—"

"Get thee down, I say. Go learn thy tasks for to-morrow."

"I have none. The Herr-president signed my certificate to-day, and he said, if you wished to enter me for another term—"

"Another term, indeed!" interrupted Schoeffer. "What is to pay for it? Let the Herr-president tell me that. There is not a poorer man in Wurtemberg than myself."

"He said—"

"It is nothing to me what he said. There have been times when I scarce knew where to find food and clothing for thee."

The lad glanced round the squalid room, and sighed.

"I know it, father," he replied.

"It is well you do know it," replied the bookseller, harshly. "You have to earn your bread."

"That is what I came about, father. I wish to be a painter."

The Herr Schoeffer shook his head.

"A painter?" he said. "Pooh! it is an unhealthy trade. Besides, I have not a groschen wherewith to appreciate thee. No, boy; thou must follow thy father's calling—a poor one, but at the worst, better than neighbor Strauss's."

"Neighbor Strauss!" echoed the lad. "Do you think I wish to be a house-painter, like neighbor Strauss? No, no—I mean to be a painter like our ancestor, Martin Schoeffer."

His father looked at him incredulously.

"The boy is mad," he said, with a contemptuous shrug.

"I am not mad. I would live on bread and water to be a painter. I would beg my way to Rome on foot, if you would only let me go."

"Rome! What would you do in Rome, pray, when you had begged your way there?"

"I would go to Overbeck's studio and tell him that I was a poor German boy who loved art, and wished to be a painter."

The bookseller struck the table angrily with his clenched fist.

"Let me hear no more of this," he said. "You talk like a fool."

"But—"

"Silence! Not another word. Get you down stairs and bid Frau Martha make the soup hot for supper."

The boy obeyed reluctantly. As he reached the door his father called him back.

"Here, Ernst," he said, more gently. "This portrait is not to be talked about. You must not tell any one that you have seen it. Do you hear? Not even Frau Martha."

"Whose portrait is it, father?"

The bookseller frowned.

"You must give your word not to speak about it," he said, fixing a searching eye upon his son's face.

"I will never speak of it, father."

"You promise?"

"I promise. But whose portrait is it?"

"Your—your mother's."

"My mother's!"

The lad sprang forward—would have taken the picture in his hand, but that his father again put him back, and would not let him touch it.

"You can see it well enough where it is," he said, from a wish.

"Oh father! was my mother so beautiful? Were you very fond of her always?" And the boy's own eyes filled with sudden tears.

"She was very like it," replied the bookseller, gloomily. "Now, Ernst, you have looked long enough."

"May I see it again to-morrow?"

"No, not to-morrow—some day, perhaps. Now go, and remember your promise."

"I will remember it, and keep it," said Ernst, and left the room.

He made his way slowly down the dark stairs, thinking over all that had been said.

"My mother's portrait!" he muttered to himself. "To think that I have seen my mother's portrait hidden away all these years!"

When he reached the bottom step he sat down, covered his face with his hands, and fell into a long reverie. His heart was heavy, and the future seemed very dark. Then all dark and uncertain, like a scene in a dream.

At length he sprang to his feet, resolved and self-reliant once more.

"I will be a painter!" he exclaimed, half aloud. "I will be a painter; and I will paint as well as that too, some day."

II.

ERNST CHRISTIAN SCHOEFFER carried his point, and became a painter after all. Not, however, without a struggle. It was a struggle—a battle against his father's imperious will; against poverty, prejudice, and obscurity—a battle that lasted three whole years, and cost the boy many a fall and many a bitter blow before 'twas won. Still he did win it. He became a painter. He even went to Rome.

A drawing was the secret, and sent up anonymously to the Government School of Art in Ulm—a prize carried off, and a year's gratuitous instruction gained thereby. A second prize achieved, and a second year gained; a third, and its results a gold medal and a purse of two hundred and fifty florins—these were the steps by which the youth struggled on to the fulfillment of his hopes.

His father turned, railed, argued, and finally yielded a sullen acquiescence.

That purse came as if dropped direct from heaven. Every farthing of it was earned by him with the magic name of Rome. Those two hundred and fifty florins represented in his eyes the inexhaustible riches of opportunity. They were the golden gates of knowledge to his eager footsteps. They were his passport to the tomb of Raffaelle.

Ernst Christian has ever held to his father's anger, and all else at the sight of this treasure. He leaned forward to look upon it, but the bookseller thrust him roughly back.

"The picture is nothing to thee," he said, hastily. "Get thee gone. Get down to Frau Martha. I am busy to-night."

"But, father—"

"Get thee down, I say. Go learn thy tasks for to-morrow."

"I have none. The Herr-president signed my certificate to-day, and he said, if you wished to enter me for another term—"

"Another term, indeed!" interrupted Schoeffer. "What is to pay for it? Let the Herr-president tell me that. There is not a poorer man in Wurtemberg than myself."

"He said—"

"It is nothing to me what he said. There have been times when I scarce knew where to find food and clothing for thee."

The lad glanced round the squalid room, and sighed.

"I know it, father," he replied.

"It is well you do know it," replied the bookseller, harshly. "You have to earn your bread."

"That is what I came about, father. I wish to be a painter."

The Herr Schoeffer shook his head.

"A painter?" he said. "Pooh! it is an unhealthy trade. Besides, I have not a groschen wherewith to appreciate thee. No, boy; thou must follow thy father's calling—a poor one, but, at the worst, better than neighbor Strauss's."

"Neighbor Strauss!" echoed the lad. "Do you think I wish to be a house-painter, like neighbor Strauss? No, no—I mean to be a painter like our ancestor, Martin Schoeffer."

His father looked at him incredulously.

"The boy is mad," he said, with a contemptuous shrug.

"I am not mad. I would live on bread and water to be a painter. I would beg my way to Rome on foot, if you would only let me go."

"Rome! What would you do in Rome, pray, when you had begged your way there?"

"I would go to Overbeck's studio and tell him that I was a poor German boy who loved art, and wished to be a painter."

The bookseller struck the table angrily with his clenched fist.

"Let me hear no more of this," he said. "You talk like a fool."

"But—"

"Silence! Not another word. Get you down stairs and bid Frau Martha make the soup hot for supper."

The boy obeyed reluctantly. As he reached the door his father called him back.

"Here, Ernst," he said, more gently. "This portrait is not to be talked about. You must not tell any one that you have seen it. Do you hear? Not even Frau Martha."

"Whose portrait is it, father?"

The bookseller frowned.

"You must give your word not to speak about it," he said, fixing a searching eye upon his son's face.

"I will never speak of it, father."

"You promise?"

"I promise. But whose portrait is it?"

"Your—your mother's."

"My mother's!"

The lad sprang forward—would have taken the picture in his hand, but that his father again put him back, and would not let him touch it.

"You can see it well enough where it is," he said, from a wish.

"Oh father! was my mother so beautiful? Were you very fond of her always?" And the boy's own eyes filled with sudden tears.

"She was very like it," replied the bookseller, gloomily. "Now, Ernst, you have looked long enough."

"May I see it again to-morrow?"

"No, not to-morrow—some day, perhaps. Now go, and remember your promise."

"I will remember it, and keep it," said Ernst, and left the room.

He made his way slowly down the dark stairs, thinking over all that had been said.

"My mother's portrait!" he muttered to himself. "To think that I have seen my mother's portrait hidden away all these years!"

When he reached the bottom step he sat down, covered his face with his hands, and fell into a long reverie. His heart was heavy, and the future seemed very dark. Then all dark and uncertain, like a scene in a dream.

At length he sprang to his feet, resolved and self-reliant once more.

"I will be a painter!" he exclaimed, half aloud. "I will be a painter; and I will paint as well as that too, some day."

II.

ERNST CHRISTIAN SCHOEFFER carried his point, and became a painter after all. Not, however, without a struggle. It was a struggle—a battle against his father's imperious will; against poverty, prejudice, and obscurity—a battle that lasted three whole years, and cost the boy many a fall and many a bitter blow before 'twas won. Still he did win it. He became a painter. He even went to Rome.

A drawing was the secret, and sent up anonymously to the Government School of Art in Ulm—a prize carried off, and a year's gratuitous instruction gained thereby. A second prize achieved, and a second year gained; a third, and its results a gold medal and a purse of two hundred and fifty florins—these were the steps by which the youth struggled on to the fulfillment of his hopes.

His father turned, railed, argued, and finally yielded a sullen acquiescence.

That purse came as if dropped direct from heaven. Every farthing of it was earned by him with the magic name of Rome. Those two hundred and fifty florins represented in his eyes the inexhaustible riches of opportunity. They were the golden gates of knowledge to his eager footsteps. They were his passport to the tomb of Raffaelle.

Ernst Christian his bering that he had now no home, checked himself, and substituted "at my leisure."

"By all means."

He rose—he hesitated—he had evidently some thing still to say.

"There is one very precious and sacred relic," he faltered, "which I would give much to possess."

"If it be any thing which I can assist you to recover I shall be happy to do so," replied the banker, politely.

"It is my m——'s portrait."

"Will you be goodness to describe it?"

The painter, with visible emotion, described the picture minutely. The banker listened, looked down, coughed dubiously, and rubbed his little fat hands slowly over and over.

"Dear me!" he said, "is that a portrait of your mother? How handsome she must have been!"

"Then you recognize it?"

"Perfectly."

"And can you tell me what has become of it?"

The painter's voice question came with hot eagerness: the Jew's reply with cool composure.

"Why, yes,—no one better. That picture is in my own possession."

"In yours!"

The tone, the lack of entreaty, were alike unmistakable; but Herr Schliermacher met both with the civilest imperturbability imaginable.

"Exactly so," he replied. "It is a charming little thing, and I really value it."

"But Herr Schliermacher—my good Herr Schliermacher, you do not value it as I do!"

"I value it too well to part from it," said the banker.

"Herr Schliermacher, I would serve you for seven years to earn back my mother's portrait."

Herr Schliermacher shook his shiny head.

"I regret to refuse you," he said; "but it is quite out of my power to grant your request. I like the picture—my daughter has taken quite a fancy for it—and I have been too heavy a loser in this matter already."

"It is worth more than the whole of my poor father's debt put together!" cried the young man, impetuously.

"Not as a work of art. If it were I should not feel justified in keeping it."

"What would you do with it?"

"Sell it, of course, my good Sir; and when I had repaid myself from the proceeds, refund the surplus to yourself."

The painter turned pale.

"For God's sake don't do that!" he said, quickly. "I do not mean to do it. I mean to keep it."

The Herr Schliermacher uttered these last words in a tone that produced further discussion impossible, and the young man reluctantly took his departure.

He came back, however, the next day at the same hour.

"Herr Schliermacher," he said, "I have come to ask what price you set on my mother's portrait."

"I set no price upon it, Herr Schoeffer. I do not mean to sell it."

"But you would not—you could not—refuse to sell it if I could afford to pay for it!"

"If I understood you rightly when you did me the favor to call upon me yesterday," said the banker, very stiffly, "you are not even in a position to pay off the residue of your father's liabilities."

"That is true; but——"

"Excuse me, Herr Schoeffer. It will be time enough to enter on this topic when you come to me with your one hundred and fifty-five florins in your hand. I wish you a good-morning."

Again the painter turned away disheartened; but again the next day, at the same hour, he returned to the charge.

"Herr Schliermacher," he began, "will you let me earn that portrait? Will you take me into your office? Only will you receive me as one of your clerks? I write a good hand, and I am a tolerable accountant. If you will agree to this, I will work for you without salary till I have earned the picture back at whatever price you choose to set upon it."

The banker laughed outright.

"My dear Herr Schoeffer," he said, "gentlemen in your position are the very worst clerks in the world to cut bankers' clerks from! No, I thank you. No esthetic accountants for me. Besides, if you would repay your debt, how would you live?"

"I would rise at dawn in summer, and work by lamplight in winter, and so earn a few florins a week. I can live on dry bread; I have done so before now."

"Yes: are a most energetic young man," said Herr Schliermacher, "and you deserve to succeed in life. What a pity you were not brought up to business!—you would have made a fortune."

"I do not want a fortune. I only want my mother's portrait."

The Jew shrugged his shoulders.

"Will you try me for a week, Herr Schliermacher?"

"Not for a day. Your proposal, Herr Schoeffer, is wholly unpracticable."

For the third time the poor painter went his way sorrowing. He desired the picture passionately, and each fresh rebuff only quickened his intense longing for it. He remembered how his father had treasured it, and he also remembered how it was the only earthly record of a mother whom he had never been so blest as to know.

The next day he was back again at the moneylender's office with a fresh scheme.

"For the fourth time," he said, "I come to appeal to you. If you have the heart of a man you will not refuse what I am now about to ask from you."

The banker tapped impatiently upon his desk.

"Be brief, if you please, Herr Schoeffer," he replied. "My time is valuable, and I warn you that this is the last occasion on which I can listen to you."

"This, then, is what I have to propose. Give me three years in which to earn the one hundred and fifty-five florins, and promise me that you will neither sell the portrait nor give it away during that time!"

The banker leaned back in his chair, and seemed as if he were taking this request into consideration.

"Good Heavens!" exclaimed Ernst, impatiently, "it is possible that you hesitate? Do I ask any thing unfair—any thing unreasonable? Think, Sir —think if it were your own mother's portrait—a mother who had given her own life for yours——"

His voice broke, and he turned aside to conceal his trouble.

Herr Schliermacher looked grave.

"I hesitate," he rejoined, "because it has occurred to me that there may possibly be some other way. Do you paint from life, Herr Schoeffer?"

"Of course I do! May I paint yours! Oh, my dear, excellent, amiable Herr Schliermacher, let me paint your portrait!"

The Herr Schliermacher smiled, and shook his head.

"Not mine," he said. "I would not give a kreutzer for my own portrait; but my daughter——"

"I will paint her for you in any style you please. Only tell me what you wish done, and I will do it."

The banker was excessively amused.

"I must speak to Sadine first," he replied. "Call upon me to-morrow at the same time, and I will tell you more about it."

He returned the following day, as he was bidden, and to his supreme joy the banker informed him that his daughter was willing to sit, and that he might begin the portrait.

"As for terms," said he, "we will make it picture for picture. You shall paint my daughter's portrait, and when it is done you shall paint your mother's in exchange. Will that content you?"

"Perfectly."

"And you will not object to paint my Salome on a somewhat larger scale?"

"You shall have her at full-length, life-size, after the manner of Vandyck."

And Herr Schliermacher was well satisfied, knowing that he had the best of the bargain.

Poor Ernst Christian Schoeffer! it was his destiny. He fell desperately in love with Salome Schliermacher. She was very lovely—lovely with the dazzling oriental loveliness of Rebecca—of Rachel—of Marianne. He had not seen a woman in Italy to compare with her. Her skin was of that rich, rich, tender brown which we admire in the Madonna della Seggiola. Her eyes were as brilliant and bewitching as those of the Fornarina in the Palazzo Pitti. Her hair was golden from Leonardo's portrait of Joanna of Naples. Her hands, long, white, slender, were Vandyck's own masterpiece, her attitudes, were Titian's. The young painter, to the destruction of his peace, beheld in her the rare and beautiful combination of all that he admired in art and despaired of in nature. And Salome Schliermacher was as charming as she was beautiful, as accomplished as charming. It seemed to her delight to enchant, to torment, to bewilder her unfortunate victim. To-day she would be all gentle, to-morrow all proud; to-day all encouraging, to-morrow all reserve. Sometimes she would talk of poetry, of music, of art, and talk of them, too, with intelligence and enthusiasm. At other times she would prattle of none but the most childish matters, and pout at a serious word.

Then she was the most tiresome of sitters. She changed her mind about the dress in which she would be painted, about the attitude, the background, the accessories, till Ernst, at last, dreaded the progress of the work. She would be taken in her ordinary dress; she would be taken in her riding-habit; she would be taken in the costume of the casket; as Ruth with the corn-sheaf on her head—there was no end to her caprices, and there appeared to be no end to her vanity.

And all this time the infatuated young painter thought each new dress and attitude more becoming than the last, and, Penelope-like, spent as much time in undoing his work as in doing it.

"When it is once finished, thought he, "all will be over. I shall no longer hear the daily music of her voice; I shall not dare to intrude upon her privacy; I shall not see her smile, for I shall be well-nigh in two separate hemispheres. What better, then, can I desire than that the picture may last in progress forever?"

He was ready, in fact, to spend his life upon it; and I am by no means prepared to say that the Israelite Salome was not quite as well disposed to prolong the task as himself.

Meanwhile Ernst Christian was living within an inch of starvation. He could not afford to go all the local school of art, he had been able to procure his painting-materials upon credit; but he found it far more difficult to live upon credit than to paint the same terms. There were days when he wanted bread. There were nights when he knew not where to lay his head. Then he would write to threadbare that he was ashamed to be seen in them. Let those who have read of the Grub Street of Richardson, of Hogarth, supply the painful details of starvation.

There must be an end to all things mortal, and despite alternations and delays innumerable, the portrait of Salome Schliermacher at length approached completion. There could be no question that it was a perfect success. He had been painting with his heart as well as with his hand, and the result was a portrait of such beauty, such fidelity, such complete and life-like portraiture, as would have made the fame and fortune of a painter in any city less hopelessly stagnant than Ulm. The beautiful Jewess, holding a fan of peacock's feathers in her hand, and dressed in a rich robe of white satin bro-caded with pearl, seemed to have been dropped from the frame. The smile flickered on her lips; the fixture of her eye had motion in it. It was a portrait that Paolo Veronese might have designed and Rubens painted.

"Herr Schoeffer," said the banker, when he came on one morning to observe the progress of the work, "I am so well content—say, so much more than content—that I will not keep you longer from your mother's picture. You may take it home with you, if you choose, to-day."

Ernst was as grateful as if he had not already earned it ten times over. He grasped the banker's hand; he thanked him with tears in his eyes; and he went home to his garret that afternoon happier than a king.

The dear, dear portrait! The portrait that he had first seen in his father's chamber that memorable night, now more than eight years ago, when his first announced his desire to become a painter! It was not in the least faded or changed. The eyes and the arms and sweet face as of old, the pale golden braids shone with an undiminished lustre.

He set it up before him on the table and sat down to eat his evening meal before it. It seemed to light the sordid attic like a glory. It gave quite a delicious flavor to his lump of stale bread and his jug of molos. He poured the water in his pitcher into wine. Thus munching and meditating, with his eyes fixed all the time upon his newly-recovered treasure, he observed that the canvas seemed to have warped away from the stretcher at one corner, and that the picture bulged in the middle, as old pictures are sometimes apt to do. He had long since resolved to carve an exquisite frame for it some day; now it occurred to him that the picture-dog would be improved by what is technically called "backing." That is to say, by being relieved from tension, and pasted down upon a freshly-strained canvas.

"It would preserve as well as improve it," he muttered to himself as he swept the crumbs from the table. "I will do it at once, and give it a coat of varnish at the same time."

And with this he drew the picture toward him and proceeded to break open the front of the frame with his knife. The little brass key had deserters when last boxed. Indeed all events Herr Schliermacher had not given it to him. So he forced the case off at the hinges and proceeded to remove the picture. It was fixed in its ——? in a groove. The brass buttons green with verdigris, and came out when these were turned quite easily.

Then he saw—what he saw was that bulged the surface of the canvas. No wonder, indeed, that it had warped away from the frame! It was crammed with liberally crumpled notes from the one-and-the back of the old wooden case with scraps of dusty paper.

Ernst Christian Schoeffer felt quite indignant with the perpetrator of this unnecessary mischief.

"The Goth!" he muttered. "This must have been done in Austria. I don't believe there is a frame-maker in Ulm who would have been so ignorant of his business."

He lifted the picture tenderly aside, and shook out the contents of the empty frame. As he did so he suddenly changed color, and began trembling from head to foot.

"Gracious Providence!" he exclaimed aloud, "what is this?"

It was a little bit of yellowish paper that had rolled over toward him from the rest of the heap—a dirty, oblong, yellowish scrap, filled in with several lines of delicate writing in the middle, and adorned at each corner with a little engraved medallion. He took it up—he laid it down—he snatched it up again. Then he pushed it away, visibly into the midst of the heap, and took up first one little crumpled scrap, then another, then another; then drew the whole heap toward him, and examined it with a strange, frantic, feverish avidity that was almost terrible in its intensity.

Every one of those rapers lying piled before him on the table was a bank-note. There were hundreds of them—hundreds of pounds—carefully laid and dorned with his father's own writing; some Austrian, some Prussian, some Bavarian, some French, some English—all of them as valuable in their value as in their nationality. They represented sums ranging from one thaler to five hundred, from a hundred francs to a thousand, from five pounds to fifty.

The half-starved heir to all this wealth felt as if he were going mad with joy. He laughed—he cried—he shouted scraps of songs. At length, to sober himself, he plunged his head into a tub full of cold water, and then sat down to add up his money.

It was a complicated task, and in order to account-ants with the degrees of accuracy to be able to translate the language of each currency into florins and this was a feat almost beyond his knowledge. Sitting at his window, with the last beams of the sun on his pen, and the last gleam of light on the heap of notes, his head resting on the table, the pen fallen from his hand, and the sum total still unwritten.

Wolfgang Schoeffer, the bankrupt bookseller, the poverty-stricken student of the arts and letters, the broken-hearted husband and father, was found objectly poor. His special branch of trade, he is remembered, was the sale of old Bibles, and there are certain old Bibles—editions of the Elzevirs, for instance, as the Coverdale Bible of 1535, with wood-cuts by Hans Sebald Behan—which are, when perfect, of enormous intrinsic value. A case came on inquiry that the painter's father was believed to have known more of this branch of bibliography than any German of his time; that for the last fifteen or twenty years he had been known to all the principal collectors and booksellers of the Continent as a purchaser of precious volumes and passed through his hands; and that, on more than one occasion, he had both received and paid sums of the highest prices on record for certain famous early editions. Perhaps one of the oddest parts of the story lay in the fact that, according to the old books which cumbered the house on the Graben from basement to attic, there was not found one volume of any importance. It appeared to have been his habit to deal, as it were, in only one valuable book at a time, and always to have the book in his own keeping. As soon as he had succeeded in picking up a scarce volume he knew precisely to whom to take it, and what price to set upon it; and so was ever turning over, purchasing from place to place, and laying up riches of which no living soul in his own native city so much as suspected the existence.

Aben Hassan, when he woke up that fine morning in Bagdad and found himself Commander of the Faithful, scarcely opened his eyes upon a more astonishing change in the aspect of his private affairs than did Ernst Christian Schoeffer when he lifted his head from the midst of his wealth and found the morning sunshine turning all his notes to gold. His brain was clearer now, and his pules steadier, than either had been the night before: once again, therefore, he set to work, like the methodical queen of the nursery rhyme, "a counting up his money."

It came, when so counted, to no less a sum than one hundred and twenty thousand florins; that is to say, to about ten thousand and two hundred pounds of English money.

How the painter deposited his fortune in Herr Schliermacher's bank; how that excellent gentleman married at the same time, and took a quite paternal interest in the young man from that moment; how he invited his dear young friend to dinner that very evening; how Herr Christian created his appearance in the banker's drawing-room at six o'clock punctually, dressed in a suit of resplendent black, and looking as if he had never known what it was to be hungry or shabby in his life; how the beautiful Salome, grown suddenly quiet and distant, reduced her lover in the course of the evening to a state of vassalage more abject than ever; how the story of the long-lost portrait with bank-notes flew through the country and made its appearance in every newspaper where the German tongue was then spoken; how Ernst, finally, before three months of wealth had passed over his head, the painter became the happy husband of his beautiful idol, are matters which do not involve no more than a passing record. We have given the outline; those who desire to fill it in with detail must seek it for themselves in the future and the centre of his affections) for all that is yet left untold of the story of Ernst Christian Schoeffer.

IRON-CLAD FLEET OF ENGLAND.

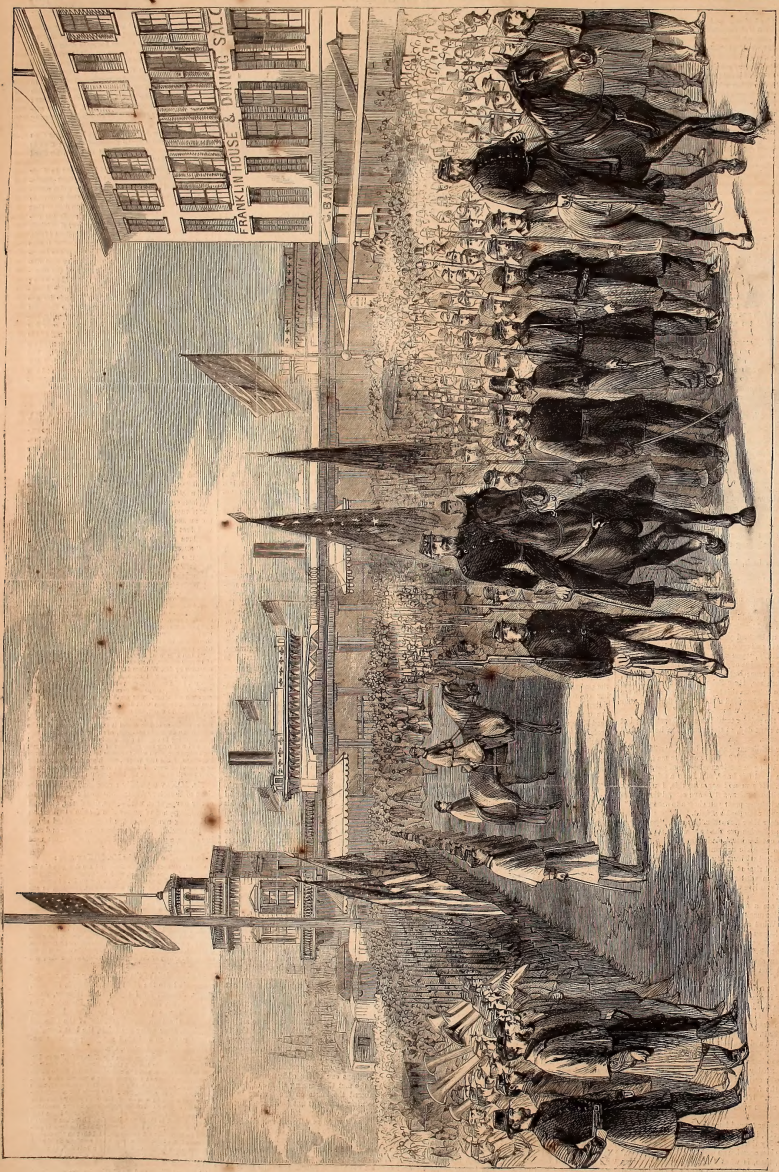
ABOUT a month ago we gave a double-page engraving of the iron-clad fleet of the United States. This week we give a similar illustration on the same scale of the iron-clad fleet of England. The whole number of vessels, wooden and iron, in the British fleet at the present time is 735, of which 30 are iron-clads. Our illustrations include every one of the latter class.

There can be no doubt that while the whole number of vessels in the navy is less by a fifth than the number of vessels in the British navy, our iron-clad fleet is largely superior to that of England in numbers and in the most efficient power. In this connection we quote from a recent letter of DONALD MCKAY to the editor of the Boston Commercial Bulletin. Speaking of the iron-clad fleets of England and France, he says:

"While viewing these, their style of construction, equipment, etc., I could not but feel that Mr. Ericsson's silent 1861 was constructed, built, and equipped on iron-clad idea; both his ideas defense and offense, and was, more powerful than all the iron-clad fleets of the world; and I strongly recommend that the Government of the profitable and judicious expenditure, and one which will prove to be the cheapest guarantee of peace and just indemnity for a continuance of building and adding larger iron-clad sea-going ships, than any other measure I can think of.

"I can allude with pride to that wonderful production of human genius, the Monitor, the first specimen of construction by Mr. William H. Webb, of New York. I have personally inspected all the iron-clads of England and France, but I have not seen one of them which, in originality of design, in the combination of powerful engines to compare with her. She combines the impregnability of the Monitor with the sea-going qualities of the steam-frigate and sloop. In short, she can bring guns to bear from every point of the compass, and in any direction she steers. From the appearance of her model it is evident to me that she is to be an excellent sea-boat, and can steam at sea, with withstanding her great size, easily managed. It is said she will carry two millions of dollars in coin, and is not high when compared with the same-lavished upon the large iron-clads of the old World, which are known to be but as a vessel of war. I consider her a match for a fleet of such vessels as any of the best powers of Europe."

MR. M'KAY especially recommends the suggestions of Secretary WELLES as to the enlargement of our navy-yards, the work-shops, docks, etc., and a building-yard of proper size for the construction and fitting complete of the largest sea-going ships, for the manufacture and furnaces for forging and rolling plates, equal in size and thickness to those used in the English navy.



In regard to dry docks Mr. M'KAY says:

"With all that we have done and are doing in the increasing of our navy, I am, with our worthy Secretary, one fearful deficiency in basins or dry docks. Supposing that we had a fleet of naval engineers and builders in the dumping of many vessels, we have only dry docks enough to repair a large, and for this we have to thank all some become comparatively weak at sea, and this is a matter which should receive our early attention. Both France and England, while adding to the strength and number of their ships, keep pace with the construction of their docks and basins. Unless we adopt this system, the additions to our navy will be comparatively useless. Congress will avail but little. The French dry docks contain space sufficient for fifty-six large vessels, and those of France and England is fast approaching this also."

The iron-clads of the British navy are more interesting of course, to Americans. Research, Favorite, Pallas, Zealous, Lord Clyde, Lord Warden, Belle-rophon, Viper, Vixen, Penelope, Favorite, and Research was pronounced by Admiral BENNET DARCES, the Commander-in-Chief of the Channel squadron, after many sea trials, the best iron-clad ship, as regarded sea-going qualities, accommodation, ventilation, etc.

The Research differs from the Enterprise," says MR. M'KAY, "chiefly in the fact that the upper deck was lowered forward and aft, and the armor-plating on it is, instead of the armor at the ends being a mere narrow belt, it runs quite across, thus making the forward part have her upper deck is four and a half feet above the water at the load water mark; thus the whole length of the deck protected by bulwarks six feet high, and that in the central fore-and-aft deck of nearly length of the armor-belt with battery up to a height of eleven and a half feet, at which height it is closed over with sheet-iron, covered with fourinch planking."

The Lord Clyde and Lord Warden are vessels of light draught. The Lord Clyde was designed as a defense against future Alabamas and Floridas.

RECEPTION OF THE NINETIETH NEW YORK VETERAN VOLUNTEERS IN BROOKLYN, FEBRUARY 15, 1866.—SKETCHED BY A. R. WARD.—[SEE PAGE 142.]

HON. EZRA CORNELL.

HON. EZRA CORNELL, the founder of the Cornell University, was born in the town of Westchester, New York, January, 1807. His father and more remote ancestors were Quakers, and young EZRA was brought up under the teachings of this peculiar sect. His father, ELIJAH CORNELL, was a potter by trade, but was a man of considerable culture and strongly-marked character. He attained the age of ninety-one, and reared a family of eleven children, of which EZRA was the oldest son. When the latter was about twelve years old the family went to De Ruyter, New Hampshire. At the age of sixteen EZRA and his younger brother wishing to attend school in the winter, obtained permission to do so if, by the next planting-time, they would have cleared off five acres of timber. They went to school, and the five acres were cleared.

In 1826, at the age of nineteen, Mr. CORNELL commenced life for himself. He left home and worked for two years as a carpenter and joiner in Syracuse and Homer, in this State. In 1828 he removed to Ithaca, which became his permanent residence. Here he commenced work in the machine-shop of a cotton-factory. In 1831 he married. His wife not being a Quaker he was expelled from that sect. In 1840 he purchased the right of a patent plow for Maine and Georgia, and traveled in those States to sell this improved implement of agriculture. It was about this time that Mr. CORNELL entered into the telegraph enterprise. The first method proposed for the construction of telegraph lines was to lay the wire under ground. Congress had appropriated $30,000 to lay such a line between Baltimore and Washington. Mr. CORNELL invented a plow for the special purpose of digging the trench for the wire and laying it at the same time. His project was a success; but he soon discovered that the wires were not perfectly insulated. Finally the whole scheme of an underground telegraph was given up, and the plan in use at the present time was adopted. Mr. CORNELL, from his contract for the New York and Buffalo line, made $6000, his first success in business. Since then, from various telegraphic contracts and speculations, he has realized several millions of dollars.

Mr. CORNELL first entered into political life in 1861, when he was elected to the Assembly of this State by the Union party. In 1863 he was elected to the Senate. But it is not Mr. CORNELL'S political success or his large fortune with which we have to do in this sketch. It is the manner in which he has used his wealth that entitles him to the gratitude and esteem of his countrymen.

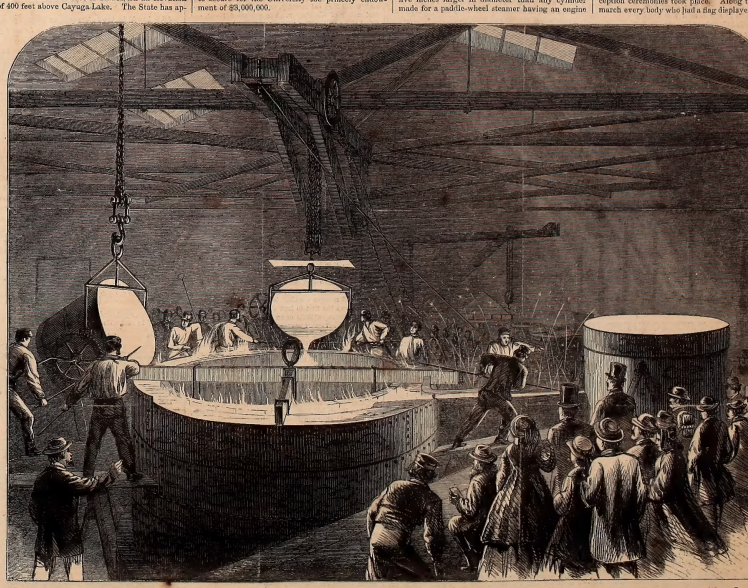
In 1830 he appropriated $100,000 to establish a free library in Ithaca. His recent splendid donation of $500,000 to establish a University in Ithaca illustrates his benevolence. He has also given his home farm of 200 acres as grounds upon which to build the University buildings. He has purchased for the Institution the Jewett Paleontological Cabinet at Albany. The buildings will be erected a short distance northeast of Ithaca, on an elevation of 400 feet above Cayuga Lake. The State has appropriated for the support of Cornell University the income to be derived from the Land Grant Fund, permanently invested for that purpose. The number of acres appropriated to this State is 990,000. This land scrip is now worth only fifty cents per acre. Mr. CORNELL has begun to buy in and locate this scrip, and hopes by thus increasing its value to secure for the University the princely endowment of $9,000,000.

HON. EZRA CORNELL.—(PHOTOGRAPHED BY CHURCHILL & DENISON, ALBANY, N. Y.)

CASTING AT THE ETNA WORKS.

ON Saturday, the 3d of February, a cylinder for one of the largest marine engines in the world was cast at the Etna Works in this city. This enormous cylinder weighs 18 tons, is 15 feet 8½ inches long, 110 inches in diameter, and 2½ inches thick. It is five inches larger in diameter than any cylinder made for a paddle-wheel steamer having an engine of equal length of stroke. Cylinders have indeed been made larger than this in diameter, as was the case recently for one of the English iron-clads, but they had only one-third the length, the engines having a stroke of only four feet.

The largest cylinders in the world heretofore were those in the steamer Metropolis, of the Fall River route, which, having a stroke of 12 feet, had a diameter of 105 inches. Cylinders of the same size were afterward used by some of the vessels belonging to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; but they have all been cast into the shade by the enterprise of the Merchants' Steamship Company, who are now constructing two vessels for a new route to Boston via Bristol, R. I., at the yard of WILLIAM H. WEAN, near the foot of SIXTH Street.



For the purpose of casting this cylinder a pit was dug near the centre of that part of the establishment used as a foundry, into which the mould was placed, leaving about one-third of its length above the ground. The main reservoir for the melted iron, which contained nearly eighteen tons of fluid metal, stood near, with a duct leading from it to the mould. At equal distances around the circumference of the mould two immense pots, containing five or six tons each of melted iron, were suspended from huge cranes—which metal, by-the-way, was held as a kind of reserve, to be used in the event of an insufficiency in the main reservoir, or in case all the interstices should not be filled from that source. The act of casting was an occurrence of but a moment or two in duration. The engine when constructed will weigh 1,200,000 pounds. ERASTUS W. SMITH, Esq., is the constructing engineer.

The boats for which these enormous engines are intended will be spacious, and when completed will be signal monuments of the enterprise and skill of our master mechanics.

RECEPTION OF THE NINETIETH REGIMENT.

WE give on page 140 an illustration of the reception of the Ninetieth New York Veteran Volunteers in Brooklyn, February 15. The Ninetieth Regiment is the last Brooklyn regiment to return, and the Thirteenth Regiment, National Guard, determined to give them a proper reception, in which they were very efficiently aided by the War Fund Committee of Kings County. The regiment, numbering 180 muskets, was conveyed from Battery Barracks to Brooklyn. The Thirteenth Regiment, under the command of Colonel J. B. WOODWARD, was drawn up to receive them on the south side of the street. A section of artillery from the Seventieth Regiment was detailed for the purpose of firing the salute, which was the signal of the arrival of the regiment. As soon as the regiment landed they formed in column and exchanged with the Thirteenth the usual courtesies.

Both regiments then marched up Myrtle Avenue to the arsenal in Portland Avenue, where the reception ceremonies took place. Along the line of march every body who had a flag displayed it, while the side-walks were lined with the friends of the regiment, all eager to welcome them and do them honor. At the arsenal, both regiments paid Major-General H. B. DENIKE the compliment of the marching salute. The large drill-room was set apart for the dinner, which was served on four long tables, and was such as to do great credit to all concerned in getting it up. The Mayor and Common Council of Brooklyn, Police Justices, the veteran officers of other organizations, the Thirteenth and Nineteenth regiments, all occupied seats at the tables. After the regiments had assembled about the tables, Hon. U. S. T. SPRAGUE welcomed the returned regiment, in behalf of the War Fund Committee and the citizens of Brooklyn, in a very appropriate speech, to which Lieutenant-Colonel STRONG, the regimental commander, responded. S. B. CHITTENDEN, of the War Fund Committee, also made a speech of welcome, but in response for Brigadier-General H. A. WOODFORD to make the speech of the occasion. The General was frequently interrupted by the applause of his hearers, but every applause he was very successful in touching. The reception was excellently managed, and was worthy of Brooklyn.

CASTING OF THE ENORMOUS CYLINDER FOR MARINE ENGINE AT THE ETNA WORKS, NEW YORK CITY, FEBRUARY 3, 1866.—[SKETCHED BY A. R. WAUD.]

The Nineteenth was recruited in Brooklyn in the fall of 1861, and on the 6th of January, 1862, sailed for Key West, Florida. In January, 1863, the regiment went to Beaufort, South Carolina; and subsequently joined the Department of the Gulf, taking part in the siege of Port Hudson and the Red River campaign. In July, 1864, the Nineteenth joined the Sixth Corps in the Shenandoah Valley. The men fought at Fisher's Hill, at Cedar Creek, and in many other engagements under SHERIDAN. The regiment re-enlisted in February, 1864. It has had about three thousand men in its ranks, including recruits.

RACE BETWEEN THE "ALGONQUIN" AND "WISCONSKI."

Our readers will remember that last summer there was a trial between the Wisconsi, a Government vessel, and the Algonquin, to test their comparative economy in the consumption of coal. They will also remember that in this trial the latter vessel, though she managed for several hours to maintain a nearly equal competition with the Wisconsi, finally broke down, being unable to bear the severe strain upon her machinery. It was then arranged that there should be another trial to test the speed of the two vessels. After numerous disappointments, the long-expected race was entered upon on the 15th of February.

The race was not run the entire distance, which should have been 1040 miles; but was, owing to the furious storm on the night of the 14th, ended in the most summary manner, after running 390 miles. At 11.59 A.M. the two vessels left Wallabout Bay, and steamed up Long Island Sound and through Hell Gate. The race commenced at Execution Rocks, opposite Sands Point, at seven minutes past 5 P.M. At about 7 P.M. the Algonquin was reported by a steamer passing the light-house the Wisconsi was more than a ship's length ahead. At 7.45 P.M. the Wisconsi passed Faulkner's Island light for the first time. About an hour and a half after turning Faulkner's Island for the second time the Wisconsi was thirty miles ahead of the Algonquin. The next round increased the distance between the vessels by ten miles. On the completion of the third round the Wisconsi was seventy miles ahead. The total number of revolutions made by the wheels of the Wisconsi since starting was forty-one thousand nine hundred and ninety-five, making twenty-one and a half turns per minute. The pressure of steam was uniform throughout the three first rounds, and averaged thirty-five pounds on the engine and forty pounds on the boilers. The consumption of coal averaged about three thousand five hundred and eighty-seven pounds per hour. Going about twenty miles further on a fourth round, the storm and the darkness rendered further progress dangerous, and the race became to order in Huntington Bay. The Algonquin also anchored about a mile from Stratford Point. The race was a success.

As might be expected, the Algonquin claims to have had a misunderstanding about the start, and when the race was given her her fires were out, her wheel-men were inefficient; her engine broke down, etc.

Faulkner's Island, shown in our second sketch, lies fifteen miles east of New Haven, and two three miles from the main land. It is one mile long and three-quarters of a mile wide, with a light-house on its extreme southern end.

MISSISSIPPI MISSION CONFERENCE OF THE M. E. CHURCH.

The progress of the war early revealed the probability of the emancipation of the whole colored population of the South. A very large portion of this population was in religious communion with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. But as the idea and hopes of liberty took possession of their minds, they naturally inclined to renounce the communion of masters and people who had not only justified their bondage, but mapy of whom had actually held them in slavery and profited by their unrequited toil. The progress of events has brought many of these colored people within our military lines, and their pastors fled from them. Thus the way was opened for the ministrations of the Methodist Episcopal Church to come to these people and assume the pastoral care of them. In order to do this more effectually, the Rev. J. P. NEWMAN, D.D., of New York, was sent by Bishop AMES, in 1864, to New Orleans, with instructions to make arrangements for ministering the word and ordinances of the Gospel to both the colored and white congregations, or to mixed congregations. Until the close of the war all received his ministrations gladly. But when peace came, and the ministers of the South returned to Louisiana and Mississippi, the white people almost universally withdrew from the services of the Methodist Episcopal Church and returned to the pastoral care of the Church South.

The colored people still cleaved to the Methodist Episcopal Church. This was more or less the case throughout the South, but was specially so in Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas. And more effectually to serve these people, the Bishops have divided the whole Southern country into four Mission Districts—one for Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas. Rev. Bishop THOMSON has charge of this District, and made a tour through it in December last. He found a very numerous and intelligent colored Local Preachers, and also excellent white Missionaries who had been laboring for the work. On the 25th of December, 1865, in the city of New Orleans, he organized them into a Conference, of which are now reports 128 Local Preachers, with the Bishop in the centre. It ought to be carefully noted that white persons are admitted to the ministerial functions in the same terms as are the colored people; so that there is no distinction of caste.

We learn that this organization of colored men into churches, under the care of colored pastors, as a much more important movement than at first may appear. It will bring the colored man into the sphere of self-government, and powerfully tend to elevate the race. The Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church aids them, to a limited extent, in building plain yet comfortable churches, and gives employment to all colored preachers whose piety and intelligence it can justify it.

The Conference contains 17 preachers, 12 colored and 5 white; 4 districts; 22 pastoral charges, 6 of them being large circuits; 2256 church-members; and $47,000 worth of church property. It is the beginning of a self-governing movement that will bear precious fruit in years to come.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

"WHAT are you thinking about, my dear?" inquired Mr. Jones, glancing at the puzzled face of his better half as she sat toying with her tea-spoon after the dinner dessert.

Mrs. Jones looked up with a preoccupied air, but smiled as she met the husband's affectionate gaze. "Considering what we shall have for breakfast."

"Why, my dear! Why—have—hi—some coffee, to be sure. We don't want much besides."

Mrs. J. laughed. "You'll think differently to-morrow morning. You like something else as well as an egg, body. As for me, before I left finish my dinner I began to wonder what to have for breakfast. It is hard for me men to plan varieties for breakfast than to arrange for dinner twice over."

Mrs. Jones was a prudent housewife. She did not, like many fine ladies, leave domestic affairs wholly to her servants, however faithful they might be; but gave orders in person, personally, and took special care that the dishes should be well prepared and nicely served. Yet an often repeated thinking "what to have"—especially for breakfast. Many ladies find themselves in a like dilemma. In summer, when indeed there is extra trouble, but when the appetites and coffee make a nice breakfast. But in winter one must be up and think what to have for breakfast. Every little while she "gets sahore," as Mrs. Jones used to say, "chops, steak, boiled eggs, cocoa, fish, cakes, and toast—I am tired of all. What else can I have?"

There are many simple articles which a little ingenuity can easily vary. Take, for instance, boiled, and eaten with strup, is a common dish. It is better still with sugar and cream. But you can produce a variety to serve you with cream. The boiled hominy, cut up cold, and fried, is excellent, either with sirup or cream. What are called Germans Fritters make a nice change. Take the common soda crackers, let them soak five or ten minutes in cold water, then dip them in batter and fry as in a frying-pan. These are also very suitable as an accompaniment to the roast at dinner. Cold chicken, turkey, veal, ham, and also lamb, fried with bread crumbs, may, may be minced up fine, warmed in gravy, and served on toast. Also, cold beef, with some minced meat and acceptable, more care must be given to the mincing and seasoning than servants will ordinarily give without special instruction.

Breakfasts may be wonderfully varied in the article of bread alone. Of course, good bread should be given—the perfection for ordinary use. But for a change one may put on the table a different kind every day for a fortnight, and not repeat the same twice. Rolls are much in the vicinity. Boston brown bread, steamed and cold—as we have frequently seen it served—but thoroughly heated through. Then there are delicious cold-bath-balls, or muffins, if you approve of eating sausages, makes a very delicious breakfast dish. Corn-bread-balls must be carefully prepared and seasoned, and mixed up moist before frying, or nothing is more tasteless. The Boston brown bread is excellent cold, and fried. Then what difficult to procure this kind of bread, yet many of the larger bakeries supply it. It can be made easily at home, if you need, one of the principal ingredients, can be obtained. But that is difficult. Rye flour is not the article

J. H. Winslow & Co.

IMPROVED
100,000 Watches, Chains, Silver Articles, &c.,
Worth $500,000!
TO BE SOLD AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,
WITHOUT REGARD TO VALUE,
AND NOT TO BE PAID FOR TILL YOU KNOW WHAT YOU ARE TO GET.
SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

	EACH.
100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$150 00
100 Gold Watches	75 00
100 Ladies' and Gents' Watches	40 00
100 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	20 00
200 Solid Silver Tea Sets	15 00 to 50 00
1,000 Drinking-Cups	7 00 to 10 00
500 Oval and Gold Lockets	5 00 to 10 00
3,000 Vest, Neck, and Guard Chains	5 00 to 10 00
1,000 Gold Pens, Diamond Rings,	5 00 to 10 00
8 00 Magic Spring and Snap Lockets	4 00 to 10 00
3,000 Gold Pencils and Pencil Holders	3 00 to 5 00
10,000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases	4 00 to 6 00
5,000 Gold Vest Chains	4 00 to 6 00
2,000 Tea, Dessert, & Table Spoons, per doz.	12 00 to 24 00
5,000 Dessert and Table Forks, per doz.	12 00 to 24 00
4,000 Butter Knives, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
2,000 Nutmeg Graters, per pair	6 00 to 10 00
10,000 Other Articles	4 00 to 10 00

Certificates of the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up and mixed, and, when ordered, will be sent out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not. Five Certificates will be sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents; 7 for $1; eleven for $2; 35 for $5; 55 for $8; and 100 for $15.

Agents wanted every where. Great inducements to liberal agents to set us on. Full list to send for circular, which gives special terms, full list, and particulars.

Address J. H. WINSLOW & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.
(ESTABLISHED 1850).

GREAT AMERICAN PRIZE CONCERT.

CROSBY'S OPERA-HOUSE, CHICAGO, ILL.,
MARCH 15, 1866.

$9,000 Valuable Gifts, worth $98,200, will be presented to Subscribers.

100,000 Tickets will be Sold.

1 Gift, in Greenback $10,000
1 Gift, in U. S. Bonds 5,000
1 Gift, Residence three miles from Chicago 5,000
8 Superb Pianos, Fancy Gifts, $500 each 4,000
80 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, $50 each 4,000
80 Wheeler & Wilson Sewing-Machines, $100 each 8,000
50 Gifts, 50 American Lever Watches, $100 each 5,000
28 Gifts, 28 Silver Lever Watches, $50 each 1,400
5,000 Gifts, Solid Turkey Morocco Gold Clasp Albums, $5 each 25,000
4,800 Gifts, Assorted Albums, $3 each 14,400
10,000 Gifts, $10,000 each, $1 each 10,000
50,000 Gifts, Fancy Articles, Gold Pens, &c. 50,000

The great feature of our Prize Concert is the manner in which it is gotten up, differing from any thing of the kind ever before offered to the public:

1st. The Prizes are a great deal more valuable.

2d. All of them are genuine gold and silver goods, the very best manufactured. The pianos and sewing-machines are all new, and the manufacturers' names are given. Select guarantees that they are surpassed by none.

3d. The manner in which it is drawn. Each ticket has its duplicate number: these are placed in a wheel and thoroughly mixed; a disinterested person draws from the ticket-holders present at the concert; draws these duplicate numbers, and the first one drawn out the next gets the largest prize, the next one drawn out the next largest prize, and so on to the last gift, which is the lowest ticket, and should you draw a large prize the proprietor makes a large profit, and should you draw a small prize, frequently you seldom if ever get any thing worth what your ticket cost you.

Don't throw your money away on valueless concerns, but send your money for tickets once, if you wish to secure them, as the larger portion has been already sold. Every ticket will be numbered before being sent out, the number, name of party purchasing, and address—and one will be notified of the result of drawing.

Tickets $1 each, or eleven for $10, sent by mail on receipt of price and stamp. BRIGGS, LEMON & CO., 161 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois.

P. S.—All prizes will positively take place on the 28th. Parties at a distance sending us funds to tickets, should they all be sold, will have the money back.
BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.

1000 AGENTS WANTED.

MACKENZIE'S TEN THOUSAND RECEIPTS in all the useful arts and trades, after years of careful labor. The following are a few of the subjects treated of: Blacksmithing, Mercantile Calculations, Carving, and Preserving; Hygiene: Medicine (CHOLERA a specialty); Cements; Wines and Liquors; Securing; Farming and Gardening; Perfumery; Cements; Tanning and their Articles, &c., &c.

Send for circular and terms to T. ELLWOOD ZELL, Box 11 and 13 South 8th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

[From the Rev. J. W. Poland's Autobiography.]

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

It was early in the spring of 1858 that this Compound was originated. A member of my family was afflicted with an irritation of the throat, attended with a dangerous cough. After the most months proved the failure of all preparation, having for its basis the inside bark of white pine, might be found what was to be very useful in the case of the throat and lungs. To test the value of it in diseases alluded to, I compounded a small quantity of the Medicine that I had been planning, and gave it in teaspoonful doses. The result was astonishingly gratifying. Within two days the irritation of the throat was removed, the cough relieved, and a speedy cure was effected. Since then I sent some to a lady in Londonderry, N. H., who had been suffering for several weeks with a bad cough, complicated by a sudden cold, and had raised, mucus streaked with blood. She soon found relief, and the use of the medicine about ten ounces of it, and cured her. In November, 1860, I first advertised it under the name of WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

As a remedy for kidney complaints the White Pine Compound stands unrivaled.—Boston Journal.

This great New England Remedy is now offered to the afflicted, having been proved by the test of eleven years in the New England States, where its merits have become so well known. It cures sore throat, coughs, diphtheria, bronchitis, spitting of blood, and pulmonary affections generally. It is a remedy for diabetes, bleeding from the kidneys, (weakness and grave); and for pain in the back, by it will be found valuable. Sold by druggists and dealers in medicine generally.

GEO. W. SWETT, M.D., PROPRIETOR,
Boston, Mass.

BURNHAMS & VAN SCHAAK, Chicago, Ill.,
JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio,
GENERAL AGENTS FOR THE WEST.

LADIES' LETTER.

Five Anatomical Engravings, with Explanations.
By an Experienced Nurse and Female Physician.
Sent free in a Sealed Envelope for 25 Cents.
Address MRS. DR. KEWLER, Brooklyn P. O., N. Y.

FIRST PREMIUM
IMPROVED
$5 SEWING $5 MACHINE.
The Embodiment of Practical Utility and Extreme Simplicity.

Originally patented May 13, 1865; Improvement patented July 3, 1865. The celebrated LADY'S GEM SEWING MACHINE, with crowning attachments, a most wonderful success, constructed Noiseless, by scientific principles, upon the strongest mechanical principles, and the most approved and simple of single threads in all kinds of sewing, the groove and feed motion of which is operated upon by the extraordinary rapidity, ease, and delicacy exhibited in sewing Silk, Satin, Velvet, Kid, Cotton, Silk, Ruffles, Gaiter, Vests, Hem by Hemming, &c., &c. Warranted not to get out of order in 3 years. Also takes the premium at the late Fair over the approval of all the principal journals and judges. Also the Lady's Gem Sewing Machine, with the attachment that received a premium, or that will execute every sewing machine at the same price. No infringements.

For the improvement it is invaluable in the home; hold it supplies a vacant place.—Godey's Ladies' Book.

With a single or double thread it is perfectly easy supply, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly alike on both sides.—Scientific American.

Single machines, ALL CARDS, sent to any part of the country per express, packed in box, with printed instructions, on receipt of price, $5. Send for your neighbors. Agents wanted every where. Circular, containing liberal terms, sent free. Address

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,
Office No. 11 Broadway, New York.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

American Pocket TIME-KEEPER.

FIFTY CENTS EACH.

The most novel and useful invention of the age. Constructed on the principle of the Chronometer, and warranted to denote solar time with greater accuracy than the most costly gold or silver watches. While the Retail price at which it is sold places it within the reach of every man. It is emphatically the timepiece for the people. Neat, cheap, and warranted perfectly accurate; can never get out of order; will keep correct time for a year. Each with white enameled dial in gold or silver gilt, 50 cts. Sent by mail postpaid to any part of the world. Cash only. This invention is the sole property of the American Manufacturing Company, and all others are cautioned against buying or offering for sale any IMITATION, under an infringement of Letters Patent. AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Albany, N. Y.

EAGLE RAKE, patented May, 1864. Sulky, Wire-Spring, Self-Dumping. Also, Horse Rakes, Mowers, Forkpoints or Hatchets, or for springrice for wheat rake reliefs, address H. J. GRIDLEY, Auburn, N. Y.

F. W. LUDLOW & CO.,

HAMBURG, GERMANY,
AGENTS FOR
AMERICAN MANUFACTURERS.
Branch agencies in all principal cities in Germany.

REMOVAL.

G. L. and J. B. KELTY, DEALERS IN
WINDOW SHADES AND CURTAIN MATERIALS,
To 447 Broadway, between Howard and Grand Streets.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

501 BROADWAY (St. Nicholas Block),
Photographic Albums and Photographic Goods.
WAR VIEWS,
SCENERY, GROUPS, &c.
Photograph Albums, Ornamental Cases, Carter de Visite of Noted Persons, &c., &c.
Union Emblems, and American Novelties.

GREAT DISCOVERY.—DR. GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL is warranted to cure rheumatism, deafness, frostbites, and all nervous complaints. Price 25 cents. Sold by all druggists, and by DEMAS BARNES & CO., New York. Depot, Philadelphia.

"THE RIGHT WAY."
A Radical Newspaper.—Present circulation 45,000 copies weekly—soon to reach 100,000. Loyal to the Union. A portion of one page devoted to Advertisements at $1 50 per line. Orders taken by Agents.
GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., 23 Congress St., Boston.

Superfluous Hair Removed

From all parts of the body in five minutes, without injury to the skin, by the use of MOURRAY & LANMAN'S Depilatory. Mailed to any address for $1 25, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. Sold by all druggists.

Pimples on the Face

REMOVED AT ONCE BY THE USE OF "UPHAM'S PIMPLE BANISHER." MAILED TO ANY ADDRESS FOR 75 CENTS. S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth St., Philadelphia. Sold by all druggists.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

CHEAPEST AND BEST PRESS IN THE WORLD.—Price, $16; $25; $40; $70. Price of an Office, with Press, $15; $30; $50; $85, and $75. Send for a Circular to the LOWE-LOCKE CO., 53 Water Street, Boston.

PHARAOH'S SERPENTS.

Eggs of Pharaoh's Serpents, each of which, when lighted, will evolve a long, writhing, poisonous serpent. Sent by mail for 10 cents. Box of ten eggs mailed to any address for 50 cents, by H. J. CRITTENDEN, 108 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia. The Trade supplied.

$1500 A YEAR to those who want agents every where to sell our IMPROVED $30 Sewing Machines. Three new kinds. Address the company first convenient to you. Above salary or large commissions allowed. Circulars free. Address SECOR & CO., Toledo, Ohio. We are fully licensed, by Howe, Wheeler & Wilson, Grover & Baker, Singer & Co., and Bachelder. Beware of cheap imitations and spurious concerns. Circulars free. Address or call upon 38 & 39 Clark, Bakelder, Maine.

THE EVANS ORIGINAL
WORLD-RENOWNED
GIFT BOOK ESTABLISHMENT
(INSTITUTED BY C. EVANS IN 1856).

It has outlived all Competitors.

All books sold at publishers' retail prices, and a Beautiful and Useful Present, worth from 25 cents to 100 dollars, given with each book.

AGENTS WANTED EVERY WHERE.

Extra inducements to all persons who will act as agents. Send for the new classified catalogue, containing a list of books in every department of literature, also instructions to agents, &c., &c., free. C. EVANS, 439 Chestnut BOOK STORE, 628 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Editors inserting the above will receive a handsome present on receipt of their paper containing the same.

POPULAR NEW BOOKS

PUBLISHED BY
HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

A NOBLE LIFE. A Novel. By Miss Mulock, Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman," "Christian's Mistake," &c. 12mo, Cloth, $2 00.

Few men and no women will read "A Noble Life" without feeling themselves better and stronger.—LONDON SPECTATOR.

No one can read it without feeling strengthened and dignified.—NEW YORK TIMES.

AGNES. A Novel. By Mrs. Oliphant, Author of "Chronicles of Carlingford," "The Perpetual Curate," &c. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

"Agnes" is a novel superior to any of Mrs. Oliphant's former works.—Athenæum.

"Agnes" has that stamp of first-rate power which no one can mistake. It is a narrative of deep interest.—Standard.

Mrs. Oliphant is one of the most admirable of our lady novelists. "Agnes" is a story whose pathetic and refined tone will appeal irresistibly to all readers.—Post.

GUY DEVERELL. A Novel. By J. S. Le Fanu, Author of "Uncle Silas," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

With the complication on which this story turns—the fact that the unknown marriage, she under duel, and, above all, the dreadful scene in that green chamber—we shall not touch. We will only say that we think the ultimate exposure of "carrying the reader along with it" is very well managed.—Saturday Review.

Le Fanu pleases, by the strangest and most out-of-the-way routes, by the most mysterious ways, by the most mysterious underground tunnelings, swiftly, certainly, and without by, to the end.—London Times.

WIVES AND DAUGHTERS. A Novel. By Mrs. Gaskell, Author of "Mary Barton," "Cranford," "Sylvia's Lovers," "Cousin Phillis," &c. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00; Paper, $1 50.

It is said that George Sand remarked to an English friend: "Mrs. Gaskell is the only woman writer other female writers in France can accomplish.—She has written novels which will be read with interest in every part of the world, and which every girl will be the better for reading."—Life of Mrs. Gaskell.

As a work of art and observation, this novel, "Wives and Daughters," is one of the finest novels of our time.—Cornhill Magazine.

Mrs. Gaskell has achieved a success which will live long after her. Her descriptive handiwork would bear comparison with that of Miss Austen.—London Telegraph.

THE BELTON ESTATE. A Novel. By Anthony Trollope, Author of "Doctor Thorne," "Framley Parsonage," "Can You Forgive Her?" &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

A work of more power than fifty sensation novels, and more interest than is to be found in any of the works of Miss Braddon.—Saturday Review.

Mr. Trollope has written few novels equal to "The Belton Estate," and none in the finer secrets of style.—Spectator.

Mr. Trollope writes with more uniform interest and healthfulness.—Athenæum.

"The Belton Estate" is one of the cleverest and most pleasing love stories in the language.—London Evening Star.

THE MILL ON THE FLOSS. A Novel. By George Eliot, Author of "Adam Bede," "Scenes of Clerical Life," "Romola," &c. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

One of the pleasantest novels of the season is "Half a Million of Money." It is full of crisp writing and easy dialogue. The story is full of clever, finished sayings, and is marked by an absence of all vulgarity, which is quite refreshing in these days of sensational novels.—Westminster Review, January, 1866.

The style is clear, terse, and forcible.—Saturday Review.

One of the best stories we have read for a long time past. We prophesy a great success for "Half a Million of Money."—Spectator.

The plan of the novel is perfectly original and most pleasing. The characters are admirably drawn, and there is nothing whatever in common with the lay-figure which so often do duty in the novels of the day. The style is charmingly easy and graceful, while stirring events are told with vigor and animation.—Morning Star.

GOVERNMENT OF THE WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION. War of the Rebellion; or, Scylla and Charybdis. Consisting of Observations upon the Causes, Course, and Consequences of the late Civil War in the United States. By H. S. Foote. 12mo, Cloth, $2 50.

It abounds in anecdotes and reminiscences which throw light upon the events of the day.—Tribune.

WALTER GORING. A Novel. By Annie Thomas, Author of "Denis Donne," "On Guard," "Theo Leigh," &c. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

PRISON LIFE IN THE SOUTH: At Richmond, Macon, Savannah, Charleston, Columbia, Charlotte, Raleigh, Goldsborough, and Andersonville, during the Years 1864 and 1865. By A. O. Abbott, late Lieut. Col. 2d Regt. Vt. Vol. Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $2 00.

100 Photographs of Union Generals sent postpaid for 25 cts.; 50 Photographs of Rebel Officers for 25 cts.; 100 Photographs of Female Beauties for 25 cts.; 100 Actors for 25 cts. Address C. SEYMOUR, Holland, N. Y.

CATARRH CURED FOR ONE DOLLAR.
THIS IS NO HUMBUG.

Read!—For One Dollar per mail, I will send you a recipe and medicine that will cure the worst cases of Catarrh in the head or bronchial tubes in a few weeks, or money refunded. It has never failed in use, as I believe, myself alive. I know it is no humbug, and am willing to aid in the relief of others from that horrible and disgusting disease. Address T. P. SYMMES, 194 Fulton St., N. Y.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER.
EUROPEAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.
ONE DOLLAR EACH.

PATENT APPLIED FOR, June 29, 1865.

AN EXACT AND RELIABLE POCKET TIMEKEEPER for Ladies and Gentlemen, correctly constructed upon the most approved SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES, and warranted to DENOTE SOLAR TIME with absolute correctness and the utmost precision. It never can be wrong. It requires no KEY or winding up; never gets out of order, and can never be lost or stolen. It is a most remarkable article. Approved by the Press, Clergy, and Public generally. Just introduced into this country from Europe, where it is secured by Royal Letters Patent. Price for a single watch plain or fancy white dial, in gold or silver gilt case, only $1. Sent, postpaid, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Safe delivery guaranteed. Beware of forgeries, who imitate this advertisement with a view to evading my liberties, by offering a useless article (with a slight alteration in the construction) in place of the genuine article. All orders must be addressed to J. W. DELAMERE & CO., 208A Bowery, 96-98 Broadway, New York.

50 CENT SAMPLE sent free, with terms for any one to clear $25 a day in 30 hours' time. Address LA MONTE, REYMOND & CO., 23 Broadway, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED.—$195 PER MONTH, to sell the A. COMBS SEWING FAMILY MACHINE. Stitch alike. It will hem, stitch, fell, tuck, quilt, bind, and embroider beautifully. Fits any Table. Every Machine warranted for three years. For terms and Circulars address C. ROWER & CO., South 3d St., Philadelphia, Pa.

NEW MUSIC

Arnold-a-Rope, Grand March ..... 35c.
Silver Trumpets ..... 35c.
Grand Festival Music Book ..... 35c.
The Haunting Thought, by Reichardt ..... 30c.
I can and will Sing for Thee, by Claribel ..... 30c.
Wearing of the Green: Violin and Piano ..... 30c.
Mistletoe Polka, with Colored Lithograph ..... 30c.
Mistletoe Polka, with Colored Lithograph, illustrating Catastrophe on Skating Font ..... 50c.

Mailed, postpaid. FREDERICK BLUME, 109 Bower.

MUJAVIRO

Is the most delicious and lasting of all perfumes. The other is like a bouquet composed of roses, violets, jasmine, and heliotrope. What can be more fragrant?

For sale by all druggists and at all fancy stores.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make SIX Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine our goods, which are urgently required by all. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50c. that retails easily for $6. Try it. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York.

DUMB-WAITERS.

JAMES MURTAUGH'S celebrated DUMB-WAITERS are manufactured only at No. 185 Broadway, New York, where a model can be seen.

MERWIN & BRAY,

MANUFACTURERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS IN ARMS AND AMMUNITION OF ALL KINDS.

Sole Agents for the Sale in the United States of the Celebrated Leading Sporting Rifle of different calibres, and Eagle Arms Co.'s Double-Barrel Breech-Loading Shot Guns and Revolvers. The Belt Size carries the Army Ball. The Rifle is the same calibre as Colt's 4 in. These arms have no equal now in market. Send for price list; particulars, and illustrated Circular. MERWIN & BRAY, 293 Broadway, N. Y.

Sole Agents for the celebrated Colt's Revolvers, and Sole Agents for the celebrated Colt's Model Whitney Revolvers.

THE OLD SECOND CORPS.—A new song, entitled as above, written and composed by a member thereof, is every where received with enthusiasm. Price 35 cts. per copy; $3 per dozen. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of 35c. W. R. Chambers, N. Bloomfield, Ont. Co., N. Y.

CASTLE DISEASE! Trichina pork! Cholera bottled beef! Diseases of cattle constructed in Castle-Garden pens. Every man should have one. Sent for 70c. with directions. Wm. Illingworth, H. Brown, Jr., room 10, Tribune Bldg.

LIBRARY DE LOVE. 3 Volumes
For 75 cents. W. C. WEMYSS., 675 Broadway, N. Y.

STATE OF MISSOURI.—A reliable, authentic Book of the 50 States, published by the Government, containing a full description of farming and mineral lands; also Homestead Law, Constitution, and Statistics; besides valuable information, statistics, etc., for capitalists and others, with new Maps. Price, postage paid, 50 cents per single copy. Income $5 00. Address Wm. H. Brewster, P.O. Box 1227, Boston, Mass.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
FOR MARCH, 1866.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $4 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each.
HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $8 00.

The Publishers will accept a limited number of Certificates of Advertisements for their Magazine, at the following rates: One page of a page, each insertion, $60; half a page, $35; whole page, $200. The circulation of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is believed to be larger than that of any similar publication in the world.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation nearly 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $4 00
One Copy for Three Months 1 00
An Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $4 00 each, or 6 Copies for $20 00. Payment invariably in advance.

THE BOUND VOLUMES OF HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement will be sent to any part of the United States, free of carriage, upon receipt of the price, viz.:

Cloth Binding ..... $7 00 per Volume.
Half Morocco 10 00

Each Volume contains the Numbers for One Year.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—One Dollar and Fifty Cents per line for Inside, and Five Dollars per line for outside Advertisements, each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

PREPARE!

A Hint to our Street Sweepers, and to the Political Demagogues at Albany.

WHAT IS TO BECOME OF THE MERCHANTS?

MR. GOODS. "What! raise my rent from $15,000 to $50,000! It's absurd. What do you expect I am going to pay it out of?"

LANDLORD. "Well, really, I don't know; but I've just had an offer of $50,000 for it, and thought of course I'd see you first, so that you might have the first chance." [How very considerate!]

Robinson & Ogden,
BANKERS,
AND DEALERS IN
GOVERNMENT SECURITIES,
No. 4 Broad St., New York,
(Two Doors from Wall.)

Collections made, with quick returns
Interest allowed on Deposits subject to Check.
Orders received for the Purchase or Sale of Stocks, Bonds, and Gold will receive our personal attention.
ROBINSON & OGDEN,
Bankers.

Do you wear Spectacles? Are you near-sighted? Have you poor eyes—or ever any disease of the eyes? Write J. Ball & Co., 130 Nassau St., N. Y., (Box 2926) for their "TREATISE ON THE EYE." It will be sent free to any address. They have had twenty-six years' experience in the treatment of all kinds of defects of vision and imperfections. Can Interest Worship?

MOTHERS!

Children die by thousands—Worms the cause—whose Even might have been spared, had they used VAN DEUSEN'S WHITE CONFECTIONERY. Children are as fond of them as they are of Candy. Sold by Merchants. 20 CTS. a Box. Sent by mail on receipt of the price. VAN DEUSEN BROTHERS, Kingston, Ulster County, N. Y.

POLLAK & SON
Meerschaum Manufacturers, 603 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $80 each.

TO CURE
Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL, and disorders arising from excesses, use
Sanderson's Extract Buchu.
Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York, and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURKHALTER & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

CHINA AND GLASSWARE:
DAVIS COLLAMORE & CO.,
49 Broadway, New York.
Four Doors below Broome Street,
Are now opening new and beautiful goods.

Marvin's Patent
ALUM AND DRY PLASTER, FIRE AND BURGLAR
SAFES
Never lose their fireproof qualities, corrode the iron, or mould their contents.
Sideboard and parlor safes for silverware.
MARVIN & CO.,
265 Broadway, New York.
721 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

TO LET.
The Four-Story Building, No. 54 Broad Street, 28 feet front. Possession 1st of May next. Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, Franklin Square.

"American Union Company,"
Manufacturers of the New Organ-Toned PIANO, EQUAL, IF NOT SUPERIOR TO ANY. Warranted in every particular. Warerooms and "Agency," 481 Broome St.

MERCHANTS, BANKERS,
And others should send to all parts of the United States by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, 68 Broadway.

BIGELOW'S
NEW YORK SATIN ENAMELED
PAPER COLLAR.
Unglazed where it touches the neck.
Does not feel sticky in warm weather.
Sufficient space allowed for the cravat.
Made of the finest material.
The very best collar in the market.
SUMNER, HARDON & CROMWELL,
(Dry-Goods and Industry Commission Merchants,)
Sole Agents, No. 60 Duane St., New York.

REVOLVERS and PISTOLS.
MILLER & CO., No. 9 Maiden Lane,
New York, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in all the latest improved REVOLVERS and PISTOLS now made, which they are selling at greatly reduced prices.
Revolvers: Reim's Seven-Shot "My Friend," for close quarters, SMITH & WESSON'S, NATIONAL ARMS Co.'s, REMINGTON'S, COLT'S, WHITNEY'S, LEAVITT'S, and UNION ARMS CO.'S.
Pistols: NATIONAL DERRINGER, REMINGTON'S Complete CASE and PISTOL Combined, and DICKINSON'S Single Shot.
MILLER & CO., Sole Agents.
Send for a Circular and Price-List.

Steinway & Sons'
GRAND, SQUARE, AND UPRIGHT
PIANO-FORTES

Have taken 22 First Premiums, gold and silver medals, at the Principal Fairs held in this country within the last fifteen years, and in addition thereto they were awarded a First Prize Medal at the Great International Exhibition in London, 1862, in competition with 209 Pianos from all parts of the World.
That the great superiority of these instruments is now universally conceded is abundantly proved by the FACT that MESSRS. STEINWAY'S scales, improvements, and peculiarities of construction" have been copied by the great majority of the manufacturers of both hemispheres (as HOWLEY & CO. HAVE RECENTLY DONE), without any PATENT INFRINGEMENT OR PATENT RIGHTS; and that their instruments are used by the most eminent pianists of Europe and America, who prefer them for their own public and private use whenever procurable.
STEINWAY & SONS direct special attention to their Patent Agraffe Arrangement, which, having been practically introduced in all their Grand and highest-priced Square Pianos, and admitted to be one of the most important improvements of modern times, will hereafter be introduced in EVERY PIANO MANUFACTURED BY THEM, WITHOUT INCREASE OF COST to the purchaser, in order that all their patrons may reap its benefit.
STEINWAY & SONS' PIANOS are the only American instruments exported to Europe in large numbers, and used in European concert-rooms.
WAREROOMS, Nos. 91 and 72 East Fourteenth Street, between Union Square and Fourth Place, New York.

A FORTUNE FOR ALL!
No humbug! Send 50 cents for sample of an indispensable curiosity. Large sales and enormous profits guaranteed to agents every where. Address
TIPPINCOTT & FELL, Boston, Mass.

THOMAS ANDREWS & CO.
OFFER TO THE WHOLESALE TRADE GENERALLY:
Newcastle, Liverpool, and "Friar's Grove" (our own make) Bi-Carb. Soda.
SODA ASH—Gamble's, J. Hutchinson & Co's, Kurtz's, Johnson's, &c., &c.
CAUSTIC SODA—D. C. Gamble's, J. Hutchinson & Co.'s, Musgrave Brothers', and Huntley's.
SAL SODA—Newcastle and other Brands; also our own make.
SALERATUS—Pamgun, Ecroleur, and Double Refined, made at our own works.
Perfectly pure CREAM TARTAR and TARTARIC ACID, BORAX, Alum, Flor. Sulphur, Sal Epsom, Nitrate Soda, Madder, Indigo, Yarra Alba, Liquid Quartz, &c., &c. Also SILVERS Palm Oil, CocoaNut Oil, Rosin, &c., &c.
The "Excelsior" Yeast Powder, the great favorite, perfectly pure.
We are Lead Annals.—Established in 1847.
OFFICE—126 and 128 Cedar St., New York (west side).

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY.

RAVEN & BACON'S
PIANO-FORTES.
(Established 1830.)
A full assortment of these instruments, which have been well known in the New York market for more than thirty years, constantly on hand. Pictorial circulars sent by mail.
Warerooms, No. 135 Grand Street, near Broadway, New York.

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES.

A new, practical, and original work, illustrated with 192 Designs and Plans of Houses of moderate cost, including stables and outbuildings, with a chapter on the construction of Bee-Houses. Price $1 50, mailed free to any address.
GEO. E. & F. W. WOODWARD, Publishers, No. 37 Park Row, New York.

ITCH. Salt Rheum.
(WHEATON'S OINTMENT)
ITCH. Salt Rheum.
Will cure the Itch in 48 hours; also cures Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Chilblains, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Price 50 cents. By sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Boston, Mass., it will be forwarded free by mail.
For sale by all Druggists.

$3 00 to $5 00 A DAY
Guaranteed. Agents wanted. A good watch presented to each. Address with stamp,
Box 3565, P. O., Philadelphia.

TRADE MARK
OF THE
MAGIC RUFFLE COMPANY,
To be found on each box and each piece of GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLE. All other goods, of whatever name, not having this mark, are worthless imitations and infringements on the patents of the Magic Ruffle Company. The GENUINE MAGIC RUFFLES are full six yards in each piece, are well made of the best material, and give perfect satisfaction to consumers. Office of the Company, No. 68 Chambers Street, New York.

THE GENERAL FAVORITE!—The Press of the country is almost unanimous in pronouncing
BEADLE'S MONTHLY
the choicest of Magazines. The March Number (now ready) contains:
The Snow: A Poem. Illustrated.
Northwest Passage by Land; Winter in Wood Crees' Country. Illustrated.
The Dead Letter: Serial. Illustrated.
Assassins and their Work: Charlotte Corday.
A Mad Night: Story.
Three Days among the Oil Wells.
The Buccaneer. Illustrated.
Uncle Roderick's Sermon: A Story.
Finger Rings; their History, Strength and Use. Illustrated.
Tom Bailey's Joke: A Poem.
The Convict's Wife: A Story.
Our Next Camp Reminiscences.
Who Stole the Spoons? A Story.
My Royal Peter: A Poem.
"Popular People" Photographed.
To-Day: as it is in Fashionable Circles.
Current Notes: On Books, Persons, &c.
Sold by all newsdealers and booksellers. Price but TWENTY-FIVE CENTS per Number; or by mail for $3 per year. BEADLE & CO., Publishers, 118 William St., New York.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING
B. T. BABBITT'S LABOR-SAVING SOAP.
"This Soap is made from clean and pure materials, contains no adulteration of any kind, will not injure the most delicate fabric, and is especially adapted for woolen, which will not shrink after being washed with this Soap. It may be used in hard or soft water. It will remove paint, grease, tar, and stains of all kinds. One pound will produce as much suds as two pounds of ordinary family soap. Directions sent with each bar for making three gallons handsome soft soap from one pound of this Soap. Each bar is wrapped in a circular containing full directions for using, printed in English and German. Ask your grocer for "B. T. Babbitt's Soap," and take no other.
B. T. BABBITT, Nos. 64, 66, 68, 67, 65, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington Street, New York.

50 MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP PER-CENT SAVED BY
USING B. T. BABBITT'S PURE CONCENTRATED POTASH, or READY SOAP MAKER. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 5 pounds, 8 pounds, and 15 pounds, with full directions, in English and German, for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 10 gallons of Soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market. B. T. BABBITT, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington St., N. Y.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING
B. T. BABBITT'S best Medicinal SALERATUS, B. "made from Common Sense." Brand made with this Saleratus contains whole cream, and will make more cakes, and sweeter, than common salt, water, and flour. Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, and 74 Washington Street, New York.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING
B. T. BABBITT'S STAR YEAST POWDER. Light B. cakes, sweet bread, delicious biscuit, and rich pastry with this "Yeast Powder" in 15 minutes. No shortening is required when sweet milk is used. No. 64 to 74 Washington Street, New York.

PINE APPLE CIDER
70 WASHINGTON ST. N.Y.
A certain cure for Cholera, Dysentery, Heart Disease, Fainting Spells, and excellent for old people, as it quickens the circulation of the Blood.

WM. BIRD, MICROSCOPIST.—Likenesses made to order, and put in rings, pins, lockets, and wish cameos, at from $1 to $5. Send carte de visite for enlargement. 7 Park Row, New York.

WANTED—every man in the United States, who has not either an Arm or Leg—to engage in a profitable business. Send Twenty-five cents to A. F. BUTCHER, Box 65, Philadelphia, Pa.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. X.—No. 480.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1866. [SINGLE COPIES TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1866, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

DISPLAY OF FIRE-WORKS IN CITY HALL PARK ON WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1866.—SKETCHED BY STANLEY FOX.—[SEE PAGE 163]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1866.

THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS.

It is a matter of the gravest regret that the President and Congress should differ so decidedly at this most important moment. It was clear, however, from the day that reorganization became a practical question that great forbearance would be necessary in each branch of the Government, and it is painfully evident that neither has exercised it. But we are inclined to believe that the events of the past fortnight have taught both the President and Congress, as they have taught the country, that a different spirit must prevail upon both sides at Washington, or very serious consequences will follow. Thus, upon the cardinal point of the admission of members from the late rebel States, the President is powerless if Congress persists; and, on the other hand, measures which Congress deems absolutely essential may be baffled by the President's veto.

When the last rebel surrendered, and the States whose secession had been practised by the national arms were left without other government than the military authority of the United States, it was necessary that steps toward the civil reorganization of those States should be taken by the Commander-in-Chief. The President, therefore, acting under no special verbal warrant of the Constitution, but by its unquestionable authority and from the necessity of the case, appointed Provisional Governors and authorized them to call primary elections of delegates to Conventions for framing at the same time who should vote. In this last point of his instructions the President was governed by the view which had been kept steadily prominent throughout the war, that no State could lawfully secede from the Union; and as it was conceded that, under the Constitution, the suffrage should be exercised by the State electors, he refrained from disturbing that understanding, naturally anxious to follow as far as practicable the normal tradition of the Government. By excepted, however, certain classes of those who by the old State laws were entitled to vote, while he refrained from creating new voters.

Undoubtedly this whole proceeding was exceptional. He acted as an absolute military commander, and might, at his discretion, have imposed other conditions and adopted a different system. If he forbade voting to any whom the local law had formerly empowered to vote, the local law was really repudiated. His will was the law. But in the case, and in the same right to authorize WADE HAMPTON's late slave to vote as he had to prohibit WADE HAMPTON from voting. WADE HAMPTON was no more traitor, according to the Constitution, although he was a more conspicuous one, than any of his soldiers; and if the Commander-in-Chief could authorize a traitor taken in arms to vote because he had been formerly a voter, he could certainly permit a loyal soldier of the Government to vote who had not hitherto enjoyed that right. But in this matter the President was guided by the plain consideration that it was desirable to make no fundamental changes which he could avoid; and although the legal grounds and limits of his authority in the case do not seem to us to have been very clear to the President himself, he proceeded upon the conviction of the indestructibility of a State in the Union, and his action was perfectly intelligible.

The Conventions having met, he stated certain conditions which he, at least, deemed essential precedents to a resumption of the relations of the States to the Union. These were substantially the revocation of the ordinance of secession; the repudiation of the rebel debt; the formal adoption of the Emancipation Amendment; the guarantee of all civil rights to the freedmen; and the election of truly loyal representatives to Congress. All of these but the two last were generally accepted by the States in question. But none, we believe, have fully guaranteed an equality of civil right before the law, although in one of the Southwestern States it has been held by a Court that the constitution of Slavery knew with it all legal distinctions based upon color. One or two loyal representatives were also elected from the late rebel States.

This was the condition of the case when Congress assembled. The point to decide was certainly that stated by the President in his late unfortunate speech: "When those who have rebelled comply with the Constitution, when they give sufficient evidence of loyalty, when they show that they can be trusted, when they yield obedience to the law that you and I acknowledge, I say extend to them the right hand of fellowship, and let peace and union be restored." Congress met and found representatives of the rebel States awaiting admission. Congress said at once, "Let us examine and see if these States can be trusted, and whether they have given sufficient evidence of loyalty." Surely Congress was not bound to take the President's opinion upon these points. It would doubtless give it great weight; but the lower already exercised by the President in the reorganization was so enormous that it was desirable another authority should intervene. The President had certainly no reason to be angry with Congress for exercising the very discretion which he claimed for himself; and it seems to us if the President had been more patient, if he had reflected that it was not for him alone to decide without appeal the condition of reorganization, and that the final conclusion might have been avoided.

It was the evident determination of the President that his view should prevail which excited the jealousy of Congress. How could he expect that General GRANT's report of a few days' excursion to Charleston would be accepted as conclusive evidence of the actual condition of public sentiment as against the evidence of prolonged and faithful observation presented by Carl Schurz? Mutual defiance was exchanged. And although the very opening of the session, the House insanely allowed its most unfit member for the office to be its leader, while the unfortunate expression of Senator Sherman indicated a hostility and impatience which could only lead to mischief. With an equally unfortunate want of reticence the President met the first step and of reticence the President met the first step and of the action of the House; and the House had not dignity enough to rebuke THADDEUS STEVENS when, in return, he grossly insulted the President by proposing to CHARLES F. adopting an opinion, to CHARLES F. subverting the fundamental law. The heat grew. The President, in his Veto Message, most unwisely engaged in an unfriendly exposition of his views of general policy. The Senate failed to sustain its own bill by the necessary two-thirds. The House, stung with disappointment at the defeat of its favorite measure, and incensed by the untimely remarks of the President, needlessly declared that, whatever his opinion might be, no rebel State should be admitted to duties in the Union except by permission of Congress. Again THADDEUS STEVENS talked wildly about usurpation at the very moment the President was tendering concessions, and as if the President's opinion could admit a representative to Congress, and then followed the mob assembly scene in the White House window.

If this hostility continues, practical reorganization of the Union will be delayed for two years certainly. A political revolution will be certainly effected which will disarm the late rebel States to Congress without the oath of loyalty, and transfer the Government to the present Opposition. Now Congress, anxious to secure this result, must be apparent to every thoughtful man, must take the initiative in returning to co-operation with the President. It is conduct which is entirely of policy wholly irrespective of his personality. The central idea of that policy is, that a change of feeling can not be wrought by law. It is not necessary that the law should be with the people of the late rebel States as fellow-citizens, not as subjects; and wise men will see many reasons why it is better to leave many things that we might now wish to effect directly to the surer accomplishment of indirect methods. Congress is undoubtedly the judge when the unrepresented States may safely be admitted to relations in the Union. But the decision should be based upon common-sense and a generous faith in the logic of events, in the healing power of human development, and in the wisdom of the American system.

THE FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

In our remarks last week upon the Veto Message we assumed from the President's remarks that he proposed to leave the freedmen to the care of the States in which they live. We did so because he stated as a reason of those States as in his opinion entitled to resume their normal relations with the Union, and consequently to the right of caring for all their people. He spoke of the freedmen's Bureau as to cease as still existing; but as that is to expire a year after the end of the war, and as he told us war was now ended, it was fair to assume that the present Bureau would end by the first of May. Moreover, he did not say that he approved such a Bureau, and by insisting that the freedmen were not to be counted in the States represented, and might emigrate if they were dissatisfied or appeal to the courts, he very plainly intimated, as we inferred, that their rights were not to be watched by the United States. We therefore said nothing of his objections to the particular bill presented to him, but simply expressed our profound satisfaction in his judgment, that emancipated slaves ought to be abandoned homeless, houseless, landless, and at an inconceivable disadvantage to those who are peculiarly favored by the law.

That our view was not singular was proved by the universal excitement that followed the Message. The party of hostility to human rights, the "Democracy," whose sole article of faith is contempt of negroes, fired their loudest guns at the pleasing prospect that the loyal people of South Carolina who had fought for the Union were now to be turned over to the revengeful hands of those who had fought against it. The extreme opponents of this party, true friends of the people and of equal rights, also generally hung their heads in speechless sorrow and amazement. But the Evening Post, which is edited by men as faithful to justice and equal rights as men can be; Horace Wilbur Beecher, whose tongue flames and sparkles against the enemies of man; and many a private citizen not less constant in the good faith, openly asserted that they did not understand the President to be opposed to any bill, but only to the present one, and for reasons which were in some points very weighty. But just now the action of the President's position arising from the want of precision of statement, and from the mixed discussions of his Message, that it was immediately announced that the Senate and House would come to New York and speak upon the subject. Under such circumstances a speech could only be an explanation, and we waited patiently the Secretary's coming.

Mr. Seward's reception was deserved. It was a tumult of enthusiasm. Every man in the audience remembered his services and his sufferings, and forgot every thing else. The important part of his speech was this plain declaration:

"I am sure President and Congress agree that during the brief transition which the country is making from civil war to loyal peace the freedmen have a claim not to be abandoned by the nation to persecution or suffering. It was for that transition period that the Bureau of Freedmen was created. That Bureau will be kept and is still kept in effective operation. Both the President and Congress, on the other hand, agree that when that transition period shall have been fully passed, and the insurrection shall have been overcome in the States which have restored, that bureau would be not only unnecessary, but unconstitutional, demoralizing, and dangerous, and both agree that it would cease to exist."

He added that the President thought the transition period was nearly passed, and that the original provision is sufficient for the end proposed. The provision is for a year after the end of the war; but the war does not end, he said, until a proclamation is issued by the Government; and if, as the year closes, it is found necessary, a new provision, it is for Congress to continue it. Mr. Seward confirmed our view that in the President's judgment the war of the rebellion is "not yet fully closed."

General Howard was equally uncertain of the President's meaning, and asked an explanation. The General subsequently issued a letter to the agents of the Bureau informing them that the President regards the law as continuing "at least a year from this time;" and that, although the Bureau was wisely maintained pleasant relations with the President, has introduced a bill extending the operations of the Bureau for two years more.

We are sincerely glad that this is the truth. The national diagnose of an abandonment of the freedmen in their present condition to those who for lately had them as slaves would be overwhelming. They are our wards, and we have no moral right to relinquish their hands until we leave them as fully secure in every civil right as every other citizen. Upon this point there is no difference of opinion among Union men. It is the "Democracy" only which would abandon them. The President, in his conversation with Governor Cox, of Ohio, speaks of his resolution to see justice done with a distinctness which we should have been glad to have had in his Message. The case is unprecedented, and we must treat it accordingly.

MONEY MATTERS.

The Bull speculators in gold are having a hard time. The more peace they have the less the Government with vigor and success. But their glory is departing. They thought 140 right as every other citizen. Upon this point quite a moderate price for gold, in view of the 150—but the recovery effort is hard work, and the Government began to sell its surplus gold, some three weeks since, they merely laughed at the Government agents, and took, day after day, all he had to sell. It was not till he returned to the charge day after day, and week after week, each time seemingly with an increased supply for sale, that they lost their heart, and, after a few ineffectual struggles, fled in dismay from the field. The premium dropped to 136½, and would have gone still lower, but that the Secretary, like a prudent broker, not caring to press the market, withdrew for a time.

In days gone by the supply of gold in the Treasury was so abundant that if its actual wants that every one should be entitled to a micety how much the Government could afford to sell. This sentiment, the Bull speculators would make up a "pool," take all the Government gold at a price, and then, when the Government dared sell no more, would run up the premium with great impunity, and compel the merchants who required gold for duties to buy it of them at the advance. Now the reserve of gold in the Sub-Treasury is so far in excess of the wants of Government, and the revenue from customs so far beyond general expectation, that there is practically hardly any limit to the quantity of gold which Government can afford to sell. During the month of February it is safe to say that the Government broker must have sold from $18,000,000 to $20,000,000 of gold, and if the speculators had had the courage to keep up the premium above 140 he might have sold much more. By the last official report of the Treasury Department Government held over $35,000,000 on 1st February, and since then the customs have yielded about $15,000,000 more. Fighting a "pile" of this magnitude is a very different matter from fighting poor Mr. Chase, with his beggarly reserve of five or six millions.

The decline and the increased supply of gold are very distasteful to most of our foreign merchants. When the war suspended specie payments most of these gentlemen put their capital into gold, and have held it in gold ever since, borrowing every cent he could on the gold for the transaction of their business. In ordinary times these gentlemen have done very well. In the first place, their business has been safe from the perturbations and uncertainties which have embarrassed all trades prosecuted on a currency basis. And, next, gold having generally been scarce the premium was due to the small volume of floating gold, and the large short sales by speculators and merchants, these foreigners have, during a large part of the time they have held their capital, been able to make something by lending it out. It has been quite common for them to get all the currency they wanted on the pledge of their gold free of interest; and it has not been uncommon for speculators to pay them ½ and even ¾ per cent. a day for the use of their gold. During the first days of February, before Government began to sell, the stock of floating gold had fallen so low that speculators were obliged to pay ½ and even ¾ of 1 per cent. a day for the use of gold for delivery. This was the state of affairs for the foreign houses which held their capital in specie. Since Government has supplied the market things have changed. Gold is now very abundant, and holders who want to use their money in business are compelled to pay full 7 per cent. interest for the use of currency.

It need hardly be observed that these merchants had a perfect right to invest their capital in gold. In one point of view the operation was eminently business-like and judicious. But as it somewhat temporarily impoverished men who had thus invested their capital in gold became imbued with a deep distrust of the Government's ability to pay, and naturally lost no occasion of expressing that distrust, spreading it through society, and impressing it upon all with whom they came into contact, more rigidly or wrongly, as they were regarded as unfriendly to the national cause, and to be classed among the sympathizers with the rebellion. That injustice was herein done to many holders of gold is quite likely. But, in the main, the chances are that the popular theory was just, and that merchants who held their capital in gold were not the real friends of the national currency or of the country in which it was issued. For this reason there is the less regret felt that this class of persons should now be suffering loss in consequence of the Government sales of gold.

Of the future of the gold market nothing can be said except that gold ought to steadily decline, and probably will. There is no reason why it should be maintained at its present premium. The currency has reached and passed the maximum of its expansion. Banks become second legal-tenders are now passing out of circulation than Government is issuing of national bank notes. In the course of a few weeks, of the entire issue of $185,000,000 of interest-bearing legal tenders, there will not be $15,000,000 in circulation. At the same time a lively demand for currency at the South is showing to that section a practical impossibility of the existing national bank notes and plain legal tenders. The currency is still far longer than is required for the business of the country. But it is not as large, in fact, as it was three or six months ago, when the bulk of the interest-bearing legal tenders circulated as money, and few or none of the national bank notes went South.

Serious differences of opinion have been developed in Congress with regard to the Banking and Mexican schemes and the Morrill Bill. It is of very little importance which Congress passes the bill or not. Under the acts now in force the Secretary can control the currency just as fast and as thoroughly as he requires. The new measure would certainly enlarge his powers. But it is open to objections to which existing statutes are not obnoxious; and if the work to be done can be accomplished without creating Mr. M'Culloch Dictator of the money market scandal will be avoided, and the reputation of the Secretary will be spared aspersions otherwise inevitable. It seems probable that Congress will pass a law excluding interest-bearing legal tender notes from the reserve which the law compels national banks to keep on hand for the redemption of their notes. Such a measure would reserve compound legal tenders to the category of investments, to which they fairly belong—would at a blow curtail the currency by $185,000,000; and would compel some of our national banks, which have been doing business on a grand scale, and declaring enormous dividends, to convert a large proportion of their assets into legal tenders.

The great balance in the Treasury—$110,000,000 at this point, and probably not less than $150,000,000 at all the various Sub-Treasuries and depositories—continues to attract attention. Merchants can not understand why Mr. McCulloch should be willing to pay 5 @ 6 per cent. interest for money which he doesn't want, can't use, and keep idle. Possibly a solution to the problem may be made public within a few days.

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

THAT the President of the United States should have been invited by a shouting crowd of his fellow-citizens to denounce by name a Senator, a Representative, and a private citizen, and to speak of another citizen in the slang of the stump, is something so unprecedented and astounding that, while every grievous man will allow for the excitement of passion, there is no self-respecting American citizen who will not feel humiliated that the chief citizen of the Republic, in such a place, on such a day, should have been utterly mastered by it.

Yet the servility which actually defends and approves such an outburst of passion is even more deplorable. The President, excited and exasperated, may be exactly supposed unconscious of the real scope of what he said when he accused Mr. SUMNER and Mr. STEVENS of inciting to an assassination. It is conceivable that he was so angry to weigh his words when, after calling for justice upon those concerning the gallows—he denounced those gentlemen as traitors. But for an editor to sit deliberately down and elaborately justify so tragical an outrage of the plainest official propriety upon the ground that the speaker said that he should "stand by the Constitution," is an offense so contemptible as to be ludicrous. The President has taken a solemn oath to "stand by the Constitution," and nobody supposes that he intends to get himself impeached. But the Senator and Representative have taken quite as solemn an oath, and their purpose is no less undoubted. Is it treason and deserving of death to differ from the President's view of constitutional duty? How if, because of a difference of opinion as to constitutional obligation, the Senator and Representative had denounced the President by name as a traitor like JEFFERSON DAVIS? Would they be excused on the ground that they declared they would "stand by the Constitution"?

This is not a question of President against Congress, or the reverse. It has nothing to do with the merits of different views of reorganization, or of offensive personalities on any history, which we fervently trust may never be repeated.

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN BOOKS.

MESSRS. STRAHAN of London, whose exports of books to this country were arrested at the New York Custom-house for apparent undervaluation of invoices, are naturally angry at the interference with their very pleasant and very profitable business, and, being angry, are naturally indiscreet. The practical discrimination in favor of the foreign producer which at present exists, under the heavy accumulation of excise dues and the light ad valorem duties, encourages them in the belief that the American market is at the mercy of the London publisher. Serenely confident in this advantage given them by the low money wages of their workmen, they boastfully predict, in a letter published in the London Bookseller, of January 31, "Americans may ignore all the teachings of economic science, and continue to believe that CONDE and BRIGHT ever lived; but this must inevitably, nevertheless, that the useless employment of men in the manufacture of books that are already manufactured will cease, and that there will no more be an English and American edition of the same book than there are just now an English and Irish, a French and Belgian, or a Prussian and Austrian."

But besides being very petulant Messrs. STRAHAN & Co. are, as we said above, very indiscreet. The lesson that we received has led us to examine the United States Custom Laws, and they boast that if one of their games can be stopped they can still play another unchecked. They have found out, under the law, 1 Vict., c. 73, part 20 manufacturers to their New York agent they are bound to invoice their books at the "actual cost value thereof at the time and place when and where the same were made or manufactured," but that if their books undergo an intermediate sale they can be invoiced by the buyer "at the cost thereof." They propose a new door to them, and they thus cheerfully point out to their brother publishers the mode by which they propose to make America the literary Ireland of England: "Can you not make the question one of 'actual cost' instead of 'market value?' The New York house of STRAHAN & Co. (which, by-the-way, has interests separate from ours) can cease dealing with us and order their goods from an export house in London, to whom we can sell for one-eighth per cent. profit, and who can print and sell for the same." This is quite according to the statute, and if the New York publishers will insist on our playing at business we may have no objection to do so.

We admit that all this is perfectly feasible, and further, that men who boast that they will commit two fictitious sales to bolster up an invoice of this kind are just as likely to make those sales, nominally, at twenty per cent. loss each as at one-eighth of one per cent. profit, and thus deplete the revenue until more. Messrs. STRAHAN & Co. have our thanks for the openness with which they avow their design of reducing the penny bondage duties by means by which they hope to effect it. We trust the confession will not be without weight with our legislators when they come to revise the tariff.

A PUNGENT QUESTION.

HON. JOSHUA HILL was a representative in Congress from Georgia when the State seceded. He hold fast to the Union, and while withdrawing to his home did not disguise his loyalty during the war. He was a candidate at the late election of a United States Senator by the Georgia Legislature, but the fact of his loyalty was successfully urged against him. In a speech to the Legislature which is remarkable for dignity, force, and fidelity to the country, he told his fellow-citizens many valuable but not agreeable truths, and said to them with a stinging emphasis what is well adapted for other meridians than Georgia:

"It is all profane to love the President and to sustain his policy. If I may be allowed to conjure large things with small, let me inquire how it is that you can forgive SEWARD's conduct in making war upon the Confederacy, and exciting himself to crush it, and yet complain of me for my peaceful opposition to your revolution? His offense fought you while mine fought not. Why is it that I am quite certain that your love for the President is heartfelt and sincere?"

DR. DRAPER'S "CIVIL POLICY OF AMERICA."

THE interest with which books in relation to America are now read all over Europe is strikingly shown by the publication of Dr. DRAPER'S work on "The Future Civil Policy of America" at Leipsic, by OTTO WIGAND & CO. This German translation is published in a style calculated for extensive circulation, and is made by Mr. BARTELS, Librarian in Wolfenbüttel.

Dr. DRAPER'S previous work on "The Intellectual Development of Europe" has had extraordinary success. It has been reprinted in England, and translated into the French, Dutch, German, Italian, and Spanish languages. The German edition being published in two volumes by the above-named Leipsic house. The German critic speaks of it as "unquestionably the most valuable of them in his review describes it as "one of the most masterly and profound presentments of the course of human development that perhaps has yet appeared."

Dr. DRAPER'S forthcoming "History of the American Civil War" will be reprinted in England, France, and Germany, simultaneously with its appearance in America. It is expected to be nearly the amusing summer and doubtless will do much to disseminate in Europe just views of the principles of that great conflict.

LEFT-HANDED WRITING.

THE specimens of writing by soldiers and sailors who have lost their right hand during the war are well worthy inspection at the hall corner of Twenty-third Street and Broadway. They are generally very legible and very light and comely, and it is plain that a left-handed clerk or book-keeper can write as fairly as any other. The specimens are further illustrations of the character and talent of Yankee volunteers.

IN PEACE.

On leave me to my reveries,
My own pure sky, my valleys fair,
My streamlets running where they please,
My flowery hills, my forest trees,
My homestead and my chair.

And let my life that stream beside,
Like it pursue its onward way,
Far from the loud world's pomp and pride,
Not deep, but ever clear its tide,
And careless of the future day.

Thus let it glide on, sweet and slow,
Bordered with flowers, by hills between,
Playing with moss shreds in its flow,
And grasses waving to and fro,
With willow branches dropping in.

My hours rocked by each wind that blows,
Linked hand in hand with soft away,
In their light track my thoughts unclose,
As fast and fresh as grass that grows
Beside the trodden public way.

They say that life is hard to bear;
My God! it is not so to me,
Two angels—poetry and prayer—
Like sister's love, like mother's care,
Cradle and keep it pure for thee.

Childlike, it still pursues a dream,
A hope, a wish, a memory,
Like fleecy clouds in summer's gleam;
And in each morning's stingy gleam,
It sees its whole futurity.

Drop upon drop, but honey-sweet,
Thus to its share the days are given;
There is not one it fears to meet,
Oh God! thus doubtless at Thy feet,
The angels live in heaven.

And when this happy life is run,
Death must drawn very gently nigh,
Like flowers befriended by the sun,
When the long summer day is done,
We only bend our heads and die!

And if but Faith and Hope be there,
Why what is Death? To close our eyes,
To concentrate ourselves in prayer,
To yield our souls to angels' care,
And sleep, to waken in the skies.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

February 20:

In the Senate, Mr. Wade introduced a joint resolution to amend the Constitution so that no President shall be eligible for a second term of office, and made a speech in explanation of the reasons for his resolution. The question then came up whether, notwithstanding the President's objections, the Freedmen's Bureau bill should be passed, and was decided against the passage, there not being a two-thirds majority. The vote stood yeas 30 to nays 18. Among those voting in the negative were Messrs. Doolittle, Guthrie, and Dixon. Vice-President Foster voted in the affirmative; and Mr. Fessenden and Mr. Wade.

In the House, the entire session was taken up in noisy discussion as to whether Mr. Rogers, that "in order to close agitation upon a question which seems likely to distract the entire country, to restore peace, and to quiet the uncertainty which is agitating the minds of the people of the United States, it is necessary that before any Representative or Senator or Representative shall be admitted into either House of Congress from any of the so-call States, until Congress shall have declared such States entitled to such representation by the action of the two Houses upon the question. For several hours a persistent attempt was made to introduce the resolution, but Mr. Stevens triumphed at last, and the resolution was adopted, 102 to 49.

February 21:

In the Senate, Mr. Fessenden attempted in vain to introduce a joint resolution for the settlement which Stevens had pushed through the House the day before. The Freedmen's Bureau bill was then finally debated.

In the House, the great topic of discussion was the Loan bill, which passed the Secretary of the Treasury, when he deems it expedient, to convert outstanding bonds into new ones, and to dispose of any of the Government bonds, either in the United States or Europe, for the purpose of paying other obligations, but not for any increase of the public debt. Mr. Hill moved the bill be recommitted, and proposed to amend the bill by striking out the discretionary power of the Secretary and by limiting the amount. He complained that the bill placed sixteen hundred and four millions of dollars at the disposal of the Secretary. Mr. Hooper spoke in favor of the bill at great length. Mr. Schenck said that the Secretary had the confidence of the past five years. He said: "According to the estimate of the Secretary, the receipts for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1866, including the interest on the bonds to be sold, will be $558,000,000. It appears, therefore, that the present rates of taxation will, under any circumstances, yield an excess of revenue sufficient to secure the annual payment required for the ordinary expenses of the Government, the interest on the public debt, and a reasonable appropriation for its extinguishment within a definite period of many of those who pay bear the burdens of the taxation." Mr. Hooper thus summed up the leading points of the bill: "It may be said to capitulate the statement of the different forms of obligation which we propose to fund. It is the object of the bill also to state the amount of debt existing in each of those forms on the 1st of January, 1867:

Bonds, the principal and interest payable in gold	$1,190,780,000
Legal tender Government notes, including the fractional currency, not bearing interest	453,281,919 87
Certificates of indebtedness, Treasury notes payable in three years, and compound six-months' interest at 6 per cent. bonds	630,000,000 00
Legal tender compound interest notes, 3 years, bearing interest payable with the principal	258,540,041 00
Certificates of indebtedness, payable one year from date, bearing 6 per cent.	60,691,000 00
Certificates of deposit of temporary loans, payable on demand, or on ten days from demand, after notice	97,687,194 80
Amount of the war debt	$3,749,491,745 87
Adding other Government liabilities	25,850,472 13
Total amount of debt Jan. 1, 1866	$3,800,652,217 99

At the same time there was in the Treasury, in coin, $78,427,819 09
Less gold certificates of deposit 7,586,500 00

	$68,447,419 09
Add in currency	44,702,171 11
Total amount to the credit of the United States in the Treasury	$113,149,590 20
	$113,149,590 20

It was contended that the debt could not over-ever should not be subject to fluctuation. The bond only be done by a gradual reduction of the currency. He considered that it ceases as the equivalent of coin. The first step in this direction should be to reduce the interest-bearing legal tender notes for long dates, and the interest-bearing debt. Once the war debt was reduced to a fixed sum, he would consolidate a fund or loan amounting to over $250,000,000 redeemable at the pleasure of the Government. They would constitute a loan from the people; and before I consent to any further issue of bonds I will say, with the present debt of $2,000,000 to the annual payment for interest, I wish to know how the money is to be derived by taxation, and I argue an increase to the amount of interest we now have to pay; and I say, therefore, benefit it will do. My chief objections to withdrawing the United States notes from circulation by currency bonds are, that it will increase the expense that would be incurred for interest on the bonds, my belief that a larger amount of money than formerly is now required for the business of the country, and my fear that some of the bonds would be sold in Europe. I am opposed to take their place, by which the country would be further loaded with the interest on the bonds sold.

February 23:

Congressional proceedings were interrupted to offer place to the memorial services in honor of the late Hon. Henry Winter Davis. The eulogy was pronounced by Mr. Cresswell, Mr. Stockton from Maryland.

February 24:

In the Senate, a new Freedmen's Bureau bill was introduced by Mr. Wilson, and was referred to the Committee of Thirteen.

In the House, Mr. Washburn was declared entitled to the contested Indiana seat by a vote of 97 to 53.

February 24:

In the House, Messrs. Clark, Flants, Rousseau, and Broomall made speeches on the subject of reconstruction.

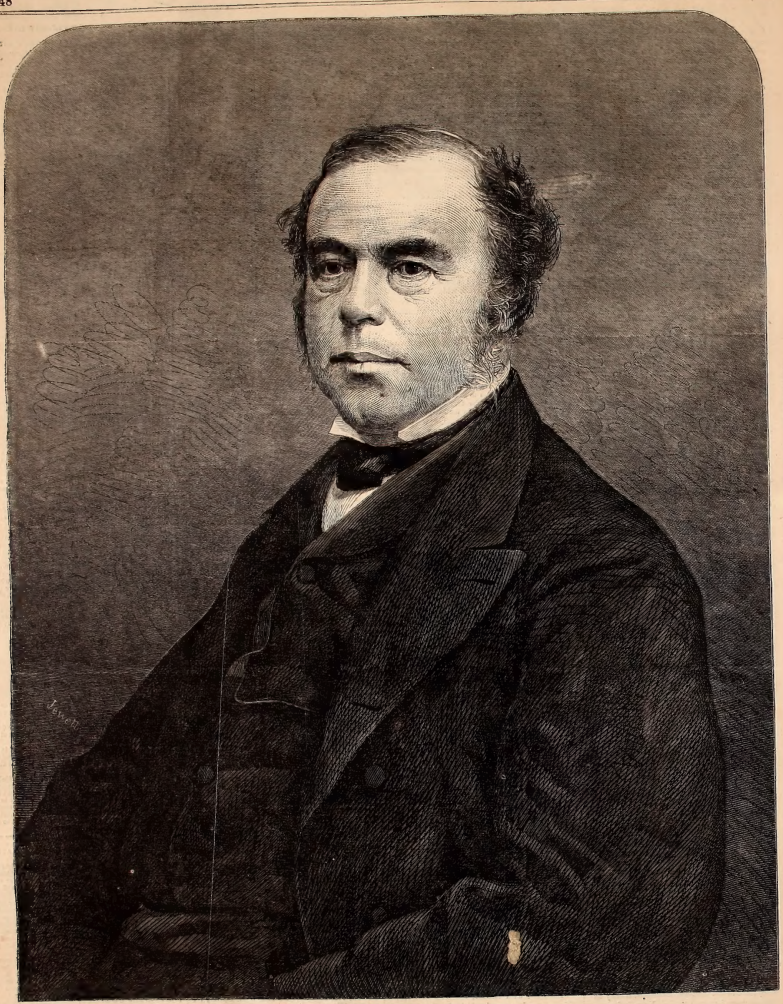
February 26:

In the Senate, the contested cases of the Arkansas Senators were laid upon the table, 29 to 11—Mr. Sherman going against the majority for the indefinite exclusion of Southern States. He then introduced a joint resolution declaring that the President should not have power to remove any officer without the consent of the Senate. No act of the President, he said, up to the present time, had been inconsistent with his obligations to the great Union party that elected him.

In the House, Mr. Bingham reported back the Constitutional Amendment, with the names of Congressmen there power to make up those which shall be necessary and proper to secure to citizens of each State all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States, and to all persons in the several States equal protection in the rights of life, liberty, and property." This amendment was laid over.

NEWS ITEMS.

During his last visit to New York General Grant has been presented by several of our leading citizens with a purse of one hundred thousand dollars.



The winter on the Pacific coast has been even more severe than heretofore reported. Communication with Montana has been cut off by the deep snows for months, and in Idaho there has been great suffering and loss of life. It is said that two hundred Mormons on the way to that territory are known to have perished.

The Georgia Legislature has sent Commissioners to Washington for the purpose of requesting the Government to remove the military rule from the State.

The chief medical officer of the Freedmen's Bureau reports that during the month of December the sick number of freedmen in hospital at the various Bureau hospitals in the Southern States, principally for malarious diseases, was 11,115; in January, 1866, the number was 9,253; discharged, 12,495.

Major-General Joseph R. Palmer, commanding in Kentucky, has been urged by the publishers of the Louisville Journal to allow the publication of that paper in the same manner as before the issuance of the late order. He answers that he can not grant the request, but that the order will be withdrawn as soon as possible.

"More than 20,000 persons, who were for a longer or shorter period in the employ of the steam-boat interest of Louisville, have been thrown out of employment by the overflowing the Government of the State of Kentucky, which has rendered it unsafe for any subjection to which the revolutionary government may have been subjected to be allowed back to their former homes in many cases by communities that regard them as traitors. Besides the large sum expended in the support of citizens and soldiers are objects of prejudice, riflles, and other property destroyed by the Government of the State of the State for the penal distribution of justice in many instances, and the general disturbance of the country has in the same instruments of the wages of labor, and the general disturbance of the country has in the same instruments of the wages of labor, and the general disturbance of the country has in the same instruments of the wages of labor

JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER.

DR. DRAPER, whose portrait we give on this page, was born near Liverpool, in 1811. His academical education was much more varied and extensive than is commonly the case. He had every advantage that could be obtained from public and private instruction, and as was at that time the custom, especially directed his attention to classical and mathematical studies, in both of which he became very proficient.

Selecting the profession of medicine as his vocation, he commenced his studies in the University of London, and subsequently completed them in the University of Pennsylvania, where he graduated in 1836. At that time there were very few persons in the United States who had turned their thoughts to Chemistry, and scarcely any who had had the great advantage he possessed of a thorough drilling in European laboratories. His inaugural Thesis for the degree of Doctor of Medicine, which was altogether experimental, received from the Faculty of the University of Pennsylvania the unusual distinction of being published at their special request.

For some years after graduating Dr. DRAPER practiced medicine in Virginia. He then became connected with Hampden Sidney College in that State, having received the appointment of Professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy. In 1838 he was elected to the Professorship of Chemistry in the University of New York, and has remained connected with that institution ever since.

His original contributions to science are very varied and voluminous. They are mathematical, chemical, physiological, botanical, geological. His medical writings were published for the most part in the "American Journal of Medical Sciences," Hay's Journal, those on non-professional subjects partly in Silliman's Journal, and more extensively in foreign Reviews. If collected together they would make several volumes. They have been translated into French, German, Italian, and extensively republished in England. Indeed so identified is Dr. DRAPER with the scientific reputation of our city all over Europe, that his experiments and memoirs are constantly referred to as those of "Dr. DRAPER of New York," as though the name of our city was a part of his name.

Many of these publications contain experimental solutions of difficult problems in Chemistry and Physiology. There is probably no private person in America who has expended more money in a purely scientific direction than Dr. DRAPER. Whatever discoveries he has made, and they have been very numerous, he has freely given to the world. He has never taken out a patent for any of them, nor sought to make them sources of personal emolument. He took the first photographic portrait of the human face, at a time when the possibility of doing so was universally denied. Had he sought to secure all the advantage from it, he might have made from that alone an enormous fortune. Probably more than ten thousand persons in the United States are obtaining a living from that invention.

Twenty years before general attention was directed to what is termed "Spectrum Analysis" in Europe, he had published some very important monographs in relation to it. They were, however, in advance of the times, and their value is only now beginning to be appreciated. Thus Professor TYNDALL in his "Rede Lecture," last year, before the University of Cambridge, shows that there exists ments are at the basis of the modern theory of the Radiation of Heat. Professor Youmans, in a recent review of Dr. Draper's "Civil Policy," mentions that one of the most distinguished scientific gentlemen in England said to him, "You Americans have a very remarkable man in Dr. Draper; beyond all question your first physicist. He is a most original and consummate experimenter, and I can not but regret that he leaves the field for which he is so eminently fitted." The regret was but natural in a passionate lover as well as an illustrious cultivator of Physical Science.

To the advancement of Physiology Dr. Draper has contributed probably as much as any living man. Thoroughly skilled in Anatomy, there is scarcely one of the animal functions which he has not made the subject of experimental investigation. Of his treatise on Physiology, published eight or nine years ago, it may be fairly affirmed that it contained more new discoveries and explanations than any other similar work. It became at once the text-book of many of our medical colleges. It showed that its author belonged to the party of progress in science, as other later works have shown that he does in politics and history.

Dr. Draper is a member of the leading scientific and philosophical societies in America and Europe. Honorary degrees of all kinds have been conferred on him by various colleges. For many years he has been President of the Medical Department of the University of New York, and has given much of his time to the administration of the affairs of that institution. His physiological studies and scientific ideas have left him almost necessarily to the cultivation of History. His "History of the Intellectual Development of Europe" and "Thoughts on the Future Civil Policy of America" have had an extraordinary circulation, the former having been translated and reprinted in many different languages. These books have made him more extensively known to the general public than any of his former physical, mathematical, or medical writings.

In these books is recognized at once the same turn of thought that gave such celebrity to his Physiology. He belongs to the party of Progress, the party of the Future. His views are those of the school which insists on the application of exact science to questions of Politics and History. One of the recent English Reviews, comparing his writings with others of that school, says: "In part, perhaps, from his medical education, and in part from the original constitution of his mind, Dr. Draper is more predominantly scientific than Mr. Buckle. The latter was essentially a literary man, his scientific knowledge mostly acquired by reading, being simply an accessory. But with Dr. Draper it is the basis of his intellectual attainments, the fundamental principle which tends to shape all else into its own likeness. Hence his clear perception of the presence of law, and his unswerving reliance on the regularity and cyclical repetition of historic events—ideas which generally appear vague and hypothetical, if not absolutely chimerical, to a mind cast in a purely literary mould."

His last work, "Thoughts on the Future Civil Policy of America," has attracted more attention than usually falls to the lot of such books. Originally nothing more than half a dozen fugitive lectures delivered before a miscellaneous audience, and, as its title of "Thoughts" indicates, not intended as a complete or systematic production, the ideas it conveys on matters of public policy have been received as of very serious import. Whatever their intrinsic value may be, it is undeniable that they have made a very profound impression. It is understood that in his "History of the American Civil War," now in preparation, these views will be extended and systematized, and their application in the case of the United States more completely shown.

Dr. Draper spends most of his time not devoted to professional pursuits in retirement, at his country seat at Hastings, in Westchester County. He married a Miss Gaskell. Of his three sons, one is Professor of Physiology in the Free Academy of this city and in the Medical College; another is Adjunct Professor of Chemistry to his father in the University; he it is who constructed the great reflecting telescope—the largest in America—at the Observatory at Hastings; the third is an engineer of rising eminence.

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

INSIDE.

A CHRONICLE OF SECESSION.

By George F. Harrington.

IN TWENTY-FOUR CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER IX.

And so we return at the point from which these pages set forth—the fall of Fort Donelson, and all the boundless astonishment which followed it. We unmoored our bark and set sail under the strong wind beginning to blow at that date; and though we have been compelled to reef sail, and lie by for the last few chapters in order to get our ship's company thoroughly acquainted with each other, we will from this moment spread all sail, drive before the ever-increasing blast, and gain such haven in the end as it may please Heaven to grant.

"Exactly as I have all along said it would be, only far worse," Guy Brooks, Esq., is remarking to his pastor in the study of the latter at the very hour Brother Barker is reasoning over the same topic—the fall of Fort Donelson—with placid Mrs. Sorel under Colonel Juggins's hospitable though somewhat leaky roof. In fact, every person in the South—doubtless in the North also—over ten years of age is eagerly engaged at this instant upon this same theme. There in Somerville, the excitement being so intense, it is but natural a warm-hearted, large-limbed Kentuckian like Guy Brooks should feel deeply also. And strongly disposed to converse, too. Not in public, however. The time had been when no man spoke his mind more warmly and freely before Bob Withers, Sam Peters, Brother Barker, Colonel Ret Roberts, Colonel Juggins—ay, even before the dread Lamum himself, apt to put it all in savage print ten minutes after; before all Somerville, for that matter, than the lawyer. On the streets, in his own office with his heels upon his table, in good Mrs. Ellis's store, and every where else, the Kentuckian was wont to give his opinion upon whatever the topic might be.

Not so in these days. The lawyer has altered into a grave and silent man, with only occasional eruptions, showing that the fires within are only intenser for being smothered. What he would have said every where before, he now utters only when with such intimate friends as Mr. Ferguson and his pastor.

[The Fall of Fort Donelson.]

In every city, village, and neighborhood throughout the South it is touching to see how the Union men cling to each other. The ship having passed completely into the hands of mutineers, these poor disarmed passengers in the cabin below the hatches battened down upon them, cluster instinctively together for comfort, speculating with each under their breath upon the storm raging around and the breakers ahead. One of the craziest effects of Secession was the breaking up on every square mile throughout the South of many a friendship between even the oldest and most intimate friends. Worse still, families were broken up, son turned against father, brother against brother, wife against husband. In this latter and worst case, in nine instances out of ten it was the wife who was the Secessionist, while to many a husband nothing was left but either to engage in bitter and unceasing strife at home, or to play as well as he could the patient part of poor Dr. Warner. Yet it would be telling only half the truth here if we did not add that, where friends and relatives did hold to their country alike, the ties between them were immeasurably strengthened thereby; friend loving friend, father loving son, brother esteeming brother, why valuing husband just so much the more as they thought alike, felt alike here, where thought and feeling had their intertwined roots about the soul's very centre. Ay, and persons never before acquainted, at enmity even, came now together into cordial friendship upon this one and sufficient ground.

"I frankly confess," said Edward Arthur, drawn toward his burly friend as he had never been before, "every thing is altogether unlike what I anticipated."

"Of course," replied the lawyer. "You ministers are only too ignorant of human nature, especially its darker side—which is all over," added the lawyer. "You preach total depravity from the pulpit as an abstract doctrine, yet ignore it in all your dealings with men or expectations from them. Do you remember that day I brought the first placard here for you to read? I prophesied then how it would be. As I knew at the time, the whole programme had already been arranged by Lamum and Colonel Ret Roberts, the Colonel at the very time solemnly sworn as a member of the United States Senate to uphold its Constitution—only one instance of a thousand similar perjuries. And yet we were all so horrified at Louis Napoleon! As we all know, there is a Colonel Ret Roberts and a Lamum, in some stage of development, in every town throughout the land. The meeting called and held by them in our Court-house here, not a corporal's guard of the people there; the furious resolutions adopted calling a State Convention; the bullying document framed in the paper, was but a specimen of like meetings engineered by like men over the State. And this was the spontaneous, indignant, unanimous uprising of the people! You know it all. Before the masses can realize it, lo! a Convention is in actual session—a Convention voted for, and delegates thereto elected, by only a miserable minority of the people.

President Johnson addressing his fellow-citizens at Washington, February 22, 1866.

"And who composed that minority?" said the Kentuckian, becoming more and more excited. "First, the politicians themselves—men who were trade and barter politics—men who saw their power and plunder pinching forever from their grasp unless they could pass that last desperate move. And even they accomplished their end only by superhuman exertion through the press and from the stump. Next came the wild secession neighborhood, following their party leaders from the very force of habit. Last, the people, fancying themselves the only friends against the North. Remedy? God Heavens!"

"You forget, Mr. Brooks," said Mr. Arthur, "where we may readily and excellent remedy."

"Who voted for the Convention, and for delegates to that Convention?" interrupted the lawyer. "Yes, General Jackson, for instance, and all his class; and why? Because Lamum assured them Secession was only a step to Reconstruction—merely a peaceful Secession! He and his no more voted for the dissolution of the Union, and for war if necessary, than did Clay or I, or Berrien, Webster, Everett, and the rest of us who refused to vote about a Convention at all."

"I half thought at the time a terrible mistake was being then made," said his companion. "If Union men throughout the State had all refused to participate in the election of a Convention when it was first proposed by the Secessionists, had voted for it, they would have been into it, too."

"We would have seized their one piece of artillery, turned it upon the Disunionists, and with it blown them to the devil, Democrat!" said the lawyer. "Ah, it is easy to talk! Or, if the Governor had but planted himself upon the Constitution from the first. But what is the use of talking about that now?"

"You know Secession was submitted to the vote of the people afterward," suggested the minister.

"And with great difficulty was that precious Convention—that child of fraud, it is," said he. "And when it was done! By that time hasn't the politicians fanned the fire into a conflagration? You remember the vote. It was openly declared then that the man who refused to vote Secession was a base submissionist. As to him who voted against it, that man was an Abolitionist, and the sooner hung the better. Freeman! And yet tens of thousands of the best men in the State, scattered apart as they were among the excited, infuriated—"

"Don't let us say fools," interrupted the minister. "Let us not keep our tongues too carefully from the violent language of the day."

"Did not Clay vote to secede?" continued Mr. Brooks. "Yes and I, Ellis, Webster, Ferguson, and the like, did vote against Secession; but I know, and you know, many a man who dared not go to the polls—was sick himself, or had a sick child or wife, or had pressing business somewhere, among a cowardly excess of the sort. Even of those who did go to the polls, how many were prevented by the crowd about the booths, and couldn't walk, or who disliked going into such excitement, and all that, didn't vote at last. I tell you, Sir," said the excited Kentuckian, "the Signers of the Declaration of Independence left an illustrious name; but I will hand down the fact that I voted against Secession to my posterity as the noblest act of my life; my declaration of independence of falsehood and folly, made when at their highest flow."

"But a majority of the votes cast were for Secession," said the minister, after a pause.

"A majority of the votes cast you may well say," replied Guy Brooks. "But you know as well as I whether it was a majority of the voters in the State."

"And when came the raising of troops against the South," said Mr. Arthur, reflectively.

"Yes; and then all was in the South but, in the flush of the moment, mere disposition alan I to meet force with force," began the lawyer. "At first it was a feeling sudden and universal. I think you were not altogether as clerical in your language, Mr. Arthur, my friend, as you might have been," he continued, with a smile. But there he stopped.

Ah, that terrible test of conviction and principle! Guy Brooks sat in silence, tugging plumply at the hair behind his right ear with restless fingers, his broad, brown face no longer open, but full of weak evasion; thought as many know only when bosom and brain are at cross purpose, when feeling and principle are at strife for ascendency.

He said nothing, but he thought, thought! And multitudes at the South were at the same instant thinking, thinking, thinking—not saying a syllable of their thoughts even to brother or wife.

If his disjointed thoughts could have been written down they would have run somewhat in this manner: "We of the South—Southerners! Democrats right of self-government. But that democratic old Andrew Jackson and his native South Carolina in 1832? Humph! The old General would not have actually fought Carolina? Perhaps. South fighting for its very existence as a nation? Yes; and the United States Government fighting, since need is, for its prior existence. Secession in this case? Then Secession legitimatized at the North, East, West, in the South over and over again. Humph! Universe, disintegration, dissolution, death! Wrong so fight against that?"

And on and on—millions at the South on the same track that instant with him—plodded Guy Brooks slowly, painfully through mire and fog. Alas, the systematic effort to drown one's own soul with the clamor of the times! Multitudes of the noblest men of the South were forced to conceal their train of thought from others, from themselves. Alas, for the laborious process of self-silencing! Miserable dissembling to one's own self as well as to others!

With some it became settled into a hopeless habit, for which "the peculiar times are to blame, Heaven knows, not I; I can not help it!"

With many, very many, the soul came out of the mire at last, to the clearly, to stand firmly to speak boldly. But that daylight has not arrived as yet to Guy Brooks, sitting there that hour in his pastor's study.

"I am as well satisfied as a man can be on any moral question that Secession is a great wrong, a crime against man, a sin against God," the minister, as he says it, walks to and fro across his study, his hands clasped behind him, his chin drooped upon his bosom. "But then the Battle of Manassas! At the time it seemed to me God's approbation of Secession. Not that I thought for an instant the Almighty approved of Secession," said the minister, hastily correcting himself; "that I never can bring myself to believe. I mean, it began to seem as if the Almighty intended permitting the deed, as he permitted the partition of Poland. So far as we could gather from our papers, the North had pretty much given the South up. But now this sudden, determined, apparently overwhelming advance upon the South—"

The speaker hardly uttered to himself even the rest of his sentence. You who know, could you have found just at that date a Southern-born man at the South who would then have intimated even to himself, much less to his dearest friend, a wish for the success of the Federal arms?

Guy Brooks and Mr. Arthur never were more busy than in keeping themselves from distinct thought upon the matter.

"And do you suppose," said the lawyer, at last, "that the politicians did not know all this time of the immense preparations being made by the Federals on shore and sea at the North? No, Sir. It was no ignorance on their part. From the first they have studiously kept the people at the South in profound ignorance. Look at Bowling Green! Who dreamed the Confederate Army there was so small?"

"It certainly was poor policy," said his companion.

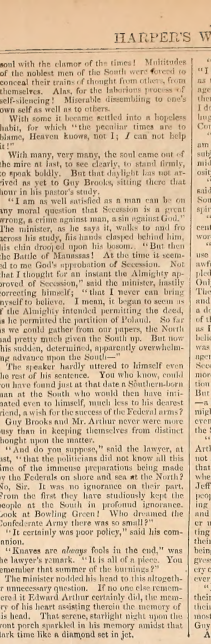
"Knaves are always fools in the end," was the lawyer's remark. "It is all of a piece. You remember that summer of the burnings?"

The minister nodded his head to this altogether unnecessary question. If no one else remembered it Edward Arthur certainly did, the memory of his heart assisting therein the memory of his head. That serene, starlight night upon the front porch sparkled in his memory amidst that dark time like a diamond set in jet.

"You may remember," continued his friend, "I had my idea then, as well as Ferguson his, as to those fires, poisonings, conspiracies, bondagents, and all. I did not utter my suspicion then to a soul. I could not believe it possible. I do believe it now," he added, with a blaze of intelligence flashing in the eye.

"Well?" inquired the other. "I confess I am just as much puzzled this hour upon the subject as I ever was." And he paused in the midst of his walk before the lawyer with curiosity in every line of his face.

"Sir, I suspected it then; I know it now," said the lawyer. "The whole excitement in the South then was the result of a regular conspiracy."



"So Lamum said at the time," not so innocent, however, of his friend's meaning as the words would indicate.

"And the unprincipled—yes, it is better to use no epithets; it may become a habit these awful times, and accustom us—the unprincipled man," continued the lawyer, "was right. Only he was himself one of the conspirators. The whole plot was devised and worked by him and his masters. I tell you, Sir, not more than a dozen or two of the ablest and most desperate of the leaders may have been in the secret; but as I believe in the existence of Satan, so do I believe that the whole excitement that summer was plotted and carried on by them and by their agents to prepare the people at the South for Secession. It was not enough to split the Baltimore Convention, and so bring about the election of Lincoln—that was in the programme. But they knew that even if Lincoln was elected—a Black Republican I mean, whatever his name might be—the South was not ripe for Secession even for that; and that is the way they injured the South, as by a hot-house process."

"And the John Brown Raid?" asked Mr. Arthur, with a smile. "No, Mr. Brooks, I cannot agree with you there. I have long thought that political ability, and political success, too, whether on the part of Louis Napoleon, or of Jeff Davis and his set, consists not so much in people suppose in creating or even in anticipating events. No; it consists rather in instantly and adroitly seizing upon events, even altogether unforeseen events, as they arise, exaggerating them, turning them, working them toward their own end. The destruction of the Union being the end fixed upon, the politicians in Congress, from the stand, by the papers, and in every other way, have strained every nerve to use every event a help toward that."

"And all the time the people, intent only on their daily matters, dreamed of nothing about their country but that it was the greatest and most permanent government on earth!" said Guy Brooks.

And yet a great many people at the South

THE PARSON AND THE LAWYER.

hold with the lawyer upon that incendiary summer up to this hour. Not Mr. Ferguson, of course, as to every thing being worked by the Disunionists to their own deadly end, he believed that so firmly as any man. But for those burnings, the excessive dryness and heat of the season is the full and sufficient explanation.

Look at the papers if you doubt there being a systematic conspiracy as I say," urged the lawyer. "Do you not see how invariably they have exaggerated into the monstrous every thing favorable to their Confederacy—invariably, systematically distorting or suppressing every thing in the least favorable to the Union to it? The tremendous clatter they keep up on the bells at every rumor of victory, only a part of the same plot. They desire to establish a manufacturing interest at the South; they have begun it with a vengeance in the manufacturing of lies—most of all material, and cut of no material at all."

As we have observed, it was just after the fall of Fort Donelson that this talk took place in this conversation with his pastor. Time was to teach him something of the capacity of human nature for lying, and to believe in, fledged and feathered what he or any other man could at that day have deemed impossible.

"NASHVILLE SECURED BY THE FEDERALS! NOT ONE SOUL THERE SO BASE AS TO WELCOME THEM. BUDEMAN ATROCITIES ALREADY CONTRITE PEOPLE! NORTH ALABAMA SUBDUED! GRAND ADVANCE UPON VIRGINIA! FLEET TO DESCEND THE MISSISSIPPI! ATTEMPT SOON TO BE MADE ON NEW ORLEANS! THE PEOPLE DEPOSED PEOPLE READY TO HURL THEM BACK. THEIR VERY ADVANCE PERMITTED BY OUR GENERALS AS PART OF THE BRILLIANT STRATEGY WHICH IS SURE IN ITS FRUITS!" read Mr. Arthur from the headings of the last Somerville Star lying on the table. "It really does seem as if the North was about making a determined effort," he continued, after a pause.

"It does indeed; you may well say so," replied his friend, with tones in singular contrast with the gloomy shake of the head which accompanied them. "And it was not only unjust, but to the last degree exasperating to Lamum and his set, the way in which the Union people began to come out into the open after their retreats, like bees on the first burst of summer; and the frequency and fullness and unction with which they spoke of the 'late lamentable occurrence.'"

Good Secessionists shrank instinctively from all conversation with them; but their was a wonderful degree of sudden visiting among themselves on the part of the Union people. No two of them could meet on the street, or upon the roads around, but they must stop to shake their heads together in sad concert over the folly and intelligence, and so agree that "matters must be much worse even than our papers represent them, if we only knew." Very sad their looks, very doleful their tones, very despanding their hearts, like to the grief of the next heir beside the dying patient of the present evening.

"I lay awake last night thinking, and I am ready to make you a prophecy this morning about the war," said Mr. Arthur, slowly tearing the disastrous news into strips.

"No, Sir, I had rather not," said the lawyer, promptly. "I was prophesying awake all night to last me a long time. Brother Barker dropped into my room at the hotel last night, and kept me up till three o'clock. 'I am not speaking with an infidel, but with a believer in the Scripture; and I feel to believe I can convince you from the Bible of God's evidence' he said, and that God is going certainly to establish and bless it,' he said. With that he whips out of his pocket his little pocket Bible, and goes at me exactly as he used to do about points of doctrine, only with far more zeal."

"I do not remember any Scripture leaning upon Secession," began Mr. Arthur.

"You are behind the times, Sir. You have seen a book, written by a Dr. Baldwin, proving how the United States is clearly alluded to in Scripture. Since Secession Baldwin's ideas has been seized upon and arranged to prove Secession and all its glorious results. Oh, I can not remember half the men's sermons! I listened to it as part of the business of the week with some curiosity. Alder and better men than poor Brother Darker originated the ideas; he has pumped upon it, as his habit is, daily, and is riding it to death. Even Captain Simmons has caught the infection. Fullest of memories of Sabbath-school and Scripture when drunkest, the Captain's delicious knowledge until so warranted being as invisible as the writing in lime juice, he now brings, when time, an amazing number of scriptures to illustrate the subject in hand."

"Can you not remember at least one of his texts?" said the minister, all the theologian beginning to stir within him. "I am curious to know what so insanity can find to favor the Confederacy in Scripture."

"Well," said the lawyer, his fingers busy behind his right ear, "there is the stone cut out of the mountain without hands which smote the image—in Daniel, I believe. The mountain is the United States Government; the stone is the Confederate Government, which is to grow into a great kingdom, and in some way or other fill the whole earth. Ah, yes, the whole of the Scripture emblem of the Confederacy, you have only to turn to the places in which it occurs in Scripture to find pieces of reference to that Government! Whoever fell upon the stone was to be broken; upon whomsoever it was to fall it would grind him to powder—I do not remember where it occurs in the Bible—emblematic of the victorious strength of the Confederate Government. The North and East are once or two on account of slavery. Very well,' says Brother Barker, 'the Bible expressly says of the Confederacy, it shall be a stone of stumbling and a rock

...ce one." All the rest of the world is infidel, ...e is right, because it rejects the Bible decree of slavery as a divine right. In other words, the Confederacy is the law, lingering abode on earth of pure religion. "Perfectly clear that," says Brother Barker; "does not Scripture say on this rock or stone I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it? which settles the result of this war upon us by the North," he said. Yes, he thinks when once you have the color he calls a key, like the symbolical meaning of the wand stone, you can unlock all prophecy. There is the word seven also; he makes it refer in Scripture to the seven States which first seceded; and he runs that word down through the Bible. Seven women shall lay hold on one man; that means those seven States laid hold upon, to feed and protect them, a Confederate Government over them all, and so on. Then there is a prophecy about the Mount of Olives; mountain in Scripture, he says, means the old United States Government splitting asunder by a line running east and west, referring to Secession. "Thou breakest the ships of Tarshish with an east wind;" Europe lying to the east of us, this is a prophecy of the raising of the blockade by the European states. There was a vast deal more to the same effect, but I have forgotten it. But to do Mary body justice," continued the lawyer, "though people rather like to hear Brother Barker's expositions of prophecy, feel strengthened by them, I have not heard of any one as yet decidedly embracing them. "They may be correct; we hope they are correct," is what his hearers say, but that is all.

"To me such a thing is one of the darkest features of the times," said the minister, very sadly. "If ever there was a time when religion and the ministers of religion should hold themselves aloof from the infatuation of the hour it is now; for if there is no restraining influence exerted on the rising tide of worldliness and wickedness by those who profess to be set apart to restrain? I know of no other influence used of God for this purpose."

"I fear ministers are going to be far worse than you or I have ever imagined. And this brings me to the matter I called this morning especially to speak about," continued Guy Brooks, rubbing his upper lip with his rueful finger.

Ah, that sinking of the heart, which tells most surely in the face, and unpeeling of the skin due the mercury in the barometer of approaching storm! Not yet had Edward Arthur got used to it; though he was to be made a stronger man, and by this very process.

"What do you mean?" he asked.

"I fear we are going to have trouble in our church—great trouble," said his friend.

"I think not," said the minister, earnestly, but with more than his tones often in his heart. "You remember I announced from the pulpit, at the outset of Secession, that I intended to confine myself exclusively to the spiritual duties of my calling, and to keep politics utterly out of my sermons and my prayers."

"It doesn't matter," replied his friend. "Do you suppose there is a person in Somerville but knows your views in regard to Secession?"

"I can only help that," replied the minister. "I have the deepest and clearest convictions on the subject—how could I but have? I have all my life been accustomed to express myself freely to my friends in conversation on every topic which came up. Upon this topic, one so continually up, as it has been, I can not but feel the deepest interest, I have done the same. What else could I do? You would not have me dissemble my Christian profession, I know. I have sometimes wished I had been able from the very first never to have uttered a syllable on the subject one way or another to a human being."

"You would have possessed supernatural strength to have done so. And even if you had," continued his friend, "your very silence would have had the worst possible construction placed upon it. How could you be silent, people would have said, amidst the universal enthusiasm, unless because you could not, would not join in it?"

"But what have I done to imperil the church?" asked the young pastor.

"You do not pray for the Confederacy."

"Why, Mr. Brooks, you know how often we have discussed that question. 'The powers that be are ordained of God,' and to the present powers that be I have submitted as to the providence, for the time, of God. The Bible commands us to pray for those powers. So I do every Sabbath from the pulpit in the exact language of the Scripture."

"You have never prayed for the success of the Confederate Government," said the lawyer.

"No, Sir," said Mr. Arthur, "I never have in private nor in public. What is more, I never will. Mr. Brooks," continued the minister, deeply agitated, "I believe in my soul, as before God, that this whole movement is a wicked crime, a sin. Men better than I may not believe so, but I do believe so. For my life, after all the thought, reading, and prayer I have given for years to the subject, I can not but believe so, always have believed so, always will. Can I, then, pray for the success of a wrong, a crime, a sin? I believe this whole movement is ruinous in every sense of the word to the whole land. I believe its success would be specially disastrous to my native South. Can I stand up, then, and ask the Almighty to bless, to prosper, to grant success to the movement? No, Sir, I would die first! Scripture distinctly commanded what Timothy and every other minister then was to do. Nero hung then on the throne, a tyrant, and the vilest of tyrants. The command is left for the guidance of every Christian now. I obey that command literally and to the letter in my prayer every Sabbath in the pulpit—more than that I can not do."

"I perfectly agree with you; I heartily and entirely approve your course," said his friend. "The plain truth is, I would not, a good many of us would not, enter the church if you pursued any other course. Yet it will not satisfy the Secessionists in our church. They have been growing at it for some time. As the excitement deepens, and it is deepening every hour, they will not stand it. They—"

"You know I have often offered them my resignation. It is ready at any instant," interrupted the young minister.

"Yes, and your resignation is the closing of the church," said his friend, gloomily.

"I had thought my course met the approval of at least the overwhelming majority of the church," said the minister.

"So it does," said the lawyer; "but times are rapidly coming when even those entirely with you in sentiment will not dare to say so. You see I know more than most men. It is not my mistake, but I dread even more than that. You who by habit give yourself to religion, and keep aloof from the excitements of the streets, can not imagine how this excitement is beginning to eat into the very pores even of those who entirely agree with you in political sentiment. Unless I mistake, you will find even they will cease taking any interest in religion; will cease from attending public worship entirely. This is the paralysis creeping over even the best Christians."

The heart of the pastor had been already too full of foreboding to be able to grasp the truth of all this.

"But what do you advise?" he asked at length, sick, or deadly sick at heart.

"Simply that you pursue the even tenor of your way," said his friend. "I have told you all this in order to keep you thoroughly aware of the exact state of matters. You should feel no mortification even if a mere majority prevail to yourself. You need not I should tell you the sentiment of the church toward you. But we are passing through a crisis of unparalleled excitement social and religious as well as civil. Your trial will be that of, I suppose, every pastor in the land. If you could have counseled that would not mend matters, for then the Union people would be against you. Let us bear up as we best may; no man can be sure of his position in some shape by the accursed step we have taken off the precipice," said the lawyer, discarding in his excitement the use of his h's—a special mark of excitement with him—"a revolution social and religious as well as civil. Your trial will be that of, I suppose, every pastor in the land. If you could have counseled that would not mend matters, for then the Union people would be against you. Let us bear up as we best may; no man can be sure of his position in some shape by the accursed step we have taken off the precipice," said the lawyer, discarding in his excitement the use of his h's—a special mark of excitement with him—"a revolution social and religious as well as civil. 'I am sorry you are so cast down; you are as pale as a sheet.'"

And Brooks said was the conversation which followed between the friends, drawn now nearer together than ever before.

"I fear you have hardly need nay," added the lawyer, as he rose at last to leave. "We are entering on times of great scarcity and pressure. You must look well to your flock. To my last cent you may depend on me. There is Ferguson, too—but I am ashamed even to suppose you do not know all this without being told. Good-by!"

With the door locked, the curtains down, all the young minister had had strength to do was to sink upon his knees before One nearer to him and more to him than all the universe beside. Amidst the wreck of all else, his soul still clung. It was left him. It was not only his church, his old friends, Alice too—Alice? But he never could pray for her more. Strange! They had been as much a matter of course to him as his breathing. Long he kneeled there in earnest, fervent prayer. He had lost everything before, but here was the wreck to him of all things at once. Alas, he was only entering upon the trial! It was in him as yet impossible to see the awful remainder of Agony was yet before him.

"I fear you are unwell, Mr. Arthur," said Mrs. Bowles to him at supper. "We wondered you did not come to dinner." But Mrs. Bowles was not in her manner and tones Mrs. Bowles of other days. And Alice, too! "But I can not help it!" groaned Edward Arthur.

THE DEAR PRESIDENT.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, the Dear President,
Lay in the Round Hall at the Capitol,
And there the people came to look their last.

There came the widow weeded for her mate;
There came the mother sorrowing for her son;
There came the orphan mourning for its sire.

There came the soldier bearing home his wound;
There came the slave who felt his broken chain;
There came the mourners of a blackened land.

Through the dark April day, a ceaseless throng,
They pass'd the coffin, saw the sleeping face,
And, blessing it, in silence moved away.

And one, a poet, spake within his breast:
"It hasn't him not to praise him when alive,
And me it can not harm to praise him dead.

"Too oft the muse has blush'd to speak of men—
She need not blush to speak her best of him,
And still to speak her best of him is dumb.

"O lofty wisdom's low simplicity!
O moral tenderness of moral power!
No man e'er held so much of power so meek.

"He was the husband of the husbandless;
He was the father of the fatherless;
He was the heart he sighed the common woe.

"His voice was like a father's to his sons:
As to a father's voice they hearing, came—
Eager to offer advice and hear and die.

"The mild bondbreaker, servant of his Lord,
He took the sword, in the name of Peace,
And touch'd the fetter and the hound was free.

"He shall not stand among the historic lines,
Strong barbarous chiefs and kingly conquerors,
But with the pure and great Republicans:

"Those who have been unselfish, wise, and good,
Bringers of Light and Pilots in the dark,
Bearers of crosses, Servants of the World.

"And always in his Land of birth and death
Be his fond name—sacred in the people's hearts—
To Graham Lincoln, the Dear President."

WASHINGTON, February 12, 1866.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

THE LARGEST ROOM IN THE WORLD.—The "room for improvement."

Shooting Folly as it flies is, of course, a sportsman's work, but it is well to take an occasional shot at Wisdom as it struts.

PROVERBIAL EUTOPIAN.

You should never a donkey with caviar feed,
Nor cast forth your pearls before asinine brood;
To a cow we love better a plain bubble weed,
And the offer on child to clue.

BALANCE OF EVILS.—"It is a painful thing," said Jones, who had been deceived, "to have penniless friends, and to find them out." "Yes," said Brown, "but find out happen seldom. The plague of life is that you are always liable to find them at home."

A NEW CRY.

In England the question is, "Where are the Police?" In Ireland it is, "Where's Stephens?"

A physician of Magdeburg, who has just died prematurely, was in the habit, when he felt it on record in full will that his longevity was due to his having always slept with his head to the north and his feet to the south; so that the magnetic current passed through him and increased his vitality.

Why is a church singing-book like a school-house?—Because it is full of little lines.

A FEW CORRELATIVE THOUGHTS.

The best sort of woman is one who can turn her hand to any thing, be it a broom or a bonnet too.

There is a bankruptcy even in the natural world. The day breaks and the light fails.

A jury-mast regulated by the law of storms?

Are you wedded to your own opinion? Then never court loyalty.

Did you ever meet with a "sudden sword?" How will one would match with a single stick?

A glo-sing does not cut as a knife; a saw.

It may be easy to cook accounts, but it is a very hard matter to digest them.

How odd, yet how unappreciable it would be, to go to a sermon as a critic only!

Some people like to argue in a vicious circle; we prefer to talk in a virtuous one.

If you jump at conclusions, you may take a leap in the dark.

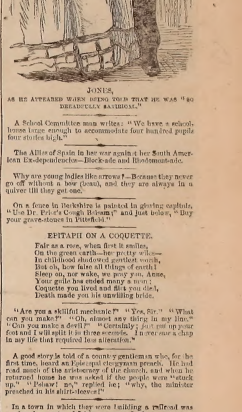
It is quite possible to have a brown study in a green room.

What corresponds to an Archdeacon?—A consulting priest.

"Jane, has that only fellow cleared off the snow from the pavement?" "Yes, Sir." "Did he clear it off with alacrity, Jane?" "No, Sir; with a shovel."

We have been asked the question, What material makes the best bed-comforter? Being inexperienced in such matters, we refer the query to the Committee of the Hudson County Fair, who put it this way: "Best bed-comforter—Mrs. Jane Van Dolrick."

THE HARVEST IN IRELAND.—Two or three hundred young sub-cares have already been out in Wicklow, on a plantation of Earl Fitzwilliam at Shillelagh. Brisk hands are in consequence to be looked for at the markets, and there will be a fine show of beaded Dannybrooks. A few in-a-dentings may be expected there, followed in most cases by a fall.

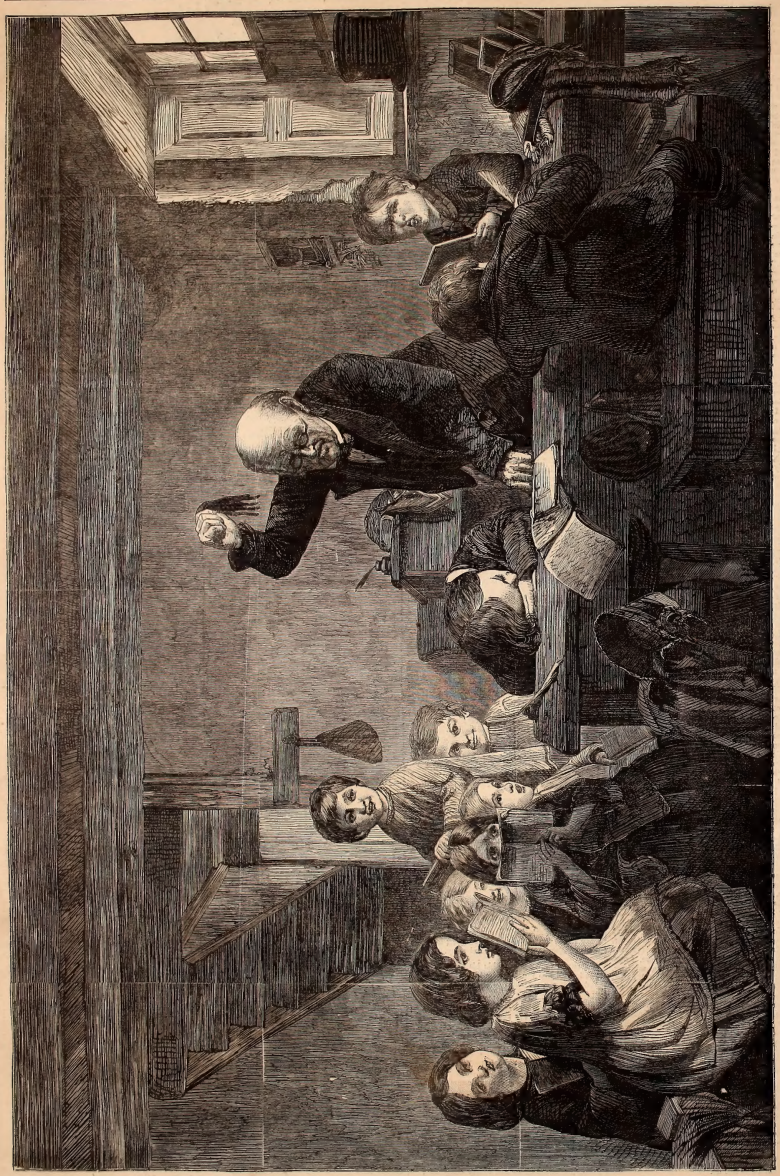


What comes after cheese?—Mouse.

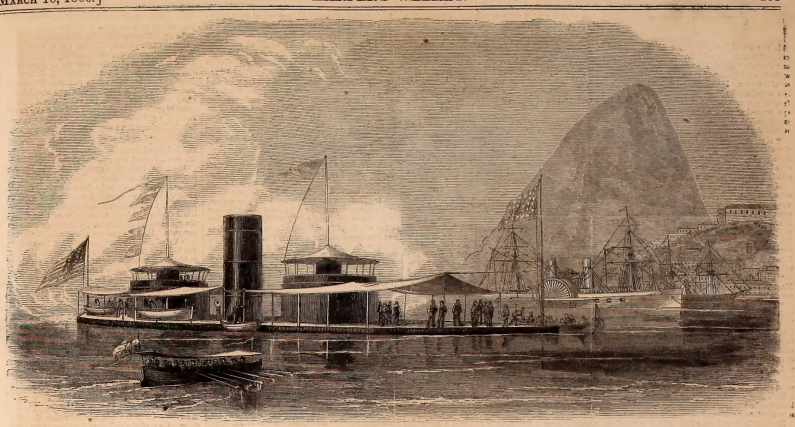
Stupid people may eat, but shouldn't talk. Their mouths would do well as hooks of depots, but not rules of issue.

Why is a married man like a candle?—Because he sometimes gets out at night when he ought not to.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.—A smart young lawyer hearing it stated in a sermon that "man is merely a machine," remarked, "Then I suppose an attorney may be said to be a Swing Machine."



AFTER THE BALL.



(REGINALD SLEEPS IN HIS FATHER'S BEDROOM.)

PAPA. "Why, how's this, Reginald? Not in Bed yet? It's nearly Four o'Clock! You should have been asking Hours ago!"

REGINALD. "How! And pray, why not in particular, Papa?"

"CAUGHT NAPPING."—[See Page 156.]

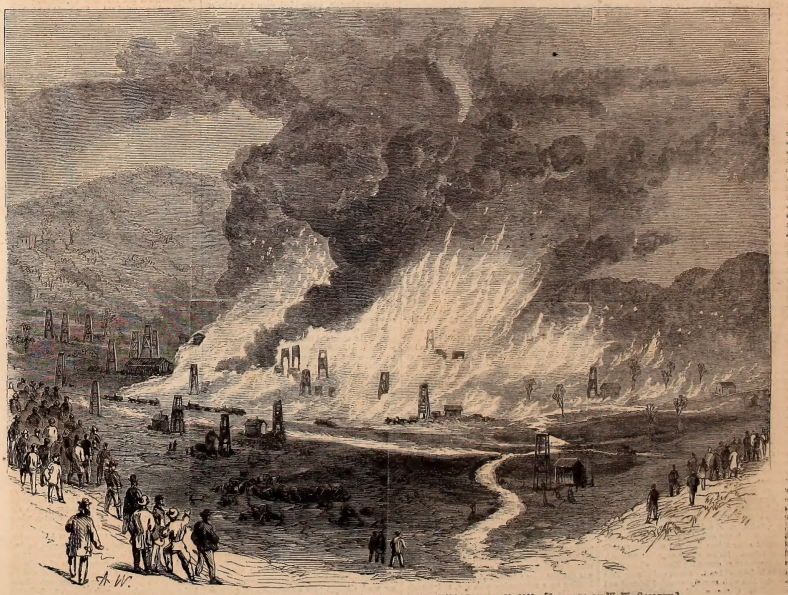
THE EMPEROR OF BRAZIL VISITING THE UNITED STATES IRON-CLAD "MONADNOCK" IN THE HARBOR OF RIO.

VISIT OF DON PEDRO TO THE "MONADNOCK."

A LETTER from Rio Janeiro of January 9 thus describes a visit made to the United States iron-clad steamer Monadnock by DON PEDRO, the Brazilian Emperor:

"On the arrival of the imperial party the vessels of war and the forts belched forth a salute. It is unnecessary to state that in this the American war-vessels had the lion's share. His Majesty was accompanied by his son-in-law, the Conde d'Eu, and his officers of state and of his household. He was received by Commodore Rogers and Lieutenant-Commander BENDY, commanding the Monadnock.

"The Emperor passed around the vessel on deck, followed by his suite and courtiers. After this his Majesty inspected the interior of the two turrets, and listened with much attention to the explanation given him in regard to the turrets and the system of pointing the guns.



"After exploring the interior of the engine-room and lower decks the imperial party partook of refreshments in the cabin of Captain BENDY, when sentiments of respect between the two nations were interchanged. His Majesty and attendants left under another salvo of artillery, after a pleasant visit of about two hours. His Majesty expressed himself highly satisfied with his visit."

FIRE IN THE OIL REGIONS.

WE give on this page an illustration of the recent conflagration which occurred on Bennehof Run, Venango County, Pennsylvania, February 2. The fire originated from a spark from the smoke stack of the Getty Well.

The scene of the conflagration was in the very heart of the oil regions, being a short distance north of the Hyde and Egbert Farm, on which is situated the Maple Shade Wells and the Coquette and Jersey Wells, which were at one time in great danger from the burning oil running down Oil Creek.

The progress of the fire was stayed at Well No. 29, partly because this well was not yet in operation, and partly from the persistency with which an Irish laborer, at the risk of his own life, poured water down the sides of the tank. At least half of the wells further up the creek were saved. It is supposed that the carpenters engaged about the Getty Well had been smoking, and thus originated the fire. So soon as the tanks burst the liquid flames rolled down the valley of the Run, licking up the water and every thing in its career. In half an hour from the first outbreak a stream of fire nearly half a mile in length extended down the stream, wrapping in flames no less than nine of the best wells on the Run, and several engine-houses and derricks were thus consumed. The bridges both on the railroad track and highway were generally burned. Burning pools of oil, trees fiery to their tops, mouldering masses of ruined machinery, twisted tank-hoops and blackened stumps, offset and hill-side tell the sad tale. Some of the wells destroyed produced from 200 to 250 barrels per day.

THE GREAT FIRE ON BENNEHOF RUN, VENANGO COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA, JANUARY 31, 1866.—[SKETCHED BY W. W. GODWIN.]

CHRISSY HUNTER.

I.

It was a well known and accredited fact that, in connection with those old English festivities known as "Yeomanry Weeks," more marriages were made up in this brief interval than during any other period of the year. Match-making in festivals seemingly sanctified in the Yeomanry Weeks; and probably fire-seeing young ladies had fitting matches in their eye, as well as the fire-works and the introductory parades, when they came in trop to go to Prierton to entertain the lucky yeomen.

"My dear," said Mrs. Spottiswoode, the wife of the chief magistrate, who was likewise banker of Prierton, to her spouse, "your cousin Bourhope has asked his child with us: I must have my sister Carrie's to come with her."

Mrs. Spottiswoode was a showy, smart, good-humored woman, but not over-sympathetic. She had very small at all understanding to circumstances even when the circumstances were against her. For that reason she was considered a very good wife as well as very affable among the matrons of Prierton. Mr. Spottiswoode was "close and sure," and it was because of this happy alliance of these qualities in him that it the people of Prierton had elected him their magistrate.

"My dear," deliberately observed long, lanky Mr. Spott-woode, "would it not be rather hard-faced to have Bourhope and Corrie here together?"

"Oh, I'll take care of that," answered the lady, with a laugh and a toss of her ribbons. "I shall have some other girl of my acquaintance to beat Corrie pretty much worthy out—Corrie, who is to whom the visit will be like entering another world. Continued Mrs. Spottiswoode, with a tickle of ridicule in her voice, "what do you think of Carrie and my cousin Chrissy Hunter of Blackfaulds? The Hunters have had such a deal of distress, and so much lighting, and so many embarrassments, though I believe they are getting of clear now—that the poor lassie has had no amusement but her books, and has an awful-old-fashioned."

Mr. Spottiswoode had no inclination to contradict his wife for contradiction's sake, and so he would rely on it was a very fine idea for other good qualities he said: "Well, Agnes, I have no objection. However of Blackfaulds is a very smart man though he is poor, and he is righting himself now."

The invitations were dispatched, and accepted gratefully. The parties arrived from Bourhope, escorted his quarters; ostensibly they came to Prierton in order to prepare for him. Carrie had not been living in Edinburgh for nothing. Outside. She was tall, well made, fair-faced, serene beauty, the sole remaining maiden daughter of a Scotch man who had risen from the ranks of the Indian service, as so many so nurses then. Chrissy, again, was one of a large, struggling family—a small girl, a very little girl, with large, dark eyes, and bright features and a brown complexion. If she had not possessed a bright, intelligent expression she would certainly have been plain—as indeed she is to those who did not heed expression. It was a delightful chance to her, this brief transplanting into the fine drawing-rooms and town-houses, and the glowing gayety of the Yeomanry Weeks. Accordingly she was constantly engaged in studying off every little detail on the finger-point of her active mind, in order that she might be able to describe them to her modest sisters and her sick mother at home. She was determined not to miss one item of interest; never to drop in so as to lose the moment, never to stray in her walks and talk to the gentlemen for the return from the afternoon drive. She would pass the meadows among the gay promenaders and when the evening was closed in she would not care though she walked alone; she would enjoy the play when Mrs. Spottiswoode chose to take her, and she had no object to a nap in the box. The squeeze was really part of the fun! But she did not care to have by attention distracted from the scene, even by the proffers of fruit from the yeomen. As to the ball, she did not allow herself to think much of that. Who would ever have dreamed of her dancing at a fine assembly ball! She would not trouble herself because she had only an old worked white frock of her mother's, taken up by her sister for her, and well-used by frequent washing and long keeping; she would not fret because she could not spend money upon a hairdresser. She knew that her own black hair was fine enough, like every other outward adornment of it. She was little matter, she reflected, for it would not dress itself in short, skilful artful curls, or in enormous bows on the crown of the head which every body then wore; it would only go into comfortable blue lustre curves on each side of the round, full forehead, which was by no means scanty. She had no ornaments, and in the way of jewelry, save a real necklace, while Carrie had a set of pearls—real ones, too!—earrings, brooch, and necklace, and a watch and a gold watch-chain. She was fairly sensible, and which was therefore, as Chrissy said, "a desirable affair." But Carrie was a beauty and an heiress, and consumed her beauty in person and position; while on Chrissy, as she herself admitted with great good sense, they would only have cost money.

Bourhope came with his fellows, and was speedily introduced to Carrie and Chrissy. He had and some general acquaintance with her for a week before. He gallantly expressed his pleasure at the prospect of having their society during his stay at Prierton. He met, however, whose father made money at war picks. He had bought his own farm, and thus established his own small land. He had an help-of-all learning as well as an independent position in the world's goods; he was really a manly fellow, in his own way, quiet, curly, stopping consequence of comparing himself with Carrie. He had a good heart. Carrie and Chrissy both looked at him with equally-opened eyes of wonder and admiration. Chrissy wished that the lads at home would grow up to be as comely and manly; Carrie made up her mind to have just such husband as this magnificent specimen of Bourhope.

It was evident the very first night that Bourhope was taken with Carrie. He stared and stuffed at her, admiring her warm complexion, the bend of her white throat, and the slope of her white shoulders; and even changed his seats at one time, and seemed, in order to see her better. He quickly claimed her as his partner at ball, and engaged her to walk out with him to hear the band practising next morning. Chrissy thought it all very natural, and all the more enjoyable. But she caught herself detecting Bourhope and Carrie several times, and looked herself for carrying her speculations so far. Only she could not help thinking how Bourhope would vary after the manner of a turn while in Carrie's company, though he was a meddlesome and not a bad ex fellow. But that was only like men, by-the-bye: less what they had coveted when it was half won.

II.

At this juncture it struck Bourhope, riding home from the morning drill, to ask himself what could possibly take Chrissy Hunter out so early every morning. He had not been in the habit of doing so. Keeping out of the way of him and his companions, and returning again from the opposite end of Prierton, while he was in the town. Chrissy, in fact, was not a girl to be noticed by men. Bourhope, indeed, never with her. Indeed, Bourhope had a strong suspicion that Chrissy retreated to her pillow at some unearthly hour, lovely from—lovely even in the pink curl-papers. But Chrissy certainly dressed immediately and took a morning walk, by herself, for the benefit of her health, for no profit. Not being a very strong little woman, her errands face was apt to look jaded and streaky when Bourhope, coming out to his drill, met her. She lounged with the girls in the early forenoon in Mrs. Spottiswoode's drawing-room. So it was worth while, he thought, to make an effort to Chrissy and inquire what took her abroad at such an untimely hour.

When Bourhope caught a nearer glimpse of Chrissy he was rather disinclined to see that she had been crying. Bourhope hated to see women cry. He was bitterly girl like Chrissy, to whom it was not becoming. He had no particular fancy for Cinderellas or other beggar maids. He was accustomed to the pretty, petted and friendly host and hostess, for whom he had a considerable regard, were mean enough, and he was ready to cause her to give a visit at their own invitation. Notwithstanding these demurs Tom Spottiswoode of Bourhope rode on fast, as if he were in cause her to give a visit start when she turned.

"Hallo! Do you go to market, Miss Chrissy, or what on earth are you out in the cold for before the shutters are down?" pointing with his sheathed sword to a closed shop.

Chrissy looked back, and there was something slightly hysterical in her laugh, but she answered frankly enough, "I go to Dr. Stark's, Mr. Spottiswoode, to see Sandy, who is very ill, and who is at Blackfaulds every day. I wait in his laboratory till he comes there before setting out: he goes home early, you know." She had not known that another was yesterday, and as he is a kind man he carries our letters—Maggie and Arabella and I are fond of writers, and postage is rather an expensive a great deal too expensive for us at Blackfaulds; but the doctor is a kind man and he 'favors' our letters. And the laboratory is a pleasant place, too, with her subject, and impelled to a bit of confidence, "do you know, Dr. Stark thinks my sister will be almost as fine a chemist as he is, and we are aware her knee-joint has been affected. We were even afraid she would never put down her foot again. But we would have no more of that, for all that. Chrissy spoke simply, in a rather moved vein.

Bourhope was slightly moved, too. He had never heard before of the disaster of Blackfaulds, except that she was a woman who had been long ailing; and also occasional remarks about the sickness and her being at home to nurse her family.

Chrissy was grateful for his cold-air sympathy, and gratified by it; but, as if half ashamed of having elicited it, she set once to pants to retire to him on other subjects. Bourhope had hoped Chrissy would stay, and was doing her the honor of walking at her side, his beast's bridle over his arm, and his manner ringing with interest, when he suddenly felt the that was of Chrissy's, about the fine morning, the town, and the yeomanry—few topics, but well handled and intelligently discussed. Bourhope began to confess to himself how sorry he was when she reached Mr. Spottiswoode's door.

Next morning Bourhope watched himself from his comrades when he approached the town, and looked narrowly for Chrissy. It would be but civil to inquire for her and her sister, and he had no objection to being thus civil that though Chrissy was far in advance he knew her by the pink gingham trimming of her morning dress, and the flutter of the two leaves in the morning sun. He came up to her, and paint by asked after her mother. Chrissy was a little perturbed, but answered frankly enough. She was not nearly so talkative, however, as on the preceding morning, though Bourhope made witty comments on the letter she held in her hand, and per incautiously insisted on her telling him whether she mentioned him in her return letter. He remembered her letter with a blush, and a fib. What was the first time Chrissy had known of any one blushing up a relationship with her, and though it caused in her unsalary-allowance was to feel in that humility of hers—Bourhope she knew was destined for her cousin Carrie. He was out of Carrie's way just now, and was only courteous and cordial to her as living for a time under the same roof. She liked the ruddy, curly, independent, clever fellow of a farmer laird who, out of the riches of his minerals, could be courteous and cordial to a poor, plain girl. But Bourhope would never overstep the boundary coming from Dr. Stark's again. He spied and peeped and threw out hints, and hurried or loitered as she was to suppose. Chrissy took care that people should not notice the fact of her being escorted home in the early morning by Bourhope.

A chance encounter between Mrs. Spottiswoode and Carrie was overheard one day by Bourhope, when they imagined him deep in Blackwood. Mr. Hunter of Blackfaulds, Carrie's father, had not been well, and a message had been sent to that effect to her. But she was philanthropic and not unfeeling. "Poor man!" she said, with a wish about himself," she said, candidly, to Mrs. Spottiswoode. "Very likely he has only taken lobster to supper, or his luncheon has been ill-agreed with him, and he is bilious this morning. I think I will send out a box of eckeepah, and a bit of nice tender veal, to put him in good-humor. You know, Agnes, as I were to drive not I could not get back in time for the evening walk in the gardens. Besides, I was to see Mrs. Hunter about the change in the running on of my frills. It would overturn all my plans to go; and my head got so hot, and I got so to blow-up my face and place are disarranged," Carrie concluded, almost piteously.

"Yes; but, Carrie," hesitated Mrs. Spottiswoode, "you know Dr. Stark is not easy about pape just now. I think I had better go out myself." It is safe to be a little unwell, but to have never a nurse, who do basins at the bank, at dinner to day with Bourhope; but I dare say Mary will manage very well. Don't you see, I am nothing to do—and I will go myself to Redeslaw; all things considered, it would be a pity for you not to be in your best looks—"

Bourhope, at this point, fell into a fit of coughing, and lost the rest of the dialogue; but perhaps his emotional state was not unconnected with the soft forth as much by this interlude as by the audacious judgments of the Snowbird and Tickler.

The day after this Chrissy was very rainy, and the drill was gone through in a dense white mist which caused every horse to loom large as an elephant, and every rider to look a Gog or Magog. The young ladies, so fond of a change of costume at this time in Prierton, could do no shopping; the walk in the meadows was out of the question; the concert had to be given up. The green meadows were not inviting, the grass was dripping, the flowers closed their heavy, sad eyes, and looked drunky. All was disappointing, for the meadows were beautiful at this season with their summer snow of daisies—not the pale-pink daisies of the grass, but the large ones of yellow but-eye, crow's-foot, lady's finger, and vetch, and by the crimson clover flowers, and the deep red of sorrel, and the black port head of the sub-wort plantain, whose black upon the white of ox-eye daisies has the rich tone of ermine.

Instead of these there were gatherings round shining tables; and bottles and glasses clinked cheerily in many a parlor. But Mr. Spottiswoode was sober by inclination, and the inclemency of the weather had quite the contrary effect on many provosts of his era, only added to his characteristic caution. He was prudent, but he was not drunky. A cold and excess began. So there was little fear of excess in Mr. Spottiswoode's house. Mrs. Spottiswoode, genuine in her way, had a cheerful fire in her drawing-room, and sat by the hearth, with her children tumbling round her; while Carrie, fairer than ever in her beauty, and Chrissy, dark-haired, brown and merry, sat on either side of her. She invited the former laird to enter that charmed ring, and he entered, and was kept company by contrasts, the loneliness and comfortlessness of Bourhope. But though he sat next Carrie, a certain coldness existed in her demeanor, and party. He found himself glancing curiously at the book Chrissy Hunter had been almost burning her face reading in the first light before the rain. In vain. Chrissy's mode did not mark care for reading aloud, but she took the first in good part, and called on Chrissy to tell what the book was about, and to divert Bourhope, without wholly monopolizing his attention.

Chrissy was rather shy at first. She never told stories freely away from home; but she was now pressed to do it by Carrie, who, in fact, was the even sympathetic humor and pathos into the wondrous narrative, till she literally held her listeners in thrall. Chrissy was telling the story of the days of Scott's early novels, when they were greatly run after, and the price of a night's reading was high. Bourhope, with his head resting against Carrie's aprontie, and his master, for the purpose of reading Bobbie to share his enthusiasm, would have thought it extraordinary. Bobbie had carried it out to Blackfaulds, and then all would sit up, sick mother among the rest, to hear it read aloud, till far into the night.

Who can tell what that cordial of pure healthful intellectual diversion may have been even to Bourhope, tired out with sick mother at Blackfaulds, and to Chrissy! The very speaking of it made her clasp her hands over her knee, and her large eyes to look out like stars—as Bourhope thought to himself.

The assembly paid Chrissy the highest compliment an assembly can pay a speaker. Silence. Even their schemes, their anxieties, themselves even, to fascinate their eyes and hears on the brown girl—the brown girl who had the unexpected faculty of making so graphically on her memory. Carrie was the first to recover herself. "Oh dear!" she cried, "I forgot I was to take down my hair for Miss Lethin to point it at eight o'clock"—and hurried out of the room.

Mrs. Spottiswoode roused herself next, and spoke a few words of acknowledgment to Chrissy. "Upon my word, Chrissy, your recital has been quite as good as the play. We are much obliged to you. I am afraid your throat must be sore; but stay, I have some of the theatre oranges here. No, hairs, you are not to have any; it is far too late for you to be up. Dear me! I believe you have been listening to Chrissy's story like the rest of us!" But Mrs. Spottiswoode was not under any apprehension about the success of Chrissy's reading. She prove it by immediately leaving Chrissy alone with Bourhope while she went out to put the children to bed, and see if Mr. Spottiswoode, who was doing a short turn of business in his office, would have a game of cards before supper. She had really never heard of a girl being more simple of her bonnet's sake! Perhaps she knew the line in the song too:

"Very few marry for talking."

and had found its truth in her own experience, for she was a domestic, observant woman.

Bourhope, it should be understood, was honest, unless on the influence of Chrissy's story-telling power. Indeed, when he did recover himself from it, his fancy created fine visions of what it would be to have such a story-teller at the farmhouse during the long, dark nights of winter, and the endless days of summer. Bourhope was no ignoramus. He had some acquaintance with "Waverley's Tales" and some "Rambles," but his reading was bald and tame in inspiration. He thought to himself it would really be as good as a company of players parted for Sir Jas own behoof, without any of the disadvantages. He stammered a little in expressing the debt he owed to Chrissy, and she modestly only accepted it by saying: "Oh, no, not to me the praise, Mr. Spottiswoode, but to the great Unknown. Oh, I would like to know him!" Bourhope was also stimulated to it as cause which he was sure to do ultimately—he practised his topical table entertainers with a box at the play. No doubt this was a great delight to Chrissy, for it was on the days when actors were respectable artists, and play-going was still universal. Chrissy in her fresh enjoyment was quite appreciable as well as if she had been first-rate professors, took the good and left the bad, and sat quite entranced.

Bourhope's touch he was decidedly intellectual for his calling, watch'd Chrissy rather than the stage. He read the feeling of the moment reflected in her features as in a sensitive face. Once he turned round and tried the same experiment with Carrie. The sight as well was expected to have a living and soul from well-modeled stucco or marble. He now realized in a more lively manner than ever that Carrie was a beauty of the purest water, and well shapely as swans till they express their waddling. He tried in church the process he had learned at the play, but it was not to the purpose. Instead of fact, Chrissy's expression giving a fair notion of the good Prierton minister's earnestness and eloquence.

But at Bourhope's request, sweet as Chrissy Bourhope took in thus making her his study, got restless and troubled in her sound head and warm heart. She could not feel in her conscience. She knew that Bourhope did not in any sense belong to Mrs. Spottiswoode and Carrie, and she had shrewdness suspected that their invitations to Prierton would not be carried out. She could not help occasionally turning over in her mind the circumstance that Carrie was Bourhope's pride, but Bourhope Mr. Dalvelle nevertheless bestowed his heart on her, though the gift like her fortune was distant to her for many a long day. Chrissy thought that if Bourhope were independent and original enough to like her—to love her—he was his own master, there was nothing between him and his affections save her inclination and her father and mother's will, and there was little doubt about their will with respect to a man so wealthy, so unexceptionable, and so well endowed as Bourhope.

Nor was there any thing like duty to the Spottiswoodes to prevent Chrissy from liking Carrie's lover. But still Chrissy's nice sense of honor was disturbed, for had she not a guess that a very different man had been Carrie's lot? Nay, she had even a half-comical notion that she herself had been expressly selected as a companion to Carrie Hunter during the gayeties of the Yeomanry Week to prove a sort of harmless foil. A dream of love was a grand shock to Chrissy's quiet life, making will very plaintive to her. She all was not for harmless, within her; and filling her mind with tremulous light which glorified every object, and was fatal to the duties of the day. It was a misfortune that Bourhope should excite such a dream. But Chrissy was not completely dazzled. It was only a dream as yet, and could be put by in the mirror of a dream; it should not be the mistress of her. So she resolved, showing herself a reasonable, thoughtful, considerate young woman, as well as a healthy, fairly-proportioned, and lovely human spirit.

Chrissy first aimed all her other source. She recollected what was due both to the hero and to the others concerned. She was neither a weak victim, nor a designing, arrogant, unfeminine conqueror. Like all genuine women she struggled against evil-liking herself without her due—without a certain that there was no injustice to Carrie in this matter. She was not a girl to get love-sick at the first blush, nor one to run even at a worthy lover's beckoning, though she would consider, ponder, and do it prudently, joyously, for true affection, when once it had confessed itself. So she shrank from Bourhope, stepped away from him, and managed to avoid him. He was puzzled and vexed and almost exasperated by doubts as to whether she feared for or wished to accept his love—and regarded little Jessy Chrissy taught the bold yeoman a lesson in her own quiet way. She slowly became aware that the evident wish of the other attainments of his—the prosperous, cultivated farmer-laird—were as dross compared with the genuine and exquisite elements of Chrissy's, whose many short-sighted men called insignificant and plain amidst the poverty and care of Blackfaulds. Bourhope was not radically conceited: he had no certainty that his superiority in worldly estate would not be strange and open while he saw how high and fine it was not shrunk and recessed by her indifference to his advances. So he had no communication with Chrissy, apart from a formal interchange of words in general conversation, for three days before the grand review and the ball, except in a single incident touching the pipe-playing of his bills.

The gentlemen of the old economy who had not scrutiny to do it for them, did their own pipe-playing, and might generally be seen doing it very indifferently to the accompaniment of private whistling, or scuffling with each other over adjacent walls, in the back courts and greens of Poiteton. Bourhope was one day doing this after decently leaving his accoutrements, and in dancer of smearing himself from head to foot with pipe-clay? She therefore stole upon him, and addressed him with some sharpness: "That is not right, Mr. Spottiswoode; you will never whiten your belt in that way; you will only soil the rest of your clothes." I watched the old sergeant doing it next door for Major Christison. Look here"—and she took the article out of his hand—"and observe! and see to clean it. Poor Bourhope bowed to her empire, though he would much rather their petitions had been reversed: he would rather a thousand times have brushed Chrissy's shoes than that she should clean his belts. She was prone again the moment she had delivered up the perfect of his belt that was now as white as snow; but nothing would have induced her to stay.

Bourhope saw in the humiliations as well as the triumphs of love—that extreme ordeal through which even tender-hearted and sincere spirits must pass before they can unite in a strictness of mind deserving the name. He was not exactly grateful for the good opinion of Chrissy, he had a little fear against Chrissy in his own breast just then. He told himself it was all a whim; he did not really care for the dislike of the whole family to the supposed circumstances. No; it would be absurd to fall in love with a little coffee-colored girl, one of whose shoulders was the effect of an ash-board, not than the other. He was not compelled to marry either Corrie or Chrissy—not he! Pooh! he was not yet fairly in with his husbandry, and he would look about a little longer, enjoy himself a little more. At the word enjoyment Bourhope stopped short, and set himself resolutely against it. If Chrissy Hunter was ugly, she was an ugly fairy. She was his fate indeed; he would never see her like again, and he would be a lost and wrecked man without her.

The review and the ball were still in store. Bourhope would not be heaven with that double shot in reserve. It would go hard with the brown, curly, independent Chrissy to see heaven, for although it was shaken more in his pride and confidence than he had ever thought to be.

The review came off all the drilling had been undertaken, went off without serious effect on the contesting parties. The only thing was, that Bourhope was so dejected and so distracted in his mind that he could not attend to orders, and thus lost his character as a veoman and all chance of being forhim backman of his company. And this, added the Major had said, when the drills began, that there was not a finer man or a more promising drapoon in the service than Bourhope.

Chrissy's bright, tranquil satisfaction in contemplating from the box of Mrs. Spottiswoode's phaeton the state of preparation of both their equipments and persons was decidedly impaired. The review, with its trampings and halting its squares and dits, its shouting from the ranks, its wheels side-by-side, its flashing swords and waving plumes, was certainly very fine. All the rest of Priorton said so and proved so, for they stood for a whole day without a break, and under a scorching sun, on foot and in every description of vehicle from a cart cart to a coroneted carriage. Yes, it was very fine for the rest of Priorton; but it was a confused, hollow, agitating play to Chrissy as to Bourhope. Still she lost sight of the grand, general effect by her concentration of her regard on one little scarlet dot. It was to her a play with its heart swanting, and yet the whirl and movement were too intense for a moment as it agitates for that heart.

